Mr. McFADDEN. I would say to the gentleman that that is strictly a banking proposition and it will be worked out by the banks in detail between themselves. The language that we have stricken out here by the committee amendment does not interfere in any manner with the closing of transactions incident to the export trade.

Mr. TOWNER. It occurs to me that it does.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired. All time has expired.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to withdraw his amendment. Is there objection? There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment, striking out subsection (b).

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. McFADDEN) there were—ayes 54, noes 80.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the chair appointed Mr. McFADDEN and Mr. Wingo to act as tellers.

The committee again divided, and the tellers reported—ayes 44, noes 82.

So the committee amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 4, line 1, in the parentheses strike out the letter "c" and insert the letter "b."

The CHAIRMAN. In view of the action just taken by the committee this amendment will not be agreed to, if there be no objection.

There was no objection, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 24, after the word "be" strike out the words "exported or sold" and insert after the word "export" at the end of the line the words "or domestic trade."

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, if my amendment be adopted, it will mean that whenever the board of directors of the corporation shall be, to paraphrase, of the opinion that the ordinary banking facilities are inadequate to enable producers of or dealers in surplus agricultural products to carry them until they can be sold for export or domestic trade in an orderly manner, then the corporation shall be empowered to make advances on terms set out in subsections (a), (b), and (c). There was some dispute as to whether or not this should come in section 24 or section 22. It is the unanimous opinion of those who are insisting upon this legislation, the different farm organizations and the cattle breeders' and growers' associations, that unless we have this language here you absolutely give them no new benefit under the present existing law, except a possible rediscounting with the War Finance Corporation of paper that may already be held by their banks, but that would exclude the cooperative associations and other agricultural associations, because technically they could not come under section 24 unless they had made prior advances, which they do not always have.

Now, what is the proposition that is involved in my amendment? It is this. Simply that whenever they think that the present banking facilities are not sufficient to enable the producer of wheat or cotton or cattle growers to carry their product until it can be marketed in an orderly manner, either in the domestic trade or in export, then they are authorized to make advances in the manner that is specified in the bill.

Mr. BLACK. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WINGO. I will yield.

Mr. BLACK. I have this fear about the gentleman's amendment, and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BRAND] called my attention to it. Under the present bill the exporter could arrange to export, we will say, 50,000 bales of cotton to a foreign market without having it sold and could finance it, but if the gentleman's amendment should be adopted he could only finance it if it was sold for export, and I fear an amendment of that kind would be restrictive.

Mr. WINGO. No; I think the gentleman will see that if the foreigner is going to buy and take it to Europe, or even hold it there, that is selling it as far as we are concerned for export. But that proposition is not involved in the question of whether you will take care of the situation that will enable him to hold it. For illustration, 90 per cent of the original transactions cover the question of export of wheat, cotton, and so forth, and the men who produce it and the cooperative associations that really have the handling and marketing of it could not prove their sale is going to be directly for export. They may sell it to a cotton factor or to an exporter of wheat and every transaction may not be a direct export transaction. That has been pointed out by the cooperative association representatives. Why, they say, it is said under your present existing law we are taking care of exports; under the present existing law the War Finance Corporation is financing the export of cotton, wheat, and condensed milk and all that, but the truth is that you promised us, these gentlemen say, and you told us that the Senate bill was going a little bit further and take care of the domestic question, and you attempted to do it by section 24, but under the provision of section 22 you have not done it, and they are insisting unanimously from all these States, from all these different organizations, that if we do not put in these words here, "or in domestic trade," it will not do the thing you are professing you are doing, and I think there is something in that contention. At any rate it will not hurt. What is the objection that is offered?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WINGO. I ask for two additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. WINGO. I have taken this up with different gentlemen. What is the objection that is offered? Is it that you ought not to do that kind of business? No; the objection offered is that the bill already does it. I challenge any man who is opposed to this proposition to offer any other objection. That has been the only objection that has been offered. They contend that the amendment to section 24, that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McFADDEN] and myself discussed the other day, will do it. The representative of these farm organizations thinks it will not do it. If you say you will do it in another place in the bill, why not make more certain the provision? I think it is a proper thing as a matter of safety and also as a matter of satisfying and relieving their fears to write this language in here in section 22. That is the only objection that I have heard offered to it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, may we have the amendment again reported?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be again reported. There was no objection.

The amendment was again reported.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the amendment for the reason that I indicated in my question to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO]. I fear if his language is substituted for that which is in the bill that it will in at least one respect limit the transactions which may be had under this bill.

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman overlooks the language left in the bill. My amendment does not change anything except, by grammatical rearrangement itself, the carrying not alone for exportation but for sale and domestic trade. And the language to carry them until they can be sold for export remains in the bill.

Mr. BLACK. Yes; but if the gentleman's amendment should be adopted the bill would read as follows:

Until they can be sold for export or in domestic trade.

The language as now used in the bill reads:

For the purpose of assisting such person or associations to carry such products until they can be exported or sold for export in an orderly manner.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield for a suggestion?

Mr. BLACK. Yes.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. But you carry the goods up to the time of the sale. They are financed until they are sold.

Mr. BLACK. Yes; but the bill goes further than authorizing the carrying of the products until "sold," but says they may be carried until "exported." That term "exported," as I understand it, means a completed transaction and contemplates in such cases that the goods may reach Europe and be settled for over there before the advances made by the War Finance Corporation would have to be paid. In fact, the War Finance Corporation might be paid with the very money which is obtained from the sale of the products when they reach the other side of the water. But if we adopt this amendment of the gentleman from Arkansas the War Finance Corporation can only finance such products until such times as they are "sold for export or for domestic use." It may be well enough to add the words "for domestic use," but the words "exported or" should not be eliminated. I think it would amount to a limitation that ought not to be put on the bill, and which might work out very harmful in the operations of the laws.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I hope the amendment the gentleman has offered will not prevail. If that amendment prevails, you are going to provide a governmental institution which will be financing the hoarding of goods in this country and forcing prices up. If this Congress want to go on record with a proposition of that kind they will vote for this amendment. I want to say, further, that the vote here has just demonstrated the fact that we have placed in this bill one of the most dangerous provisions that it is possible to put in. Now, if we proceed further to provide for financing people for the purpose of increasing the price of their products, we are doing something we should not do under any circumstances. It is my opinion, and it is the opinion of the committee, and it is the opinion of the War Finance Corporation, that we have provided amply for this situation by the amendment which I suggested the other day on page 5 of the bill, line 13, after the word "States," where we proposed to insert the words "any cooperative association of producers in the United States," providing also for loans to those engaged in trade and banks that finance the transaction, for loans, to be made also to any cooperative association of producers in the United States. I want to say to the gentlemen here that I believe I know what prompts the situation, and I believe if the committee fully understood the movement back of this, they would vote the amendment down.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question for information?

Mr. McFADDEN. I will.

Mr. MANN. The bill provides for carrying of stable agricultural products in certain cases until they can be exported or sold for export. How does it extend the bill to say that until they are exported or sold in domestic commerce?

Mr. STEAGALL. It means exactly the same thing. The gentleman from Illinois is right.

Mr. McFADDEN. I would say it would mean the financing of the crops in this country until they are sold.

Mr. MANN. The bill first provides for the carrying of certain articles that are not covered by the amendment. For how long? Until they are exported or sold for export. Now, does it extend it to say until they are sold in some way? That is what I can not get through my head.

Mr. McFADDEN. If I understand it rightly, it would mean the holding and hoarding of a great amount of products here and financing them—that the War Finance Corporation would furnish the money to hold products in this country until the speculator saw fit to sell the goods intended for consumption in this country.

Mr. STEAGALL. As the bill reads it provides they are carried until they are sold for export.

Mr. McFADDEN. Or for domestic trade.

Mr. MANN. If they are sold for domestic trade, there is no longer any necessity of holding them until they are sold for export, because adding "domestic trade" does not provide any extension even.

Mr. McFADDEN. It gives an opportunity to the dealer in this country to hoard his product and force prices up.

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HUSTED. How is it possible to determine in reference to any specific case, whether they are held for export or for domestic sale?

Mr. McFADDEN. It is a very difficult thing to determine.

Mr. STEAGALL. I have just this suggestion to make to the gentleman: The bill now provides that it shall be held until exported or sold for export. If you add a clause, "or sold in the domestic market," then there is no longer any necessity for holding it for export or until it is sold for export, so that it limits to that extent the accommodation required.

Mr. McFADDEN. I think I have answered the gentleman.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman from Pennsylvania may have a minute more. I wish to ask him a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Pennsylvania may proceed for one minute more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McFADDEN. I will say to the gentleman that it is now five minutes to 4 o'clock, and by the agreement had yesterday, the House is to adjourn at 4 o'clock to-day.

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman can answer in a few minutes. There was so much confusion that I could not catch what the gentleman said. Do I understand the gentleman to contend that if you put the amendment that he and I have discussed in section 24 it will cover the carrying of domestic products for domestic sale?

Mr. McFADDEN. No; I do not say it will do that.

Mr. WINGO. It will not?

Mr. McFADDEN. The War Finance Corporation feels that this is ample power and all the power that is necessary for this emergency legislation and a very dangerous thing at this time to take further foreign credits.

Mr. WINGO. What I want to get at is this: The gentleman contends that the amendment will not take care of the financial necessities of the cattle producers who are not going to export at all?

Mr. McFADDEN. If the gentleman will read that, he will see very clearly what the section says. It says for agricultural purposes, including the breeding, raising, and fattening of live stock.

Mr. WINGO. That is a domestic process, is it not?

Mr. McFADDEN. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. It authorizes financing for domestic trade, and the gentleman contends it ought to be put in section 24 instead of in section 22.

Mr. McFADDEN. For the purpose of breeding and raising and fattening cattle, not for the purpose of forcing up prices.

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman is in favor of holding agricultural products in an orderly manner until they can be sold in domestic sale?

Mr. McFADDEN. Yes; but not for the purpose of forcing up prices of the commodities to the purchasers by semi-Government loans.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has again expired.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. STAFFORD, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill (S. 1915) to amend the War Finance Corporation act, approved April 5, 1918, as amended, to provide relief for producers of and dealers in agricultural products, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for two extensions of remarks, one on the British budget and the other on the inheritance tax.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks to extend his remarks on the British budget and also to extend remarks on the inheritance tax. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table H. R. 1942—

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think he can recognize the gentleman for that purpose at this hour.

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the Philippine question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the Philippine question. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, has unanimous consent been granted to extend remarks?

The SPEAKER. Two such requests have been granted.

Mr. WALSH. Nobody knows what they are.

The SPEAKER. The Chair stated them loudly, and he thinks a good many Members know what they are.

Mr. WALSH. We could not hear what was said.

Mr. KING. A good many Members heard it.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly (at 3 o'clock and 58 minutes p. m.) the House, under the order previously made, adjourned until Wednesday, August 17, 1921, at 11 o'clock a. m.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, August 17, 1921.

(Legislative day of Tuesday, August 16, 1921.)

The Senate reassembled at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

INTERSTATE HIGHWAY SYSTEM.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the amendment of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1072) to amend the act entitled "An act to provide that the United States shall aid the States in the construction of rural post roads, and for other purposes," approved July 11, 1916, as amended and supplemented, and for other purposes.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, the good roads bill is now before the Senate, as we recessed at the time we were considering it. I should like to have the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKellar] here, as I desire to call his attention to several matters.

Mr. HEFLIN. Then we had better have a quorum. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McNary in the chair). The Senator from Alabama suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ball	Harrison	McCumber	Sheppard
Brandegee	Hefflin	McKellar	Simmons
Cameron	Johnson	McNary	Smoot
Capper	Jones, Wash.	New	Stanley
Caraway	Kellogg	Nicholson	Townsend
Culberson	Knox	Norbeck	Trammell
Curtis	Ladd	Oddie	Wadsworth
Fletcher	La Follette	Overman	Walsh, Mass.
Gooding	Lenroot	Phipps	Warren
Hale	Lodge	Pomerene	Willis

Mr. CURTIS. I was requested to announce the absence of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Keyes] on account of a death in his family. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

I also wish to announce that the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Penrose] is detained in hearings before the Committee on Finance. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is not present. The Secretary will call the roll of absentees.

The names of the absent Senators were called, and Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN, Mr. KING, and Mr. POINDEXTER answered to their names when called.

Mr. STANFIELD, Mr. CALDER, Mr. BROUSSARD, Mr. GLASS, Mr. SUTHERLAND, Mr. STERLING, Mr. NELSON, Mr. JONES of New Mexico, Mr. SWANSON, Mr. WILLIAMS, Mr. McLEAN, Mr. BORAH, Mr. WATSON of Indiana, and Mr. DILLINGHAM entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-seven Senators having responded to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, as I am obliged to leave the Senate to keep an engagement I am going to ask the indulgence of the Senate for a few moments to speak very briefly in regard to the good roads bill, as I do not wish to have the vote which I shall cast misunderstood.

I am as cordially in favor of good roads in the United States and appreciate their importance to the country as much as anyone. My own State has spent large sums of money in giving us good roads and it is a policy which has always had my hearty approval. But this is a time when we should not take a great sum of money from the Treasury and add largely to our appropriations without very careful consideration. This does not seem to me a case in which the expenditure of a hundred million dollars at this moment is justified. The whole country and the business of the country are suffering severely from depression and from the dislocation of the industrial fabric following upon the greatest war which the world has ever known. In order to restore prosperity we must come back to a normal economic condition as quickly as possible. Great economic forces are at work which no laws can arrest or turn aside, but it is possible for the Government, through Congress and the Executive, to smooth the path for the return to normal conditions or to create by mistaken legislation fresh obstacles and make real recovery slower and more uncertain. One helpful thing that the Government can do in this situation is to bring some relief from the great burden of taxation which is retarding the restoration of business prosperity; and with business prosperity goes employment for all our people and better prices for our farmers and all our great agricultural interests.

We have had, owing to the war, years of reckless expenditure. We are confronting a legacy of disorganization and debt, which we must meet, and one of the first steps to be taken is rigid economy. The Executive and Congress together can at least stop waste. It can not be done in a moment any more than we can restore a twisted and disordered organization of the Government business in a few months. But the line of action which we must pursue is plain. So far as possible, I repeat, we must reduce Government expenditures, and the last Congress and this Congress have done much in that direction. Much more remains to be done. I do not for a moment suggest that money expended for good roads is a waste. It does not come under that head; far from it. But it certainly is one of those fields of public expenditure where there can be delay without serious injury. New public buildings and the extension and repair of existing buildings for Government use are much needed, but they can wait, and Congress for some time has made only very small appropriations in that direction.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. LODGE. I dislike to refuse to yield, but this is a very brief speech I am going to make, and I should like to conclude it, as I am compelled to leave the Senate in a few moments.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I merely wish to call attention to one fact to which the Senator has just referred, and that is about delaying the construction and extension of the public buildings of the country. I should like to ask the Senator if this Government is in such straits that it is necessary to postpone all public building, even where it would be a saving to the Treasury? In my town of Las Vegas, N. Mex., in 1913, an appropriation was made for a public building there for the purpose of consolidating the post offices. There are now two post offices running there at the expense of the Government, and involving inconvenience to the public.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I do not desire to interrupt the Senator's speech, but if he would allow me to finish my remarks I should be out of the way in a few moments, and I am obliged to leave the Chamber.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts declines to yield further.

Mr. LODGE. I sympathize with the Senator from New Mexico in his desire for a new building, but that is one of the things for which I feel it would not be wise to appropriate at this time.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I merely wanted to add that—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts refuses to yield.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Very well.

Mr. LODGE. Judicious and reasonable expenditures on rivers and harbors are very necessary and are a part of the Government expenditures which ought to be maintained, but important as improvements in rivers and harbors are, they can wait without serious harm. Congress has adopted that policy—in fact, it was pursued during the World War—and appropriations for rivers and harbors have been reduced to a very low point and the commencement of new enterprises has been avoided. Good roads are important, but they are in the same class. It is a legitimate form of expenditure, it is a needed form of expenditure, but it is not immediate, and we are not warranted, in my opinion, in taking a hundred millions at this time and spending it for good roads. I think they can wait.

We have cut down with great severity the appropriations for the Army and Navy, which I regard as absolutely necessary expenditures for any government which means to protect itself against dangers which may come to any nation. We have cut the Army below a point which seems to me safe. We have cut the Navy down to such a point that work on necessary ships such as the battle cruisers and the airplane carriers has been either stopped or slackened. To my thinking this is exactly like a man who economizes by giving up his insurance, whether on his house or on his life. I think these reductions for our Army and Navy have been carried too far already, but to cut down the naval appropriations $100,000,000 below what is needed to complete in a reasonable time our building program and give us such a Navy as we should possess under present conditions is an economy of the most dangerous kind. When we make such reductions as these and such reductions for the Army as we have made it is wholly indefensible to take all we have saved on the Navy and spend it for good roads, which are instruments of prosperity and convenience, but which are not an insurance of our safety or a security for our peace.

I know well how much the whole community, rich and poor, are suffering from the economic conditions produced by the war. It is an utter mistake to suppose that those sufferings are confined to one portion of the country or to one occupation. I know how much the farmers and planters have suffered from these economic conditions, but the suffering is just as serious in the great industrial States of the North and East, which stretch from the valley of the Mississippi to our eastern coast. Our factories are working on half time, quarter time, even; some of them are closed, and every reduction of time and every closed mill means unemployment on a large scale. There is one city in New England which had great activities during the war, a city of some 160,000 people, and I was informed the other day by one of the officers of the labor commission of the State that in that one city there were 28,000 people out of employment at that moment. Take a single instance in my own State. The Fore River yards, in the town of Weymouth, adjoining the city of Quincy, were, of course, enormously busy during the war. A large laboring population came there.

The Government appropriations for work in those yards, which are private yards, have, of course, been reduced. War appropriations can not possibly be maintained. But the result is that in that neighborhood 3,000 men have been laid off within the last month. That means a great deal of distress of the most immediate kind, actual distress not known to agricultural populations, which at least can always feed and house themselves. The Fore River yards are only an example of the condition in a greater or less degree in nearly every industry of the Northern and Eastern States. We have not come here to ask for appropriations from the Treasury, but we have a right to expect that new and large appropriations of the public money, involving the maintenance or the increase of taxes, shall not be added to our burdens.

The condition of unemployment is very alarming and is increasing. All thinking men must look forward with apprehension to the coming winter. The great need of employment can really be effectively met in only one way, and that is by a general revival of business activities, to which all our efforts should be directed. The prosperity of the great industrial States is just as essential to the farming and agricultural interests as their prosperity is to us. We are all bound together.

I realize that good roads are perhaps more needed in the open spaces and over the long distances of the South and the far West than they are in the more densely populated regions of the North and East, but as we are all suffering together, as our hopes for better times, which I believe to be approaching, are the same hopes, so we must all bear our burdens together. In one word, where the expenditure of public money is not absolutely necessary for the defense and security of the country or to carry on the Government in the most economical manner possible, it should not be indulged in now. Our prosperity will return and we then can make liberal appropriations, as we have done in the past, for the development not only of our roads but of our rivers and harbors, but this is not the time to make them. I can not support, as I have been trying to support, all efforts for proper reductions of appropriations and for rigid economies, intelligent economies, and then vote at this time for a great appropriation like this which will take $100,000,000 out of the Treasury of the United States for an object which is most excellent, but which can without injury await the coming of a better day. That day, in my judgment, will not long be postponed if we face the situation as we should, for after all, Mr. President, the safety and prosperity of America will come from the source from which it has always come, from the thrift and energy, the determination, and courage of the American people.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Overhue, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed without amendment the bill (S. 2301) granting the consent of Congress to Old Trail's Bridge Co. to construct a bridge across the Missouri River.

The message also announced that the House concurred in sundry amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7294) supplemental to the national prohibition act; that the House concurred in the amendments of the Senate Nos. 10, 15, and 32, each with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate; that the House disagreed to the amendments of the Senate Nos. 14, 17, 18, and 19; that the House agreed to the conference requested by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. VOLSTEAD, Mr. DYER, and Mr. SUMNERS of Texas were appointed managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the House had passed the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 7) providing for the printing of additional copies of the tariff bill, with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

CONFERENCE ON LIMITATION OF ARMAMENTS.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I desire at this time to submit an amendment which I intend to propose to House bill 8117, the urgent deficiency bill, during the course of its consideration. I ask that the proposed amendment may be read at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 3, line 16, it is proposed to insert the following:

And provided further, That the delegates representing the Government of the United States use every effort and exert their influence for open sessions of the conference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be printed and lie on the table.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, yesterday and this morning all of the colleagues of the distinguished senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] were delighted, of course, to learn that he had been appointed as one of the representatives of the United States at the international conference which has been called by the President of the United States to discuss the limitation of armaments. It is a great tribute to the leader of the majority in the Senate, and personally I share, as does every other Senator, a feeling of pleasure that this honor has come to the Senator from Massachusetts; but I am indeed sorry, Mr. President, to have heard the remarks of the senior Senator from Massachusetts this morning when he recalled the votes that he had cast and the position that he has taken touching disarmament in the past. I say "disarmament" because that question has been wrapped up in the appropriations which have been carried for the Navy and the Army. It has been interwoven with the votes in the Senate during the present session of Congress on the Army appropriation bill, when we tried to reduce the enlisted personnel of the Army from 175,000 men to 150,000 men, and in the votes which were cast on the naval appropriation bill in connection with the effort to largely reduce the naval appropriations. The Senator said, if I understood him correctly, that already we have reduced naval construction too much. I had hoped that the Senator would have us forget the part he played in that controversy when the naval appropriation bill was being considered; and I regret, as I am sure the country will, to see it recalled this morning by the Senator after he has been designated as a delegate to the disarmament conference.

Mr. President, no conference that will be held this year or which has been held heretofore has carried or will carry with it greater import to the peoples of the world than the conference on the limitation of armaments which has been called to meet in November; but the success or failure of that conference depends upon the personnel of the delegates who will represent the various countries there. Of course, more will depend upon the representatives of the United States than upon the representatives of other countries. They will be the leaders in it; the position that they take will be followed by other countries; and success or failure depends upon the tactics adopted and the policies advocated by the representatives of the United States. So, I am hopeful, since the Senator from Massachusetts has been designated as one of the two representatives already named, that he will change his past views and work in cooperation with the representatives of the other countries to bring about a limitation of armaments. I have no doubt that he will do that; I feel quite sure that he will carry out the policy of the President.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. LODGE. I shall not change my views about the limitation of armaments, because I have always favored it. I voted for it in 1916, when the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] reported what I think was a very great bill for the Navy. I have always been in favor of it, but it must be a general reduction of armaments, and I shall do everything in my power to fulfill those views in the great office for which the President has done me the high honor to select me. I want the Senator to be very assured that there will be nobody there who will labor harder for the general reduction of armaments than I, but I want a general reduction.

Mr. HARRISON. That is very reassuring.

Mr. LODGE. I am glad it reassures the Senator.

Mr. HARRISON. I am glad that the Senator spoke those words that have reassured me and will be reassuring to the country.

Mr. LODGE. They are simply a reiteration of what I have said over and over again.

Mr. HARRISON. I am glad the Senator recalls the vote that he cast on the Swanson resolution back in 1916. It did him credit.

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator will pardon me, for I have to leave the Senate in a moment, one controlling reason for the reduction of armaments is that it will mean a great economy. I hope it will also promote peace; but a general reduction of armaments will, of course, mean the greatest possible economy and money saving for the people of the world.

Mr. HARRISON. I share with the Senator his views. I have before me some estimates of what the recent war cost. They stagger the imagination. They in themselves should be sufficient argument for disarmament and insure a plan for the preservation of peace. It cost Great Britain $44,000,000,000; it cost the United States $32,000,000,000; France, $25,000,000,000; Russia, $22,000,000,000; Italy, $12,000,000,000; Germany, $40,000,000,000; Austria-Hungary, $20,000,000,000; in all, counting all the countries at war, $208,305,851,222 and 10,000,000 lives. So I hope that the results of this conference will mean a prevention of future wars and a saving for the taxpayers of the country. God knows it is the greatest opportunity for a saving, 93 per cent of all our appropriations for the year 1920 going for the preparation and consequences of wars.

Mr. President, I offered that amendment to the bill that will be taken up following the road bill, in the hope that we can obtain open sessions of the conference, and I sincerely trust the Senate and the House will express themselves as favorable to the suggestion. We have heard a great deal about secret diplomacy. We heard much about the secret way in which the treaty of Versailles was considered and adopted, and I trust that such an important conference as this, with the various countries represented considering questions that mean so much to the taxpayers of the world and the cause of peace, will be conducted in the open. I hope not only that the newspaper representatives of all the countries can be there and obtain and give to their fellow countrymen and to the world the views of the various representatives, but that the galleries will be open to the people; that they may know what is going on, and know who is to blame for not bringing about disarmament in case the representatives of any country there fight against the things that we hope will be advocated by the Senator from Massachusetts and his colleagues representing this country.

Mr. President, there must be three or more delegates appointed to represent this country at that conference. Everybody recognizes the ability and statesmanship of the Secretary of State. It was an admirable appointment.

The appointment of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] will be hailed by many people in this country as a very appropriate one, although I am frank to state that many people will take it as a reward for his efforts in the Senate in defeating the greatest instrument that was ever proposed to preserve the peace of the world and to limit armament; because, I care not what plan might be suggested, it can be no better than that which was incorporated in article 8 of the League of Nations covenant. Acting under that article, to which 48 countries now have subscribed and are parties to it, last May there was a committee appointed by the council to limit armaments; and from the time they were appointed up to this good hour they have worked hard and zealously so that they might make their report to the council at the earliest possible date. That report, as I understand, is about finished, and will be submitted to the council of the League of Nations next month, so that if the United States had been in the league we would have been working before now, and would have saved millions in a reduction of armaments to the oppressed taxpayers of America. So while many people in the country will take it that this new honor that has been thrust upon the Senator from Massachusetts was because of the persistent fight that he made for the Lodge reservations that killed the League of Nations covenant with article 8 in it, I shall not share in that view. I believe it has come to him because he is the leader in this body of a great political party, because of his long experience, his fitness, and his training.

But, Mr. President, whether people will agree with the appointment of the Secretary of State and the Senator from Massachusetts or not, I believe that the American people look to the President of the United States at this time to appoint one man above all others on this disarmament conference. He has been the commanding figure in the fight for limitation of armaments since the 3d of last November. He has thrown his magnetic personality into the fight as no other man has. He has waged warfare on those who would bring in large Navy and Army appropriation bills, and he has won out. He has done more than anyone else in the last eight months to crystallize public sentiment in America for disarmament. You have not forgotten, Senators, that it was the distinguished senior Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] who offered his amendment to the naval bill months ago asking for a conference on disarmament. He received no sympathy from the other side of the aisle for his program, and not an iota of cooperation came from the White House to help him in the great fight he was making for disarmament.

The senior Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] for days labored in this body and had to fight the splendid efforts of the distinguished Senator from Idaho for disarmament; and not until the word came from the White House, after weeks of consideration here of the naval appropriation bill, did you change front over there and vote for the amendment known as the Borah amendment for disarmament.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; I yield.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I have no doubt that the Senator from Mississippi is stating this case conscientiously, believing that situation to have been as he has stated.

Mr. HARRISON. Everybody believes it.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Everybody does not believe it. I do not believe it, and I am in a position to know that there is not a single scintilla or word of truth in it—not to challenge the veracity of the Senator from Mississippi at all, but to say that he is misinformed.

The Senator has mentioned my connection with the matter, and the whole foundation and superstructure of the statement made by the Senator from Mississippi is entirely erroneous. There is not, in any aspect whatever, any verification of it in the actual situation which existed at the time the resolution of the Senator from Idaho was presented and during the time it was being considered and at the time it was acted on. I never opposed the resolution of the Senator from Idaho. I never received any intimation from the White House or anywhere else that opposition to it should be withdrawn, or that, as acting chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, I should take this position or that position in regard to it. What I did I did entirely upon my own initiative, without any suggestion whatever of the nature that the Senator from Mississippi has stated.

Mr. HARRISON. I hope the Senator will not take his seat. His statement is very illuminating; but the Senator recalls that it was published in all of the papers, and was not contradicted, that the White House was opposing the Borah amendment, and the Senator opposed it for quite a while. Is not that right?

Mr. POINDEXTER. That is not right.

Mr. HARRISON. It is not?

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator advocated the appropriation against it.

Mr. HARRISON. What is the true situation? The Senator was not for the Borah amendment at the beginning.

Mr. POINDEXTER. There was a period of time when I was uncertain about what it was proper and necessary to do in the matter, particularly in view of the fact that we had already upon the statute books, and had had for some years, a similar declaration.

Mr. HARRISON. I do not want the Senator to reveal any of his private conferences with the President; I would not suggest it; but, if it is proper, I should like to ask the Senator if he and the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] did not go to the White House and confer with President Harding touching the Borah amendment?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I have not anything whatever to say about visits to the White House or conferences with the White House except what I have already said—that opposition to the Borah amendment was not withdrawn at the suggestion of the President. There never had been any opposition to it, so far as I know, so far as my part in the matter was concerned; and upon my own initiative, without a suggestion from anybody at all, I advocated the adoption of the resolution of the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. HARRISON. But the Senator did not answer my question. I am sure it was due to inadvertence. I asked the Senator if he, in company with the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], did not go to the White House and confer with the President touching the Borah amendment?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I said that I did not have anything whatever to say about that matter. I do not care to discuss visits to the White House or to be answering questions about where I went and in whose company I went, but I have stated to the Senator the situation and the facts in the case in so far as I regard them to be pertinent to the matter under discussion.

Mr. KING. Mr. President—

Mr. HARRISON. May I ask the Senator one other question? The Senator declines to tell me whether or not he and the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] went to the White House and conferred with President Harding while the Senate was considering the naval appropriation bill. Of course all the papers carried the statement that they went there and came away, and either the Senator from Maine or the Senator from Washington was reported in the papers to have given out a statement that the President was opposed to the Borah amendment. The whole country knows that; it was never controverted, and this is the first time I have understood that the Senator did not confer with the President and that the President was not opposed to the amendment.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; I yield.

Mr. KING. The Senator may recall that when the naval appropriation bill was under consideration during this session I had the honor to be discussing that measure and suggested a number of amendments calling for a material reduction in the bill. During the discussion I called attention to the fact that it was reported that there was opposition to any movement which would tend to limit armaments and that the President of the United States, it was reported, was antagonistic to the Borah amendment, or at least to a limitation of armaments.

During the discussion the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] interrupted the Senator from Idaho, who had asked my consent to take the floor, and he then stated that the Senator from Washington and the Senator from Maine had been at the White House and had conferred with the President, as I recall his statement, in respect to this matter, and it was then, and not until then, that any voice from the Republican side, other than of those who were favorable to the reduction of armaments, such as the Senator from Idaho—it was only then that any official voice came from the other side that the Borah amendment would not be opposed by the Republicans in this Chamber, and the intimation was that the President of the United States had signified that he had no opposition to the Borah amendment. The Senator knows, however, that our distinguished friends upon the other side, or a majority of them, by their silence or by their affirmative statements, had conveyed the impression to the country that the Borah resolution would be killed by the majority party in the Senate.

Mr. HARRISON. And the administration did not change front until word went to them that the Democratic minority were going to line up solidly for the Borah amendment, and that there would be enough votes on the other side, together with the Democratic votes, to put it over. Then the opposition to it crumbled, and we saw in the papers that the administration had withdrawn its opposition to it.

Mr. POINDEXTER and Mr. TOWNSEND addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield to both Senators.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Mississippi yields to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. POINDEXTER. So far from there being opposition to a limitation of armaments on the Republican side, to which the Senator has referred, the records of Congress show, on the contrary, that there had been, practically at all times, a unanimous sentiment upon this side of the Chamber in favor of a universal or general limitation of armaments, and one of the chief criticisms of the merits of the instrument, which the Senator from Mississippi has seen fit to eulogize in what I regard as rather exaggerated terms, was that in that great gathering of the nations of the world, at a time when old policies had been overturned and old records had been obliterated and there was an opportunity to establish the world upon a new basis, the opportunity was neglected, and there was no effort on the part of the representatives of the United States then and there to agree upon terms and conditions of a limitation of armaments for the world.

The Senator very well knows that there has never been any objection upon the Republican side of the Senate to the provision in the naval act of 1916, which, to all intents and purposes, contained the same provision that was included in the naval appropriation act this year.

What I say is not in any way intended to deprecate the efforts which have been made by the Senator from Idaho in this behalf. A great deal of what the Senator from Mississippi has said in regard to him is entirely justified, because he has brought the question to the front, and forced it upon the attention of Congress and upon the attention of the world; but there has been a controversy, there has been a fundamental difference of opinion, as to the manner in which the proceedings looking toward a reduction of expenditures for armaments in the world should be carried on.

There are a great many people who advocate the throwing down of the arms of this country as the first move to be made in the process of a limitation of armaments. There are a great many others who are opposed to the United States disarming itself and rendering itself helpless before the great military nations of the world until assurances are given that other nations will likewise dispense with their armament, so that when the agreement has been reached we shall be upon the same relative basis we were on before.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the junior Senator from Mississippi yield to his colleague?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I ask my colleague to yield long enough for me to ask a question of the Senator from Washington, my momentary watchword being the maxim, "Revenons à nos moutons"—let us come back to our sheep.

Is it not true that at one time there was a vote in the Committee on Naval Affairs upon the Borah amendment, and that there was a solid Republican vote against it and a solid Democratic vote, with probably one exception of all the Democrats present, in favor of it? Is or is not that a fact? I have heard that it was.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I do not remember exactly how the vote was. There was a vote in the Committee on Naval Affairs against the Borah amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have heard that the Borah amendment was voted down in the committee by a solid Republican vote, and that all the Democrats voted for it, except probably one. I was not present, and I do not know; but I had hoped that the Senator from Washington could remember whether that did take place.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. In order to refresh the memory of Senators, I desire to read from the RECORD of May 13, 1921, page 1418, when the naval appropriation bill was under consideration:

Mr. HALE. I will say that I went to see the President with the Senator from Washington, and we talked over the question of disarmament, and I gathered from what was said there that the President thought it was not necessary for Congress to go ahead in this way with a resolution asking for disarmament.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, that corroborates the statement which I made a moment ago. I did not care to comment on my visit to the White House.

Mr. McKELLAR. I think it shows just exactly the opposite of what I understood the Senator to say.

Mr. POINDEXTER. No; it is the opposite of what the Senator from Mississippi said. If the Senator from Tennessee will allow me just a moment, I refused to be catechized about visits I had made to the White House; I said nothing about that. But what the Senator from Mississippi said was that, being in charge of the naval appropriation bill, I had opposed the Borah resolution until we had received word from the White House to accept it. What the Senator from Tennessee reads is that the White House were opposed to it. How does he reconcile that with the statement made by the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. HARRISON. We can clear that up.

Mr. McKELLAR. I wanted the facts to appear; and I read the statement that at that time, when the Senator from Idaho, as the RECORD shows, was fighting—on that very day—for his resolution for disarmament the President of the United States, according to a statement made by the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], was opposed to Congress taking any steps. Since that time the President has changed his position, and he is now the only man fighting for disarmament, according to the newspapers, while the poor Senator from Idaho is lost in the shuffle. I think the Senator from Idaho is entitled to the greatest credit in this matter.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The resolution of the Senator from Idaho was adopted, and, of course, he is entitled to credit for it.

Mr. HARRISON. Before the Senator again takes his seat, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. HARRISON. When the Senator went to the White House was he for the Borah amendment or against it?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I decline to answer that question. I do not propose to be catechized upon my visits to the White House.

Mr. HARRISON. I will ask the Senator one other question, and he can answer if he will. When the Senator came away from the White House was he for it or against it?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I entertained the same opinion when I came away that I had when I went. But, Mr. President, I rose to deny positively the statement of the Senator from Mississippi, which prompted me to interrupt him, that my action in regard to the Borah resolution had been influenced in any way whatever, or changed, by any word from the White House.

Mr. HARRISON. Did the Senator vote for the Borah amendment in the committee or against it?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I voted both for it and against it.

Mr. HARRISON. But the last time?

Mr. POINDEXTER. On one occasion I voted against it and on a subsequent occasion I voted for it.

Mr. HARRISON. He voted for it when the President withdrew his opposition to it. He was against it before the President had withdrawn his opposition.

Mr. POINDEXTER. That is exactly what I dispute. There is not any foundation for that statement at all. I assume the Senator believes that to be true. I do not know what he bases his statement on. I do not think he can produce a record or any testimony or evidence to substantiate that statement. It is not true, and there is no foundation for it at all.

Mr. HARRISON. Does not the Senator think the senior Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] is a very good witness?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Yes; I think he is, but he has not testified on that subject. He has not said anything about my attitude.

Mr. HARRISON. Does not the Senator think his vote is pretty good evidence?

Mr. POINDEXTER. His vote is no evidence at all as to my position.

Mr. HARRISON. But the vote of the Senator from Washington. The Senator says he was against it at one time, and that he was for it at another time; that he voted both ways on the proposition.

Mr. POINDEXTER. No; I did not say any such thing.

Mr. HARRISON. I misunderstood the Senator, then.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I said I voted at one time against the Borah resolution as an amendment to the naval appropriation bill. On another occasion I voted in favor of putting it on the naval appropriation bill. It does not make any difference, in my judgment, and I often stated that in the Senate, whether it was attached to the bill or not, because it was well known that it was the purpose of the President of the United States, in accordance with pledges and promises which he had made, and in accordance with steps which he had already taken, to call a conference of the nations, to bring about, if possible, a limitation of armaments.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I shall not proceed further. I merely want to express this thought, that the distinguished Senator from Idaho led in this movement. More than any other man in America he crystallized sentiment for a limitation of armaments. If there be one man in the United States above all others who should be selected as one of the delegates to this conference it is the distinguished Senator from Idaho, and I know that there are forces at work in the city of Washington and throughout this country now that want to see men of a different view on the delegation—views that are not now and have never been shared by the distinguished Senator from Idaho. But the success or failure of this conference will depend upon the personnel of our delegation, and let us hope that they will be men or women whose hearts are enthusiastically in the cause—that real results can be obtained. If not, then the conference will be a mere "by-play," a sham, a pretense.

Mr. McKELLAR. Before the Senator sits down, may I interrupt to ask him a question?

Mr. HARRISON. Certainly.

Mr. McKELLAR. I call the attention of the Senator from Mississippi to a question and an answer as they appear on page 1419 of the RECORD of May 13, 1921, about the matter which he has just been discussing. The junior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] said this:

The Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] has just indicated, if I interpreted his remarks correctly, that the President of the United States had intimidated—and if I quote him incorrectly I hope he will correct me—that this was not quite the time to present the question of disarmament. I would prefer to have the Senator state what was said, because then I can not be put in the attitude of misquoting him.

This is the answer of the Senator from Maine:

Mr. HALE. I stated that my impression, after talking with the President, was that he considered that this is not the time to go ahead with a resolution of this kind. Of course, the Senator realizes that our foreign relations at the present time are extremely delicate and that the country at large is looking to the President to straighten out these foreign relations.

Under the circumstances I do not think, so far as I myself am concerned, that we need advise the President what to do in the matter of making treaties. I think we can safely leave it to him. So far as the resolution is concerned, there was a resolution when the 1916 program was adopted which was passed by Congress looking forward to disarmament. I think we can let it go at that without taking any action at the present time. I am simply speaking for myself.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, before the Senator from Michigan proceeds with his matter I should like to inquire of the Senator from Washington or any other member of the Foreign Relations Committee why Germany has not been invited to participate in the conference?

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. HARRISON. It may be because the administration has not decided whether we are still at war or are now at peace. The proclamation has not yet been issued that Mr. Daugherty, the Attorney General, has been considering for months, and there seems to be a good deal of uncertainty and doubt as to whether or not the proclamation will be issued.

INTERSTATE HIGHWAY SYSTEM.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the amendment of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1072) to amend the act entitled "An act to provide that the United States shall aid the States in the construction of rural post roads, and for other purposes," approved July 11, 1916, as amended and supplemented, and for other purposes.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I hope now we can proceed with the business that is before the Senate. If Senators desire to talk politics and to catechize each other as to what they have done or have not done, I have no objection to it if I could only persuade the Senate to allow us to proceed with the bill that has the approval of nearly every Member of the Senate and which we can dispose of very quickly and send it to conference, where I am anticipating we will have to devote some time to harmonizing the differences between the two Houses. If we carry an appropriation in the bill it will have to go back to the House and then to conference before that can be determined. What I am asking now is that the Senate may proceed, according to what is its seeming desire, to dispose of the bill and leave these other matters out.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SUTHERLAND in the chair). Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I yield.

Mr. POMERENE. I hope the Senator will not be too insistent. There has been no opportunity for morning business, and I am anxious to present a Senate resolution calling upon the State Department for certain information with respect to the sinking of the Lusitania and claims that have been filed, and so forth. I wish to ask unanimous consent to present the resolution now and for its present consideration. If it leads to any discussion at all I will withdraw it.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I yield for that purpose, although I hope I will not be asked again to yield.

"LUSITANIA" CLAIMS.

Mr. POMERENE submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 134), which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

The resolution (S. Res. 134) was read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of State, if not incompatible with the public interest, be, and he is hereby, requested to furnish to the Senate:

- (a) A full and complete list of the names and last place of residence of each and every American man, woman, and child aboard the Lusitania at the time of its sinking, whether lost, killed, or survivor.
- (b) A full and complete list of all the claims, giving the character and amount thereof, which have been filed with the State Department in connection with the sinking of the Lusitania.
- (c) A report as to what steps, if any, have been taken for the adjustment of such claims.
- (d) A full report of all correspondence had between the State Department and the German authorities bearing upon this subject.

UNITED STATES VETERANS BUREAU.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President—

Mr. TOWNSEND. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. I report from the Committee on Finance a joint resolution which was agreed upon by the committee this morning, and I ask for its present consideration. If it leads to a moment's discussion I shall withdraw it.

It is simply a joint resolution changing the name of the Veterans Bureau to the United States Veterans Bureau. In the designation of the bureau as the Veterans Bureau, Col. Forbes advises me that every American Legion has a veterans bureau within the legion and the mails have already begun to be mixed up and mail intended for those bureaus are coming into the Veterans Bureau here in Washington. The joint resolution merely changes the name from the Veterans Bureau to the United States Veterans Bureau to differentiate between that bureau and the veterans bureau of the American Legion.

Mr. KING. May I inquire of my colleague whether it is a unanimous report?

Mr. SMOOT. It is a unanimous report.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 103) changing the name of the Veterans Bureau to "United States Veterans Bureau," was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Veterans Bureau, created by the act entitled "An act to establish a veterans bureau and to improve the facilities and service of such bureau, and further to amend and modify the war risk insurance act," approved August 9, 1921, shall be known as the "United States Veterans Bureau," and whenever used in such act the term "Veterans Bureau" shall mean "United States Veterans Bureau."

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INTERSTATE HIGHWAY SYSTEM.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the amendment of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1072) to amend the act entitled "An act to provide that the United States shall aid the States in the construction of rural post roads, and for other purposes," approved July 11, 1916, as amended and supplemented, and for other purposes.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator from Michigan a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Certainly.

Mr. CURTIS. As I understand it, if the Senate agrees to the amendment reported from the committee by the Senator from Michigan, the original Senate bill No. 1072, the House substitute, and the Senate amendment will all three be in conference?

Mr. TOWNSEND. That is the way I understand it.

Mr. CURTIS. May I ask the Presiding Officer if the amendment is still open to amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is still open to amendment.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the amendment has not yet been read.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Yes; it was all read but the last page. I asked if it was desired to have that read, and no one asked for it, so I assumed that we were proceeding as if it had been read. It all appears in the Record this morning.

Mr. KING. May I ask the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] a question? The Senator from Wyoming, as I understood him yesterday, gave notice that he intended to call up for consideration and passage to-day what has been called the emergency or deficiency appropriation bill containing an appropriation with reference to the Shipping Board. May I inquire of the Senator whether it is his purpose to call that up to-day, because I wish to warn him that if it is there will be very serious opposition?

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I may say to the Senator that he is mistaken in saying that I said I would call the bill up to-day and pass it to-day, because I expect the help of the Senator in some few remarks upon the bill which will probably take longer than we would have to-day. It is my purpose to bring the bill up for consideration in the Senate as soon as the pending bill, and perhaps an important resolution now lying on the table, can be taken care of.

The deficiency appropriation bill will undoubtedly have to be considered for some little time, because, judging from what has passed before, there is a great deal of just criticism of certain earlier expenditures. I wish that the Senator, if he will do so, being interested in the subject, would read the Senate committee hearings which the Senator now has in his hand. That is one reason why I have delayed to-day any effort to get the bill up until other matters might be disposed of.

Mr. KING. The Senator knows the hearings were obtained just a few moments ago.

Mr. WARREN. They were obtained this morning.

Mr. KING. I telephoned for them this morning, and was unable to get them until I came to the Senate Chamber a few moments ago.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, what bill is the Senator discussing?

Mr. KING. The emergency Shipping Board appropriation bill or deficiency appropriation bill. May I inquire of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] or any member of the Committee on Appropriations if there is any purpose to attempt to call up to-day what is known as the dye bill, the emergency tariff bill? I wish to warn the Senator that there will be opposition to that.

Mr. CURTIS. The Senator has the right to oppose any measure he pleases.

Mr. KING. I wish to be fair with the Senator and let him know he can not get it through in a hurry.

Mr. CURTIS. The Senator from Kansas is not in charge of the bill. I understand the Senator refers to the emergency tariff bill, which includes dyestuffs, but I understood from the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER] that it is his desire at the first opportunity to call up that bill for consideration.

Mr. KING. There will be no effort to supplant the road bill now before the Senate?

Mr. CURTIS. No effort has been made up to date to do so.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I may say that the Senator from Michigan will not consent to that if he can prevent it. It was declared that there would be no effort to interfere with the consideration of the good roads bill. That is the thing that is disturbing the Senator from Michigan more than anything else. He is not disturbed over the prospect of some other bill supplanting that measure.

Mr. KING. I wish to assure the Senator that I shall support his effort to prevent a substitution of either of the other measures for the one he is so ably championing.

Mr. TOWNSEND. There is no likelihood that that will be done.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Michigan a question?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. CARAWAY. On page 10 of the amendment, section 10 provides:

That before any project shall be approved by the commission of any State such State shall make provision for State funds required each year of such State by this act for construction and reconstruction of highways, and shall also make adequate provision for maintenance of all Federal-aid highways within the State.

Under the provisions of that section we could not comply with the provisions of the amendment in my State. If the Senator could accept an amendment which would read "such State or subdivision thereof," we would be able to do so, because we make our improvements in our States by improvement districts. The State is without power under the constitution to accumulate a State fund. That question was discussed before, and I understood there was an amendment to be offered to the bill that would cure that.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator and ask him to read section 27 of the amendment?

Mr. CARAWAY. I have read that. It gives us two years.

Mr. TOWNSEND. That is the extent of the appropriation.

Mr. CARAWAY. I wish to say to the Senator from Michigan that the people of the State of Arkansas have three times passed upon a proposed change in our constitution that would permit the raising of funds by the State at large, and each time it has been defeated by an overwhelming majority of the people. There is no reason to believe that the people desire to change the constitution, but we can meet the situation by inserting the words "or subdivision thereof," because we meet our State appropriations for improvement of highways by subdivisions of the State known as improvement districts. I should like to call it to the attention of the Senator at this time and a little later on offer such an amendment, if it meets with his approval.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I hope the Senator will not feel the necessity of presenting such an amendment, because one of the things that has been contended for before the committee and before the House and that is strongly contended for by the highway department and the Secretary of Agriculture and that is mentioned by the President is that we shall deal with the States in making these appropriations. We have extended that by frequently giving the States an opportunity to amend their constitutions. The Senator said his State has not done so.

We provide that during the life of the appropriation the money can be raised just as it is now.

Mr. CARAWAY. I understand that.

Mr. TOWNSEND. So that takes care of it. I dislike very much to recognize that principle, because I think it is a vicious principle. I think it is a mistake generally to allow the Federal money to be prorated among those counties which can afford to meet the expense and only those counties get the money.

Mr. CARAWAY. The Senator does not understand the conditions in our State, because the money does not go to the counties at all. There is not anything in our State constitution or our laws to prevent dealing directly with the highway department. We met the provisions of the old bill, but there is no provision at all under our constitution whereby we can raise State funds for the construction or maintenance of public highways. We have to do that by subdivisions of the State known as improvement districts.

The people after all must be the judge of whether they want to amend the constitution or not, and they have declined to do it. There was a reason, for that rests upon the conditions which existed just after the Civil War, when every subdivision of the State was bonded until it was bankrupt by a government that was not of the people; so when they rewrote the constitution they hedged against that condition ever arising again, and they are still reluctant to change it and will not do it. I do not think the Federal Government ought to try to coerce a State into changing its constitution. If the State is able to meet the conditions of the Federal Government by subdivisions of the State meeting the requirements, it ought not be required to change its constitution and its whole organic law to meet an act of Congress in order to be treated fairly, as other States are treated.

Mr. TOWNSEND. This bill does not provide that the appropriation may not go to the Senator's State.

Mr. CARAWAY. Under this provision our State could share in the appropriation for two years, but we are now writing a general law, and at the expiration of two years—

Mr. TOWNSEND. It will be necessary to make another appropriation at the end of one year, and in the appropriation which we make next year we can provide such terms for its distribution as we wish, but I think that we are caring for everything in the pending bill. This is a provision that has been agreed to. There was an even more drastic provision in the House bill than is inserted here. We eliminated the provision in reference to it being necessary for States to amend their constitutions in order to get the benefit of the appropriation.

Mr. CARAWAY. I know that.

Mr. TOWNSEND. And we provided simply how the money which goes to the States should be met under present conditions for two years.

Mr. CARAWAY. Let me ask the Senator from Michigan will not section 10 of the pending bill, if we adopt it, be the law of the land at the end of two years?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Yes; but it would be of no use unless an appropriation was made to carry it out.

Mr. CARAWAY. I know that, but the appropriation would be made subject to the provisions of existing law, and we could not, therefore, share in an appropriation made under this proposed act after the expiration of two years.

Mr. TOWNSEND. There will be some States which will have complied with the law. Take Louisiana, for instance, which is in very similar condition to the State of Arkansas. Louisiana has already practically made the necessary provision in her law, and it will be in operation before the two years shall have expired.

Mr. CARAWAY. But the people of my State have not seen fit to do that, and Congress has no right to coerce them.

Mr. TOWNSEND. The Senator may make that argument when similar legislation comes up the next time providing for another appropriation.

Mr. CARAWAY. But this bill will then be the law; the appropriations will be made subject to existing law, and this will not then be an open question.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I should myself object to a general hard-and-fast law covering all time, which would permit the State of Arkansas, which I think has suffered considerably through the lack of sufficient authority under her constitution to properly handle road funds—

Mr. CARAWAY. I think the Senator from Michigan is making that charge without any evidence at all to support it. I have heard the loose charge made that the Federal funds were wasted, but there is no man who lives who can produce a single iota of evidence to support it. I have myself investigated that charge. I do not think that Congress ought to try to coerce the States and say to a State, "If you do not change your constitution and accept our views, we are not going to let you be treated as other States are treated; we are going to deny you the appropriation." I do not think the Senator from Michigan ought to take that position.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I will say to the Senator that I feel that the Federal Government should and must insist upon the right of seeing that the Federal money is properly expended, and, as I before stated, expended for a Federal purpose. If the laws of the State of Arkansas are such that the money proposed to be appropriated by the pending measure has got to be prorated upon the counties of the State without any regard to a system—

Mr. CARAWAY. I have told the Senator from Michigan that there is not any such law as that in my State and that there is not any such practice as that. The counties in my State do not have anything to do with the matter; the money does not go to the counties. If the Senator from Michigan has obtained any such information as that, he has been erroneously informed. The improvement of public highways in my State is made by what are called improvement districts. Those districts may be a part of a county or may embrace several counties. They are merely subdivisions of the State for administrative purposes. Our constitution would not permit us to manage the matter otherwise. Our people in their wisdom have seen fit not to change their constitution, and I do not think Congress has any right to try to coerce them into changing their constitution.

PETITIONS.

Mr. WILLIS presented the petition of Frank F. Jones and sundry other members of the Central Branch, National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, of Dayton, Ohio, praying for the enactment of legislation granting pensions and increase of pensions to veterans of Indian wars and campaigns and to widows and orphans of deceased veterans of such wars and campaigns, which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HALE. I ask leave to present two petitions and, by request, I ask that they be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

There being no objection, the petitions were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

"Whereas it is an American principle established by the Declaration of Independence that all Governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed; and

"Whereas the people of Ireland in their general elections held in the years 1918, 1920, and 1921 have each time voted by an overwhelming majority in favor of an independent republic; and

"Whereas the government of the republic of Ireland exists and is a functioning government, and 90 per cent of the people of Ireland are giving their allegiance to that government and only that government; and

"Whereas the British Government is maintaining in Ireland a great military force in a state of war in an attempt to crush the Irish people against all law, both moral law and positive law; and those military forces are guilty of all manner of atrocities against civil population of Ireland: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That we protest against this attempt to allow England to escape immediate payment of the principal and interest of this great debt, and we demand of the Government of the United States that means be taken promptly to require England to pay the interest due on this debt and to pay the principal speedily; be it further

"Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the President and one each to Senator FERNALD and Senator HALE and Congressman WHITE with the request that they be published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and that copies be given to the public press of the State of Maine."

LEWISTON, ME., August 2, 1921.

I hereby certify that the foregoing resolutions were unanimously adopted at a public meeting of citizens of Lewiston and Auburn, Me., which meeting was held under the auspices of MacSwiney Council of Lewiston of the American Association for the Recognition of the Irish Republic, and at which it is estimated there were more than 2,000 citizens present.

That whereas the Secretary of the Treasury has asked from the Congress blanket authority to refund the debt of nearly $5,000,000,000 and unpaid interest due from Great Britain to the United States into long-term obligations; be it further

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. WADSWORTH:

A bill (S. 2421) to provide for the exchange of Government lands for privately owned lands in the Territory of Hawaii; and

A bill (S. 2422) to provide for flying pay for officers and enlisted men of the Regular Army who are incapacitated by reason of injuries incurred in or by aircraft accidents; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. SWANSON:

A bill (S. 2423) for the relief of J. W. Hogg; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. WADSWORTH:

A bill (S. 2424) to amend an act entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes," approved June 3, 1916; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN:

A bill (S. 2425) granting permission to the city of Plainfield, N. J., to widen Watchung Avenue in front of the Federal post-office building, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

PRINTING OF THE TARIFF BILL.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to Senate concurrent resolution 7, which was to strike out all after the resolving clause and to insert:

That the bill (H. R. 7456) to provide revenue, to regulate commerce with foreign countries, to encourage industries of the United States, and for other purposes, as passed by the House of Representatives, be printed as a Senate document with an index, and that 6,000 additional copies be printed, of which 2,000 shall be for the Senate document room; 2,000 for the House document room; 1,000 for the Committee on Finance of the Senate, and 1,000 for the Committee on Ways and Means of the House.

Mr. SMOOT. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House. I will simply state that the resolution as passed by the Senate provided for the printing of 15,000 copies of the tariff bill with an index. The House has amended the resolution by providing for only 6,000 copies, and we shall try to get along with 6,000. Therefore I move that the Senate concur in the House amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OF NATIONAL PROHIBITION ACT.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives on the amendments of the Senate to House bill 7294, which will be read.

The Assistant Secretary read as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, UNITED STATES,
August 16, 1921.

Resolved, That the House concur in the amendments of the Senate Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 11, 12, 13, 16, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, and 31 to the bill (H. R. 7294) entitled "An act supplemental to the national prohibition act."

That the House concur in the amendment of the Senate No. 10 with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by said amendment insert the following: "Provided, That no change of formula shall be required and no permit to manufacture any article under subdivision (e), section 4, Title II of the national prohibition act shall be revoked unless it shall be made to appear to the commissioner that the sale or use of such article is substantially increased in the community by reason of its use as a beverage or for intoxicating beverage purposes."

That the House concur in the amendment of the Senate No. 15 with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by said amendment insert the following: "Provided, That no vinous liquor shall be imported into the United States unless it is made to appear to the commissioner that vinous liquor for such nonbeverage use produced in the United States is not sufficient to meet such nonbeverage needs: Provided further, That this provision against importation shall not apply to shipments en route to the United States at the time of the passage of this act."

That the House concur in the amendment of the Senate No. 32 with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by said amendment insert the following:

"SEC. 6. That no officer, agent, or employee of the United States, while engaged in the enforcement of this act, the national prohibition act, or any law in reference to the manufacture or taxation of, or traffic in, intoxicating liquor, shall search any private dwelling without a warrant directing such search, and no such warrant shall issue unless there is reason to believe such dwelling is used as a place in which liquor is manufactured for sale or sold. The term "private dwelling" shall be construed to include the room or rooms occupied not transiently, but solely as a residence in an apartment house, hotel, or boarding house. Any violation of any provision of this paragraph shall be punished by a fine of not to exceed $1,000 or imprisonment not to exceed one year, or both such fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court."

That the House disagree to the amendments of the Senate Nos. 14, 17, 18, and 19.

That the House agree to the conference requested by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

Ordered, That Mr. VOLSTEAD, Mr. DYER, and Mr. SUMNERS of Texas be the managers of the conference on the part of the House.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, it appears that the action of the House of Representatives, as stated in the message which has just been read, was taken before the appointment by the House of the conferees who are named in the message. I move that the Senate disagree to the amendments of the House to Senate amendments numbered 10, 15, and 32.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. WADSWORTH. May I ask the Senator from South Dakota what action, if any, the House of Representatives took upon the amendment which I submitted, and which was adopted by the Senate unanimously, relating to the return to the United States of certain liquors of American manufacture?

Mr. STERLING. I understand that the House did not disagree to that amendment. I think it is understood by the conferees on the part of the House that that amendment shall stand.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I will ask the Senator to explain to the Senate just what the parliamentary situation is now with respect to the bill.

Mr. STERLING. The parliamentary situation, as I understand, is this—

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I rise to a question of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state his question of order.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I assume that this matter can only come up at this time by unanimous consent.

Mr. WARREN. It can be presented, but can not be proceeded with if it is objected to.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. It is a message from the House. The Senator from South Dakota is making a motion about a matter which comes over from the House while there is another bill before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If objection is made—

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Reserving the right to object, I should like to have the Senator from South Dakota answer the question of the Senator from New York in order that we may obtain some information from the Senator regarding the situation. I reserve the right to object.

Mr. STERLING. I have given the Senator from New York my understanding of the situation in regard to the amendment to which he has referred.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The Senator from New York just asked the Senator from South Dakota what the parliamentary situation was.

Mr. STERLING. The parliamentary situation, as I understand, is this: The Senate has appointed its conferees upon this bill, and those conferees are now in session with the conferees on the part of the House appointed in pursuance of the action of the House, as set forth in the message just read by the Secretary. Of course, this action having been taken by the House itself since final action of the Senate on the bill, I think it necessitates action now upon the part of the Senate disagreeing to the action of the House in amending certain amendments made by the Senate.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, how does it happen that the Senate appointed managers of a conference on the part of the Senate before the House disagreed to the Senate amendments and when, therefore, there was no disagreement between the two Houses?

Mr. STERLING. A conference was requested at the time of the passage of the bill. The motion was that the Senate request a conference with the House on the bill and amendments and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate. It was the usual motion which, as I understand, is made in all such cases where a House bill is amended by the Senate, as was done in this case.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. And the conferees have been in session?

Mr. STERLING. They are in session now, and they were in session when this message was brought to their attention.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I have no objection to disagreeing to the House amendments to the Senate amendments.

Mr. STERLING. The conferees are engaged in considering the amendments, especially amendment No. 32 and the House amendment to that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, it seems to me, irrespective of the merits of the original bill or of the amendments which have been made to it, that the Senate is confronted with a very peculiar situation. The Senate adopted a number of amendments to the bill in the usual fashion; it requested a conference with the House and appointed its conferees. Now, before the conferees of the Senate have met with the conferees of the House, the House proceeds to accept certain amendments and to suggest other amendments to the Senate amendments. Are not our conferees now clothed with complete authority to discuss that matter with the House conferees? Is it the part of wisdom for the Senate to proceed with action concerning amendments to this bill before its own conferees have made any report to it whatsoever?

In other words, is the Senate prepared to go into joint conference with the full membership of the House? That is what this amounts to, as I understand. Of course, it is due to the peculiar result of the new House rules, but we clothed our conferees with power to represent us and before they have had an opportunity to represent us at all the Senate is asked to accept certain House action. I think it is not a proper attitude for the Senate to assume in support of its own prestige and power.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, the conferees, of course, were clothed with the power under the action of the Senate to insist upon the amendments made by the Senate. That is what the pending motion amounts to; that we disagree now to the amendments made by the House to the amendments made by the Senate. The conferees on the part of the Senate were appointed under a motion involving that action.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Will the Senator answer me this question? If the Senate adopted certain amendments and then insisted upon its amendments and asked the House to agree to a conference and the House has appointed its conferees and the Senate has appointed its conferees, why do we need to disagree to some amendments that the House has made?

Mr. STERLING. I understand that is necessary. The House having acted, it is not the action of the conferees but the action of the House, and that action of the House having been messaged to the Senate it is necessary then for the Senate to take action disagreeing to the amendments made by the House.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President—

Mr. STERLING. I yield to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. WARREN. The way that matter should be handled, in my judgment, is this: It should be entirely in the hands of the conferees, and the conferees on the part of the Senate should insist that the House address the Senate through its conferees, the matter having been committed to a conference between the two Houses. So that no motion whatever is needed at this time, from my standpoint.

Mr. STERLING. Although that might have been proper, I might agree with the Senator from Wyoming that it is proper, yet I think this is the quickest and most expeditious way of disposing of the matter.

I have been informed that the action proposed is necessary to be taken by the Senate; that the House having acted, we should disagree to the House amendments to the Senate amendments upon which we were instructed to insist when the conferees were appointed.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, after the Senate has sent a bill to a conference committee, to which the House agrees, how does the House take the bill out of the hands of the conference committee and proceed to make further amendments?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will call the Senator's attention to the fact that the House took this action before it agreed to a conference.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Very well.

Mr. WARREN. Then it has been taken up in the House as a whole matter and not sent to conference?

Mr. STERLING. Yes.

Mr. WARREN. And you have not been with the conference considering the question?

Mr. STERLING. We have been with the conference practically, of course, considering the question.

Mr. WARREN. Did they say this was submitted to them as conferees?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The papers were not regularly before the conferees at the time. They must have met informally.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, how did the Senate get these papers? Did they come with the message from the House?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. They came directly from the House.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, it seems to me, if I may be pardoned, that the conference is complete when the House agrees to it, and this is merely a message of information.

Mr. WARREN. There is nothing further for the Senate to do until you go out and finish it in conference and come to us with an agreement of your conferees.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that it goes further, because the same message agrees to a conference after the House has taken this action.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Does it not also inform the Senate that the House has agreed to certain Senate amendments and disagreed to others?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It does; yes.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Was not that a function of the conference committee?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The conference committee, as the Chair understands, had never had the bill under consideration up to that time.

Mr. STERLING. That is true.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President, I ask that the report be read again. A good many Senators have come in since it was read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report has been read in full.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Let it be read again, Mr. President.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, if the object here is to consume time, I shall have to ask for the regular order and object to the consideration of the report, unless the motion is agreed to. Evidently it is the intention to discuss it at some length, and I shall have to object if that is the object.

Mr. STANLEY. That is not the object. I simply asked to have the report read for information. I was out when the report was read, and I want to know what is in it.

Mr. STERLING. It is not the object, I will say to the Senator from Michigan. I had expected that this matter would have been disposed of before this time. It was simply a matter of our disagreeing to the House amendments to our amendments made here in the Senate. That was all there was to it. The conferees having been appointed on the part of the Senate, there is no further action to take in that respect.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Does the Senator think any action is required for a consideration of this conference report?

Mr. STERLING. I was informed that the parliamentary procedure required that action, since the House took this action before or simultaneously with the appointment of these conferees. The bill went to the House—it did not go directly to the conferees—and the House acted upon it, agreeing as a House to certain amendments made by the Senate and concurring in certain other amendments with amendments made by the House.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, how does it differ from any other bill? Why do not the conferees go on and settle this question? You have the notice from the House of what they have done, and that is all there is to it. Now, you can go on and settle this matter without any action upon the part of the Senate at all.

Mr. STERLING. I should like to do that if it can be done under the parliamentary procedure, but the question has been raised that it could not be done. Very good parliamentarians have said so, and that is the reason why I am here with this simple motion.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, there is a difference of opinion here. I must object to the further consideration of the matter now. It may be taken up later. The Senator will find that the House has provided conferees now with authority, and they are governed by certain action that the House has taken, and they will tell you that they can not yield on those items. It is not a full conference in that sense.

Mr. LODGE. It is not a full and free conference.

Mr. WARREN. No; we do not have them any more under the rules of the House. It should go back without any action; but rather than burn up the time when we should be doing other business, I object to further consideration of the matter at this time.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I understand that this must be done by unanimous consent at this time, if at all. I suppose, therefore, that I shall have to yield.

INTERSTATE HIGHWAY SYSTEM.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the amendment of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1072) to amend the act entitled "An act to provide that the United States shall aid the States in the construction of rural post roads, and for other purposes," approved July 11, 1916, as amended and supplemented, and for other purposes.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I desire to call attention to an amendment that was made to the pending bill on yesterday. On page 9, at the end of line 16, I wish to insert a proviso, if I may have the attention of the Senate for just a moment. Yesterday on line 13, page 9, the word "less" was stricken out and the word "more" inserted. That amendment ought not to stand in that way for this reason: Some 16 of the States of the Union have a much more liberal system of roads than 7 per cent of the highways, and in most of those States they devote all of the Federal aid to interstate roads. They do not allow any part of this money to be expended on any other than through interstate roads. This would prevent those States from carrying out their policy, so I propose to adopt the following proviso:

Provided, That, with the approval of any State highway department, the commission may approve the expenditure of more than 60 per cent of the Federal aid apportioned to such State upon the primary or interstate highways in such State.

So that when the highway department of a State desires this money to be expended as they are expending it now, upon the interstate system, that can be done. Otherwise we are compelling Illinois and Michigan and Kansas and a great many of these other States to divide their money and put a part of it on State roads when they do not want to put it there. Their system has been laid out and they are building their system of interstate roads with the Federal money.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Yes; I yield.

Mr. SIMMONS. I want to see if I understand the Senator. According to the amendment made yesterday afternoon as it now stands, not more than 60 per cent can be devoted to this purpose. The Senator does not propose to change that but proposes to add a proviso?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Yes. It ought to have been as it was originally prepared by the State highway commissioners, who were the authors of the Dowell bill—"not less."

Mr. SIMMONS. In the proviso that can not be changed except in the first instance at the request of the State authorities?

Mr. TOWNSEND. That is right.

Mr. SIMMONS. And the acquiescence in that request of the national authorities?

Mr. TOWNSEND. That is right.

Mr. SIMMONS. Personally, I see no objection to it, if that is the purpose of the Senator's amendment.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LENROOT in the chair). The amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. At the end of line 16, on page 9, it is proposed to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That with the approval of any State highway department the commission may approve the expenditure of more than 60 per cent of the Federal aid apportioned to such State upon the primary or interstate highways in such State.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, as I understand that amendment, the Senator wants to provide that where a State decides to put more than 60 per cent of the money on an interstate road it may do so?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Yes; just as 18 States are doing to-day.

Mr. HEFLIN. It does not interfere with the other States that want to use it as provided for in the bill?

Mr. TOWNSEND. It does not.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I was going to suggest the change of a word, but I do not know that it is worth while to do it.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, on page 3, I move to strike out section 3.

I am not going to ask for a record vote upon this matter, but I am opposed to the creation of any more commissions. I think the time has come for the Senate to express itself in regard to that matter. Of course, I know that this measure will have to go to conference, and with it will go the House bill, which does not contain a provision for a commission; and for that reason I am not going to insist upon a yea-and-nay vote. I do think, however, that the Senate would be justified in defeating section 3. Arrangements have already been made in the Department of Agriculture for carrying on this work; the work has been satisfactorily carried on up to date, and it seems to me that a commission is unnecessary.

Surely, this Government has too many commissions now, and it would be a good thing if some of them were eliminated. Some of them were very good commissions, but we have some that are absolutely unnecessary and are doing no good; and if one looks over the amount of appropriations that we have made for commissions in the last 10 or 12 years I know he will be astonished and surprised at the amount of money that has been expended; I think much of it unnecessarily.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I am very cordially in favor of the proposition of the Senator from Kansas. I think we have altogether too many commissions. The work is better done by the department and by a single man than by multiplying commissions as we have been doing lately. I am especially opposed to multiplying any more commissions and paying them larger salaries than are paid to Members of the House and of the Senate. I think these highly paid commissions, especially when they are not necessary, are a mistake. It would be a very economic thing and a better thing in all ways, and we would get a better administration of the roads if we would get rid of them.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I, too, am in thorough agreement with the Senator from Kansas and the Senator from Massachusetts. We ought not to forget that within the comparatively near future—within the next few months, at least, it is to be hoped—the Congress is going to be asked to make a determined effort to bring about certain consolidations in the executive departments. In fact, the Congress has appointed a joint committee for that purpose, to which committee a representative of the Chief Executive has been added by special resolution of the Congress. While that committee is not yet ready to make any specific recommendations for the consolidation of work which is now duplicated in many departments, nevertheless in the discussions that have taken place thus far especial emphasis has been placed upon the situation with respect to the doing of public works, such as rivers and harbors, good roads, public buildings, irrigation projects, and forestry projects. To my mind some very intelligent suggestions have been made, to the effect that all activities of the Federal Government involving the construction of buildings and bridges and harbors and dikes and levees and roads and irrigation projects should be placed under one executive authority.

I think that is common sense. I am not prepared to say, nor are the other members of the committee, I think, prepared to say, just where we should consolidate that kind of work; but it is rather disturbing, not to say distressing, while the Congress has indicated its desire, through the appointment of a joint committee of this kind, to bring about consolidation, and to do away with duplication in the matter of public construction, that a committee of the Senate should propose a new commission or agency to supervise a certain kind of public work.

It seems to me that if we are to continue with the program of Federal aid in the construction of roads we might very much better leave the supervision of this work where it is—in the Department of Agriculture—until the Congress has a chance to get an accurate survey of the whole problem of the public works, for I believe, as surely as that I am standing here on this floor, that when that committee reports, its report will not tolerate five or six different executive agencies engaging in public construction, or the supervision of public construction, and the Senate ought not to go on record at this time in favor of the creation of a new agency. I believe the Senator from Kansas is right, and that Federal participation in road work should remain under the Bureau of Public Roads of the Department of Agriculture. If I had my way about it—and I may not have my way about it—I would take it all away from that department eventually and put it under one department that shall have charge of all construction work—irrigation, roads, bridges, harbors, dikes, levees, public buildings, post-office buildings, Federal buildings, judicial buildings, everything under one businesslike control. I hope the amendment of the Senator from Kansas will prevail.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, of course, if that contention prevails it will mean a rewriting of the whole measure now before us. I am in favor of putting this Federal road law under a commission, because I think that is the only proper way to administer in an economical and efficient manner the great funds which are appropriated for public roads. It is more than a question of engineering; it is more than a question simply of sitting at a desk and approving whatever is presented to the department. The road question is a big one and involves many things, among which is the study of construction, of materials, of locations, and the problems of transportation generally. There are few States in the Union which do not conduct their State road activities through a commission. Many of the States have changed their systems from a single authority to commission control.

Mr. McCORMICK. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Yes.

Mr. McCORMICK. Is it not true that the tendency in every State is to abolish commissions, for whatever purpose created, and consolidate the executive functions of the State government under single executives?

Mr. TOWNSEND. That may be the case as to some things, but it is not true of the handling of the road problem. The change has been the other way.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is just the other way in New York.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Where you can get the benefit of the fine intelligence and extensive study of the men who have had a full grasp and a comprehensive view of the situation. This job is too big for one man and he a bureau chief. Inefficiency and waste are bound to occur.

Mr. McCORMICK. Will not the Senator agree, then, that if his view be true as regards roads, it would hold equally as to the financial problems of the Government, and that we should abolish the position of Secretary of the Treasury and create a finance commission; that we should make an end of the position of Secretary of Agriculture, whose duties are certainly more varied than those of any road commission would be, and create a board of agriculture; that, in short, we should pattern our executive Government after that of the Chinese, where boards control in place of single executives?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, we have the example of the Interstate Commerce Commission handling the railroads. Would the Senator suggest that we have one man to handle the railroads?

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President, in the first place, I do not think any of us can say that the Interstate Commerce Commission has done so incomparably well that it can be held up as a sole standard. But the analogy is not exact. The Interstate Commerce Commission is a tribunal. It is not an executive and administrative body. It is a tribunal, just as the Court of Customs Appeals is a tribunal. This is to be an administrative body, and it is to expend public moneys. It is not to sit in judgment upon cases presented to it. Am I not right?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Oh, no; the Senator is not right if he means that there are to be no cases presented to this body. All questions of location, all questions of construction, all questions of material are to be presented for final decision to this commission, and the commissioners should come from different sections of the country. There should be at least three sections of the country represented. We thought it should be five in the first instance. In some States they have eight members on their highway commissions to decide less complicated questions. I think it is going to mean economy to have a commission of skilled men to study these problems and avoid some of the mistakes which are inevitable where they are left to the decision of one man.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President, let the Senator remember that we have had a commission in the Shipping Board. The existence of that board has not made either for economy or executive efficiency, and I venture that the longer that board exists the more Congress will waste, more than if its functions had been vested in a single executive. At a time when we purpose to retrench, to reduce taxation, to set an example to the world of a budget which balances, we purpose under this bill to go back to the now discredited system of commissions. I think it is deplorable.

Mr. LODGE. And to spend $30,000 in salaries in doing it.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, there is no doubt but what there are bad commissions; but there have been many good ones. The Interstate Commerce Commission is a good commission. Yet the road problem of this country will soon approximate the magnitude of the railroad problem of the country.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the Interstate Commerce Commission, I think, has done, on the whole, as well as a commission can do; but the delays there are simply intolerable, due to the endless discussion they are always carrying on.

Mr. TOWNSEND. The Senator may want to cut off that discussion; but I think it has resulted in infinite good to the country, and has been the only method whereby the problems could be even approximately correctly solved.

This roads commission, considering what must be assigned to it, what is bound to be assigned to it, is going to increase in importance all the time; and the fact of the matter is that the Agricultural Department does not solve and can not solve these problems as they ought to be solved.

The Senator from Kansas says the administration of this work has been well handled under the present system. I deny it. If it had worked well I would not be here asking for amendments to existing law. I do not think the Federal aid law has at any time during its existence worked as it ought to have worked.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Was that due to the fact that it was single-headed in administration?

Mr. TOWNSEND. It was due not entirely to that, but the law was defective.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Was it not the fault of the law?

Mr. TOWNSEND. The law was defective, I admit. Under existing law all improper projects can be disapproved by the highway director, but he seldom disapproves. He can not decide all the disputed questions. The fact is that when these propositions are submitted to the director by State departments he almost invariably approves. It is not his fault. There is more work than he can do, and to-day the Bureau of Roads of the Department of Agriculture has twice as much money to expend as all of the rest of that department put together. We spend twice as much money through a bureau, a subchief, than is expended in all of the rest of the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator might cite many examples of that sort. The Quartermaster General of the Army expends infinitely more money than the Secretary of Agriculture, but it does not take a commission to feed the Army.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Oh, no.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Or to clothe it.

Mr. TOWNSEND. This commission will work under law-prescribed rules. Mr. President, I think we have worked out a good bill, if we measure it by results of economy and efficiency. If we are going to bring the road proposition up to a point where it will mean the good of the country, I think we must have such a plan. Eventually we will have a better plan than existing law. I do not see any other relief for present waste and inefficiency.

I want to take this work out of any bureau. The time may come, as the Senator from New York suggests, when this will be carried into some other department. It can be carried as well under the commission as it can from a bureau.

Mr. WADSWORTH. If that is imminent—

Mr. TOWNSEND. I do not think it is; but I am suggesting that if the argument of the Senator comes true—

Mr. WADSWORTH. If the argument of the Senator does not come true we might just as well disband the Joint Committee on Reorganization of the Executive Departments, we might just as well give up all hope of consolidating executive agencies of this Government under a businesslike scheme. If we are going to permit four or five or six separate agencies to go on expending public moneys for construction, what is the use of having a joint committee making an effort to consolidate? If the Senator is going to maintain that attitude to-day, I assume he would maintain the same attitude when the committee brings in a report urging that one department do all the construction work of the Government. He will certainly make the same argument that a separate commission is then necessary which he says is necessary now.

The same argument would hold good—if the Senator will permit me to interrupt him; I appreciate his courtesy, and I do not want to interrupt him unduly—in river and harbor work. We might just as well have a commission to decide about the expenditure of funds for dredging the rivers and doing river and harbor work. That work is going to be resumed; it must be resumed; it is not going to be held down to the figures to which it is now held. It is of national importance, and if we can not get these things together there is no hope for the economy which that committee hopes to bring about.

Mr. TOWNSEND. The Senator from Michigan has not suggested that he would oppose that effort. He has some doubt about its being accomplished, but he is in favor of it.

The Senator from New York speaks of doing river and harbor work under a commission. Road construction differs in many respects from river and harbor work. We outline a plan. We have a general plan of construction prescribed by Congress in the law. The administration according to whether it is efficient or influenced by politics spells success or failure. We have a commission to cooperate with the States in laying out a national system and a State-connecting system of roads. One man can not do that as well as a commission of three men selected because of their fitness for this work, to which they must devote their undivided attention. They study these problems of construction and of materials and make up their findings and the results of their investigation. It is all in the interest of a comprehensive system of road building, which I think is essential if we are going to continue the investment of Federal money in State or Federal roads.

As I said, we have gone over this very carefully. We have given much deliberation to it. We have had the testimony of men who are skilled in these questions, and we have come to the conclusion that a commission is the agency to have in order to carry out its provisions.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Kansas to the committee amendment.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Assistant Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ball	Jones, N. Mex.	New	Stanfield
Broussard	Jones, Wash.	Nicholson	Stanley
Cameron	Kellogg	Norbeck	Sutherland
Capper	King	Oddie	Swanson
Caraway	Ladd	Overman	Townsend
Curtis	La Follette	Phelps	Trammell
Fletcher	Lenroot	Pittman	Wadsworth
Glass	Lodge	Polindexter	Walsh, Mass.
Hale	McCormick	Reed	Watson, Ind.
Harrell	McKellar	Sheppard	Williams
Heflin	McNary	Simmons	Willis

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-four Senators have answered to their names. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the roll of absentees.

The reading clerk called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. CALDER, Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN, Mr. SHORTRIDGE, Mr. STERLING, and Mr. WARREN answered to their names when called.

Mr. KNOX, Mr. NELSON, and Mr. BORAH entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-two Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The question is upon the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I wish to say that I trust the amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] will be agreed to. The proposition is substantially only an extension of the system of cooperation between the Government and the States, which we have had for years, in the construction of highways. During this period of Government and State cooperation the Department of Agriculture, through the Bureau of Good Roads, has administered the law and distributed the funds provided by the Federal Government in a way that I understand has been satisfactory to the States and the work has proceeded smoothly and without friction.

The expenditure of $100,000,000 a year is not a difficult or complicated matter when the law lays down the method of its expenditure and provides for its distribution in large blocks. There are only 48 States, and the money is to be apportioned among those States according to a standard prescribed in the law. That part, therefore, of the work of the Secretary of Agriculture, through the Bureau of Good Roads, is very simple and not at all burdensome. All the machinery necessary for the prosecution of the work has already been provided and organized, and the personnel appointed. The personnel consists of men of experience, many of them experts, and the work is in full swing from one end of the country to the other. No public complaint has been made against the management or the service of those who now have it in charge. None, I think, can be justly laid against them. Why, under those circumstances, should we take this duty from those whom we have assigned to perform it and who have been performing it so satisfactorily and efficiently, and create a commission which possibly would in the very beginning reorganize the whole system? Whether the proposed new commission would administer the program with anything like the degree of satisfaction that it has heretofore been administered is a question.

Senators can speculate upon the possible advantage of changing to a commission, but against that speculation I put the actual performance which we have had under the old organization in connection with this cooperative work.

Mr. President, I am opposed personally to the multiplication of commissions. I am not inclined to think that commissions have worked well. They have not, as a rule, such a responsible head as have each of the departments. They are invested with power, to be exercised in many instances without supervision, and they are prone, as our experience shows, to become very arbitrary in the execution of the powers which are conferred upon them.

In this instance we have, first, the Bureau of Good Roads. The practical work is done by that agency. The Secretary of Agriculture supervises and controls; he protects the public against any arbitrary conduct on the part of that bureau; and the President of the United States stands there controlling the Secretary of Agriculture, and further protects the public against the arbitrary exercise of power.

My objection to the commission is not so much the additional expense, although I think it is the duty of every Senator at this time to cast his vote, when he can do so, against increasing expenditures instead of in favor of increasing them—my fundamental objection to the commission system is, and I say our experience supports my objection, that when commissions have power to act independently of departmental control they are too often subject to influences that are not in favor of the public and the people, and they too often are arbitrary in their exercise of the powers and in the execution of the duties with which we invest and charge them. I think that commissions ought not to be appointed except when absolutely necessary, and no such necessity, in my opinion, is here presented. There seems to be no good reason for creating a new and additional body to administer this proposed law, which is substantially and practically the same as that which has been in operation for quite a number of years in the past, and which has been satisfactorily administered by the Bureau of Public Roads in the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I am not so much concerned about the machinery which is provided in the pending bill for carrying out the purposes of Congress in providing Federal aid to roads; I am inclined to prefer that we should develop and use the existing establishment of administration of road construction and development; but I rise to comment on some objections which have been made to the bill on the ground that there is too much unemployment in the country.

Statistics have been presented as to the great number of men who are out of work in the industrial cities of the United States. I fail to see, Mr. President, how the existence of that condition affords any argument against the Government carrying on its public works. It seems to me, if any conclusion is to be drawn from a condition of unemployment, it would be favorable to activity by the Government, which would give employment to idle men in all those lines of construction to which the Government is committed.

Undoubtedly it is true that this is a time when in the appropriation of public funds the utmost care should be exercised in the interest of economy and of reducing the burdens of taxation; but, in so far as the existence of unemployment is concerned, of hard times industrially, the Government of the United States ought thereby to be induced to give, rather than be deterred from giving, new energy and enlarged scope to all lines of its public work to which it is committed as a policy. One of those is the improvement of the public roads.

Reference has been made to the naval construction program. I read from some communication received a short time ago that by the limitation of the appropriations for the construction program in the Navy some 200,000 men would be thrown out of employment. That result follows from an appropriation which was passed by the House of Representatives and was accepted without dispute or contention by the Senate of the United States, for there was not any contention in the Senate about the amount of money that was to be appropriated for the construction program.

The House of Representatives provided in its bill for $90,000,000; there was no effort made by the Senate committee or by the Senate to increase that amount; but by reason of the scope of the program, of the vast obligations which the Government had already incurred for material, the limitation of the amount appropriated for the current year to $90,000,000 will necessitate—it practically has already necessitated—the discharge of a great many men in navy yards, in private shipyards, and in all of those industrial establishments which are engaged in the manufacture of the accessories and the incidental supplies which go to the construction and equipment of a great fleet.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator from Washington yield?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I will yield in just one moment. It seems to me that it is difficult to reconcile that policy with a wise course which should be pursued by the Government in regard to a construction program to which it is committed and which it has determined to carry out, when there are hundreds of thousands of men in the United States who have lost their employment in private establishments and who would be cared for in the incidental industries if the Government proceeds with reasonable speed to the completion of the great work which it has undertaken, and the same thing applies to the construction of public roads. Now I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. I was about to suggest to the Senator—and to ask him if my view is not correct—that in the hearings in the House and before the Naval Affairs Committee of the Senate there was testimony tending to show that the $90,000,000 carried by the House bill to continue the construction of war vessels was about all that the department could utilize in a wise and proper manner. My recollection is that there was no desire for an appropriation to exceed $90,000,000, and it was the consensus of opinion of all who were familiar with the subject that it was all that could properly, judiciously, and economically be expended during the current year for construction purposes. If that is true, it seems to me there should be no complaint about the discharge of persons or that we are not expending sufficient for naval purposes; indeed, I might say in passing, I think $90,000,000 was entirely too much.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, it was not for the purpose of arguing the Navy bill that I arose. I mentioned the naval construction program merely as illustrating the policy which seems to me ought to be applied by the Government in regard to all of its public works so far as may be consistent with economy. I regard the carrying out in an expeditious manner and with such reasonable speed as is possible under the material conditions under which the work is being done, a work to which the Government is committed and which it is going to complete at some time or other, as the economical program.

There is an enormous amount of waste which every man who is familiar with the public works of the Government knows exists from the periodic disorganization of the forces engaged upon those works. Closing them down for long periods during which the material depreciates and disintegrates, the forces are scattered, and there is involved the incidental expense of rebuilding and repairs and of getting together again the personnel which the Government must have in order to carry on such works is not in the interest of economy; on the contrary, it is economical to keep the forces together, to preserve the material, and when we have fixed upon a project which is to be accomplished to proceed toward its completion with reasonable rapidity. It was for the purpose of arguing along that line that I arose to speak in connection with the policy which has been adopted of Federal aid to roads. I believe it to be a wise policy; I do not think there is anything more fundamental in the interest of this country, whether in good times or bad times, in war or in peace, than easy and cheap transportation.

We have arrived at a time now when more than at any other period in our history wagon roads are an important if not the chief item in the great machinery and equipment for the transportation of passengers and commodities in this country. So long as that policy has been decided upon, in this period of unemployment it seems to me that we can not be charged as wasteful and extravagant if we appropriate a reasonable amount of money in this bill for carrying on that work.

Now, let me say a word in regard to what the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] has said concerning the amount of money that was appropriated for the construction program, as it is called, in the Navy bill. The Senator states a certain basis of fact, namely, that the $90,000,000 was all that could be used conveniently and economically; that the committees were advised that that was all that the Navy Department needed and, in fact, all that they wanted. Upon that premise the Senator bases his conclusion that the amount appropriated was too much; that we ought to have cut it down. I assume that that basis of fact is very largely the ground upon which the Senator founded his opposition to the Navy bill. Of course, if we remove the foundation upon which the argument is based and if we take away the premise, the conclusion which is undertaken to be drawn from it will also fall to the ground.

The fact of the case is that none of the conditions which the Senator described existed. It never was stated, at least to the Senate Committee on Naval Affairs, that that amount was all that could be used; on the contrary, the information presented to the committee and presented to the Senate was that the appropriation of that amount of money or an appropriation limited to that amount would in itself necessitate what was called a building holiday.

Time and time again it was urged upon the committee, time and time again it was stated to the Senate that, instead of that amount being all that could be used, the limitation of the appropriation to that amount would necessitate the cutting down of work upon the battleships under construction 25 per cent of the capacity of the yards in which they were being constructed; that it would necessitate the cutting down of the construction work upon the battle cruisers to 50 per cent, and upon the smaller cruisers, the scout cruisers, to 60 per cent, so that instead of being 100 per cent of the facilities of the yards in which these ships were being built it was 25 per cent in one case, 50 per cent in another case, and 60 per cent in the case of the smaller ships. Those were the facts, at least so far as the committee was informed and so far as the Senate was informed, and not the conditions which the Senator from Utah has stated.

Mr. President, to revert again to the road bill that is pending here—and I only rose to say a word—some reference has been made to the interest of the great manufacturing States of the North and of the East in roads; that they had an interest in roads; that they appreciated, as the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts has said, the peculiar concern which the comparatively thinly populated States of the South and of the West, with their great stretches of sparsely settled country, had in a program of road construction.

Mr. President, the conditions relatively between those sections of the country are that the North and the East are very largely supplied with good roads. Take a State like Massachusetts, for instance: No man would depreciate in the slightest degree the credit to which the State of Massachusetts is entitled for the way she has helped herself in the construction of roads. By reason of her age and of the industry and the enterprise of her citizens she is a great, populous, and wealthy State. She has helped herself. She has also had considerable aid from the Federal Government in the construction of roads. The same thing applies to the Empire State, the State of my distinguished colleague who has just taken his seat, the great State of New York. Those States and the other industrial States of the North and East, whatever may be said about the means and conditions under which they have arrived at their present state of improvement, have not the same interest, the same concern in the policy of new road construction that the newer States of the West and the more undeveloped States of the South have. Consequently the views and the interests of the people of those States, expressed through their able representatives here, do not by any means represent the interests or the views or the attitude of other sections of the Union that are not so fortunate in the degree of road improvement at which they have arrived.

The States of the West, one of which I have the honor in part to represent, have laid out great programs of road construction, have established a machinery for administering the funds which may be provided by the local municipalities, by the States, and those which may be received from the Federal Government, and they are waiting eagerly for action by the Federal Government. I repeat that it is not in the interest of economy that this action should be deferred; that this time of all times, when men are out of employment, is a good time for the Federal Government to furnish the means by which they can be employed in a work than which there is no more useful one in the entire policy and jurisdiction of the Congress.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, viewed simply from the standpoint of its merits, I, as one Member of this body, should like to see the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas adopted. Experience in the State which I have the honor in part to represent has taught me that in the long run the work of a department will be better done by one man than by a commission. I think the country has been running wild on the subject of commissions. We have too many of them in the State governments and too many of them in the National Government. Therefore if I could see a way in which it could be done without imperiling this bill I should be inclined to vote for the amendment of the Senator from Kansas; but in such time as I have had I have gone over this bill, and I do not believe that it will be possible to rewrite the bill as it would have to be rewritten if the amendment of the Senator from Kansas were adopted and secure legislation at this session of the Congress.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. WILLIS. I yield.

Mr. CURTIS. The Senator understands, does he not, that the House bill will be in conference, and the House bill provides for no commission? Therefore, with both measures in conference, there should be no delay if we change the provisions of the Senate bill so that the work shall remain under the Secretary of Agriculture. In fact, it ought to help pass the bill.

Mr. WILLIS. Perhaps there should not be delay, but the Senator from Kansas and the rest of us know that in legislative procedure sometimes things happen that ought not to happen. If it were a month earlier, I should vote for this amendment; I think it ought to be adopted; but from what I can see of the situation I do not believe we can adopt this amendment now and secure legislation at this session of Congress. I think the legislation is of very, very great importance and that it ought not to be delayed.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILLIS. I yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator has just said that if this bill had come up a month earlier he would have voted for the amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas. Does the Senator think that one month's time justifies the creation of three permanent Federal commissioners, with salaries of $10,000 apiece?

Mr. WILLIS. It is not one month's time. It involves, as the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] has just pointed out, various States that have projects for the completion of which Federal legislation is necessary, and I speak without any embarrassment upon that subject because the State of Ohio has a good road system. It has not trifled away the Federal money. Nobody has ever suggested that. It has gone on with a progressive plan of permanent road building, and if some legislation is not enacted at this session of Congress this plan will be very seriously interfered with.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President—

Mr. WILLIS. Therefore, for my part, I prefer not to vote for this amendment, and trust that after the bill goes to conference the matter may be ironed out there. I think if we adopt this amendment here it is the end of the legislation.

Mr. PITTMAN and Mr. WADSWORTH addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. WILLIS. I yield first to the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, of course, it is apparent that the Senator from Ohio is very anxious that this legislation shall be passed as soon as possible, and of course I have exactly the same feeling about the matter; but it seems to me that the passage of this legislation would be facilitated by the adoption of the amendment of the Senator from Kansas. We understand that this bill has already been acted on by the Senate and acted on by the House and that the provision which the amendment attempts to strike out is entirely new matter before both Houses. The Senate bill, originally the Phipps bill, has nothing to do with a commission. I think, really, that if we would adopt the amendment of the Senator from Kansas and eliminate this new matter which has not been considered by either one of these Houses, we would hasten an agreement in conference. That is my feeling about it.

Mr. WILLIS. I am not unacquainted with the parliamentary situation, nor am I unacquainted with the fact that there are some Members of this body and some Members of the body at the other end of the Capitol who desire appropriations simply under the present law.

I want to say, as one Member of this body, that I voted against the $100,000,000 appropriation in the last session of Congress because I thought then, and I think now, that there was not and is not proper regulation for the expenditure of that money. Without making any invidious comparisons, it is perfectly apparent to those acquainted with the facts that this Federal money has been expended in some States without proper supervision. I have seen some of it. I have had my attention called to alleged Federal highways in certain States that in some other States would hardly be regarded as proper cowpaths, and I determined for myself that I would not again vote for the expenditure of large sums of Federal money without adequate supervision, so that it might be understood that this money was to be used in the construction of permanent highways that begin somewhere and end somewhere.

This bill is an effort, at least—I think in part a mistaken one, because I do not agree with all of its provisions—to provide some appropriate restriction and regulation for the expenditure of that money. I think there ought to be some legislation other than a mere appropriation.

For the reasons I have indicated I shall not at this time support the amendment of the Senator from Kansas, agreeing though I do with the principle which is back of it.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] a moment ago in discussing the road bill digressed, and not improperly, to discuss the naval bill, and he attributed to me a position with respect to that bill which I regard as incorrect. Of course, the Senator from Washington would not purposely—because he is incapable of doing an injustice—make any statement that would improperly represent the attitude of any Senator upon pending legislation or any public question.

As I understood the Senator, he suggested that the opposition which I had offered to the naval bill was based upon the theory that the $90,000,000 carried by the naval appropriation bill recently passed was all that was necessary for the current year for legitimate and proper naval construction, and that if I had been advised that more could economically, properly, and efficiently be expended, then I would doubtless have taken a different position and either supported it or supported a plan for further and larger appropriations. He contends, however, as I understand his position, that my premises are wrong; that the fact is that larger naval appropriations were needed for the expeditious and economical completion of the naval program. The Senator therefore states that my premises being wrong my conclusions must be wrong.

Let me say that my good friend from Washington entirely misconceived my position. I regret that I was so unfortunate as not to make clear to him—but I hope that his view is not that of other Senators—the reason for my opposition to the naval bill. Let me say, however, that the testimony before the Senate Committee on Naval Affairs, as I interpret it, did indicate that $90,000,000 was substantially the amount which could economically—and I emphasize that word—be expended during the coming year.

I emphasize that word, Mr. President, because the testimony before the House and the Senate committees—and we needed no testimony in order to convince us of that fact—demonstrated that war prices for steel and many other materials used in the construction of war vessels, as well as for labor, still prevailed, or at least that the recession had been almost imperceptible; and that during the current fiscal year but little reduction in such prices was anticipated. Construction, therefore, of a 1915 program, based on 1915-16 prices, could not economically be carried out on war price levels.

It was therefore obvious that if we expended large sums during 1921 and 1922, being for the fiscal year 1922, we would be paying very much more for construction, for material, for labor, than would be required the following year. In other words, any work done in this fiscal year would not be economical—measured by the results—because of labor conditions and price-commodity conditions.

The ships now being built are not being cheaply built, but their cost is at least double that which was accepted as the basis in 1915-16.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I was going to ask the Senator who testified? To what evidence was the Senator referring, to the effect that $90,000,000 was all that could be economically used? I never heard of any such testimony. I thought I was present at all the hearings, but this is the first I ever heard of any such testimony as that. I wish the Senator would point to the testimony.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I do not say that any witness specifically so stated, but I contend that was the effect of the testimony of a number who came before the House and Senate committees. The implications and deductions rationally and properly arising from the testimony showed that construction at a later period would be cheaper than construction during the fiscal year of 1922.

Mr. POINDEXTER. That was probably in some statement made by the Senator himself. I think the Senator suggested that, just as he is arguing it now. But the statements of the officers who are responsible for the administration of this money, repeatedly given and most emphatically made, were to the effect that a limitation of the appropriation to $90,000,000 would to all intents and purposes in itself amount to a building holiday.

There was a movement for what was called a building holiday. I do not know whether the Senator from Utah took a position in favor of that or not, though some did, and there was a resolution introduced and referred to the committee inquiring whether it would not be practical and feasible to suspend work altogether upon capital ships, to have what was called a building holiday, and there was a movement to get other naval powers to join the United States in a naval holiday. The attitude of the majority of the Naval Affairs Committee, and a majority of the Senate and of the naval authorities in the administration, was that we should proceed with reasonable expedition to carry out the construction program in which we were already engaged.

Officers came before the committee, in view of that contention, and pointed out that the appropriation of only $90,000,000, in view of the engagements which had already been entered into, would amount in itself to a building holiday, and they pointed out in percentages the degree of slowing down, the reduction of force, the reduction of the progress of the work, that would be entailed by the appropriation of this amount in the percentages which I have already given to the Senate.

That was the burden of all the testimony that I know anything about that came before the committee. I may say that subsequent events have verified that prediction and that statement made by the constructors of the department, and by all of the authorities who were familiar with the expenditure of the funds which had been appropriated for this construction program, because we have come to a time now, at this early date after the beginning of the fiscal year, when work has already been stopped on a number of those capital ships, and the money which was appropriated has been absorbed in meeting the obligations which had already been incurred, paying for material, paying to contractors and to subcontractors the money which was already owed to them. The case is much stronger than that which was stated to the committee and to the Senate; very different, indeed, from the statement which the Senator says was made to the committee, that this amount of money was all that could be economically used.

On the contrary, Mr. President, it was pointed out that the very condition which is now existing would result in the unnecessary loss of millions of dollars by the disintegration of the forces engaged in this work, the discharge of the men, the deterioration of the material, all of which is now going on in a number of the yards where these ships are being built. Those are the facts, as I understand them, and I am surprised to hear at this late date that the Senator was under the impression that that amount of money was all that could be economically used.

Mr. KING. Of course, I contend that the $90,000,000 appropriated for new construction is not being economically expended, nor do I admit that such as is being expended in the construction of some of the capital ships is being properly or wisely expended. It must be remembered that some of the vessels have but a small per cent of the entire cost expended and that when completed they will be out of date and the millions spent upon them practically wasted.

Mr. President, I am sure that if the Senator from Washington, with the earnest zeal which he has displayed for a big Navy and for the execution of the 1915-16 program—a program that is archaic, reactionary, and I was about to say preposterous—had believed that $90,000,000 was insufficient to carry out that program in an economical way for the coming year, he would have moved to increase the amount from $90,000,000 to such sum as he regarded imperatively necessary for such purpose.

I have no doubt, as the Senator has indicated, that those in control of the Navy Department, from the Secretary down, the officials who have worn ruts and grooves from which they can not escape and have thus unfitted themselves for the positions which they occupy, would have been glad to have had an appropriation of $464,000,000, in order that they might hurriedly complete the 1915-16 program, though in so doing it would have entailed upon the Government of the United States obligations and expenses which the country can not afford to bear. Moreover, it would have resulted in extravagance and waste and in the swelling of the cost of ship construction to such levels as to provoke public resentment of the bitterest character. Even the demand made by the majority party in the Senate—for the naval bill for 1922—were condemned by the country and repudiated by the House. The Navy officials wanted a minimum $500,000,000. Some of us fought for material reductions. The House cut the bill to $410,000,000.

Mr. President, in 1915, before the lessons of the war were learned, a naval program was agreed upon by the General Board and the proper officials of the Navy Department. That program was conceived in the atmosphere of 1915-16. It was not predicated upon the full lessons of the war, upon the experiences gained in the naval contests of the war, but with a zeal worthy of a Peter the Hermit or a new proselyte to a cause that profoundly moved his moral nature, the Navy Department has devoted itself to the execution of that program. The same number of battleships and battle cruisers are to be built, and a blind devotion to capital ships must be exhibited. The officials have refused to follow the wise course which France pursued and which Great Britain pursued. France and Great Britain refused to build many ships—I qualify that, some ships—which they had contemplated building before the war or in the early stages of the war, because of the valuable lessons of the war and the marvelous development in the means and instrumentalities of naval warfare.

War upon the sea was almost, if not entirely, revolutionized during the great World War. The submarine and the torpedo boat and the mines and poison gases and airplanes introduced new and vital factors into naval warfare. Many eminent naval authorities declared that the capital ship was menaced; that these new forces would in the future completely change sea warfare and sea strategy.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Does the Senator state that the other naval powers have abandoned capital ships?

Mr. KING. No; I did not say that.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Then I did not understand the Senator.

Mr. KING. I said that France and Great Britain had pursued a wise policy and had abandoned the construction of—I said, first "many" ships, and I corrected that to "some" ships—which they had contemplated building immediately before or in the early stages of the war.

Mr. POINDEXTER. In the first place, France never did pretend to be a great naval power, never considered it as essential to her policy.

Mr. KING. I will not discuss that; but, conceding what the Senator states is true, it does not affect the statement I have made. France has a navy; France did contemplate building a number of ships before and in the early stages of the war, which she has abandoned because of the lessons of the war. And she has scrapped war vessels which were in course of construction because of the new fighting forces which were developed during the war.

Mr. POINDEXTER. On the contrary, France is enlarging her naval program and building more ships than she had intended to build. She may have changed the program in some respects. So have we. The same statement which the Senator has just made can be made as to the United States. We have abandoned a part of our program.

The very bill which we reported provided for the abandonment of a number of ships which were provided for. But, so far as the accuracy, if I may use that word, of the statement of the Senator in regard to Great Britain is concerned, instead of abandoning the construction of capital ships, the contrary is true. If that makes any difference in the Senator's argument I think he ought to take it into consideration. If the situation is just the opposite of what he says it is, it seems to me it would have some bearing on this question.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I can not agree with all the statements of my friend. France's naval program is exceedingly simple. She is interested in the new naval forces introduced during the war, and doubtless will feel constrained to construct some additional large vessels because of the course which we are pursuing and which is influencing other nations. The Senator claims that we are changing in some respects our 1915 program and are abandoning a number of ships which it called for. The facts are that the essence of the 1915 program was the 17 capital ships. There is no change in that part of the program. Nor is there any change in the other essential parts of the plan. A transport is not being built, because unnecessary, and four submarines are not in process of construction now, but, as I understand, there is no purpose to abandon their construction.

Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Washington will not impute to me words which I did not utter. I said a moment ago that he would not purposely do so, that I did not believe him capable of doing it. The Senator has just placed me in a position which I do not occupy, and, if I correctly understand him, has misinterpreted what I said concerning Great Britain.

This is what I said, and I repeat it, that both France and Great Britain have abandoned the construction of some vessels—war vessels, I will add—which they contemplated building before the war, or in the early stages of the war.

Mr. POINDEXTER. We have done the same thing.

Mr. KING. We will come to that in a moment. The Senator states that if the fact that Great Britain is now building capital ships makes any difference in my position, I ought to state it. In the first place, I did not use the words "capital ships." But I will use them now. I stated to the Senator upon the floor of the Senate in March, when I helped to defeat the naval appropriation bill, and I repeated the statement when we were discussing the naval bill which passed a few weeks ago and is now law, that if we adhered to the program of 1915-16, obsolete or obsolescent as it would be when completed, and which would cost the American people approximately $1,500,000,000, Great Britain and Japan and perhaps other nations would regard it as a challenge to them and they would depart from their avowed purpose of limiting their armaments and begin the construction of capital ships. Within 90 days after I first made this statement Great Britain modified her naval program. And France also indicated that she would add to her naval strength. What caused this change? The Navy Department, the Senate, and other elements in our country assumed a militant and belligerent attitude. There was constant talk about war, or the possibility of war, with Great Britain or Japan, or both. The able Senator from Washington and the leader of the majority in the Senate [Mr. LODGE], as well as other Senators, urged huge appropriations for the Navy and manifested a militant spirit which was calculated to invite suspicion, if not resentment, upon the part of other nations.

And there was much unwise comment in the press upon international affairs, and an apparent effort upon the part of many to rouse the anger or fear of nations which desired our friendship. When we were talking about a league of nations there were those among us who were insisting that we should spend hundreds of millions of dollars annually for naval purposes and that we should have a navy larger than that of Great Britain. Indeed, some persons contended that it should be as large as the combined navies of Great Britain and Japan.

And I frankly state that the demand of Secretary Daniels for enormous appropriations were not calculated to reassure the naval powers of the earth. I believe that our unwise, inapt, and, indeed, foolishly belligerent and boastful position reacted upon Great Britain and Japan and other nations. The Senator knows that Great Britain had three capital ships upon the stocks upon which she had expended $16,500,000 and soon after the armistice she broke those ships to pieces. She did not construct a single capital ship during the latter part of the war or following the war.

When the Senate in open session and in secret session, which soon became known to the public, talked about war and demanded nearly $1,000,000,000 a year for our Army and Navy, and when the jingoists flaunted the red flag of war in the face of other nations, particularly Japan and Great Britain, then a change occurred. Our conduct was largely responsible for that change. Ten or twelve years ago Japan projected a naval program called the 8-8 program. She had completed but a small part of that program when the war was over. Even after the armistice she proceeded slowly in its execution, as though she purposed abandoning it. Who shall say that our warlike talk and naval expenditures has not aroused fear upon the part of Japan? And there seems to be strong evidence that Great Britain was influenced to modify her plans by the manifest purpose upon our part to build 17 capital ships, together with all their accessories. And so only a few weeks ago a bill was introduced in the House of Commons calling for the construction of four super-Hoods, great capital ships, greater than any of our ships.

These super-Hoods when completed, each one of them being 55,000 tons and carrying guns of 18 or 20 inches, will be greater than our new battleships. We have driven Great Britain, in my opinion, to a modification of her program, and our course has driven Japan, or the military party in Japan, to a militaristic attitude much stronger than would have been assumed if we had taken a wise and proper course.

Mr. President, I admit that the Navy Department wanted larger appropriations. The first appropriation for the 1915-16 program called for $544,000,000. We have already given to the Navy Department in the execution of that program more than that amount, and yet it will take $500,000,000 more to complete it, and then it will not be completed, if I may be permitted an Irishism. We will perhaps complete those particular vessels that were designated as constituents of the 1915-16 program, but the accessories which will be imperatively required to make the fleet a fighting unit, the necessary enlargement of the docks and harbors will require an additional appropriation, in my opinion, of from $400,000,000 to $500,000,000.

So that the 1915 program that was to have cost $544,000,000 will cost the taxpayers of the United States approximately $1,500,000,000. Yet our Republican friends and some of our Democratic friends, who preach economy but practice profligacy and waste, exhibit their devotion to the cause of economy by supporting these unjustifiable demands upon the Public Treasury. The American taxpayer is now groaning beneath the burdens that are being imposed.

I warn the Republican Party and I warn Democrats who support them in their unjustifiable expenditures that the patience and endurance of the American people have about reached the breaking point, and you Republicans, who came into power flushed with victory upon a wave of empty promises, will be compelled to meet in a short time an angry and an indignant electorate, who will say to you "Thou art weighed in the balances and art found wanting." I commend those scriptural words to my religious friends upon the other side of the aisle.

Mr. President, I must hasten along, because I do not wish to interfere with the consideration of the road bill. I said a moment ago that the $90,000,000 carried for construction upon the 1915-16 program was all that could be economically utilized during the coming year. My friend the Senator from Washington seems to challenge the accuracy of that statement. I say, Mr. President, that the testimony given before the Committees on Naval Affairs of the House and of the Senate warrants the implication and the deduction that that sum was all that could economically be expended—I repeat, economically. The Navy is not economical and perhaps never has been. The same is true of the War Department, and under all departments of the Government.

Government control and operation means waste and extravagance and inefficiency. Under Democratic or Republican administration there seems but little change. The bureaucratic forces control both parties, at least the administrative processes of the Government, and the efforts to secure reforms and bring about retrenchment prove abortive. Federal departments and agencies seem to be the Nirvana which so many seek and the paradise into which many inefficient and incompetent enter. In the Democratic administration there were officials, bureaus, departments, instrumentalities, executives and otherwise, which did not always conserve the public welfare. One of the reasons why the Democrats were swept from power was because of the belief deep seated in the minds of many that they had not been careful guardians of the public purse; and you Republicans are violating pre-election promises; you are effecting no economies, but seem intent upon employing the Government for partisan purposes. You not only do not guard the Treasury, but you extend an invitation to every fantastic and exotic claim, and the Treasury is being ravished by the unwise, improvident, and indefensible measures that are receiving the approval of the Republican administration.

Mr. President, we should have suspended, as the first Borah resolution contemplated, the construction of at least five of the battleships upon which but 3 to 8 per cent of work had been done, and we should have suspended construction upon most of the battle cruisers until we had determined upon the naval policy which was to be adopted by us and by the world.

The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] referred to the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], and complimented him upon his earnest work for disarmament. I join in these felicitations. Let me supplement what the Senator from Mississippi said and state that the man who has been the foremost figure during the past five years in advocating disarmament and international amity and peace is one who guided this Nation during eight long years of fateful events.

He led this mighty Nation into the World War in order that world peace might result and the liberties of the American people be preserved. His life was almost sacrificed in the mighty work which he accomplished. When the history of these years shall be written by unprejudiced historians, when true historical facts have been recorded and the passions and the resentments of the hour have departed from the hearts of men, Woodrow Wilson will stand out as the colossal figure of his generation and as the foremost advocate of principles and policies which make for the peace and the happiness and the welfare of the world.

Mr. President, I have been led to make these observations because of the statements of the distinguished Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER]. Now, we will come to the bill before us.

I shall support the amendment offered by my friend the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS]. In so doing I do not wish to give a clean bill of health, let me tell him, to the Bureau of Roads of the Department of Agriculture. I think that bureau has been extravagant and wasteful and inefficient and some of its policies and practices have been absolutely indefensible, but it may be no worse and possibly it will be a little better than a new commission which would be created under the provisions of the bill without his amendment.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. KING. Certainly.

Mr. CURTIS. Does the Senator from Utah think that the present Secretary will not benefit by the experience of the former Secretary and perhaps make some corrections?

Mr. KING. I think so. Of course, my good friend does not desire to be partisan, but if he does wish to be partisan, I am nonpartisan enough to confess that there were grievous mistakes made by the former administration and I shall as quickly condemn Democrats for their mistakes as I condemn Republicans.

Mr. CURTIS. I did not intend to be partisan in the comment which I made. I merely desired to know if the Senator did not think the new administration would profit by the experience of the past administration and make changes in its policy accordingly.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the Senator from Kansas and myself are old friends. We served in the House together. There is not a better man in public life than the Senator from Kansas, and, earnest Republican as he is, I have no doubt in the world that the Senator from Kansas will do what he believes to be right under all circumstances. I concede that the former administration, in respect to this particular bureau, made grievous blunders. I have no doubt that the present Secretary of Agriculture is trying to cure some of the mistakes that were made. That is the reason why I am willing to continue the control of this great work under the Department of Agriculture.

The trouble with the people and with the Congress is that when an evil exists a demand is made for the creation of a commission. The people en masse in dealing with public questions are like the individual in dealing with physical ailments.

When a physical ailment occurs a new doctor is sought, and then another, and still another. The patent-medicine theory which we apply to our physical ailments we exemplify in dealing with political problems. We have a patent-medicine theory of Government. If one patent medicine does not work, we try another. If one commission does not cure the evil—and it never does; usually it aggravates it—we create another commission. When that fails and the disease becomes chronic, then our pathological experience or psychology prompts us to get another doctor, another commission; and so it is, commission upon commission, until we are overwhelmed with Federal commissions and bureaus and departments and agencies and boards. The Government is literally being broken down by the enormous weight of its own machinery. If we had less government and fewer bureaus and officeholders, we would get better and more efficient government. The curse of our governmental system is the devouring appetite of the people for offices and the perennial fountain which pours forth the poisoned waters of bureaucracy.

And the States and municipalities are being corrupted by the same evil. I am told that in one great State there are more than 200 commissions. I do not know how many hundreds of commissions and bureaus and Federal agencies and Federal instrumentalities there are in the Federal Government. I know that there are hundreds of thousands who possess a civil-service status and hundreds of thousands more who are trying to obtain such status. There are hundreds of thousands who are drawing money from the Treasury of the United States. I know that we shall soon have a burden of pensioners upon the taxpayers so that there will be at least one pensioner for every four individuals who pay taxes to the Federal Government. I have hastily reached these figures which I submit.

There are at this time classified substantially 645,000 persons. In the Army, on June 30, there were of officers and enlisted men 221,762. That number has been since reduced. In the Navy, on the same date, there were of officers and enlisted men, including the Marine Corps, 147,756. That will be reduced to 121,000. On the pension rolls of that date there were 566,053 persons. On the same date there were as beneficiaries on the records of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance 154,960 persons, and there have been a great many added since, and justly added, let me say. These make a total of 1,745,712 persons who are deriving support from the Treasury of the United States. Then there are thousands of retired officers and Federal employees who receive pensions and allowances from the Federal Treasury.

Against these there were, in 1918, 4,425,114 persons who filed income-tax returns; so that every five taxpayers are at this time carrying two persons. I was mistaken in my former statement that there would soon be one pensioner for every four individuals. It is more; they are carrying two persons upon their backs.

In addition to this, there are 48 States, 1,065 counties, 2,787 cities, 12,905 towns, making a total of 16,757 municipal corporations in the States, not including the school district and the precincts, which have their own independent complement of employees. It is certain, Mr. President, that the number of persons on the pay rolls of the States and of the municipal governments is as great as and, indeed, in my opinion, is greater than the number who are on the Federal pay and pension rolls of the United States Government. Upon this assumption the number of persons drawing pay from the public purse in the United States is at least 3,500,000. In my opinion it is more; it is probably between four and five million of people.

Every person of any substantial productive power in the country makes an income-tax return. The result of all this is that every five productive taxpayers of the United States are carrying four tax eaters upon their backs. It would seem, Mr. President, that it is time to call a halt and to quit creating new Federal bureaus and agencies and instrumentalities.

Our Republican friends promise us another department or two departments, probably three. Some hysterical individual, some crank, some faddist goes out among the people and engages in propaganda for a new department for public health or public education or public this or public that, and the people, without thought in many instances, give their adhesion to these schemes to create new Federal agencies which will still further tax the people.

Our Republican friends are fooling the people now. As to the tax bill that will come here in a day or two from the other House, is it parliamentary, Mr. President, to characterize a measure coming from the other House as deceptive? I will not say that, but the American people are being fooled by these pretenses of economy and of reductions in taxation. Why not be square and fair and open with the people and tell them that we do not have sufficient ability or statesmanship to reduce their burdens and their taxes? If we reduce taxes in one column, we will add burdens in another. I make the prediction now that when the fiscal year 1922 is ended the American people will find they have been compelled to pay $5,000,000,000 or more of taxes or have been compelled to borrow money to meet $5,000,000,000 or more of expenditures. The burdens that we are creating, the appropriations which we are making, make impossible a reduction in taxation.

Mr. President, I hope the amendment which has been offered by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] will be adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] to strike out section 3.

Mr. SIMMONS. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BROUSSARD (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES]. I do not know how he would vote if present. Therefore I withhold my vote.

Mr. CARAWAY (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. MCKINLEY]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] and vote "yea."

Mr. HARRISON (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS]. If he were present, he would vote as I intend to vote. I therefore feel at liberty to vote, and vote "yea."

Mr. KING. I have a pair with the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER]. I note that he is absent from the Chamber. I transfer my general pair with that Senator to the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. DIAL] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. LODGE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], which I transfer to the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. WELLER] and vote "yea."

Mr. POMERENE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. SPENCER]. I do not know how he would vote, and I therefore withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. STANLEY (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. ERNST]. I am advised, however, that if present he would vote as I am about to vote. I therefore feel at liberty to vote, and vote "yea."

Mr. STERLING (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] to the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. McKELLAR. I am a member of the committee reporting this bill. In order to get any bill reported out at this session, it was necessary to compromise, and to get the provision in the bill giving the State highway commissions the right to designate the roads in the various States I agreed to yield on the question of the Federal highway commission. Therefore I vote "nay" in accordance with the agreement made in the committee.

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. BURSUM] with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANDELL];

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN]; and

So the amendment of Mr. CURTIS to the amendment reported by the committee was agreed to.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, the adoption of this amendment will necessitate amending the committee amendment in a great many respects. If the Senator from Michigan, in charge of the measure, desires to go on with it, I should like to suggest the other amendments, or, if he prefers, as he probably knows better than I do where the other amendments would come in, I should be very glad to have the matter laid aside in order to prepare the other amendments.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I think that will be absolutely necessary, because the measure is constructed on the other theory, and there will have to be a good many changes in it, as it seems to me, although I have no objection to the Senate proceeding to amend the measure on the floor if it desires to do so.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, unless the Senator desires to take some other course, I will state the amendments I propose. I understand that the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] has an amendment which will obviate my offering quite a number of amendments. I am willing to yield to him for that purpose; otherwise I will go on and suggest the various amendments.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I want to suggest that now that the amendment of the Senator from Kansas has been adopted, it seems to me we might just as well ask unanimous consent wherever the word "commission" appears in the committee amendment to strike it out and insert the words "Secretary of Agriculture."

Mr. CURTIS. That will not answer. The committee amendment is so constructed that it would have to be changed in many respects.

Mr. McKELLAR. I know; but surely that would obviate a great number of amendments, because that word appears here very frequently.

Mr. CURTIS. Unless the chairman desires to lay the measure aside in order to prepare the amendments that will be necessary, I shall offer the amendments.

I move to strike out on page 4 all of section 4 down to and including the word "act" in line 13 of page 5.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas proposes an amendment, which will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 4, commencing with line 13, it is proposed to strike out lines 13 to 25, both inclusive, and on page 5, lines 1 to 13, both inclusive, down to and including the word "act" and the period.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I make an inquiry of the Senator?

Mr. CURTIS. That simply takes away the power of the commission and leaves it in the hands of the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is entirely right.

Mr. KING. I understand that; but, if the Senator will pardon me, my understanding was also that this section—I have not had time to read it since the Secretary stated it—calls upon other departments to deposit papers which they possess.

Mr. CURTIS. I will offer an amendment covering those.

Mr. KING. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, this provision, of course, is intended to transfer to the commission the several road departments and road activities of the Government with the idea of concentrating them under one department, and of course that will have to go out.

Mr. CURTIS. Now, on line 20, page 5, I offer an amendment striking out the word "commission" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "Secretary of Agriculture."

Mr. McKELLAR. I call the Senator's attention to the fact that on line 19 also the word "commission" should be stricken out.

Mr. CURTIS. And the words "Secretary of Agriculture" inserted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 5, line 19, strike out the word "commission" and insert the words "Secretary of Agriculture"; also, in line 20, the same amendment.

Mr. McKELLAR. And in line 21.

The READING CLERK. Also, in line 21.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, just at that point we should strike out not only the word "commission" but the words "within 30 days after the appointment and organization of the commission," so that it will read:

Is directed to turn over to the Secretary of Agriculture the equipment, material, supplies, papers, maps, and documents utilized in the exercise of such powers.

Mr. CURTIS. That is right.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is right.

Mr. CURTIS. I had intended to offer that amendment after this one was disposed of.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I beg the Senator's pardon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendments proposed by the Senator from Kansas.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. CURTIS. Does that include the amendment striking out the words "within 30 days," and so forth?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It does not.

Mr. CURTIS. Then I move to strike out the words "within 30 days" in line 20, and all of line 21.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. Strike out of lines 20 and 21 the words "the commission within 30 days after the appointment and organization of the commission," and insert "the Secretary of Agriculture."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, for information I inquire of the Senator whether his amendments now do not strike out the provision found in the bill that the Council of National Defense within 30 days shall turn over its equipment, and so forth?

Mr. CURTIS. No; that provision is left in.

On page 6, line 3, I move to strike out the word "commission" and insert the words "Secretary of Agriculture."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 6, line 3, strike out the word "commission" and insert in lieu thereof the words "Secretary of Agriculture."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CURTIS. On page 6 I move to strike out lines 5 to 12, both inclusive.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 6 it is proposed to strike out lines 5 to 12, both inclusive, in the following words:

The commission is authorized to cooperate with the Secretary of Agriculture in the construction of forest roads and trails, the State highway departments, and with the Department of the Interior in the construction of public highways within Indian reservations, and to pay the amount assumed therefor from the funds allotted or apportioned under this act to the State wherein the reservation is located.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PHIPPS. Mr. President, with the Senator's permission, I desire to call his attention to what would appear to be the necessity of cooperation between the Secretary of Agriculture and the Department of the Interior in the matter of constructing highways through Indian reservations. I therefore suggest that the language be changed so as to read:

The Secretary of Agriculture, in the construction of forest roads and trails, is authorized to cooperate with the Department of the Interior.

Mr. CURTIS. I will accept that amendment.

Mr. McKELLAR. It will be necessary to reconsider the action in regard to that paragraph, will it not?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the agreement to the amendment is vacated, and the Senator from Kansas will restate his amendment.

Mr. CURTIS. I move to strike out, in line 5, the word "commission" and insert the words "Secretary of Agriculture."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 6, line 5, strike out the word "commission" and insert the words "Secretary of Agriculture."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CURTIS. Then, in line 5, strike out the words "is authorized to cooperate with the Secretary of Agriculture."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On lines 5 and 6 strike out the words "is authorized to cooperate with the Secretary of Agriculture."

Mr. McKELLAR. You will have to strike out the word "commission."

Mr. CURTIS. That has been done.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I suggest that the words "with the" on line 5 ought to be stricken out, so that it would read:

The Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to cooperate in the construction of forest roads and trails with the State highway departments and with the Department of the Interior—

And so forth.

Mr. CURTIS. I had intended to suggest that we should insert the words "to cooperate" before the words "with the State highway departments." That would make it read:

The Secretary of Agriculture is authorized, in the construction of forest roads and trails, to cooperate with the State highway departments and with the Department of the Interior in the construction of public highways within Indian reservations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The Senator from Kansas proposes to change the paragraph so that it will read:

The Secretary of Agriculture is authorized in the construction of forest roads and trails to cooperate with the State highway departments and with the Department of the Interior in the construction of public highways within Indian reservations and to pay the amount assumed therefor from the funds allotted or apportioned under this act to the State wherein the reservation is located.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CURTIS. Now I move to strike out all of section 5, on pages 6 and 7, as follows:

SEC. 5. That the commission shall employ and fix the salary of a chief engineer, a secretary, and such accounting, engineering, legal, clerical, and other assistants and employees as it may from time to time find necessary, any of whom it may discharge: Provided, That no salary excepting that of the chief engineer shall be fixed at an amount exceeding $5,000 per annum, and in fixing salaries the commission shall be governed by the salaries paid to employees performing similar services in other departments of the Government. With the exception of the secretary, the chief engineer, and such laborers as may be employed by the commission, all employees shall be appointed from lists of eligibles to be supplied by the Civil Service Commission and in accordance with the civil service law: Provided, That, other conditions being equal, preference shall be given to honorably discharged soldiers, sailors, and marines.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CURTIS. On page 7, in section 6, line 4, I move that the word "commission" be stricken out and the words "Secretary of Agriculture" be inserted in lieu thereof, and on line 6 to strike out the words "the commission's" and to insert in lieu thereof the word "his."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CURTIS. I move to strike out all of section 7, page 7, as follows:

Sec. 7. That all of the expenses of the commissioners made necessary in the performance of their duties, including all necessary expenses for transportation incurred by the commissioners or by their employees under their orders upon official business in any other place than at their respective headquarters, shall be allowed and paid upon the presentation of itemized vouchers therefor, duly sworn to, and approved by the secretary of the commission.

Unless otherwise provided by law, the commission may rent suitable offices for its use and make necessary expenditures for furniture, equipment, and supplies, and for the printing and distribution of such publications and maps as it may prepare. The principal office of the commission shall be in the District of Columbia.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CURTIS. I understand the Senator from New York intends to offer an amendment as to section 8, and with his permission I will pass over that and offer the other amendments with reference to changing the word "commission."

On page 8, line 13, I move to strike out the word "commission" and insert in lieu thereof the words "Secretary of Agriculture."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CURTIS. On page 9, lines 7, 10, and 17, and on page 10, line 3, I move to strike out the word "commission" and to insert in lieu thereof the words "Secretary of Agriculture."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CURTIS. I move to strike out the word "commission" and insert in lieu thereof the words "Secretary of Agriculture" on page 10, line 9.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CURTIS. On page 10, line 19, I move to strike out the word "commission" and to insert in lieu thereof the words "Secretary of Agriculture."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILLIS. Before the Senator passes from that I wish to make an inquiry about a matter other than that to which he is now giving attention. I want to ask the Senator from Michigan about section 10. The language of that section on lines 9 and 10 is that the States "shall make provisions for State funds."

In the State of Ohio we have an arrangement under the present Federal law by which if an appropriation of $50,000 by the Federal Government is made it would be matched by a like amount, under this measure $25,000 being put up by the State, $25,000 by the county, and the property assessed for benefits. It occurs to me that the language "State funds" would not cover that sort of a case. I wondered whether the Senator would have any objection to adding, after the word "funds," the words "or funds under the control of the State or subject to its order"?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. May the Chair suggest to the Senator from Ohio that if these formal amendments could be completed, it would lead to less confusion?

Mr. WILLIS. I called up the matter because we are on this section, but I do not want to press it now.

Mr. CURTIS. I have no objection to the amendment, but I think it would be better to go on with these formal amendments.

Mr. WILLIS. I withdraw the suggestion for the present. I shall offer it later, however.

Mr. CURTIS. On page 11, line 8, I move to strike out the word "commission" and insert in lieu thereof the words "Secretary of Agriculture."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CURTIS. On the same page, in lines 20 and 22, and on page 12, line 3, I move to strike out the word "commission" and insert in lieu thereof the words "Secretary of Agriculture."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CURTIS. On page 13, line 7, I move to strike out the word "commission" and insert in lieu thereof the words "Secretary of Agriculture."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CURTIS. On page 15, lines 20 and 25, and on page 16, line 6, I move to strike out the word "commission" and insert in lieu thereof the words "Secretary of Agriculture."

Mr. CURTIS. On page 17, lines 9 and 10, I move to strike out the words "of the commissioners."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CURTIS. On page 17, line 13, I move to strike out the word "commission" and insert in lieu thereof the words "Secretary of Agriculture."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CURTIS. On page 17, line 24, and on page 18, lines 7 and 15, and on page 19, line 4, I move to strike out the word "commission" and insert in lieu thereof the words "Secretary of Agriculture."

Mr. CURTIS. On page 22, line 1, I move to strike out the words "the commission or," and before the word "own" to strike out the word "their" and insert in lieu thereof the word "his," so that it will read:

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CURTIS. On page 22, line 2, I move to strike out the words "the commission or."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CURTIS. On page 22, line 13, I move to strike out the word "commission" and insert the words "Secretary of Agriculture."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I call the attention of the Senator from Kansas to the fact that it will be necessary to change the language in other respects. On page 13, line 14, the word "commission" is stricken out and the words "Secretary of Agriculture" inserted, and following the word "commission" are the words "may in its discretion." That should be changed to "in his discretion."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 13, line 14, before the word "discretion," to strike out the word "its" and insert in lieu thereof the word "his."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will suggest that that occurs in many other places in the bill.

Mr. CURTIS. I ask unanimous consent that the Secretary be authorized to make such clerical corrections as may be necessary to make the language conform with the amendments agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The changes were made at the desk, as follows:

On page 7, line 5, strike out "in its organization."
On page 7, line 23, strike out "its" and insert "his."

On page 19, line 21, strike out "it" and insert "he."
On page 19, line 22, strike out "it" and insert "he."

Mr. PHIPPS. I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Kansas to the language on page 2, where the term "commission" is defined, in lines 5 and 6.

Mr. CURTIS. Those lines should be stricken out, and I so move.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 2 to strike out lines 5 and 6 as follows:

The term "commission" means the Post Roads and Federal Highway Commission created by this act.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I wish to ascertain whether or not the amendment was made in line 12, page 14, where the word "commission" occurs.

Mr. CURTIS. That was overlooked. I move that on page 14, line 12, the word "commission" be stricken out and the words "Secretary of Agriculture" be inserted.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Secretary will be authorized to insert the words "Secretary of Agriculture" in place of the word "commission" if there have been any other omissions.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, as the Senator from Kansas indicated a moment ago, I intend to make a motion relative to section 8 of this bill, which is found at the bottom of page 7.

Section 8 contains an old and familiar friend with whom I have been battling with more or less success, generally less, for six months or more. It authorizes and directs the Secretary of War "to transfer to the commission," but, as the bill is amended, it will be to the Secretary of Agriculture, "upon his request all surplus war materials, equipment, and supplies not needed for the purposes of the War Department but suitable for use in the improvement of highways."

That is a continuation of existing law, which was passed, in a sense, as an emergency measure, and it is now proposed to make it a governmental policy by the passage of this statute, that hereafter when the War Department has anything surplus that by any stretch of the imagination—and I am speaking with a knowledge of what has gone on—can be used or might be useful in the building of roads the Secretary of War must turn it over.

Mr. KING. It should all be stricken out.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I move to strike out section 8, and I do so because a policy of this kind inevitably leads to gross waste. It is exceedingly unbusinesslike, as a matter of governmental policy, to direct one department to turn over to another department property which it has acquired by appropriations made by the Congress and allow it to disburse it without making any account whatsoever in its connection with the Treasury.

Several efforts have been made in recent months, as Senators will recollect, to increase the amount of property which is to be turned over by the Secretary of War free of charge to other departments. I have opposed it, and if I had my way about it I would here and now repeal all the statutes which authorize any such thing and provide that no branch or department of the Government shall ever come into possession of or disburse any property except under an act of Congress and on an accounting made with respect to this disbursement. Just the other day a case came to my attention, and I think the Senate ought to know about it; and in mentioning it I am not criticizing the Post Office Department, but merely indicating what goes on and how careless this policy is.

There were turned over to the Post Office Department by the War Department under existing statutes 1,500,000 yards of airplane cloth for use by the Post Office Department, as the statute says. The Post Office Department, it is assumed, asked the War Department for that property on the ground that the Post Office Department made contracts for the building of airplanes and therefore that they could use this airplane cloth. But what happened, Mr. President? The Post Office Department took about a million yards of this airplane cloth and traded it off to automobile supply houses to get rubber tires in return. The Congress knows nothing whatsoever about the expenditure of Government property and Government money under a system of that kind.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. PITTMAN. Was not that a very much better use to make of that material than to sell it for 25 cents on the dollar and then, after it is sold for 25 cents on the dollar, pass a law to prevent the people from getting the use of it?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Post Office Department technically had the right apparently to do that; but I claim it is mighty bad business for us to sit here and pass appropriation bills for the support of the Post Office Department, including estimates for their automobile supplies, as they must include them, and for trucks and for other things, and then after the Congress has determined upon the amount of money which the Post Office Department shall have to spend within a fiscal year to permit the Post Office Department to take a lot of property for nothing from the War Department and trade it off for trucks and automobiles and accessories. That airplane cloth should have been sold and the money should have gone into the Treasury.

Mr. PITTMAN. Undoubtedly those tires were needed by the Post Office Department.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Then why did they not come to Congress and ask for an appropriation for tires?

Mr. PITTMAN. They would have had to purchase them for cash. Under the basis that the Senator seems to desire, they would have sold this material on the market for 25 cents on the dollar, and the Government would have paid full price for the tires.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Government paid the full price for the tires. Do not worry about that.

Mr. PITTMAN. But the Government in the long run would have to buy the tires.

Mr. WADSWORTH. And it did buy them, but the Congress did not know anything about it.

Mr. PITTMAN. They know about it now.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; but it is too late.

Mr. PITTMAN. It seems to me it was a very good business proposition.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I think it is mighty bad policy for the Government to permit departments to transfer property back and forth and trade and sell it, and pad the property account of one department at the expense of another, while Congress sits here ignorant of the situation. We are supposed to hold the purse strings, and when a department wants something and needs it, it is its duty to come here and ask us whether it can purchase it or not. That was the invariable, unbroken policy until this new one of trading property around free of charge, and without any accounting going on between the departments, was inaugurated at the conclusion of the war.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, the gist of this matter, it seems to me, is that we have already provided by law for the distribution of this surplus property. There is a statute already in existence providing for the disposition of any surplus property of the War Department.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; and it should cease immediately.

Mr. FLETCHER. The proposed amendment does not interfere with the present law.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It reenacts it into what might be termed a permanent statute. The bill is intended to lay down a permanent policy for Federal aid in highway building, and in it we propose to have a provision which directs the Secretary of War to turn over to the agency which is to supervise the building of the highways any and all property which he does not need, provided it can be used in any way in the building of highways.

It so happens that I have had some correspondence with the State highway commissioner of the State of Ohio, correspondence which resulted from the publication of a dispatch in one of the newspapers which attracted that officer's attention. I may say that, judging from his letters, he is a faithful public servant to his State and to the country. I got him, however, to write something about this distribution of War Department property on the excuse that it is going to be used for the building of highways, and he wrote me a frank letter about what has been going on. I think this matter is of some interest because it involves literally the disposition of hundreds of millions of dollars' worth of property. We have already given to the States over $100,000,000 worth of stuff.

Mr. KING. One hundred million dollars' worth?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; over $100,000,000 worth has been distributed to the States under this good-roads excuse.

The commissioner of the State of Ohio, whose name is Leon C. Herrick, wrote me under date of August 1, 1921, as follows:

As director of highways of the State of Ohio there came into my possession a considerable quantity of harness, turned over by the War Department for our use.

Now, it is turned over by the Department of Agriculture, as a matter of fact. That is where it comes from. That is the channel through which it goes. The War Department declares the material surplus. Then the Department of Agriculture, through the Bureau of Good Roads, in a sense requisitions it, takes it away from the War Department in accordance with the statute, and itself distributes it to the several States. This harness was distributed in that way. The commissioner continued:

This was light-artillery harness and one-horse cart harness. This has been stored at the State fairgrounds for some time. We have been endeavoring to utilize it on the State farm but it was not suitable, and we then called in a harness maker with an idea of having it remade so that it might be suitable for work-horse harness, thinking that we could then sell it for a fairly good sum of money, we having no horses or horse-drawn equipment in our department.

Of course, it is obvious that if it is going to be sold the Federal Government ought to get the money, but this official has been perfectly honest about this thing.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President—

Mr. WADSWORTH. He found all this stuff dumped on his doorstep, as it were. This is but the beginning, and I hope the Senator will permit me to finish reading the letter. I continue:

The harness maker advised me that this was out of the question, as it would involve more expense than we could realize for the harness. We therefore advertised an auction sale and sold this harness at auction on the 11th day of July, 1921.

Government property!

At this time we offered for sale and did sell the remnants of a half dozen concrete mixers, which came to us in an entirely unserviceable condition. By salvaging the lot we secured enough parts to build three mixers and the other four or five were sold as junk.

I am not criticizing this Ohio official. He was suddenly brought face to face with this ridiculous situation, but if it does not spell waste I do not know what does.

Trucks have come to us delivered by the War Department without any wheels, without radiators, even without engines, and in every conceivable shape. Those which it was possible to supply with the missing parts and put in shape were disposed of in this manner, as we have urgent need of trucks. To do this we took those which were in the worst condition and used the parts from them and then stripped the truck of every available part that might be used to replace worn-out parts on another truck and what remained was sold as junk, which it was, pure and simple.

We also received a large consignment of cord tires, which had been made for foreign machines, and the diameter would not fit an American-made machine. It was our purpose, rather than lose the tires, to utilize a "filler," but those tires had been exposed to the weather for a long period of time and the use of one set demonstrated that there was not to exceed three or four hundred miles in each tire. This did not warrant the expense of outfitting the machines for the tires and they were therefore sold as junk.

We received likewise a quantity of gasoline hose, which the highway department could not have used during its entire existence, and as it would deteriorate rapidly, it was offered for sale and sold.

Mr. McCORMICK. That was administrative inefficiency on the part of the Federal Government.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It was.

Mr. TOWNSEND. On the part of the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It was; and we shall have administrative inefficiency in the care of Government property so long as and whenever we permit any department to get something from another department for nothing and make no accounting for it.

Mr. HARRELD. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. HARRELD. I wish to ask the Senator from New York if he does not think that would be a good thing to do. Does he not think the Department of Agriculture knows a great deal more about how to dispose of this surplus than the War Department, judging from the experience we have had with the War Department in disposing of such property?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; I do not. The War Department was compelled to give this away. That gasoline hose should have been sold by the War Department and the money turned into the United States Treasury. It should not have reached a situation where it was sold by the State of Ohio and the money turned into the Treasury of that State.

Mr. HARRELD. The point I am making is, in the light of the fact that the War Department has never sold any of this surplus property, does not the Senator think it would be a good idea to have the Department of Agriculture dispose of it rather than the War Department?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I think the Senator from Oklahoma is mistaken. The War Department has sold a great deal of this property. The War Department has sold $1,500,000,000 worth of it, and did it exceedingly well considering the falling market which it had to confront; but in any event the proceeds from whatever is sold should go into the Treasury of the United States, I do not care who sells it.

Mr. HARRELD. Does the Senator think the sale of $1,000,000,000 worth of that kind of property to France for a song and then having it sold to private dealers and shipped back into this country is a good business proposition on the part of our Government?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I do not agree with the Senator's premise. It was not sold to France for a song. I think that deal made over there was an exceedingly good one. I think we never would have netted $400,000,000 for that property had we tried to sell it and pay the French Government the duties which the French Government would have been authorized and warranted in charging us had we attempted to sell it there.

Mr. McCORMICK. If we had attempted to sell it where?

Mr. WADSWORTH. In France. The French Government would have been warranted in asking our Government to pay duty on War Department material which had been taken over for use of the Army if after the war was over we had sold it to French citizens and industries. Senators have to take that into account.

Mr. KING. Mr. President—

Mr. WADSWORTH. I have not finished reading the letter and I do not wish to be diverted from it. There is quite a little of it. I respect this official of the State of Ohio because he is telling the story as he has seen it out there.

Mr. KING. If the Senator will pardon me, I wish to corroborate what the Senator said about the sale of that property to France. I am very familiar with it from investigations made.

Mr. WADSWORTH. We have investigated it over and over again.

Mr. KING. I think the Government of the United States made $100,000,000 and France will be utterly unable to realize three-fifths of what we got from her for that property.

Mr. WADSWORTH. This Ohio commissioner proceeds:

We received a very choice collection of cant hooks, an article which is about as useful to a highway department as some 75 hydraulic jacks also received.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. SWANSON. Where is the defect in the law? The law refers to things which the Secretary of War himself determines are not needed by the War Department; and, second, it requires them to be useful for highway purposes.

Mr. WADSWORTH. But that is not in the discretion of the Secretary of War.

Mr. SWANSON. Consequently, it is the duty of the Secretary of War to ascertain whether they are useful for highway purposes before he furnishes them to the highway department. Things that can not be used for highway purposes he ought to retain and sell.

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; he has no choice.

Mr. SWANSON. But the law says he shall not give it to them unless it is useful for highway purposes.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It does not say he has that authority. It is the Bureau of Good Roads that has it. Anything which they say is useful for making good roads they take over.

Mr. SWANSON. I have not seen that in the law.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is in the statute. They are the ones to say whether it is useful for highway purposes.

Mr. SWANSON. Where is that found?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The present law, may I say to the Senator from Virginia, simply provides that whenever the Secretary of War declares property to be surplus, any kind of property, such of it as is deemed useful in the building of roads shall be distributed by the Department of Agriculture to the States, and it is the Department of Agriculture which decides whether the property is useful, and the Secretary of War is helpless in that respect.

Mr. SWANSON. I am not talking about the former law. I ask the Senator whether or not he has moved to strike out section 8?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I have.

Mr. SWANSON. Section 8 does not leave it with the Secretary of Agriculture to determine the matter. It provides that two conditions must exist before the property is turned over; first, that the War Department does not need it; second, that it is useful for highway purposes.

Mr. WADSWORTH. And who decides that?

Mr. SWANSON. I should suppose the Secretary of War would decide it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Not at all. The commission is to decide it.

Mr. SWANSON. The two combined would decide it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. No.

Mr. SWANSON. And if the War Department does not need the property, and it is not useful for highway purposes, it is the duty of the Secretary of War to sell it. What would the Senator from New York do with property in the possession of the War Department which is not needed?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I would sell it and put the money into the Treasury.

Mr. SWANSON. I am referring to property which is not needed by the War Department but which is needed for highway construction. Would the Senator sell it at a sacrifice?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No.

Mr. SWANSON. If the law is properly executed, and the transaction is conducted as provided in the law, there can not be any trouble.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It will never be properly executed unless there is an accounting, dollar for dollar.

Mr. SWANSON. They account article for article. I had a letter put into the RECORD the other day from the highway commissioner of Virginia, stating that he could account for every article which he had received from the War Department, state where it is, and the value of it, and that he would be very glad to have a thorough investigation of the matter. In addition to that, he stated that the property which he had received from the War Department had been very useful and very beneficial to road development.

Section 8 of the proposed law, as I understand it, seems to me to be a very wise and good provision. As I have previously stated, there are two conditions precedent to the turning over of the property by the War Department to the States.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I think it involves a wretched governmental policy.

Mr. SWANSON. Both conditions to which I have referred must be complied with. First, the Secretary of Agriculture must say that the property is useful for highway purposes and that he needs it; and, second, the Secretary of War must concur that he does not need it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I do not agree with that interpretation.

Mr. SWANSON. The Secretary of War alone must determine whether or not he needs the property.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I desire to continue the reading of this letter and then afterwards to read another one. I repeat, I do not agree with the interpretation which is put upon the present situation by the Senator from Virginia. I know that the Secretary of War is helpless in the matter. The letter continues:

We set aside 10 of these jacks, with the hope that there might at some time arise a situation where they might be used, and the balance were offered for sale and sold.

I could list other articles, but the summary of the situation is this: That there has been handed out to highway departments a large quantity of equipment for which no highway department could have any possible use. Likewise, speaking for this State at least, there was a large amount of equipment that was absolutely worn out and was beyond repair when received.

Now, mind you, all of that property could have been sold by the Secretary of War if this statute had not existed which gave the right to the Bureau of Good Roads to take the property away from him and send it to the States.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Does the Senator from Ohio desire to interrupt my reading of this letter?

Mr. POMERENE. If the Senator from New York has not completed the reading of the letter, I shall not ask to interrupt him.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I have not completed the reading of the letter. It continues:

Ohio has not yet provided proper facilities for storing equipment, and it has been necessary to store many of our supplies at the State fairgrounds under very adverse conditions and to move them at various times, involving a large expense. Our records show that thousands of dollars have been spent in moving the equipment stored at the fairgrounds. In view of this fact I made a personal investigation and set aside every article that it seemed to me might ever be called into use and gathered together the balance, offered it for sale, sold it, and turned the money into the highway funds of the State.

I think, Mr. President, that I have read such portions of the first letter as are pertinent to this discussion. A second letter reached me under date of August 5 from the same official, in which he goes into greater detail. I recite these things to show the inevitable result of the free distribution of Government property without any accounting to Congress. Mr. President, again Mr. Herrick writes to me with commendable frankness. I had written him, may I say, expressing my view that these statutes should now be repealed, that the Government should stop distributing any more material free of charge to anybody anywhere. I received this letter in reply:

Acknowledging your letter of the 3d, with reference to the distribution of equipment by the Department of Agriculture from the War Department, I wish to thank you for the letter. The views which you express coincide exactly with my own.

This State official is sick of this situation—

I thoroughly agree with you that we have had a sufficient amount of equipment, and I am very much in favor of the War Department selling the balance of their surplus rather than furnishing it to highway departments.

Only last week—

This letter, I repeat, is dated August 5—

I received a letter requesting me to advise the largest number of horses I would be willing to accept out of a 5,000 allotment.

They are going to commence to give horses away next. The Army appropriation act, Mr. President, directs the Secretary of War to sell a certain number of Army horses. The reduction of the Army has made it possible to get rid, I think, of a few more. Somebody deems those horses to be useful in the building of good roads, and, therefore, the Department of Agriculture has the right to take them away from the surplus property of the War Department and give them away to the States.

Mr. Herrick continues:

In this modern day I question very much if any highway department would have use for horses—

But how many highway departments would refuse 100 or 200 horses if they could get them for nothing and then sell them; the proceeds to go into the State treasury? We are asking too much of some of our public officials, Mr. President.

The trucks which have been furnished have been of no little consequence and service, and I am inclined to believe that the value has been received for all trucks that were furnished and that most of the States could utilize more trucks than they have been furnished to date. This one particular item has been of great service to the road work in Ohio.

For your information I want to submit the following details of our sale, which is the only sale held to date for the disposition of equipment in Ohio:

We sold 3 concrete mixers, 1 elevating grader, and 33 trucks of various types, and in every instance all of the above was merely junk, every available part that might be utilized having been stripped for future use.

21 escort wagons, which were new, but for which we had no use whatsoever.

Senators probably know what an escort wagon is. It is a great, heavy substantially built vehicle which requires from four to six animals to haul it. It can carry a heavy load—2 or 3 tons. Twenty-one of them were sold because the State of Ohio had no use for them. Why were they ever sent there? That money should have gone into the Federal Treasury; but just so long as we pursue this careless policy of saying anything which may be useful to highway development may be distributed free of charge we will never get rid of this waste.

17 quad frames were sold. These were good, but of no consequence to the department.

5 winches unsuitable for our use, together with 2 pumps, were disposed of.

1 hydraulic press and 5 other small pumps, entirely beyond repair, were disposed of.

Think of all this road-building machinery—winches and hydraulic presses!

Mr. KING. And think of the freight.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The letter continues:

40 heavy hydraulic jacks were sold, we having retained 10 for our use.

1 lot of concrete buggies that had finished their service before being shipped to us was sold.

11 boxes of 2-inch gasoline hose were also disposed of.

1 quantity of solid tires on demountable rims, obsolete and worthless from exposure to the weather, was sold.

The sale included a large quantity of side lamps and tail lamps for trucks, we retaining sufficient number for our needs.

1 steam pump badly in need of repairs and 1 gasoline pump minus most of its parts.

4 blacksmith forges.

A quantity of hand pumps, mostly broken, together with the artillery harness, completed our sale.

As you will observe from the above, everything sold was either junk when it was received or else was equipment that we could not possibly utilize in the department. It is my opinion that the sale was advantageous, and the amount of money returned was $12,684.00.

Mr. President, the 21 escort wagons alone would be worth almost that if they were new.

I do not want to be misunderstood and assure you that Ohio is very grateful indeed for all of the equipment received and can readily appreciate that it would be impossible to furnish only such material as might be utilized in so large an undertaking. Furthermore, I submit that Ohio has taken care of the equipment furnished in the very best possible manner and has made use of every available piece of equipment.

With that statement, Mr. President, I agree. For myself I have confidence in the director of the highway department of the State of Ohio, but what he tells here as having, through no fault of that official, happened in Ohio, which spells waste, has been happening in most of the States of the Union, and it will continue to happen just so long as we direct the free distribution of Government property.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, my information is that Mr. Herrick is a very good official and I have no doubt that his judgment with respect to the articles which were shipped to him was sound. The conditions to which he refers, however, reflect upon the Federal officials who sent such property out there. The purpose of the law evidently was to send to the several States property which might be suitable for highway purposes, and none was to be sent which was not suitable. It is apparent that the Federal Government has realized very little from this property which has been thus given away; but as my good friend the Senator from New York is chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, I think if he will investigate further he will find that the Federal Government has realized very little money out of at least some of the property which the War Department has sold.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Is the Senator familiar with the figures?

Mr. POMERENE. No; I do not have the figures at hand, but I have been advised as to prices which have been quoted for the sale of meats, blankets, and so forth, and I know that those who have purchased such articles have made very large sums of money out of them.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Military Affairs Committee has investigated that question at least twice and, I think, three times. At the last hearing on that question we had submitted to us complete figures showing the result of the work of the Director of Sales of the War Department since that office was created. The records showed at that time—and that was in February or March, I think, of the present year—that the sales had netted to the Government 55 per cent of the original cost.

Mr. KING. And many of the articles were bought at war prices.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes. They were bought at war prices and they were sold on a falling market; at least, they have been sold for the last year on a falling market.

In regard to the surplus meats, I happen to know about that. The department made desperate efforts to sell the canned meat; they even went to the expense of opening retail stores in many cities in the country. They put the cans on the shelves and offered to sell the meat at prices far below the price charged for similar grades and qualities of meat by retail butchers and grocers. They could not sell it, one reason being, I am told, that it was in cans too large for the use of the average housekeeper; another that the meat when put up was a little more salty than is ordinarily found in commerce, it being made a little more salty so that it would keep better under adverse conditions in the trenches. They could not sell it at retail. They had some offers or suggestions from Governments abroad that they would buy it for some of the famine-stricken districts, but the statute prevented the War Department from selling anything in the nature of foodstuffs abroad, so it could not be sold in that direction. Finally the bulk of it—I think it was something like 60,000,000 pounds—was disposed of after nearly two years of effort at something like 6½ cents a pound. It cost, I think, something between 20 and 30 cents a pound. Now, if the Senator from Ohio or any other Senator can now tell the War Department how it could have sold that stuff at a better price, I imagine the War Department will be glad to know, so as to have guidance in the future.

That is the story of the meats.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I have had statements made to me by gentlemen who were inquiring into the subject, and if the Senator has the correct statement I have been misinformed; but I am disposed to believe that the Senator has been misinformed and not myself.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I should be very glad to know the name of the Senator's informant.

Mr. POMERENE. I shall be very glad to try to get this information for the Senator.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Very well; we will have a hearing before the Military Affairs Committee, because I have heard these charges and insinuations and innuendoes and inferences going on for 18 months, and on every occasion when they have come before the committee they have been exploded. I do not say that these people in the War Department are infallible. I think they have made some mistakes. One of the great mistakes they made was that of policy. When they started selling goods, prices were high in the United States. Everything was high. They hoped to make a record, very properly, and from a human standpoint understandably, of selling War Department surplus property at high prices, and they refused, I think, a good many offers which they should have taken, or at least subsequent developments would indicate that they should have been taken at the time. Then the bottom dropped out of prices, and since then the department has been struggling to get rid of the stuff, and to my mind it is astounding that they have averaged 55 per cent of cost.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, the statements of the Senator from New York are somewhat surprising, although they simply indict the departments that have had this matter in charge; yet he voted to continue the present road administration. It stands to reason that a man who is familiar with his business and impressed with his duty never would have requisitioned stuff that was not necessary for road work. I learned perhaps a year and a half ago that that practice was being indulged in in some places. I protested against it, and was confronted with the statement that there was not time and opportunity to investigate all of this matter, and this material was turned over and prorated among the States whether the States desired the material or not.

It is a fact, in spite of all the statements that may be made to the contrary, because it has been investigated and reports made, that the War Department has on hand a vast amount of material that is going to waste. In investigating some of the forts and former cantonments it has been found that there are vast numbers of automobiles on hand unprotected. As one man put it to me—an employee of the Government whom I sent to the Secretary of War to make his statement, a man who had had charge of it—they had literally acres of automobiles standing out in the weather without any protection. This material is on hand. I do not believe that the War Department is disposing to great advantage of the material such as was in mind when this provision was inserted in the bill. This provision does not give to the Secretary of War any authority to turn over surplus material that is not fitted for road work. It does not give the Secretary of Agriculture the right to accept material that is not fitted for road work. If material is being turned over and accepted that is not fitted for road work, the fault lies with those two departments.

Mr. PHIPPS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I yield.

Mr. PHIPPS. I think at this point it would be advisable to read into the Record the existing law under which the disposal of surplus materials has been made for so-called highway purposes.

Section 7 of the act approved February 28, 1919, being Public, No. 299, reads as follows:

That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized, in his discretion, to transfer to the Secretary of Agriculture all available war material, equipment, and supplies not needed for the purposes of the War Department but suitable for use in the improvement of highways, and that the same be distributed among the highway departments of the several States to be used on roads constructed in whole or in part by Federal aid, such distribution to be made upon a value basis of distribution the same as provided by the Federal aid road act approved July 11, 1916.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I recognize some force in what the Senator says in reference to the lack of an accounting. There ought to be an accounting system. When material is turned over to the Secretary of Agriculture for road work there should be an account of it, and the Secretary of Agriculture should be given credit so that he could account for what material has been turned over, and it should be charged up to the Secretary of Agriculture. But it is ridiculous to say that we must come to the Congress and ask for an appropriation to go out and buy material which the department has on hand and which is going to waste, because there is no doubt, notwithstanding any statement to the contrary, for some of us have inspected the matter ourselves, that material is going to waste out of which the War Department is realizing nothing, and can realize less and less as the years go by if it attempts to dispose of it.

If we have that material on hand, and if it can be used by the States—and that is the only kind of material that we provide for here; we provide for turning over this material needed in road building which the States would have to buy if it were not for this that was turned over, which is generally a loss to the Government, as I have stated—why should it not be turned over to the Department of Agriculture to be distributed among the States?

This matter has been investigated by the department.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Which department?

Mr. TOWNSEND. By the Secretary of Agriculture; by the Postmaster General, which the Senator has criticized, for that department. It has come to me in written statements that the Postmaster General has had investigated the various departments here, especially the War Department, and has found that there are stored away in buildings supplies which are necessary for other departments of the Government which would save the expenditure of money out of the Treasury if they could be used by the other departments. They were purchased by the Government. They are owned by the Government. Similar supplies to be used in the Post Office Department or in the Department of Agriculture would have to be purchased out of the Treasury. While there should be a book-keeping arrangement to show where these things go, and an accounting made, to my mind it is purely a matter of book-keeping.

In most of these instances if the law is properly observed, if it is not abused, as it has been in the cases suggested by the Senator from New York, if public officials can be trusted to carry out the provisions of the law, I think it would be economy to use this material in the construction of roads, and that is the reason why this provision was inserted in the bill.

Mr. WADSWORTH. But this does not provide for any charging.

Mr. TOWNSEND. No; it does not.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Not a cent.

Mr. TOWNSEND. If the Senator has some amendment that he wants to offer, some provision for an accounting, I have no objection at all to it.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, am I to infer from what has been said by the Senator from Michigan and the Senator from New York that there is no system of accounting as between the War Department and the Agricultural Department with respect to this property which is turned over by one department to the other?

Mr. TOWNSEND. No; there is a system of accounting. The Department of War knows what it turns over and keeps a record of that. The Department of Agriculture knows what it gets.

Mr. WADSWORTH. And the two do not agree in their figures.

Mr. TOWNSEND. And the two do not always agree in their figures. They do sometimes, but they do not always. This provision that the Senator is speaking about amounted almost to a scandal a few years ago, and I had supposed it had been corrected about a year ago.

Mr. POMERENE. I think, then, I shall agree that there ought to be more business in politics.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I yield.

Mr. LODGE. I have been listening to this discussion with great interest. Do I understand that the Senator feels that the proper course is to take this Government property and sell it and give the money to the States? That is what is being done.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I was wondering under what authority that was done. I had not supposed that that was being practiced.

Mr. LODGE. It certainly has been done in the State of Ohio and, I suppose, elsewhere.

Mr. WADSWORTH. In many States.

Mr. LODGE. But surely I do not think anybody voted for this provision or allowed it to pass with the idea that Government property was to be delivered to the States, and if the States did not happen to have any use for it they were to sell it and put the money in their own treasury. I think the departments of the Government can do as well as that.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President—

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, the provision of law is that this material fit for road construction—and only that material—shall be turned over to the Department of Agriculture, and the Department of Agriculture is authorized to allot it to the States for road work. This has been done. Of course, where the material is worn out and they want to sell it for junk, I can see no objection to disposing of it for old iron, or something of that kind; but for the Department of Agriculture to request worthless property—not only worn-out property but property not at all fitted for road work—I think is a gross violation of duty. I have no doubt at all about that. Where it is indulged, the criticism should be against the heads of departments that would permit such a thing as that.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, the trouble is that practically all these articles to which the Ohio official refers in his letter are fit for use in highway work. An escort wagon can be used in highway construction. It can haul dirt and sand and gravel. Harness can be used in highway construction, although they could not make this harness fit in civilian work. It just happened that way. The hydraulic jacks can be used in highway construction. I suppose they might be used in lifting up big bridges to put new concrete piers under them, or something of that sort. All these things can be used. They are fit for use somewhere under some circumstances.

But you never can draw the line sharply. You use the expression "fit for use" or "useful in" building highways, and you open the door to nearly every tool a man uses—picks, shovels, and other tools. In Texas they took fence posts, barbed wire, donkey engines, and narrow-gauge tracks, because, forsooth, in some circumstances you could use that material in building roads.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Does the Senator say that material that was worthless when they got it could be used in road construction?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I suppose some could and some could not, but it was material of a type that could be used. Of course, Texas sold the fence posts and the barbed wire and the donkey engines and the narrow-gauge track, because Texas could not use it at that time.

Mr. LODGE. And the money all went into the State treasury.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The money went into the State treasury in Texas.

Mr. GLASS. I would like to inquire of the Senator by what authority this material, which could be used for road purposes, and was intended under the statute to be used for road purposes, was sold?

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is turned over to the State with no strings on it, and that, it is proposed, we shall do permanently.

Mr. GLASS. It was turned over to the State with a very definite string on it and the string is that the State shall use it for highway purposes, and not sell it to junk dealers and put the money into the State treasury.

Mr. WADSWORTH. How is the Federal Government going to keep track of it?

Mr. GLASS. It appears that the Federal Government has not kept track of it, and has not carried out the intent of the law. It seems to me that the Federal Government, either the Secretary of War or the Secretary of Agriculture, has turned over a lot of junk to the States which can not be used for highway purposes.

Mr. TOWNSEND. That is what the statement the Senator has read means, if it means anything. That is exactly what it is, an indictment of public officials.

Mr. GLASS. The Senator has said that the highway commissioner of the State of Ohio is an exceptionally honest man. He may be; but I do not think an exceptionally honest State highway commissioner should take property turned over to him to be used for highway purposes and sell it and appropriate the money to other purposes.

Mr. WADSWORTH. May I say that the official in Ohio turned the money into the highway fund of the State.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I desire to repeat, however, just this statement, assuming, now, that only proper material is turned over, and only proper material is accepted; under the law—and there is no other intent in the law—it is simply a question as to whether we shall allow material which the Government now owns and has paid for and has not put to any use to be thrown away or whether we shall devote it to a proper purpose, namely, that of road building. That is all there is to this question. In the meanwhile there should be a more efficient means of accounting. I agree with that, and if the Senator from New York can devise any amendment which will bring that about and not interfere with the purpose we have here, I have no objection.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, just one moment, and I shall not impose upon the Senate any longer.

I think the Senator from Michigan has hardly stated the whole question when he says "This is the question." I would phrase it this way: That we have to decide some time whether or not surplus property shall be sold by the Federal Government, the proceeds to go into the Federal Treasury, or sold by other Governments, the proceeds to go into their treasuries.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Should it not be stated another way—

Mr. WADSWORTH. Whether as junk, or unusable, or brand-new, or unsuitable.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Add this to it, or whether it shall not be used at all, and allowed to rust out, or be put to some Federal use in the construction of roads.

Mr. WADSWORTH. We can get after the people who are allowing it to go to waste while it is in the hands of the Federal Government.

Mr. TOWNSEND. You do not do it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Then the Senator and I are equally guilty. The Senator says, "You do not do it." I have been trying for months and months to get this thing straightened out.

Mr. TOWNSEND. So have I.

Mr. WADSWORTH. But the further you go in distributing property free of charge, giving something for nothing, the harder a time you will have in securing any economy in the Government.

Mr. TOWNSEND. The further I go into this investigation the more hopeless it seems to me for us to get anything out of the surplus material that is on hand and which every department seems to guard so jealously, even this old junk they tell about.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Does the Senator know what the War Department has distributed?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Oh, yes; I know that.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Forty-three thousand motor vehicles. Does that indicate that it is hard to get something out of the War Department?

Mr. TOWNSEND. How many more has it on hand?

Mr. WADSWORTH. About 9,000 trucks.

Mr. TOWNSEND. It has more than that, unless it has disposed of them in the last few months.

Mr. LODGE. I think that is very important, if the Senator will pardon me for interrupting. The Senator from New York is chairman of the Military Affairs Committee, and says there are about 9,000 trucks on hand, and the Senator from Michigan says there are more. Is there no way of knowing?

Mr. WADSWORTH. You can hear anything about the War Department surplus.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I talked with the chairman of the Efficiency Commission, I presume you would call him—

Mr. KING. Gen. Dawes?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Yes; and he is authority for the statement that there is a great deal of this material going to waste that ought to be transferred, or used, or sold, or disposed of. He is in favor of an accounting system, but there is no accounting now, so that it is almost impossible to find out what material the Government has on hand as the result of the war.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, section 8 is not subject to the construction placed on it by the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH]. This is the language of the section:

That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to transfer to the Secretary of Agriculture upon his request all surplus war material, equipment, and supplies not needed for the purposes of the War Department.

Of course, the Senator can not take the position that the Secretary of Agriculture is to determine what material in the hands of the Secretary of War is not of use to the War Department. He must turn over to the Secretary of Agriculture material fit for use in the construction of roads in the various States, material not in use by the War Department, surplus material, Mr. President, material which now is rusting in the rain in various places in the country; and here is an opportunity to put it to a good use and purpose so that it will be of service to the people in the various States. And what is the Federal Government? It is composed of the people of and supported by the people of all the States. I submit, Mr. President, that this section ought to remain in the bill. It provides for the distribution of war machinery that may be used in building roads in the States. It is an important provision in this bill, and it ought not to be stricken out.

I know that there are certain manufacturing concerns that make auto trucks and other things that are used in building roads, and they do not like to see this material which is now rusting in the rain brought in and turned over to the States, because they would rather sell their stock to the various counties and States and let this already paid for Government material rust out there in the rain. I am in favor of taking this material, which has been paid for by the money of the taxpayers of the States, or the United States, and let them get some good out of it.

Mr. President, the Senator from Colorado read the present law on the subject. I helped to pass that law, but I like this provision a little better. It goes a little further and will benefit more people. I do not know whether the other law would be left intact if this change were made. The present provision, or the provision in the old law, leaves the matter in the discretion of the Secretary of War.

The law read by the Senator from Colorado says that the Secretary of War may do this "in his discretion." That language is implied here, in section 8 of this bill, because it says that he shall turn over surplus supplies "not needed for the purposes of the War Department." So he and he alone will decide whether there are any surplus supplies of material suited to road-building purposes. I do not object to the Senator from New York putting in a provision, if he desires, providing for an accounting or for a record to be kept so that we can keep track of all this material. I want to say, for my own State, that when charges were made in an article in the Washington Star in July that some of this material had been sold by the road authorities of the States, the road engineer in my State, W. S. Keller, wired me that the State Department had not disposed of a single piece of war material turned over to the State of Alabama. My State is using that material, and using it to good advantage, and I think a majority of the States in the Union are using it to advantage, and I am in favor of keeping this section in the bill.

I will not consume any more time just now. The hour is growing late, but I sincerely trust that it will be the judgment of this body to keep section 8 in the pending bill.

I submit that in these distressing times the Government should gladly turn over to the States all of this surplus war material of which they may make good use. I think it is as little as we can do to let them have it.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, I wish to speak just a moment, because some indirect criticism has been indulged in concerning the performance of certain officials of the State of Ohio. I made some inquiries with regard to that even prior to the investigations that were made by the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH]. I did that because my attention had been called to this whole question when one of the appropriation bills was before the Senate for consideration last winter. I took a small part in the enactment of some legislation whereby certain of this material was to be turned over to the State. I subsequently read in a newspaper a criticism of the action of the Ohio State highway commissioner in selling some of this material, and because I had had a part in the enactment of the legislation I felt a personal interest and wrote to him at once and ascertained substantially the same facts which have been presented to the Senate by the Senator from New York, that the material was turned over to the highway department of the State of Ohio, the great bulk of which was simply junk and was of no use.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Not the greater part of it?

Mr. WILLIS. Well, perhaps not the majority of it, but a considerable portion of it was of absolutely no use in the construction of highways. The State of Ohio did what it could to house this material that was turned over, and in my judgment the official did not in any way transcend his authority nor was he derelict in his duty when he took the material which had been turned over to him and sold it and covered the money into the highway fund of the State of Ohio. If there be any criticism growing out of the transaction it should be directed, in my judgment, against the officials of the United States rather than against the officials of the State of Ohio.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. WILLIS. Certainly.

Mr. TOWNSEND. The fact is that the Director of Roads sent out letters asking the States if they could not use such and such things—harness, for instance, and other materials. Originally they sent the material indiscriminately regardless of whether it was anything they needed or not. But that is not an argument against the proper use of material which otherwise could be used in good-roads construction.

Mr. WILLIS. That may be the policy now, but I venture the assertion that the highway department of the State of Ohio never received any inquiry from the Bureau of Roads in the Department of Agriculture as to whether they could use several miles of hose, or whether they could use automobiles without any engines in them, and a lot of other material that could not possibly be used in the building of good roads or for any other purpose.

Mr. HARRELD. Mr. President, I desire to move to amend the text of section 8, proposed to be stricken out by the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] by striking out of line 22, page 7, the words "and directed." I think those words are surplusage, because the material can never be turned over to the States for use in road construction unless it is satisfactory to the Secretary of War, while this section would require that it be turned over upon the request of the Secretary of Agriculture. So it is surplusage in the first place, and it is rather harsh in its terms.

I wish to say, however, in connection with the dispute that has been going on, that not long ago I had occasion to visit Panama. While there I became very closely acquainted with the man who has charge of public road building in the Canal Zone. He told me that he was having all kinds of trouble in spite of the law to get from the military authorities in Panama trucks and machinery, scrapers, graders, and things of that sort which he needed in his business of constructing roads in the zone, and yet those things were lying unused by the War Department and were being allowed to rust and rot. He said that he was badly handicapped in the construction of roads in that section by reason of his inability to get those things. His expression was that his experience with the War Department was like a dog that had two bones, could eat only one, but intended to see that the other dog did not get either. He said there was no opportunity for getting from the War Department any sort of surplus material after it passed into the hands of that department, and I think that is true. Let the War Department get charge of any real estate or any property of any kind and it can hardly be pried out of their hands with a spike.

I think that section 8 ought to be allowed to stay in the bill. It is largely, as the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] said, not so much the fault of the law or the law itself of which the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] complains, but it is against the operations of the law, it is against the inefficient way in which the law is enforced. Everything the Senator said applies in that way, but as against the law itself it does not apply. There ought to be a system of bookkeeping between the War Department and the Department of Agriculture by which these matters may be taken into account and the one department charged and the other credited.

The section provides that this material shall be furnished to the Secretary of Agriculture upon his request. Certainly the Secretary of Agriculture has sense enough to know what kind of material he needs for road building. He should not ask for harness that is not fit to be used in road building. He should not ask for the things which the Senator from New York said were shipped to Ohio which were unfit for road building. He should not ask for them in the first place. The law requires that they shall be turned over to him upon his request, and it is supposed that a man holding a dignified position such as the office of Secretary of Agriculture has sense enough to know what kind of material he wants.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I have been informed by several Senators that they not only have some speeches to make but have other amendments to offer to the bill. If the roll were called at this time, we undoubtedly could not secure a quorum, so I am going to consent to an executive session at this time. I will consent that the bill may be laid temporarily aside now with the understanding that after the executive session we shall take a recess until to-morrow at 12 o'clock.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I wish to make a short statement about the pending bill. What is known as the Townsend road bill was reported to the Senate about June 20. There was a majority report and a minority report. With others on the committee I signed the minority report. Our objections to the then Townsend bill were principally two. One was that the State highway commissions were deprived of the right under the Townsend bill of locating and designating the various roads in their respective States. We thought then and I think now that this was indefensible. The other principal objection was the commission feature of that bill. We filed a minority report which is on record as of date of June 20, 1921, to which I now refer. The report was largely taken up with these two objections.

Later, when the so-called Dowell bill was passed by the House and sent over to the Senate, it was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads. When that bill came to the Post Office Committee we found those two the principal differences existing in the committee. The majority of the committee was intensely desirous of having a Federal commission instituted in the place of the Secretary of Agriculture and intensely desirous that the Federal commission instead of the several State highway commissions should select the roads. We thus found ourselves in hopeless deadlock on both questions. It looked as if it would be a repetition of the action of the former Townsend bill, that no road legislation at all would be had at this session.

In the interest of getting some bill passed and giving some measure of relief for the road situation, an agreement, suggested by me, was entered into by which those on the one side yielded certain points and those on the other side yielded certain things, and thereby the present bill was reported.

So far as I am concerned, I am now and always have been intensely opposed to the commission idea. I was intensely opposed to the location and designation of the roads by the Federal highway commission here in Washington. The majority just as strongly favored those two propositions. It was in this situation that I believe we all realized that in order to get the legislation we must come to some compromise of our differences. We thereupon entered a compromise agreement. It was for that reason that I felt obligated under the agreement we had in the committee to vote "no" to-day on the motion of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURRIE] to strike out the commission provision. Under our committee agreement the majority of the committee was to retain their Federal commission plan; the minority was to secure the adoption of sections 4 and 6 of the so-called Dowell or Robsion bill, guaranteeing the State highway commissions the right to select and designate the highways in their respective States, substantially as they do now; an appropriation of $100,000,000 was agreed upon; and as to counties contributing, the present law was to remain as it is now. If we had not compromised in the committee, and this was my offer of compromise which was accepted by the majority, we would have been wrangling over it there yet, and no legislation would have been had at this session in my judgment.

I voted for the commission in the committee, and voted for it again just a while ago in the Senate, not because I believed it was best but solely because of the compromise agreement which I considered binding on me, and without which I was convinced that no bill would have been passed at this session. Mr. President, I believe that the Federal commission plan is not the proper way to handle the road question. I am opposed to the creation of so many commissions. I think that the present arrangement under the director of roads in the Department of Agriculture has been eminently satisfactory. I think it has given the very best of satisfaction. The present director has made a great success of it. I am glad the Senate has taken that view and that it has rejected the commission plan. I feel that all I have been fighting for in the committee for the last several months has been adopted by the Senate, and I am delighted that that has been done. My only reason for voting as I did in the committee was in order to get a bill reported out and get action at this special session for roads, and, of course, my vote in the Senate had to be in accord with our agreement. It seemed that the only possible way to accomplish something for roads at this session was for each side to concede something in order to get the bill before the Senate and get action on it. It was absolutely necessary that we should leave to the States the right to select the roads on which Federal aid should be applied. It was also necessary to have an appropriation, because neither the Phipps bill nor the so-called Dowell or Robsion bill carried an appropriation. It was just as necessary to have immediate action. I congratulate the Senate on its wisdom in voting down the commission provision.

CONFERENCE ON LIMITATION OF ARMAMENTS.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I wish to give notice under the rule of an amendment I shall propose to the pending deficiency appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The notice will be read.

The reading clerk read as follows:

Pursuant to the provisions of Rule XL, I hereby give notice that I shall move to suspend paragraph 3 of Rule XVI of the Standing Rules of the Senate for the purpose of offering the following amendment to the bill H. R. 8117, the urgent deficiency appropriation act, viz:

On page 3, line 16, insert the following:

"And provided further, That the delegates representing the Government of the United States use every effort and exert their influence for open sessions of the conference."

PORTRAIT OF ANDREW JACKSON.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] some time ago introduced a Senate resolution authorizing the purchase of a portrait of ex-President Andrew Jackson, to be hung in the lobby of the Senate. I now report back favorably that resolution (S. Res. 75) from the Committee on the Library with an amendment, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution.

The amendment of the Committee on the Library was to add to the resolution the words "said portrait not to cost more than $1,200," so as to make the resolution read:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Library of the Senate be authorized to purchase, if they can find one suitable, or to contract for the painting of, a portrait of Gen. Andrew Jackson, of Tennessee, and seventh President of the United States, to be hung in the Senate corridors, or other appropriate place, along with the portraits of Washington and other Presidents of the United States, to be paid for out of the contingent fund of the Senate, said portrait not to cost more than $1,200.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I simply wish to say that since the committee directed the resolution to be reported I have ascertained that a very excellent portrait of Andrew Jackson, painted by Alexander, a noted artist of the period, has been sent here, and it met the approval of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS], and I shall submit it to the Fine Arts Commission. I think it can be purchased for several hundred dollars less than the amount named in the resolution and of course whatever can be saved will be saved out of that sum.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 12 minutes spent in executive session, the doors were reopened.

RECESS.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate take a recess until tomorrow at 12 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Thursday, August 18, 1921, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, August 17, 1921.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our blessed Heavenly Father, through Thee heaven and earth are met together and we are not alone. Out of the depth of our gratitude and conscious need we would say never leave nor forsake us. Lead us to the deep experiences of the soul that can not be measured, to that peace that no human mind has ever understood, to that love whose depths no mortal heart has ever sounded, to that joy that no earthly lip has ever expressed. All along the pathway that awaits our footfall may every mountain be brought low and every valley raised up and every rough place made plain. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

At the request of Mr. MOORE of Virginia, by unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. BLAND of Virginia for to-day, on account of sickness.

PRINTING THE TARIFF BILL.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the House Committee on Printing I desire to report Senate concurrent resolution No. 7, with an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington calls up Senate concurrent resolution No. 7, which the Clerk will report. The Clerk read as follows:

Senate concurrent resolution 7.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the bill (H. R. 7456) to provide revenue, to regulate commerce with foreign countries, to encourage industries of the United States, and for other purposes, as passed by the House, be printed as a Senate document with an index, and that 15,000 additional copies be printed, of which 4,000 shall be printed for the use of the Senate, 9,000 for the House, to be distributed through the folding room, 1,000 for the Committee on Finance of the Senate, and 1,000 for the Committee on Ways and Means of the House.

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out all after the resolving clause and insert the following: "That the bill (H. R. 7456) to provide revenue, to regulate commerce with foreign countries, to encourage industries of the United States, and for other purposes, as passed by the House of Representatives, be printed as a Senate document with an index, and that 6,000 additional copies be printed, of which 2,000 shall be for the Senate document room, 2,000 for the House document room, 1,000 for the Committee on Finance of the Senate, and 1,000 for the Committee on Ways and Means of the House."

Mr. WINGO. Is this a privileged resolution?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes. I have consulted with the minority member of the Printing Committee. We have cut the Senate resolution from 15,000 to 6,000.

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman from Washington advise us why it is that for the last month we can not get anything out of the Printing Office on time? I have been on a committee where we had to consider for 24 hours a bill which we had to read in the RECORD of the proceedings of the Senate to know what we were considering. Every effort to get the Printing Office to furnish us a copy of the bill failed for 24 hours. Whenever we ask for a public document in many instances they say it is out of print and printing of new supply is promised in so many weeks.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I shall be glad to look into that.

Mr. BLACK. I remember the occasion which the gentleman from Arkansas refers to, but in looking up the RECORD I find that the bill was not messaged over from the Senate.

Mr. WINGO. Oh, that makes no difference. If a Senator can get a confidential print of a bill that he proposes to introduce, a Member of the House of Representatives ought to get a bill sooner than 24 hours after it has passed the Senate. I think the time has come for the House of Representatives to have a bill furnished promptly when a Senator can get a confidential print of an amendment that he is going to introduce some time in the future.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. As far as I am concerned, I want the membership of the House to have all the printing that it actually needs. I believe that the House should have a printing clerk as has the other body. What is everyone's business is quite often no one's business.

Mr. WINGO. I have given the gentleman a concrete illustration. As I say, United States Senators can get private prints of bills or amendments that they are going to introduce, while the chairman of our committee can not get the Government Printing Office to furnish us with a copy of a bill that has passed the Senate, but keeps us waiting 24 hours and gives as an excuse that it has not been messaged over in the regular course.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I do not like to defend a Republican, but if the gentleman will investigate he will find that the present Public Printer inherited about a month's back work that he has got to get out of the way. I think that ought to be said in his behalf. I have never seen a man work harder than the Public Printer has and is doing to-day.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I think all will agree to that, but the complaint of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO] runs to the different sets of rules which prevail for the ordering of printing necessary to expedite business of the House and its committees. I think we will soon have the situation straightened up. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bill of the following title:

H. R. 6407. An act for the relief of Maj. Francis M. Maddox, United States Army.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills and concurrent resolutions of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 2131. An act to extend for the period of seven months the provisions of Title II of the food control and the District of Columbia rents act approved October 22, 1919, and for other purposes;

S. 2133. An act ceding jurisdiction to the State of Texas over certain lands or bancos acquired by the United States of America from the United States of Mexico; and

S. 2387. An act making Army officers on active duty eligible for appointment to civil office in the government of Territorial possessions of the United States.

Senate concurrent resolution 10.

Whereas on September 14, 1921, there will be celebrated the six hundredth anniversary of the death of the Italian poet Dante; and Whereas the Congress of the United States desires to associate itself with the Italian Parliament in doing honor to his memory on this occasion; and

Whereas the great literary genius of Dante is recognized by the people of the United States, who, in common with the peoples of all civilized nations, have received large intellectual benefit from his classic masterpieces: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Congress of the United States hereby formally gives expression to the great regard and veneration in which it and the people of the United States hold this illustrious son of Italy.

That an attested copy of this resolution be transmitted, through the Secretary of State, to the ambassador of the United States at Rome, to be by him communicated, through the diplomatic channel, to the presiding officer of each of the chambers of the Italian Parliament.

Also the following resolution:

Senate concurrent resolution 8.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That when the two Houses adjourn on Wednesday, August 24, 1921, they stand adjourned until Wednesday, September 21, 1921.

America from the United States of Mexico; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

THE REVENUE.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I submit the following privileged report. The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 174.

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution the House shall resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 8245.

That general debate shall be confined to the bill, and be equally divided between and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Ways and Means and shall terminate when the Committee of the Whole arises on August 18, 1921.

Thereafter the bill shall be considered for amendment under the five-minute rule, but committee amendments to any part of the bill shall be in order any time and shall take precedence of other amendments.

That clause 3 of Rule XXI shall not apply to committee amendments.

That consideration of the bill for amendment shall continue until Saturday, August 20, 1921, at 3 o'clock in the afternoon, at which time the bill with all amendments that shall have been adopted by the Committee of the Whole shall be reported to the House, whereupon the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and all amendments to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit: That the vote on all amendments shall be taken in gross.

That all Members shall have leave to extend their own remarks in the RECORD on the bill until August 31, 1921.

The Clerk called the roll and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The SPEAKER. Three hundred and twenty-four Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The doors were opened.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, the adoption of the rule just read from the Clerk's desk will bring before the House in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for immediate consideration the tax bill reported by the Committee on Ways and Means. General debate will continue until to-morrow evening at the time that the Committee of the Whole rises. On Friday the bill will be taken up for amendment under the five-minute rule. Preference is given to amendments offered by the Committee on Ways and Means. The bill will be under consideration under the five-minute rule during Friday and Saturday until 3 o'clock in the afternoon of Saturday. That should give time for reading the greater part of the bill for amendments if gentlemen will refrain from making political speeches under the five-minute rule.

Mr. POUL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I yield for a question.

Mr. POUL. Can we not have some agreement in respect to time for debate of the rule itself? I find that we would like to have a little time on this side in which to discuss the rule.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, in view of the short time which we have in which to discuss the bill itself, I deem it of more importance that the bill be discussed than that we should discuss the bill while considering the rule. [Applause on the Republican side.] It is my purpose to move the previous question after a brief statement.

Mr. POUL. I will now ask the gentleman to yield to the minority 15 minutes for the discussion of the rule.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I shall have to move the previous question in a very short time.

Mr. POUL. I would say to the gentleman that I think this is the first time such a procedure as that has been adopted in a matter of so great importance.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Oh, no. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the previous question.

The question was taken.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 217, nays 116, answered "present" 1, not voting 96, as follows:

 The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 8245, to reduce and equalize taxation, to amend and simplify the revenue act of 1918, and for other purposes, with Mr. WALSH in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 8245, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the bill in full.

During the reading the following occurred:

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Chairman, section 219 was not read by the Clerk. I have been following the reading, and I will leave it to him.

The CHAIRMAN. He has not read anything since he read section 218.

Mr. SEARS. He started on section 221.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] is recognized.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I assure you I shall be glad when this task is over with, so far as the House is concerned, and I know that every Member of the House will be. We have had a long, tedious summer, and each and every Member of the House has industriously attended to the duties devolving upon him.

We now present to the House for consideration a revision of our internal-revenue laws. The sentiment of the country is that the people should be relieved, so far as possible, from the heavy burdens of taxation. The late war brought upon the people of the world the greatest tax burden that has ever visited them, and that burden we have shared. Our war expenditures have been greater than those of any other country proportioned upon the time we were engaged in the war. When we stop to think of the debt burden imposed upon the world by that war, its magnitude is astounding. If you will take the census of 1910, you will find that the estimated value of all property in the United States at that time was $187,500,000,000. There was blown away in this war $200,000,000,000, or a sum greater than the total value of all the wealth of the United States 10 years ago. Great Britain's public debt to-day, in round numbers, is 45 per cent of her total wealth. The public debt of France to-day is a sum much greater than that in proportion to her total wealth. The debt of Germany, including the indemnities imposed upon her by the allied Governments, is 125 per cent of her total wealth.

In other words, the wealth of Germany is less than $80,000,000,000, and her public debt $100,000,000,000, including the indemnity. Our public debt prior to the war was, in round numbers, $1,000,000,000. At the close of this Great War our public debt was $25,000,000,000. In round numbers, it is $24,000,000,000 at the present time. Deducting from the amount of our public debt the sum that foreign Governments owe us, about $10,000,000,000, our public debt is 4.3 per cent of our wealth. No principal country owes as little in proportion to its wealth as does the United States. [Applause.]

At the end of the Revolutionary War the Colonies owed $74,000,000 of public debt, or about $18 per capita. At the end of the Civil War our public debt was less than $3,000,000,000, or about $88 per capita, based on the population at that time. I can remember hearing my father say that that debt was so very great we would not see it paid even to the second generation. At the time the United States Government was organized it was said that the debt of the Colonies never could or would be paid. But there were two men who took a different view, Alexander Hamilton and George Washington, and they said, "It not only can be paid, but it must and will be paid." Including the cost of the War of 1812-14, the public debt of the United States was all paid in 1834, with the exception of one Government bond of $700, which has not yet been presented for payment.

My friends, although our debt seems very great, if I do not misjudge, with a return of reasonable prosperity it will be paid in a much shorter time than we now anticipate. We are the wealthiest people in the world; we are the happiest people in the world, and the Stars and Stripes never before floated with so much glory to the people as it does to-day. [Applause.]

There is a dividing line on the floor of this House on matters of revenue generally. Our Democratic friends sincerely believe, many of them, in tariff for revenue only or free trade. The Republican side of the House differs with them and generally believes in the principles of tariff for protection. And I am one of that number. [Laughter and applause.]

I do not believe, my friends, that by bringing the products of foreign labor into unrestricted competition with American products in our markets we can lift up the more unfortunate people of other countries to our level and still retain the standard of life and living which we enjoy. I believe it is impossible, and if we ever adopt the policy of free trade we will degrade our labor to the level of poorly paid labor of other countries. This we do not want to do.

In the pending bill we propose some very radical and desirable changes in our internal revenue laws. I hope our Democratic friends may fall in line and vote for this bill as the Republicans did for the revenue act of 1918, the existing law. That bill was passed by the House before the armistice was signed. We were engaged in a great war, and Republicans were absolutely loyal to the administration. We were as one family engaged in winning the war, and Republicans voted for everything asked for by the administration, feeling that it was our duty to support our Government in the great crisis, and that if the money appropriated and authorized by the Congress of the United States was not judiciously used the party in power would be responsible. There we rested our case. The situation to-day is just a little different, gentlemen. We have no war, but we have the responsibility of the debts imposed upon our people by that war, and those debts we must meet. We will meet them. We will meet our obligations on time. We can afford to do it. We can not afford to do otherwise. We have the wealth and we have the sense of honor and the desire to meet our obligations when due.

It is true large sums of money were wasted in the war. Some waste was inevitable. But I believe just criticism should always be welcome, but unjust criticism comes from the crank or the man who is misinformed or dishonest in his sentiments. Every party in power should be justly criticized.

Gentlemen, before the war, when the Democratic Party came into power in 1913, our public debt was $1,000,000,000, and when the Democratic Party went out of power our public debt was $25,000,000,000. The difference can be charged to the conduct of the war. When that party came in power in 1913 there was required to pay the running expenses of this Government, in round numbers, $1,000,000,000 annually, and when they went out of power it required $6,000,000,000 and more to pay the running expenses of this Government. When that party came into power—and I have some official figures on this matter—there were employed in this country about 400,000 Government employees in the classified and unclassified service. When that party went out of power on the 4th of last March there were 1,000,000 people in the United States employed by the Government.

The information brought to our committee, to point out some of the extravagances which seem inexcusable, is that to-day in the city of New York—if I am right, it is New York City—there are nine large buildings rented by the Federal Government, and there is floor space in one of those buildings for every clerk now in the entire nine buildings, with plenty of room to spare. There is a waste of rent of eight large buildings.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Who is responsible for that condition, if it actually exists?

Mr. FORDNEY. The past administration. The past administration contracted for those buildings. That is but one item of thoughtless extravagance. Mr. Dawes stated to the Republican members of the committee the other day that just before the outgoing administration retired the secretary of the Shipping Board gave employment to 80 men, with salaries ranging from $2,500 to $3,000 per year, and nothing at all for any of them to do but to draw their pay.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman tell the committee what Congress made the appropriations for the rent of those buildings in New York?

Mr. FORDNEY. I presume that the Congress of the United States—

Mr. GARNER. Who has been in power in Congress for the past two years?

Mr. FORDNEY. Who was in the White House until the 4th of March last?

Mr. GARNER. He could only sign the appropriation bills made by your party for him to sign.

Mr. FORDNEY. I will say to the gentleman that the Republicans, as good Republicans should do, voted for the appropriations asked for by the past administration.

Mr. GARNER. There was no appropriation made for the rent of those buildings except the appropriations which the Republicans voted for.

Mr. FORDNEY. When we came into power we did not know of the extravagance that was going on, and there was no way of knowing it until we came into possession of the records.

Mr. GARNER. You spent two or three hundred thousand dollars in investigating war expenditures. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. FORDNEY. Your Secretary of the Treasury came in here and asked for from $7,000,000,000 to $8,000,000,000 for the expenses of this year. He recommended a reduction of taxes without any reduction of expenditures. [Applause on the Republican side.]

I will tell you another thing that was found when we came into power in March last. In the city of London, England, there were in the office of the Shipping Board 400 clerks and not work enough for 20. But they were on the pay roll. That was startling information. It makes me angry when I think of it; that men would impose upon the people of this country as they did during the war, and when you went to the people of this country to sell Government bonds to get money to run this war you said: "If you do not purchase these bonds you will be considered unpatriotic." Was not the wasteful squandering of public money even more reprehensible than refusing to give?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. And that money was exacted from the people to pay the expense of the war, we hoped, in a legitimate and sane manner. I have pointed out two or three items of inexcusable extravagance.

I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Were these 400 clerks employed in London by the Shipping Board Britishers or American citizens sent over there?

Mr. FORDNEY. I do not know, but I imagine they were Democrats from south of the Mason and Dixon line. [Laughter.]

Let me proceed. The railroads were put under Government control for what seemed to be political advantage only. There were 1,900,000 employees in the service of the railroads. There was a total of 3,700,000 people employed on our railroads and steamship lines taken over by the Government, including the telegraph and telephone lines.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FORDNEY. I will.

Mr. GARNER. The gentleman says the railroads were taken over for political purposes only, in the gentleman's opinion.

Mr. FORDNEY. That is my opinion.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman tell us why the Republicans voted for it?

Mr. FORDNEY. I will tell you why if you will give me an opportunity, brother. The President placed in control of the railroads of this country his son-in-law, whom he was grooming for the Presidency. There were 750 great railway systems in the United States, operated under the efficient management of 750 general managers of those systems. He—President Wilson—placed the power in his son-in-law, Mr. McAdoo, to direct the operation of these roads while seated in a cushioned chair in his office in the city of Washington. Do you believe Mr. McAdoo, without experience in the management of railroads, knew more about the managing of these railway systems than those 750 well-trained men?

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. In just a minute. Again, what did the railroads of this country have to do with the war in France? What service could they have rendered that they would not have willingly rendered upon request of the Government? If they had failed to comply with demands essential to the war, then would have been the time to place them under Government control.

We would have had a much more efficient service under private management than we have had under Government control. Before taking over these railroads private enterprise was carrying freight in the United States for seventy-two one-hundredths of 1 cent per ton per mile, and when President Wilson changed his boarding house on March 4 last under instructions to vacate, which instructions he received on the 2d of November, the people of this country were paying 1½ cents per ton per mile, or an increase of 85 per cent over the rate paid when the railroads were taken under Government control.

Mr. GARNER. And that was the reason the gentleman from Michigan voted for it—because it was for political purposes and because Mr. McAdoo was put in control?

Mr. FORDNEY. I voted to put the President in control because he stated it was necessary for him to have such control in order to win the war.

Mr. CARTER. Then the gentleman voted to put the Government in the hole, and it cost the people of the country all this money.

Mr. FORDNEY. No. Seriously, I voted to give the President such control and I voted for other war powers because he came and stated from that platform that it was necessary in the conduct of the war. We realized that in the emergency harmony and unity were essential, and I gave him my support, although I keenly felt the powers would be used for political purposes.

Mr. CARTER. The gentleman states that he voted that way in order to put the President in a hole, and he has just stated the many millions of dollars that that vote cost the country.

Mr. FORDNEY. Whether that was my purpose or not, that was exactly what happened to him. [Laughter.]

Mr. OLIVER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes; I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. OLIVER. I am wondering if the gentleman has ever read the extended hearings that were held just prior to the taking over of the railroads, in which the presidents of all the leading railroads gave it as their opinion that their roads were in bad condition financially and could not longer be operated, and strongly urged, you may say, that the Government take the roads over?

Mr. FORDNEY. I have read much, but there is much that I have not read because I have not had the time.

Mr. OLIVER. It is interesting to know—

Mr. FORDNEY. Wait a minute. I have read enough to convince me that the statement I just made that the railroads were taken over for political expediency and operated for political purposes is correct, and the country bears me out in that opinion. At least, a majority of 7,000,000 voted that way last fall.

Mr. OLIVER. I invite the gentleman's attention to the hearings and the statements of the railroad presidents immediately before the taking over of the railroads, because it will be very pertinent to some of the legislation for which the gentleman voted.

Mr. FORDNEY. They were running then and carrying freight for less than three-quarters of a cent per ton per mile and now it is costing one and one-third cents per ton per mile.

Mr. OLIVER. And they were saying to the Interstate Commerce Commission at that time that they could not run longer under those conditions.

Mr. FORDNEY. Probably the most glaring examples of the spending of public money for political purposes during the former administration were in connection with partisan investigations and prosecutions by the Department of Justice and the most or less un-American kind of censorship attempted through the medium of Mr. Creel and others. A year ago I diligently endeavored to find out what Mr. Creel had spent but the answer at that time was "Nobody knows." Michigan had an opportunity to witness the partisan operations of the Department of Justice. The election of a Senator from that State was investigated. It is safe to say a million dollars was expended by the Government in gathering evidence and in court proceedings. Due to propaganda and a prejudiced and unfair trial presided over by a seemingly biased judge the verdict was adverse to the Senator. The case was carried to the Supreme Court of the United States, and in the decision of the Supreme Court, exonerating the Senator, Chief Justice White made some very pertinent comment on the unfair conduct of the case in the State courts. On June 9, the Senate of the State of Michigan unanimously adopted the following resolution expressing the confidence of the State in the loyalty, ability, and integrity of its United States Senators:

Senate resolution 13.

Whereas the State of Michigan considers itself fortunate in having as its representatives in the Senate of the United States, CHARLES E. TOWNSEND and TRUMAN H. NEWBERRY, both men in whom the confidence of the State reposes, the Senate of the State of Michigan wishes at this time to express its confidence in the loyalty, ability, and integrity of Senators CHARLES E. TOWNSEND and TRUMAN H. NEWBERRY. Therefore be it Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be spread upon the Journal of the Senate and that the Secretary of the Senate be instructed to forward a copy of these resolutions to Senator CHARLES E. TOWNSEND and Senator THOMAS H. NEWBERRY.

The resolution was adopted.

When the Democratic Party came into power it cost $1,000,000,000 a year to run this Government. When the Democratic Party went out of power it cost us $6,000,000,000 under their management to pay the running expenses of the Government, a difference of 6 to 1. Oh, let me say to you sincerely, in the last eight years I have had all the Democracy that I hope God Almighty will ever visit on me for the rest of my natural life. [Laughter.] Our fooling and tampering with the railroads cost us more than $4,000,000,000 in taxes heaped upon the people of this country. If we had left them alone, we would not have had that $4,000,000,000 tax to pay.

The Democratic administration took over the telephone systems of the country. Mr. Burleson's report shows that that fooling with the telephone systems of the country cost our people $14,000,000. By the way, there is a little telephone company up in the State of Michigan, which I have the honor to call my home State. That was taken over by the Government. What did that little telephone company up in Michigan have to do with the President going over to Paris and strutting around there like a peacock? [Laughter.] We took the ships under Government control, and the management of this great shipping corporation cost us hundreds of millions of dollars. Let me tell you the situation we found there directly after the 4th of March, when we took charge of the books. We found that 10,000,000 tons of Government shipping, owned by this Government, was in the hands of ship operators, with contracts for this Government to pay all the expenses and pay to the managers 5 per cent of the gross receipts of those ships. They are getting 5 per cent of the gross receipts and Uncle Sam is paying the bill, and we are asked now to appropriate $200,000,000 to pay the deficit of the Shipping Board.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Does the gentleman know that Mr. Lasker, chairman of the Shipping Board, stated to the Senate Appropriations Committee in the hearings the other day that that kind of a contract is as old as the shipping business itself?

Mr. FORDNEY. Any man who ever entered into a contract of that kind or signed a cost-plus contract is not big enough to run a 10-cent peanut stand. [Laughter.] All this folly was done by President Wilson for self-aggrandizement at the expense of the taxpayer.

Mr. TREADWAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. TREADWAY. Touching the question of contracts for running the ships, will not the chairman inform us as to what kind of men the contracts were made with?

Mr. FORDNEY. The statement was made that one man with whom a contract had been made was a mule dealer. He purchased mules and shipped them to France, and he made so much money that finally he found an old tub in which he shipped the mules across the seas, and the Government, under Democratic management, sold him certain ships, taking his notes, so I am informed, without any security, and giving him out of the Treasury of the United States a million and a half dollars to pay expenses. The board never kept any track of this loan and does not know whether this mule dealer spent the money in a poker game or on the ships. There is no record of how these dollars were spent.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. I will.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Does not the gentleman know that Mr. Lasker has employed J. B. Smull, at $35,000 a year, a member of the charter committee which made these contracts? [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. FORDNEY. I do not know anything about that, but I tell you if you want to catch a thief, employ one to do the catching. [Laughter on the Republican side.] Gentlemen of the Congress, we have paid 42 per cent in taxes of our cost of the Great War. No other country engaged in the war raised as much money in taxation in proportion to their war expenditures. Great Britain raised more money in proportion to her cost of the war than any foreign country. She raised 28 per cent. Canada raised in taxes 18 per cent of her cost, France raised 11 per cent of her cost, and Italy 9 per cent of her cost, and we have paid 42 per cent and we have not emerged from under the load yet.

Now, deduct the ten billions owed to us by foreign Governments from our public debt and it leaves in round numbers $14,000,000,000 of public debt that we owe. Of that there was $1,000,000,000 owed before the war, and if you deduct that sum, it leaves $13,000,000,000.

Gentlemen, 60 per cent of that $13,000,000,000, or $7,800,000,000, is in short-time obligations, due in the next 22 months. Think of the fiscal management that would put out those short-term obligations, knowing the people would protest against the collection of the money to meet these obligations when they became due. It shouldered on the present administration the task of meeting 60 per cent of a total debt within two years. Oh, what management. I have always said—and I think this will bear me out—that the Democratic Party is not quite big enough to run this Government. We gave them eight years to try it, and they made the poorest piece of work of which I ever have heard. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. BEGG. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BEGG. I understood the gentleman to say that the net debt, subtracting the $10,000,000,000 owed us by the European Governments, was $14,000,000,000.

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. BEGG. I have read, and been under the impression all the time, that the net public debt of the United States was around $20,000,000,000 plus the $10,000,000,000 owed us.

Mr. FORDNEY. On the 30th of June, to be exact, the public debt was $23,977,500,000. That is the total gross debt. Deducting $10,000,000,000, you have, in round numbers, with accumulated interest, a public debt—an excess of liabilities over credits—of a little better than $14,000,000,000. Now, if you subtract the $1,000,000,000 that we owed before the war, that leaves $13,000,000,000 as the portion of the war debt this country must pay. Of that $13,000,000,000, $7,800,000,000 is due in the next 20 months.

Mr. COPLEY. Rotten finance.

Mr. FORDNEY. The gentleman from Illinois says "rotten finance," but that does not quite express it. I was trying to think of a stronger term. [Laughter.] Gentlemen, we have in this bill provided for the reduction of revenue receipts amounting to $790,330,000 in the calendar year of 1923; about $200,000,000 will be the reduction of revenue within the present fiscal year ending the 30th of June next. This change of rates that we provide for takes effect generally on the 1st day of January next, but income and profits tax changes will not be reflected in revenue collections until the calendar year 1923. We have brought in a bill that provides for the repeal on the 1st of January next of the excess-profits tax imposed by existing law on corporations. Under existing law the normal income tax on corporations is 10 per cent; we have increased that tax to 12½ per cent, and eliminated the excess-profits tax. That extra 2½ per cent will yield not less than $135,000,000 additional in the normal tax of corporations.

The following table is a recapitulation of the principal changes in rates contained in the new bill, with estimated gains and losses such changes will occasion:

Estimated changes in annual revenue receipts under proposed new rates for 12-month period.

[Rate not fully in force until calendar year 1923.]

	Loss.	Gain.
Repeal of excess profits tax	$150,000,000
Increase of corporation income tax from 10 per cent to 12½ per cent		$133,750,000
Reduction of surtax rates on individual incomes (maximum 32 per cent)	90,000,000
Increased exemption of heads of family:
To $2,500 for incomes not in excess of $5,000	40,000,000
Additional exemption for dependents increased to $400 from $200	30,000,000
Repeal of tax on transportation (freight, passenger, and express) as of Jan. 1, 1922	262,000,000
Repeal of tax on life insurance	6,300,000
Repeal of tax on beverages (secs. 628 and 630)	60,000,000
License tax on sellers of soft drinks		10,000,000
Tax of 6 cents on cereal beverages		12,000,000
Tax of 5 cents on carbonic acid gas		2,000,000
Tax of 2 cents a gallon on fruit juices of soft drinks
Tax of 3 cents a gallon on still drinks, not mineral and table water		12,000,000
Tax of 10 cents a gallon on fountain sirups
Repeal or reduction of excise taxes:
Section 900—
Paragraph 5 (sporting goods)	2,000,000
Paragraph 9 (candy)	8,000,000
Paragraph 13 (electric fans)	280,000
Paragraph 19 (fur articles)	4,516,000
Section 904—	15,000,000
Change in section 907, perfumery, cosmetics, and proprietary medicine (5 cents tax on manufactures)		$8,000,000
Total	$688,080,000	177,750,000
Net loss	790,330,000

While the above table indicates a net loss in revenue receipts of $790,330,000, only a portion of this loss will be reflected in revenue collections for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922.

Inasmuch as the repeal of the excess-profits tax and reduction of surtax rates on individual incomes do not become effective until the calendar year of 1922, $406,250,000 of the contemplated loss of revenue will not be reflected in revenue collections prior to the calendar year of 1923.

The following is an estimate of the income for the fiscal year 1922 and the calendar year 1922:

We have reduced the surtax on large incomes from 65 to 32 per cent, making a total of 40 per cent as the maximum normal income and surtaxes of individuals. The normal income tax is 8 per cent, which, added to the 32, makes 40 per cent. We did that for the reason we believe the present abnormal surtaxes on large incomes caused the diversion of these large incomes from usual investments into tax-free securities. As proof, let me say that for the year 1918 there were paid in taxes by people whose incomes were $300,000 or more per year, $917,000,000. For the following year, 1919, those taxes dropped down to $587,000,000, or a loss of 36 per cent over the year 1918. Last year there was collected from incomes of $300,000 or more, $347,000,000, or a loss of 62 per cent over the year 1918. In my opinion, that is conclusive evidence that large incomes have been diverted from investment in taxable securities to tax-free securities. There are in round numbers $14,000,000,000 or $15,000,000,000 of outstanding State, municipal, and county bonds free from taxation. I was quite interested in the report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue for the year 1917, wherein he points out the number of people who paid taxes whose incomes were from $1,000 to $2,000, from $2,000 to $3,000, and so on up to $5,000,000 a year and over. All incomes of $5,000,000 or more paid the same surtax, 65 per cent. Then the most interesting part was, how many taxpayers were there who paid taxes on those large sums in the various States?

I was quite interested to know how many there were in the State of Michigan. I found not a single taxpayer in the State of Michigan paid taxes on $4,000,000 of income, and we know of one man whose reputed income is considerably more. What is the reason? That money was either invested in tax-free securities or it was retained in the business.

The desirable things which have been accomplished in the preparation of the new revenue bill are not fully explained by an examination of the rates. It may be recalled that Secretary Houston recommended against tax reductions, his program contemplating a shifting of taxes, and the heading of one paragraph in his report was "Tax revision without tax reduction." More recently opinions have been expressed that tax reductions could not be safely accomplished at this time. The problem which confronted the committee in the preparation of the bill was the seeking out of a means of reducing taxes. The committee felt that the country demanded not a shifting of tax burdens but tax relief; relief from the payment of the amount of taxes being exacted from the people under existing law.

This bill is predicated on a policy of strictest economy. It is predicated on promises by various departmental heads to reduce expenditures. These pledges were made, some of them in the presence of the President. The committee held a number of conferences, and the chief subject was economy. The bill will succeed if the program of economy is strictly enforced, and this must be done. Reducing expenditures makes possible desired tax reductions.

With few exceptions the retail-sales taxes have been repealed. The excise taxes retained for the most part are placed upon the manufacturer. Under the new bill the number of tax returns will be very greatly reduced.

With a view to simplifying tax forms the bill provides for the creation of a tax board on which the taxpayers will be represented. Several changes have been made in the law to clear up administrative difficulties and to simplify the tax forms, a conspicuous one being the amendment regarding Liberty-bond exemptions.

In administering the existing law many loopholes have been discovered by the Treasury Department, and corrective recommendations by the department are incorporated in the bill.

The spirit of cooperation which was evidenced by the President, Cabinet officers, and other Government officials in securing pledges of economy was most gratifying. It has made tax reduction possible. The bill is a good one, and it would seem that those who oppose its passage will have difficulty in explaining their motives.

We have been told by some that the repeal of the so-called excess-profits tax would benefit the big corporations. According to my best information that is not so. That tax operated against the corporation with small invested capital. As evidence I call attention to a tabulation prepared by Treasury officials showing average invested capital of corporations earning various percentages on capital invested. It is strikingly noticeable that the largest corporations did not earn income in excess of the 8 per cent excess-profits credit and hence were exempt from the excess-profits tax.

In the pending bill we have increased the exemption of married people, man or woman, heads of families, from $2,000 to $2,500 on incomes not in excess of $5,000. That exemption affects 60 per cent of all the incomes of all the people required to make income-tax reports. The report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue is that the total income of the people of the country in 1918 was $17,755,000,000, and the incomes between $1,000 and $5,000 represented $10,500,000,000 of that sum. In other words, 60 per cent of all of the incomes are affected by this increase of $500 in the exemption granted the heads of families, and that does not apply to incomes of more than $5,000 a year. In addition to that we have provided that the allowance for each child under 18 years of age, or dependent, there shall be an exemption of $400 instead of $200, as in the existing law. That $200 additional for children, based on the average of five and one-tenth persons for each family in the United States, assuming there will be an average of one and one-half dependent children per family, means an average exemption per family of $300 additional. This together with the $500 new exemption mentioned reduces the Government's income as compared with existing law $70,000,000—$40,000,000 for the $500 exemption and $30,000,000 for the other. We have repealed $90,000,000 of the surtaxes and have cut out $70,000,000 from the lower incomes. That is the sum and substance in the change in the income tax law.

There were 317,000 corporations reporting in 1918, and 119,000 of those paid no taxes. Those that did pay paid an average of from 20 to 33½ per cent of their incomes in taxes. We propose now to impose a flat 12½ per cent tax on the earnings of all corporations in excess of the $2,000 exemption. It is fair and equitable.

I wanted those taxes to take effect last January, but we have decided by a majority of the Republicans of this House to make it January 1 next, and I am with the majority of my party at all times. [Applause.] While I would love to have the votes of the gentlemen on the Democratic side of the House, so help me John Rogers, I do not want you to help make up this bill, because you will spoil it if you have a finger in the pie. [Laughter.]

We have removed the transportation tax on freight and passengers. That tax was about evenly divided. The 3 per cent tax on freight did not yield quite as much revenue as the 8 per cent on passenger fares and Pullman-car tickets. The two together were estimated to yield this fiscal year $262,500,000. The bill provides that these taxes shall all be repealed January 1 next. These taxes on transportation are reflected in commodity costs in general, and in particular they are reflected in the cost of building material. The repeal of this added charge to transportation is a most desirable one. I have referred to the effect of Democratic control on the cost of carrying freight. Rates were nearly doubled and the railroads are in bad shape. Money now due the railroads is an inheritance from the Democratic Party, which must be taken care of by this administration, and it is now here at our doorstep.

There are $545,000,000 of obligations owing to the railroads of this country because of our fooling with them and attempting to run them better than the people who owned them could run them, and this debt is all due this year and early next year. There are $100,000,000 of war-savings certificates due this year which must be extended into long-time bonds, or should be, at least.

The Shipping Board, the greatest mistake of all, asked for this year to pay a deficit, $200,000,000.

We find that the outgoing administration recommended that there be purchased and kept on hand 22,000,000 shells for the Army and Navy. There were only 6,000,000 used by us in the late war; yet they wanted 22,000,000 shells for some war to come. Think of the folly of exacting from the people money to pay for 22,000,000 shells to be kept on hand, when we used only 6,000,000 in the late war!

It has been found that we have $97,000,000 worth of nitrate on hand. What for? For the manufacture of explosives for some future war. Why not sell it at a reasonable price? Nitrate is used in the manufacture of fertilizer for the farmers, especially for the South. Why keep $97,000,000 worth of that stuff on hand? Why not dispose of it at a fair price and use the money to discharge some of these debts now due? One other thing I must call the attention of the gentleman from Texas to, and that is this: He is not responsible for it, and neither am I, but somebody is or some set of people. After the war was over, after the armistice was signed, the past administration sent 40,000 automobiles and trucks to France. They purchased after the armistice 70,000 automobiles and trucks and sent 40,000 over the sea and sold them, so I am informed, for about 24 per cent of their cost. Can you think of any more criminal expenditure of the people's money than that?

Mr. FIELDS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. Let me continue a bit more and I will, if the gentleman pleases. I want to call attention to a few things. You know the old style of branding a Government horse was to heat an iron with the letters "U. S." on it and brand the horse's shoulder or the horse's hip so the hair would not grow there any more. Humanely they decided that they would change that cruel way of branding the horse and would brand him on the hoof, and they ordered some branding irons made of a combination of steel and copper for which they paid $14 a piece. They had 148,000 horses, 46,000 in France remember. When the armistice was signed they had 195,000 branding irons for which they paid $2,730,000 and had not branded a horse. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.] They had an order in for more harness, and they had five sets of harness on hand for every horse the Government owned, and they had four sets of currycombs, brushes, and blankets for every horse the Government owned. Now, the men in the Cavalry and the Ordnance Corps and many others rode horses. Mind you, they had 148,000 horses and 975,000 saddles on hand and an order in for more. [Laughter.] That is correct. They had a million and a half halters and an order in for 500,000 more, all for 148,000 horses. They had 4,700,000 men under arms in the Army, the Navy, and Marine Corps and they had 36,000,000 sets of spurs on hand [laughter] or about seven sets of spurs for every man, woman, and child in the Army. [Laughter.] Taxpayers of the country, there is where some of your money went, and we considered the man who evaded the purchasing of bonds as unpatriotic. Now, my friends, the Republican Party is obliged to go to the people of the country and raise money to meet the folly of the outgoing administration and its extravagant use of money.

The President went over to France to arrange a treaty of peace.

Mr. COPLEY. Tell about the number of men employed by the railroads.

Mr. FORDNEY. They doubled up the employees on the railroads and carried less freight. We had twice as many employed on the railroads carrying two-thirds of the freight that was handled by the roads before the Government took hold and had great dissatisfaction. While the railroads were under Federal control a train on time was out of the question. I had a car-load of goods shipped to this city from the city of Detroit, and it took 68 days for the car to get from Detroit here under Government control. Oh, wonderful efficiency, wonderful efficiency! Why, these things are enough to rile any man who has the interest of the public at heart, who must pay the bills. Here is a large portion of these debts now unpaid, and we are called upon to provide the money to meet them. This bill is to provide the money, and our Democratic friends will vote against it. I complain about these matters because the Democratic Party contracted these debts and now criticize Republicans for paying them.

Mr. WYANT. What about the expense of the President's trip to Paris on the peace commission?

Mr. FORDNEY. The President sent in his statement to the House saying that it cost $1,600,000 for him to go to Paris—two trips, two honeymoons. [Laughter.] He took with him 1,385 people, most of them on the pay rolls of the Army and Navy, of which he did not render any account. He took 53 cooks and waiters from one hotel in New York, the Biltmore, and he took the head chefs, I am told, from the Willard and Raleigh Hotels here and went over to Europe and said to the French people who owned the best hotel in Paris: "Get out; we are going to run it in our way—three crews, 8-hour shifts," and they did run it that way. The request came, so I am informed, and the bills were paid for $600,000 damages done to the hotel. Now, what did he do over there. Remember, he took 1,385 people with him. Mr. Lansing, then Secretary of State, before an investigating committee of the Senate, was asked: "What do you know about the Shantung feature of the League of Nations?" "I do not know anything about it." "Why do you not know?" "Were not you one of the men selected by the President to go over and arrange that treaty?" "Yes; but I was not consulted." "Who was?" "Nobody but Col. House." One thousand three hundred and eighty-five people. We heard every day, didn't we, what was being done there? Did I say every day? No; but once in a long time a cable would come that Wilson was in good health, doing well. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

He was evidently under the influence of Lloyd George and Clemenceau. He wanted a League of Nations. Oh, I am talking about the bill, because now comes pay day, the fiddler wants his pay now. He wanted a League of Nations, and you take it from me, as my candid opinion, that Clemenceau and Lloyd George and Orlando said to him, "If you will get the people of the United States to accept the League of Nations as we write it, we will make you President of the league, and you will be the biggest fellow on earth, and he tried it but failed. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

But he slipped a cog. Somebody over here threw a monkey wrench into the machinery.

Gentlemen, I have occupied too much time. I have talked a little about the bill and a whole lot about the Democratic Party. But the things I have related, gentlemen, that the people of this country are now called upon to dig down deep into their pockets to pay for, are not to be overlooked or forgotten. Had we gone into this war when we should have gone, and taken part when the honor of this Nation demanded it, before the election of 1916, our expenditures would have been less and there would have been fewer graves filled in a foreign land by our beloved boys. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Oh, no; they wanted the slogan, "He kept us out of war." I saw a cartoon once that well fitted the slogan, "He kept us out of war." It depicted "Teddy" and Gen. Wood shaking hands, and "Teddy" as saying, "General, there is no question but that he kept us out of war." [Laughter.]

Gentlemen, I am glad that the war is over, and I hope we may never have another. The South and North, the East and the West were equally patriotic and sent their sons. Thank God, my beloved sons came out all right, but nothing on this earth ever pained me so as when I bid my young son good-by and bade him "Go, my son, and fight for your country." My heart goes out to the mother and the father, to the beloved wife and little ones, whose dear one fills a foreign grave. And it is the duty of the people of the United States, who enjoy the best Government under God's sun and have the best country and the greatest freedom of any people, not only to pay the cost of this war in dollars and cents but to do the right thing by our beloved boys who fought in it. [Applause.] And we will do it, my friends.

Gentlemen of the committee, I have occupied more time than I wanted to. There are many gentlemen who wish to speak upon this bill. I commend the measure that the Ways and Means Committee has presented for your consideration. We made an honest effort, my friends, seriously considering every inch of the way, to adjust the rates of this bill in the interest of the taxpayers and the public at large. We believe we have given you as equitable a measure as it was possible to draft. Gentlemen, I thank you. [Applause on the Republican side, the Members rising.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] is recognized. [Applause on the Democratic side, the Members rising.]

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I am sure that each member of the committee has enjoyed the comic performance given us by our friend from Michigan, but I would not say we had been enlightened by it. In fact, the thing he tried not to talk about was the bill we are about to consider. The only thing that I remember about it are the three stories which he told us several weeks ago in the last speech he made on the tariff. The long string of figures which he talked about in referring to war expenditures calls to my mind an incident which happened down in Texas in the nineties, when the Populists were very strong and the Democrats were having some considerable contest with them at the polls. Our friend "Cyclone" Davis, Member of Congress at large from Texas a few years ago, but then a prominent leader of the Populist Party, was making a speech over in Tom CONNALLY'S district, in McLennan County, and our Democratic organization sent out a man by the name of Russell Kingsbury to meet "Cyclone" and demolish him. Our side got a division of the time, and of course "Cyclone" insisted that he should open and close. In his opening address he gave out a row of statistics which were as bewildering as Einstein's theory of relativity. He had the entire audience spellbound by the thousands of millions and hundreds of billions of dollars which he talked about. When Kingsbury's time came, not to be outdone, he proceeded to give some few statistics himself. I have heard that there never was such a mass of statistics reeled off in any one speech ever delivered in Texas, before or since, as Kingsbury reeled off on that occasion. He began by talking in millions and billions and from that he "riz" until presently he was talking in figures which were so big that they were absolutely beyond comprehension, when "Cyclone" interrupted to say, "My God, man, where did you get your figures?" Kingsbury quickly replied, "I made them, just like you did." [Laughter.]

When the gentleman from Michigan was reeling off his big line of figures about expenditures during the war and at the peace conference, I knew that, as to some of them, he was playing the Kingsbury act and was making them as he went. Of course, he knew it, too.

I want to say that I think the House has not been treated fairly by the gentleman from Michigan, because I believe the most partial friend of his on the Republican side will agree that as the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee it was his duty to at least give some information concerning the bill which we are now about to consider. Out of the hour which he used in speaking I challenge you to find in his remarks, if he will permit them to appear in the RECORD, 10 minutes devoted to the consideration of this bill. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Now, is that treating you fairly? This bill carries some very important and far-reaching provisions, and we would naturally expect the chairman of the great Ways and Means Committee to discuss them at some length, but did he do it? Oh, no. But he did get over to the tariff question, because the gentleman from Michigan can not make a speech, it is impossible for him to talk about anything on the face of the earth, without ringing in his position on the tariff. Statistics, tariff, lumber, and sugar, and my friend is through. [Laughter.] If you had gotten him started on lumber or sugar, he would not have devoted even the 10 minutes to the consideration of the bill which he, as the chairman, has submitted to this House. I was amused at the gentleman's answer, although somewhat grieved, because I am fond of the gentleman from Michigan, as to why he voted for the bill which authorized the President to take over the railroads. But, gentlemen, when he told this House that he voted to take over the railroads in order to put the President of the United States in the hole, he did not express the sentiments of the patriotic membership of the Republican Party in the House. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I deny—

Mr. FORDNEY. Will the gentleman yield? I will admit I was joking when I made the remark.

Mr. GARNER. Yes; I think the gentleman from Michigan had better admit that he intended his whole speech to be taken as a joke. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

This Nation exhibited during the war the finest demonstration of patriotism, regardless of party, ever exhibited by any nation, and I deny that any Republican, Democrat, or Socialist, or whatever he may be, voted for these measures in time of war other than from a patriotic and duty-loving motive. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I voted for many of these measures myself, and I voted for measures during the war that I would not support in time of peace.

Some of these measures, I thought, were unnecessary even in time of war. But actuated by the same motive that prompted the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] and his colleagues when they voted for these measures—although they now criticize them and try to put the responsibility on some one else—I voted for them because I believed that in a united America lay the best hope for an early and successful termination of the war. Events amply justified that belief. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The gentleman from Michigan refers to the cost to the Government on account of taking over the railroads. I have no special defense of the Railroad Administration either under Director General McAdoo or Director General Hines or under the present Director General, Mr. Davis. That is not my business, and it is not a part of this legislation. But I do want to call the attention of you Republicans to the strategy that is being played on you to-day, or will be played with you before you have a chance to take a recess. The gentleman from Michigan says that the railroads have already cost us $4,000,000,000. He is in error in that. They have cost us only $2,600,000,000 to date, a large part of which has been loaned to the railroads. But that is about as close as he ever comes in any figures that he gives you—just an error of $1,400,000,000. [Laughter on the Democratic side.] But there has been appropriated out of the Treasury of the United States up to this time by a Republican as well as a Democratic Congress for the benefit of the railroads $2,600,000,000.

Now, what are you going to be called on to do? They dare not let you go home and meet your constituencies and let them express themselves on the proposition of paying the railroads $500,000,000 when they owe us more than that amount, which we should use as an offset, because you can not put that bill through. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Wise men, knowing that you respect the people in your districts—and if you do not respect them, you respect your own political scalps—they dare not permit you to go home and undertake to find out the sentiment existing in your districts about this proposed Winslow bill which they propose to force through in the early part of next week. They do not expect that bill to become a law before the recess, because they know it is impossible to put it through the Senate in such a short time. But they also know that this body is more responsive and responsible than the Senate to the public weal. They know that you must go home next year and seek a new commission, while two-thirds of the Senators retain office. Therefore they must clinch you now before permitting you to go home and meet your constituents. But, gentlemen, you will have to explain your votes next week on the railroad bill, and you are going to have the most uneasy task that you ever undertook in your lives. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Chairman, I probably ought to take a moment to give just a little history of this bill. My friend from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] said he did not want the Democrats to assist in making it up. I have no great complaint to make about that. But, gentlemen, I will tell you what I do have a complaint to make about, and I think that you honest Republicans—and there are many of you fair-minded men, patriotic men—I will tell you what I do complain about, and you ought to complain about it. You ought to complain about being called upon to vote upon this measure without sufficient information touching its provisions. You have not got it and you will not get it. Only this morning were printed the hearings of the Secretary of the Treasury given on the first and fourth days of this month. There is no excuse for the delay, except a desire to keep from you the information that you are entitled to before you vote for this measure. That much of criticism can be made and ought to be made against the Republican membership of the Ways and Means Committee, as well as the officials of the Treasury Department.

Mr. Chairman, the history of taxation in this country is interesting, but I think we all will agree that within the last 50 years the principal interest in taxation has centered around taxation through the customhouse. Prior to the war we never heard much of large interests in this country complaining of the expenses of the Government; we never heard much of large associations, of commercial clubs, or of other wealthy people meeting and resolving themselves into committees and national organizations in order to reduce or to influence taxation other than through the customhouse. Our taxes have been collected, as you will recall, for the past 50 years by excise taxes on tobacco and liquor and through the customhouse, with some other incidental taxes of minor importance. Now the entire system is changed. Immense fortunes have been made in this country under the protective tariff system. They are concentrated largely in the hands of a limited number of men. Those men who have accumulated these great fortunes and who now own them care nothing about the customhouse any more, or at least the larger portion of them care nothing about what you do at the customhouse, but they are intensely interested in these direct taxes and they are going to make a fight not only now but in future years to shift as much as possible of these taxes from their own incomes and estates to the masses of the people of the United States.

Heretofore their entire efforts have been along the line of trying to enrich the manufacturing and other industries in which they were interested by means of a high protective tariff, so that they could accumulate these fortunes. Having accumulated them, now when we are confronted with the necessity of raising $4,000,000,000 a year to run the Government, their efforts will be directed at shifting the taxes from their own backs to the backs of the masses of the people of the United States. How are we going to divide? Here is an aisle. The division is coming between your party and mine. My party is going to say—I believe and I hope it will say—that we propose in the system of taxation which we will put upon the statute books, if you will commission us to power in times of peace, that it shall be levied upon those best able to pay. Your proposition is going to be that you will run the Government as economically as possible, but that whatever taxes are levied must not conflict with the interest of big business in this country. That is about what you will say. That means, after all, that you are going to let the masses to get your taxes rather than the classes such as I have mentioned.

Your policy is clearly demonstrated in this bill. The strongest argument made before the Committee on Ways and Means by any Member or by any witness that appeared before it, and the best authorities cited on any one subject that we inquired about, were made by Mr. RAMSEYER, of Iowa, who made the argument on the inheritance tax, and I invite you to read that argument, which is printed in our hearings. It will be well worth your while. Also, I invite you to read his speech appearing in the RECORD this morning. If you will take the declaration which he cites there by Mr. Roosevelt and Mr. Carnegie and the philosophy given by them, there is not a man in this House but who should insist that the inheritance tax be doubled or more than doubled in this bill instead of levying such taxes as that which is placed upon the medicine of the poor man in this country. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Oh, you shift the taxes. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] has shifted. He is a shifter. He is one of the best shifters we have. He has shifted the taxes. And whom did he shift them from? He shifted them from these gentlemen who have the big incomes, these gentlemen who talk in terms of thousands and millions, to the candy that the little boys eat on the street, the candy that he buys with one penny.

You shifted the taxes, Mr. FORDNEY, from those who had incomes fabulous in their amount to the crossroads country store which sells $100 worth of soda water in a year. You brought in a scheme which would seek to compel him to pay $10 per year vendor's tax for the privilege of selling soda water to the few customers who drop into his store. Ah, gentlemen, you have repealed some of these taxes, and, so far, so good, but every one of you is going to have to answer to your constituents for some other things you have done. You are going to have to tell your constituents why it was that you reduced the surtaxes from 65 per cent to 32 per cent on incomes of $66,000 upward when you left the normal taxes on your constituents at the old rates and continued their payment of these rates as though the war had never ended. There are taxpayers in this room. Take the Fordney bill. I challenge you to take the Fordney bill and under it make your tax return and figure out the taxes you will have to pay this year and compare them with what you have been paying, and, by the gods, there is not a cent of difference in it. You have not been relieved. Well, if you have not been relieved how have your constituents been relieved? What relief do you get under this bill? You get this much relief for which I am willing to give you credit. You have repealed the transportation tax. You deserve credit for that. You were forced to do it by your own patriotic membership, because the Secretary of the Treasury had no idea of repealing it, but he was forced to take it up piecemeal and you swallowed it all at once, and I congratulate you for it. [Applause.] But I do want to tell you what you have done, and some of you Republicans ought to correct it, because there is no chance of our doing it. You do not intend to give us an opportunity to offer amendments. Gentlemen, that is a procedure in the House of Representatives that is indefensible.

Mr. FORDNEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARNER. I will.

Mr. FORDNEY. The Secretary of the Treasury recommended the repeal of the transportation tax.

Mr. GARNER. Oh, yes; I know he did, after he was forced to do something of that kind. He never intended to do it at all. How any party can select a man like Mr. Mellon and put him in the Treasury Department as their financial and fiscal agent and then have the people of the United States expect him to recommend relief from a tax as long as they are paying the major portion of it is something I can not understand. [Applause.] I will tell you what you are going to do. I will call the attention of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] to it. I see him rise in his place. Why did you relieve the express company of $17,000,000 worth of taxes and not relieve the parcel post from the same sort of tax? Somebody has got to explain that. Here is what happened, gentlemen. When we made up the tax law in 1918—I remember it as if it were yesterday—we put a tax on express and freight and we stopped there. What happened?

Mr. FORDNEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARNER. Just a moment until I get through making this statement. What happened?

Mr. FORDNEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARNER. I said in just a minute. If the gentleman can ease his pain for a moment, then I will yield to him, for I know he is hurting. [Laughter.] In 1918 when we made up the revenue bill to get all the money we could in the Treasury to pay the heavy expenses of the war—and that is what we did—we put a tax on freight and express packages. The express people came in and said, "Our rates have been made about the same as the rates on parcel-post packages, and if you put this 5 per cent turnover tax on us—we put out a million packages a day, and it will put us out of business if you let the parcel post go free." Well, we investigated it. We asked for information from the Post Office Department, and we ascertained that the contention of the express people was correct.

We had no desire to put anybody out of business, so we placed comparatively the same amount of tax on the parcel post as on express, and the tax has been collected on both since then. Now, what does a Republican Ways and Means Committee do, probably without any information? They do not seek any information except the kind they want. They repeal the express tax and let it remain on the parcel post. How can the parcel post continue and hope to do any business at all if you are going to relieve the express company of $17,000,000 annually and let the tax remain on parcel post?

Mr. FORDNEY. Will the gentleman yield now?

Mr. GARNER. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. FORDNEY. The one good reason why we did not change the parcel post is that Postmaster General Burleson showed that there was a loss of $30,000,000 a year in the parcel post now with present rates.

Mr. GARNER. As a matter of fact, Postmaster General Burleson contended up to the very hour that he left office that there was a profit in parcel-post business. It is Mr. Will H. Hays, present Postmaster General, who wants to reduce the postage on the big publishers of the country, who is contending that there is a loss in parcel-post business. If you have got a loss of $30,000,000 a year you ought not to handicap the business by keeping $17,000,000 taxes on the parcel post. [Laughter.]

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. According to Democratic figures the more we get into the Treasury the more we will lose.

Mr. GARNER. I merely call that to your attention. Let me say that it is impossible for me, or any other man outside of the experts of the Treasury Department, to tell you the effect of many of the administrative provisions in this bill. So you will have to pardon me, as I imagine you will have to pardon every other member of the Ways and Means Committee, including the Republican membership, which got their information, without the Democrats being present, from making any explanation of these administrative provisions. They had many hearings and had all the experts and they wrote the bill. You do not know what the effect will be, and I challenge anyone to rise in his place and tell me the effect of the administrative provisions in this bill. The administrative features of the bill are as important as the levy of the tax. So, for the reasons I have stated, I do not know what these provisions mean and neither do you. The bill is rushed in here on us without adequate time to study it, but I can assure you from all the circumstances usually attending recommendations from the Treasury Department that these administrative features have been drawn in the interest of those who pay the high taxes and against those who pay the low taxes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARNER. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. If the gentleman does not know anything about it, why does he make that assertion?

Mr. GARNER. I draw the deduction from the fact that the Treasury Department, whenever they recommend a tax, have recommended that it be paid by the masses of the people and always in favor of the classes that I have mentioned. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. A short time ago we understood the gentleman to say that all these gentlemen who paid a surtax above a certain point were entirely exempt from taxation.

Mr. GARNER. I will say that, although the rule cuts off every opportunity on this side and that side of intelligent, patriotic men to perfect this measure and express their views, you will get a chance to say whether or not you are willing to go back to your people and say I am going to remit the taxes of the rich by repealing these high surtaxes while we continue the war tax upon the business interests of the country. You are going on record. I never lived in the city but always in the country, but in any district that has as much as two counties in it you give me the problem involved in this legislation, you give me the taxes you failed to repeal which are carried in the 1918 war revenue act, let me go to them and say, here is the law at present and here is what they repeal—the excess-profits taxes and the high surtaxes—and I will see what that audience will say about relieving the rich of their high surtaxes and the repeal of the excess-profits taxes and leaving these other taxes on the statute book. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARNER. I will.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Does the gentleman mean to say that the Democratic Party is not in favor of the repeal of the excess-profits tax? President Wilson, Senator GLASS, Secretary Houston all recommended that that thing be done and gave as a reason that we would get more taxes out of it than we did before.

Mr. GARNER. Oh, gentlemen, this is the first time I ever heard of the Republicans in a report calling on the Democrats as witnesses. You told us you repudiated them in 1920. We have been told in this Chamber hundreds of times since this Congress met that we had been repudiated at the polls in November, and yet you want to invoke our judgment to justify your failures. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. FORDNEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARNER. I will yield.

Mr. FORDNEY. The amount of income effected by the reductions is 60 per cent of the total income, while those that have been relieved by the reduction of surtaxes are only 8 per cent of the total income.

Mr. GARNER. Let me say to the gentleman from Michigan that this side of the House will join you in every provision of your bill in the interest of the people; we will join you in making your exemption $2,500 in place of $2,000; we will join you in making the exemption $4,000 instead of $2,000; but we will not join you in reducing the surtaxes from a maximum of 65 per cent to a maximum of 32 per cent. That is the issue. You are trying to justify the relieving of the rich from paying their just proportion of the taxes according to their ability to pay, because, forsooth, you permit the married man to have $500 additional exemption.

Mr. FORDNEY. That proposition makes it impossible for you to join with us at all.

Mr. GARNER. It will be impossible because you and your colleagues have for your purpose the framing of a bill which I can not support, and unless your colleagues of the rank and file hold you back, as they did at the caucus Monday afternoon, you will have a bill which they will not support. I say that they have made a better bill in the Republican conference than you reported to it. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I congratulate them and join with them whenever they do the right thing, but if you had your way you would shift most of these surtaxes and have a consumption or sales tax instead.

And you know I know it.

Mr. FORDNEY. How do you know?

Mr. GARNER. Because I have heard you say you favored a sales tax.

Mr. FORDNEY. I am for the bill. Read it and you will find my sentiments.

Mr. GARNER. Oh, yes; the gentleman is for the bill, because he has to be for the bill. [Applause and laughter on the Democratic side.]

Mr. FORDNEY. And the gentleman does not have to, because he is on the opposite side.

Mr. GARNER. How I blushed for the gentleman when he was making his remarks a few minutes ago, when I thought he was playing the demagogue. You will remember what a pitiful story he told last winter. I remember that it brought tears to the eyes of some. The gentleman, big-hearted as he is, arose and tears rolled down his cheeks when he spoke of the boys who had been across the water, when he spoke of those who had been buried in France and those who had come back wounded and helpless for life. I know I thought then that this Government should be as generous as it is possible for any Government to be with those boys who came back here maimed and unfit for the ordinary walks of life. Then I blushed, I say, for him when I heard him to-day tell you how he is going to do this, that, and the other, when I remembered that it is not 30 days since the President, his President, whom he praises and whom I refrain from criticizing as he does ex-President Wilson, came to the Senate and by his edict said a bill for the relief of the boys should not be passed at this time, and how the bill went back to the committee. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARNER. Yes.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Did not the gentleman's side of the House go on record within the last six months against that sort of legislation?

Mr. GARNER. It did not; I deny that.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Did not a large majority of the Members on the gentleman's side of the House vote against the bill?

Mr. GARNER. Oh, the gentleman is beginning now to talk about partisanship. This has never been made a party matter. I remember staying here until 6 o'clock in the morning because I was not in favor of the provisions of that particular bill. I take my responsibility; I make no professions except what are truly in my heart. I stayed here when Scott Ferris, and HARRISON, of Mississippi, and other Democrats were trying to pass that bill, and at last I threw the Irish proposition to the gentleman from Kansas and killed the bill. I say we ought to serve these men who came back from France—

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. And yet during the last Congress the gentleman refused to do it.

Mr. GARNER. Who was in control of the last Congress?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. We passed the bill through the House in spite of the Democrats.

Mr. GARNER. Do you know what these gentlemen are going to do? These Republicans are going back home, and they are going to make a speech, just as Mr. FORDNEY did to-day, where there is no one to answer them and where they can use any kind of figures which fertile imagination can create, and they are going to say that these 132 Democrats—"plague on 'em"—would not let us do this particular thing. [Laughter.] Think of it—300 to 132. Privately, of course, they will say to some of their constituents, "Oh, you know those Democrats are so smart, they are such good parliamentarians, that we could not even afford to let them get any information, because they were liable to inform the rank and file of the Republicans and spoil our game." But they got enough information the other night to spoil a great deal of the game which the Republican leaders had cut and dried. I can fairly hear the telegraph wires running back to New York, Pittsburgh, and Detroit, carrying the news that the Republican conference had sufficient courage to take away from these men who contributed to their campaign fund the repeal of the excess-profits tax for 1921.

How they must have writhed and said, "Great God, where is the party going to?" [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.] How could you defend, is there a man living who can defend, the proposition of repealing the excess-profits taxes for this calendar year 1921? Nearly 8 months of the year are gone and probably 10 of them will be gone before this bill finally becomes a law, and yet the Republican members of the Ways and Means Committee reported to your conference a bill which would have repealed the excess-profits tax as of January 1, 1921. To do this, after these corporations who will pay the tax have already made the profits, would have been so manifestly unjust that I imagine that some intelligent Republican, some one who has some lingering regard for the masses of the people, called attention to it in your conference, and because there is still left a portion of your membership who believes in some semblance of justice, you defeated the proposition to repeal the taxes as of January 1, 1921, and repealed them as of January 1, 1922. The same proposition holds with reference to the reduction of the surtaxes.

Gentlemen, your administration knows exactly what the sentiment of the people is, and when your committee fixed up this dose for you, it was necessary to give out a statement at the White House. Probably I should not divert from what I am saying, but I shall just for a moment to enter my protest against the gentleman from Michigan continuing to heap abuse upon a man who is now out of office, and who is broken in health from his long and arduous service as President of the United States during one of the most trying periods in the history of the world. It seems to me that Republicans should now forebear from their bitter criticism of Mr. Wilson since he is out of public office and is living the life of a private citizen with the quiet dignity which befits the great man that he is. I can not understand the type of mind which persists in pursuing Mr. Wilson even into the walks of private life. Gentlemen you should stop it. Your words do you no credit. [Applause on the Democratic side.] To resume, your administration gave out a statement as soon as there had been a conference of Republicans at the White House. I want to read now an extract from what the administration said. This came from the White House and was written by the President or for him, because no statement goes from the White House unless it is written by him or at least under his supervision. That statement said:

There has been no effort to relieve the rich—

[Laughter on the Democratic side.]

Why did the President use that expression? He evidently believed that the country did not want him to relieve the rich. It must be that he was expressing either his own sentiment or what he thought was the sentiment of the country. No effort to relieve the rich! Can you make that statement before your constituents if you have intelligent men before you? Is there a single man of you who can make that statement to your constituency if a man should arise in his place in the audience and charge you with having cut down the surtaxes on the man with a $300,000 income to a point where they do not have to pay any greater rate than the men with $65,000? You are going to be called upon to explain, and I tell you that you are going to be put on record. Do not fool yourselves to the point of thinking you can get away with this bill without being put on record on that one point. The statement continued:

There has been no effort to relieve the rich of their share of the burden, but rather to insure that no class will be left an avenue of escape from these taxes.

A casual analysis of the propaganda shows what may be described as the "rich man's taxes" will produce about $1,800,000,000, while the balance will be distributed over the entire community, rich and poor.

Why, I am in favor of that; I am in favor of getting $1,800,000,000 out of two sources of taxes. Yes; I would do more than that. I would get $2,000,000,000 out of two sources of taxes. You can get it and you will not hurt anybody if you have the nerve and courage to do it, and then you can repeal all these other war taxes enacted in 1918, and which by this bill you continue in force. You can take the inheritance tax, the personal-income tax, and corporation tax and get $2,000,000,000. Why do you not do it and relieve the people and business of the country of the restrictive and unnecessary taxes you are levying throughout the country? [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I believe there is a majority of you over there if you had your opportunities, if you would be bold enough to cut off the shackles you put on yourselves this morning by voting this rule, I know there is a majority counting our solid line-up of Democrats, that would agree to get $2,000,000,000 out of these two taxes and repeal these other war taxes that are unnecessary, restrictive, and injurious to business. But instead of that you Republicans will allow yourselves to be tied and gagged by a tyrannical special rule which is designed to shut off general amendments. You do not add one dollar to the inheritance tax in this bill. Oh, gentlemen, I do not know whether you agree with me or not. I do not know whether all my Democratic friends agree with me, though I feel sure most of them do, but I will say I would put the inheritance tax above all other taxes as a just tax. [Applause on the Democratic side.] It stands above all, in my conception, as a just tax. Here is a man who dies worth $50,000,000. He has accumulated that money under the liberal and generous laws of a good Government that has enabled him to accumulate it in a lifetime and has protected him in the enjoyment of his property. He dies. He has two sons and they have $25,000,000 laid in their laps by the rule of inheritance, not a dollar of which they earned, and tell me that these boys ought not to have patriotism enough to say, "Yes; this great Government gives us this wealth, an inheritance of $25,000,000, protects us in its enjoyment; therefore I will lay in your laps to support this good Government $10,000,000 of the $25,000,000, because $15,000,000 is more than I can use." [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Gentlemen, we could have as a permanent peace policy taxation—I am going to tell you what I would do; I perhaps ought not to; I do not speak for anyone except myself, but I believe I voice the sentiment of a great many Democrats—as a permanent peace policy of taxation in this country I would have five sources of revenue: Inheritance, personal and corporation incomes taxes, customhouse receipts, tobacco taxes, post-office receipts, and miscellaneous receipts, which were had under laws prior to the war, such as Panama Canal tolls, receipts of the Public Land Office, and so forth. Now, if you can get money to run the Government out of those taxes, I want some Republican to rise in his place and tell me what objection you have. If you can get the money to run the Government with those taxes, I ask you why do you not repeal the other taxes in the war revenue act of 1918? If I had my way, the excess-profits tax would be the last one of the war taxes I would repeal. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Why do you repeal that when you have got a great many other war taxes to repeal? Why repeal that, Mr. TILSON, and impose a new vendor's tax on the crossroads store who sells a bottle of soda water—

Mr. TILSON. If I can have my way that will come off.

Mr. GARNER. I imagine it. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I do not doubt it.

Mr. COCKRAN. Why did not the gentleman vote down the rule?

Mr. GARNER. If the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] had his way, excess profits would come off. If the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON] had his way, the soda-water tax would come off. So there you are, but you have locked your hands; you have by your own vote for a drastic rule this very day deprived yourself of the opportunity of freely making amendments to this bill. Gentlemen, that soda-water tax is very illustrative of the Republican policy. Here is a crossroads fellow out here who sells $100 worth of soda water in a year. You charge him $10—10 per cent on his sales. Here is a man in the city who sells $100,000 worth of soda water in a year and you charge him $10. That is Republican taxation. [Applause on the Democratic side.] The Democratic policy would be, if any taxation of that kind at all were levied, to levy the tax in proportion to the amount of soda water sold. It is unnecessary to levy this $10 vendor's tax on soda-water dealers. All of these war taxes of 1918 can be repealed—can be repealed to-day if you will substitute the taxes which I have outlined as a peace-time program, and continue the excess-profits tax for this year under present rates with only the one bracket for next year, and you will have enough money to run the Government—

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. If the gentleman will permit, would not the gentleman segregate his figures a little to show how this beautiful prospect the gentleman speaks about will work out? As far as the taxes he is talking about are concerned, I do not think he need worry about it.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, the Treasury Department has already said in its statement that the taxes I have mentioned are getting $1,800,000,000 from wealth.

How did many of our large owners of wealth get their fortunes except by inheritance? Answer that. Where are you getting the $1,800,000,000 which you say this bill will raise from wealth?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. We are getting it from income tax and what we have taken from excess profits.

Mr. GARNER. Yes; but you have taken off a large amount of the surtaxes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Does not the gentleman realize that after all corporations are simply made up of individuals? What goes to the individual is again taken by another tax. Whatever you take out of the corporation reduces those taxes.

Mr. GARNER. I dislike to hear the gentleman from Iowa indicting the integrity and judgment of the President of the United States, but if he desires to do so he can put it in the RECORD in that way.

Mr. Chairman, I ought to talk, probably, about the administrative details of this bill more than I have, but, as I explained to you in the beginning, the bill is rushed in here without time to study its technical provisions, and it is impossible for me to go into the merits or demerits of this bill except as they change certain taxes. I believe I have talked about nearly every one of the tax provisions except those which eliminate certain excise taxes levied by the war revenue act of 1918. You did cut down some of them. The difference is, we Democrats would rid the country of all of them and raise the money from the sources I have mentioned. You Republicans ought to have adopted a different method in one other particular matter that I think is quite important, and I want to call the attention of the House to it and I am through.

It is a dangerous thing, gentlemen, in this Government to place power in one man's hands to deal with large sums of money unrestrictedly, especially when that power might be used by a political party for their own advantage to the detriment of the whole people of the Nation.

Now, there is due to the Federal Government, according to the statement of the Treasury officials, $1,500,000,000 of back taxes. And, by the way, gentlemen, some time ago a man before the Ways and Means Committee said that if you would give him $8,000,000 more money he would get $200,000,000 next year. But I do not believe the Republicans are going to give it to him. There is a provision in this bill which would be dangerous to our form of government—I do not care how honest an official he may be, how wise he may be, or how faithful in the performance of his duty. This provision authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to settle claims against taxpayers without reference to court or other procedure. Let us illustrate. Here is a man that owes $1,000,000 back taxes, or at least the Treasury claims he owes it. There is a controversy on between him and the Treasury. You say that ought to be settled. I agree with you. But, gentlemen, here is how you propose to settle it: Under this bill the Secretary of the Treasury will appoint three of his men, Republican politicians, because that is the only kind you will have in the Treasury Department. A Republican Member of Congress goes up with his client—not his client, but constituent—and he says, "Look here, Bill, you know this fellow donated $10,000 to the last campaign. I want you to straighten out these taxes." I can see this taxpayer going up there with my friend GREEN of Iowa. He says, "This is a very important man out in my country. I am going to leave him with you. You can depend absolutely on what he says. He is a good Republican. He contributed $10,000 to the last campaign fund, and he is absolutely reliable." Mr. GREEN goes away and does not have anything to do with it. These three men, remembering what Mr. GREEN said and remembering also that he is on the Ways and Means Committee and has very potential influence with the Treasury Department, settle this matter up for $700,000. The man saves $300,000 and goes home about his business. Now, here is what ought to be done, and represents the sound opinion of those who have been before us: You ought to create a quasi judicial tribunal to which will be referred all these cases to be tried, to hear the testimony, and, of course, that would include the testimony of the taxpayer as well as the Government, and after hearing such testimony the tribunal should render an opinion which, so far as the taxpayer and Government are concerned, will be final. But, gentlemen, these men ought to be strictly nonpolitical appointees and should be appointed for two, four, and six years. They ought to be confirmed by the Senate and not be removable at the instance of the Secretary of the Treasury or any other politician in the United States.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARNER. That is what ought to happen, and it is my contention that the present provision in your bill which attempts to deal with this situation is a dangerous one.

I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. We have all those tribunals right now, and the gentleman knows it. But further than that I would like to give the gentleman a little more of the record of his own party on that subject. This provision we have here is practically identical with a bill I introduced more than a year ago and which passed this House, and I put it in there at the request of the Democratic Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. GARNER. As I said awhile ago, I understood that you Republicans had repudiated everything done or suggested by the Democratic administration. That was the whole theme of Mr. FORDNEY's speech. You ought to give some other reason for your provision other than the recommendation of the Democratic Secretary of the Treasury who you criticize so severely.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman says there is no logic or reason for the position.

Mr. GARNER. I submit it to the judgment of every fair-minded man in this House that when you are dealing with a billion five hundred million dollars which some estimate to be due the Government on back taxes you ought to have a tribunal in which absolute confidence can be reposed in the matter of influence, the matter of judgment, and the matter of fair and impartial treatment between the man and the Government.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. We have the tribunal for those cases, but I do not know that they will ever reach them.

Mr. GARNER. Yes; we have the Supreme Court and other United States courts.

I am going to say something which represents my personal views. I do not know whether it appeals to my Democratic friends or not. My observation of the taxpayer is that he does not complain so much if taxes are equal and uniform. I used to be a county judge, and as a member of the commissioner's court I used to value people's property. A fellow would come in and say, "I do not care so much about this, except this neighbor of mine does not pay as much as he ought to." When we Democrats passed the revenue act of 1918 we placed in the bill a provision that the President of the United States should pay an income tax. We believed that it was just and right; we believed that the President and every other citizen should be treated alike. That is Democratic doctrine. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

We do not believe that you should show preference to anyone. We also had a provision in that bill that subjected the Federal district judges to the ordinary income taxes, the same as everybody else.

Mr. COPLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARNER. In a moment. The Supreme Court decided—and decided very correctly—that we could not tax the salaries of officers then in office. We could not do that on account of a constitutional provision which Congress has no power to change. But if the law of 1918 remains as it is to-day every President who is elected from now on, as long as that remains on the statute, will pay his income tax, just like any other citizen in the United States. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Why should not he? Moreover, every Federal district judge and every judge who is appointed as a member of the Supreme Court in the future, if you let that provision stay in the law as it was written by Democrats, will pay an income tax like his neighbors, and it will not be so many years before every Federal judge in the United States will pay an income tax, as I think he ought to, just like every other taxpayer who has an income of a like amount. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. COPLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARNER. Yes.

Mr. COPLEY. Does not the gentleman and his colleagues know that at the time he put that in the bill no Democratic President would ever pay that part of the income tax?

Mr. GARNER. He will if he is elected in the future, and I think the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. COPLEY] will not have to wait very long to see that happen. I yield back, Mr. Chairman, the remainder of my time. [Prolonged applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BACHARACH].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. BACHARACH. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, before proceeding with what I wish to say in support of this bill and in answer to the statement of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] I want to call the attention of the committee to the fact that President Wilson did not pay any income tax on his salary, but President Harding will pay an income tax on his salary.

I further want to call the attention of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] and the members of the committee to the fact that in our revision of the present tax law we not alone have taken care, as he states, of the classes, but we have certainly taken a great deal better care of the masses. Out of a total number of taxpayers for the calendar year 1919—and they are the last figures we have—which were in number 5,332,760, 4,675,101 are favorably affected by the $500 additional exemption and the $200 additional exemption for minors, and there are but 5,526 people affected by the change in the surtax brackets.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. BACHARACH. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. ANDREWS. Will you give the figures showing the number of people who will benefit by the reduction of the surtax from 65 per cent to 32 per cent?

Mr. BACHARACH. I have given approximately the figures. I think 5,526 persons will be benefited.

Mr. BLANTON. That is probably every millionaire in the United States.

Mr. BACHARACH. Mr. Chairman, by a majority greater than ever before given to any political party the voters of the country last November once again returned the Republican Party to power in governmental affairs.

To my mind there were two chief reasons for this overwhelming expression of confidence in the Republican Party. The first was the people's disapproval of the foreign entanglements that were brought upon the country under the past Democratic administration and the pledge of the Republican Party to free the country of such entanglements. The second was the desire of the people for a return to a sound and economical management of Government affairs, with a consequent rearrangement and reduction of Federal taxation which would permit of an early return of business prosperity and a more equitable distribution of the burden of Federal taxes.

In response to that demand President Harding soon after his inauguration called Congress in special session for the express purpose of considering and enacting new tariff and revenue legislation. Under this summons the Republican membership of the House was charged with the responsibility of enacting such legislation as would reduce taxes and yet at the same time make adequate provision for the necessary revenue to run the Government.

The House has already passed a tariff bill which is calculated to give adequate protection to American industry and American labor and at the same time to yield a very considerable increase in customs receipts over what we are collecting under the present Democratic law.

Since the enactment of the tariff bill the Committee on Ways and Means has worked very diligently and with the greatest zeal in the preparation of a revenue bill, and we present to you to-day a sane, constructive, and businesslike proposition that should appeal not alone to the Members of Congress but to the country in general, not alone to the business interests of the country but to every man and woman who contributes toward the upkeep of our Government by the payment of Federal taxes.

I believe it is a bill far more generous in its provisions than the country generally expected. The proposed amendments to the present law as carried in this bill consist almost wholly of tax reductions, the deliverance from which taxes the people have been hoping for these several years past. Almost every class affected by Federal taxation has been granted some relief, while few have been asked to make any additional contributions toward the support of their Government.

In making these changes the committee has very closely adhered to the accepted principle of taxation of placing the heaviest burdens upon those best able to bear them and relieving as far as possible those upon whom the burden was too oppressive.

In fact, we were actuated by the sole desire to produce a revenue bill which would raise the needed revenue, as nearly as that could be ascertained with any degree of certainty, and at the same time adjust the burden of paying the taxes properly and equitably among all classes which go to make up the body politic of the United States.

It is a bill conceived in harmony with our party's campaign pledges for economy in Government expenditures and for lower taxes, with due regard for the public interest.

In repealing the excess-profits tax I believe that we will have done the greatest thing that we could do to bring about a return of industrial prosperity. There has been a very general and insistent demand throughout the country for the removal of this governmental brake on business.

The only reasonable excuse we have ever had for the adoption of such a tax was that it was a war tax, designed to put the burden of war taxes on those who were making unreasonable profits out of war contracts, and so forth. For that purpose it was a justifiable tax, but its retention as a permanent part of our taxation system in times of peace is, to my mind, extremely unsound business economics.

The revenue to be derived from such a source in normal industrial times is so variable that it would be extremely difficult to use it as a base upon which to estimate revenue receipts; it has rapidly diminished from year to year.

It is generally agreed that the excess-profits tax has been responsible for the period of intense speculation which followed the war. It has fostered the wildest sort of extravagance in the industrial and commercial world, and some of the foremost economists of the country have publicly stated that this tax has done more toward the increased cost of living than any other form of tax now on our statute books.

The excess-profits tax has been condemned and its repeal has been suggested by Government officials both of the present administration as well as of the past administration, under whose beneficence it was put in our revenue laws.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BACHARACH. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Is it not also a fact that all the Secretaries of the Treasury that we have had for several years, including the present Secretary of the Treasury and the preceding Democratic Secretary of the Treasury, have all held that if this tax is taken off, so that these men paying the high surtaxes would put their money into business, in the long run we would get more taxes out of them?

Mr. BACHARACH. The gentleman from Iowa is correct. In addition to that, it was only put on as war legislation. It was not put on as permanent legislation. All gentlemen in the House understand that.

Naturally there will be some objection to its repeal on the ground that it is a tax on big business, and therefore should remain. But anything that interferes with our industrial progress and retards business must have its bad effects upon the workers of the country.

If there is no work to perform, there can be no payment of wages. Capital and labor must go hand in hand, and what is good for the one must be good for the other. It is therefore the hope and expectation of the committee that the repeal of the excess-profits tax will very soon reflect itself in a revival of business throughout the country and the money that would otherwise have been paid to the Government in the form of taxes will be turned back into industrial channels for the extension of plants and for new enterprises which will afford work for the 5,700,000 reported by the Secretary of Labor to be now out of work.

As a companion proposition to the repeal of the excess-profits tax and for the purpose of turning back into industrial channels the capital which is now being put into tax-free securities, we have eliminated the surtax on individual incomes above 32 per cent.

In an address delivered a few days ago to an assemblage of bankers, Mr. E. C. McDougal, of Buffalo, N. Y., impressed upon his audience a number of truths with reference to Federal taxation. I think that most of us here in the House are aware of these facts, but it is well to emphasize them at this time—

For a business revival—

He said—

We must have more capital. This comes from three sources—the savings of labor, of business, and of investors—and as far as the savings of labor are concerned, only a small part is contributed, because we are a nation of spenders. The reliance must be upon business and investors' accumulations; and taxes for the past three years have confiscated or driven out of sight these accumulations, without which we must face bankruptcy.

He says further:

High taxes drive out of business men who have accumulated capital, make them nonproducers and nonemployers of labor, drive their capital into tax-free bonds, and discourage fresh capital. Without hope of substantial gain men will not risk their capital. The present heavy taxation gives no such hope.

The facility in this country with which States and municipalities can issue tax-free bonds has defeated the plan of the originators of the present system of taxation, who hoped to make wealth pay the cost of the war. The tax-exempt bonds were immediately sought and have become the favorite form of investment where large sums are involved. These funds formerly went into what may be broadly termed as business enterprises, and the business of the country prospered accordingly.

It is reliably stated that the man with an annual income of $100,000 must, under the present income-tax schedule, buy a taxable security yielding 10.23 per cent in order to secure the net income equivalent to the return on a 4½ per cent tax-exempt security. The ratio rises with the amount of income, until the possessor of a $1,000,000 income must have taxable securities yielding 16.67 per cent to put him on an even basis with a 4½ per cent tax-exempt issue.

It was frankly stated before our committee that the imposition of the excess profits tax on business and the high surtax on individual incomes has removed every incentive for men of means to continue in business and they are rapidly converting all their funds into tax-free securities.

It is estimated that there are now more than $14,000,000,000 invested in tax-free securities, which means that practically all that amount of capital has been withdrawn from the money markets for investment in industrial and commercial enterprise and lost to the Government for taxable purposes. As a consequence our economic progress is retarded, our transportation systems and public utilities are demoralized, and business is at a standstill because capital for investment can not be had excepting at interest rates that are prohibitive.

On the other hand, municipalities find a ready market for the sale of their tax-free bonds at attractive interest rates, which leads to extravagance and waste in the conduct of municipal affairs and adds to the burden of taxes which the people must bear.

The repeal of these high surtax brackets it is confidently expected will promptly result in an adequate flow of capital into industrial channels where it is so much needed during this critical post-war period of readjustment and reconstruction.

To make up some of the loss in revenue from the repeal of these taxes we have increased the corporation tax to a flat rate of 12½ per cent, retaining the $2,000 exemption as a protection to the small corporations, and have made other changes which we believe will be attended with good results.

The changes which this bill will effect in the present law are very much to the advantage of the great masses of people upon whom the present law bears heavily. Chiefly among these changes are the increased exemption that has been given to married men or heads of families on incomes up to and including $5,000. This exemption has been increased from $2,000 to $2,500, and in addition to that a further exemption of $200 for each minor child or other dependent has been granted, making this exemption $400 instead of $200 as in the present law. We have also granted an exemption on sums up to $500 derived from dividends from building and loan associations in order to encourage the building and owning of homes. There have been many other eliminations or reductions that will directly benefit the same class of people.

In preparing this bill the Committee on Ways and Means was faced with a rather terrifying responsibility. With increasing expenditures on the part of the Government confronting us on the one hand and the insistent demand from the country for a reduction of taxes on the other, the situation was one to demand our very closest and serious consideration.

We had before us the responsible heads of the Treasury Department and other branches of the Government and heard their side of the story as to the estimated receipts and expenditures of the Government for the next fiscal year. We also asked them for suggestions as to what changes should be made in our taxes in order to bring in the necessary revenue.

After giving these matters careful consideration we were convinced that the only way to bring about a reduction in taxes was by the enforcement of a program of the strictest and most rigid economy in departmental expenditures. We called in the chairman of the Appropriations Committee and laid before him the figures of estimated expenditures submitted by the Treasury Department.

We asked Mr. MADDEN to go over them carefully and give the committee the benefit of his advice and opinion as to where savings could be made. Mr. MADDEN made a very clear and convincing report to the committee, and it is in a large measure due to the economies that the chairman of the Appropriations Committee has promised to put in effect covering future appropriations that the committee has been able to report to you so favorable a revenue bill as this is.

But I can not let this opportunity go by without a word of warning to the membership of the House, especially to the gentlemen on this side of the aisle, as to your responsibility in sustaining the efforts of the Appropriations Committee in keeping down appropriations. Unless we do that this bill will fail in its object.

We Republicans promised the country that if returned to power we would cut out extravagance and reduce taxation. The fulfillment of that promise is carried in this bill, but if we are to actually do what the bill says we are going to do, it will be necessary for us to cut our appropriations to the very bone, and we must think seriously before we enact into law some of the bills which are now before Congress which carry with them large appropriations and which, in my opinion, the country can get along very well without until such time as we are financially able to assume new responsibilities.

Mr. Chairman, it is a source of much gratification to me that we have been able to present to the country at this time so satisfactory a revenue measure. No Congress has ever been called upon to frame a revenue bill under such critical and uncertain world conditions.

Personally I would very much like to have seen the adoption of a sales tax in this measure, for I am more than ever convinced that such a tax is the most logical and the most equitable form of tax that can be put in operation. I will not attempt to go into the merits of such a tax at this time, but it is my opinion that with its adoption it would have been possible to eliminate the excess-profits tax, all of the surtaxes, all of the special excise taxes, and to make substantial reductions in the normal income-tax schedule, and at the same time to derive sufficient revenue to meet the needs of the Government.

There is a fast growing sentiment throughout the country for the adoption of the sales tax, and I venture to predict at this time that such a plan will be embodied in our revenue legislation within the next few years.

Mr. Chairman, I firmly believe that we have brought out a revenue bill which has much of real merit to it. Of course it is natural for the Members on that side of the aisle to criticize it and belittle its advantages. That is the part of the duties of a minority party. However, I am sure that the wholesome effects of the changes which we have made will be so far-reaching that the intelligent people of the country will not be influenced by the carping and captious criticism of our Democratic brethren.

The enactment of this bill into law will be a fulfillment of the principal campaign pledges of the Republican Party and a true and living evidence that we have kept the faith. [Applause on the Republican side.]

I append a summary of the changes that have been made in the present law by this bill.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey yields back six minutes.

Mr. OLDFIELD. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Michigan told the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] that he wished to use more time this afternoon. We have not anybody on this time who wishes to speak this afternoon.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I understood the gentleman from Texas and the gentleman from Arkansas wished to speak this afternoon.

Mr. OLDFIELD. No.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I yield 25 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MILLS].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is recognized for 25 minutes.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, it is difficult to listen with patience to such general statements as were made by the distinguished Democratic leader [Mr. GARNER]. Of the $3,376,000,000 to be raised by internal-revenue taxation during the fiscal year 1922, no less than $2,054,000,000 will be raised from income taxes, corporation taxes, including the excess-profits tax. Of the $193,000,000 reduction during the next fiscal year, not one penny is deducted from the taxes of the classes whose taxes he claims should not be reduced; while if we take the following year, we find that of the reduction of $790,000,000 half is divided between direct taxes and half between indirect taxes.

The gentleman from Texas talked in a loose way about the reduction of surtaxes and the motive for such reduction as if any responsible party charged with the duty of framing revenue measures would be actuated by the desire to exempt this class or that class of population rather than by the earnest wish to frame as scientific and equitable a tax measure as it is possible to frame. [Applause on the Republican side.] I take it that there are three qualities upon which any sound tax measure must rest. The first is productivity, the second is equity, and the third is that it may be imposed with a minimum of friction and disturbance of the orderly business and commercial processes of the community. The present high surtaxes on incomes violate every one of these three tests. Their productivity is steadily decreasing. They discriminate in a wholly unjustifiable manner between corporations and partnerships, and there can be no question that they are to-day draining into the unproductive channels of Government expenditure or forcing into tax-exempt securities that liquid capital which is absolutely essential to the normal development of the country.

Let us consider the first point: We find the taxable incomes in excess of $300,000 reported for taxation fell off from $950,000,000 in 1916 to $390,000,000 in 1918. We find that taxable incomes of over $100,000 reported in 1918 $990,000,000 for tax purposes and only $600,000,000 in 1920, while the tax fell off from $470,000,000 in 1918 to $270,000,000 in 1920.

Taking them by classes, incomes of from $150,000 to $300,000 reported $371,000,000 in 1919, as compared with $505,000,000 in 1916; incomes from $300,000 up to $500,000, $159,000,000, as compared with $272,000,000; incomes from $500,000 to $1,000,000, $126,000,000, as compared with $256,000,000; incomes of $1,000,000 and over, $152,000,000, as compared with $464,000,000. Now, surely no one will contend that the incomes of these individuals were diminishing during this period when bank deposits increased from $14,430,000,000 in 1914 to over $25,730,000,000 on March 1, 1920, while the circulating medium of the country increased from $3,204,000,000 on June 3, 1914, to $5,846,000,000 on February 1, 1920. No, gentlemen, the incomes did not decrease. They increased, but the Government ceased to get them for purposes of taxation. The reasons are not far to seek, and, unfortunately, they are neither temporary nor accidental, nor can they be eradicated by any measure which this Congress may adopt. In the first place, there is the great evil of tax-exempt securities, to which your attention has been repeatedly called. There are some $15,000,000,000 of tax-exempt securities offering to any rich man a safe haven from these excessive taxes. To-day if he is a man of very large means his money has to earn him 16.67 per cent in order to yield him the return that a 4½ per cent municipal bond will yield him, and in order to earn it in that way he has to take all the risks incident to any business venture expected to yield such a large return.

In the second place, even if there were no tax-exempt securities, even if you change the Constitution as to future issues, you will never in normal times collect as high as 70 per cent of a man's income. I base that statement on the tax history of the world. Gentlemen forget that the income tax is a comparatively novel and new tax, except possibly in so far as Great Britain is concerned. It has been a wonderfully successful tax, but what is the reason for the great success of the income tax in the past? Why, gentlemen, its success depended upon the fact that it was levied at a moderate rate. Do you realize that even in Lloyd-George's famous budget measure of 1909 the normal tax was only 5 per cent and the supertax only 2½ per cent?

Do you realize that the graduated income tax of Prussia and other German States only ran up to 6 per cent, and that the highest income-tax rate in Germany did not exceed 15 per cent, which included municipal, local, State, and Empire taxes? They have thoroughly tried the income tax in Europe. Where it was levied at a moderate rate it succeeded. Where it was levied, as in Italy, at as high a rate as 20 per cent it was a complete failure. The people felt that it was too high; that it was unjust. They made false statements. Public sentiment supported the evasion, and the tax could not be collected. One of our leading economists describing the situation in Italy in 1912—mind you, dealing with only a 20 per cent rate—said:

The tax rates have become so enormous that the administration has broken down under the weight, and the public conscience has given way to an equal extent. The Italian income tax is a signal proof of the folly of the attempt to tax incomes at anything more than a very moderate figure.

And yet when this party of ours and the Ways and Means Committee recognize the fact, which is admitted by every economist, that you can not collect this tax at these ridiculous rates, they are charged by gentlemen interested in making a popular appeal with favoring the rich, although it has been amply demonstrated that the rich are not paying these taxes, and the high rate inevitably spells a low return.

Mr. FREAR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLS. Yes.

Mr. FREAR. What is the gentleman's position in regard to an income tax? Is he opposed to it?

Mr. MILLS. No; I favor an income tax.

Mr. FREAR. What rate on income tax is the gentleman in favor of?

Mr. MILLS. I am coming to that.

Mr. FREAR. Is it not a fact that Great Britain to-day has an 8 per cent excess-profits tax and a 30 per cent flat tax on corporations?

Mr. MILLS. The gentleman is entirely right as to the income tax, but these are war measures. In England prior to the war they had no income tax exceeding 8 per cent.

In the United States almost every State in the Union has attempted to collect a personal-property tax on intangible personal property at rates from 40 to 60 per cent, and none of them succeeded. They tried dooming and sworn statements and every expedient known to man, but they could not collect it. Forty per cent was recognized by the community as excessive. In my own State we had a personal-property tax law which was a dead letter. It assumed to tax intangible personal property at about 2 per cent. We investigated the situation in 1915 by a commission, of which I was the chairman, and we recommended its repeal and the substitution therefor of a 3 per cent tax on income. This was a vast drop from 40 per cent of income to an income tax of 3 per cent. Gentlemen belonging to the same political party as my friends on the other side made the same argument that has been made here, and what has been the result? They adopted the recommendation of our commission, and to-day the State of New York is collecting many millions—my recollection is over thirty-five millions—under the 3 per cent tax, when it was not collecting a million dollars at the 40 per cent rate. That is an answer to the ridiculous proposition that has been urged here.

Mr. CABLE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLS. I will.

Mr. CABLE. Can the gentleman advise us whether the men who have invested in tax-exempt securities will withdraw that money and invest it in other securities?

Mr. MILLS. Gradually, yes; because money in the long run will always seek the most profitable sources of investment.

In the second place, these high taxes discriminate in a highly unwarranted manner against partnerships. To-day a corporation pays an excess-profit tax, a tax of 10 per cent on net income, and the stockholder, of course, pays on the dividends received. The money that is undistributed pays nothing. A partnership pays on all of its earnings, whether distributed or not, and they pay at these rates that will run up to 70 per cent, as contrasted with the 10 per cent tax on corporations. As a result one partnership in 1918 paid a million and a quarter dollars more than it would have had to pay had it been organized in a corporate form. Do you call that justice; do you call that equity; do you call that scientific taxation; and is it not proper to so reduce the rates as to bring some degree of parity between the corporation and the partnership competing in the same line of business?

Finally I maintain that these taxes deprive the commercial and industrial enterprises of the United States of the capital that is absolutely necessary for their normal development, and so have to no small extent contributed to the present business depression. The amount of liquid capital available every year for new development and for the ordinary purposes of trade and commerce is comparatively limited. And remember that taxes have to be paid in cash. What do you suppose the effect was on the credit of the country last December, and again in March, when literally millions of dollars had to be borrowed to pay taxes to the Government rather than to be available for the ordinary purposes of commerce and trade? It has been estimated that we have some $6,000,000,000 surplus annually available for reinvestment, at least half of which is absorbed by maintenance and replacement, leaving $3,000,000,000 for new development. Recollect that in 1919 of this $3,000,000,000, $1,250,000,000 was taken in income taxes alone. I am not dealing for the present with the amount of money that sought seclusion and protection in tax-exempt securities. Of this $1,250,000,000 no less than $750,000,000 came from incomes in excess of $50,000.

Consider to-day the condition of three of your great industries—agriculture, the railroads, and the building industry. There is not a man in the Chamber who does not know that they are all three starving for the lack of capital. Only yesterday we were considering a bill authorizing one of the Government agencies to go into the money market of the United States and borrow up to a billion and a half of dollars, to give to the farmers credit to carry and move their crops. There is a bill before one of the committees of this House authorizing that same agency to go into the money market of the United States and obtain credit so that the railroads can perform the necessary work in the way of maintenance and new improvements. Why is it that there is an absolute shortage of the liquid capital ordinarily available for these very purposes? Gentlemen will give as causes the war, overexpansion, inflation, and the inevitable depression. That is all true, but who will say what part these excessive and unscientific taxes have played in bringing about this condition in which the credit absolutely necessary for the normal business of the country is lacking, so that agriculture and the railroads have to come to Congress for help, and Congress has to resort to the expedient of emergency credits obtained through a Government agency.

Let me call the attention of gentlemen from the rural districts to this further proposition. Inside of three months this House will be considering a proposition to provide farmers with credit running from a year to two and three years, because there exists to-day a well-recognized gap in our banking system. The ordinary sources of credit, the short-time commercial credits, do not meet the situation, because these mature ordinarily in from 60 to 90 days, while the farmer needs from 9 to 12 months and the cattle raiser up to 3 years' credit. It is not proposed by gentlemen who have studied this proposition, and who will advocate the measure, to tap the commercial credit fund of the country. No; they propose to tap the investment fund, and very properly so. I would point out to them that it is going to be mighty difficult to tap the investment fund of the country if you drive that investment fund into tax-exempt securities, or if you propose to tax it to the tune of 70 per cent to pay Government expenditures.

All of these doctrines proved unsound by experience, which run against natural economic laws, inevitably bring their own consequences, and these unscientific and inequitable taxes have brought their inevitable consequence to-day in the form of unduly limited capital and a restriction of credit.

My criticism of this bill then is not that it goes too far, but that it does not go far enough. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] congratulated the Republican caucus on having postponed the date. I disagree with him. If a thing is right to do, it is right to do it now, and performance is always better than a promise. The business of this country to-day is flat on its back. There are 5,700,000 men out of employment.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLS. Certainly.

Mr. MADDEN. It is one thing to impose a high tax rate and another thing to force a man to engage in business to yield money with which to pay the rates.

Mr. MILLS. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. And so when we impose a high tax rate we drive that man out of profitable business into tax-exempt securities.

Mr. MILLS. Exactly.

Mr. MADDEN. And that is our trouble to-day.

Mr. MILLS. Exactly. Anyone who has studied the history of these business depressions will notice that they all have certain very common characteristics—a period of rise in prices, rapid expansion of credit, very active business, and apparent prosperity. More and more credit is necessary to carry on the business transactions because of increased prices until one day the public makes up its mind that prices will no longer rise, buying ceases, banks are obliged to restrict credits, and the general period of deflation and suffering follows. It will be further noted that in all of these crises before recovery comes there is one condition which is always present, and that is cheap and easy money seeking profitable employment. When there is a sufficient supply of cheap money seeking employment, ready to be loaned, not only for the immediate business purposes of the community but for permanent investment, what happens? Men begin to buy for future sale; manufacturers to fill their orders and to expand their business; goods move, the wheels turn, and the cycle of business prosperity is once more under way. Do your present taxes tend to give you cheap and easy money? Do they tend to encourage industry and economy? Are you if you maintain them giving business that assistance which is necessary for its revival? These are the questions which you have to answer before you yield to the fascinating impulse of taxing the other fellow at very high rates without considering what the consequence may be to all of the people.

Mr. STEVENSON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MILLS. Gladly.

Mr. STEVENSON. I noticed in a hearing that the gentleman from New York appeared in behalf of a tax on expenditures. I would like to ask if the gentleman is still in favor of a tax on expenditures as advocated at that hearing?

Mr. MILLS. Oh, absolutely. I was going to take that up if I have the time—

Mr. STEVENSON. I would be very glad to get the gentleman's views on that question.

Mr. MILLS (continuing). If I have adequate opportunity to present the plan to the House. My own feeling is that we should repeal all surtaxes. That we should keep the normal tax, and then we should tax men on what they spend at a graduated rate. [Applause.] Money saved and reinvested in productive enterprises of the country should be taxed at a flat rate. Money extravagantly and uselessly spent should be taxed at a constantly increasing rate. [Applause.]

Mr. LONDON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLS. We want to put the biggest possible burden on waste and extravagance, and we want to give the biggest possible incentive to thrift and saving, and I know of no other way to do it. [Applause.] Now, gentlemen have said this is no more than a sales tax; that this is a tax on consumption. True, it is a tax on consumption, gentlemen, but it has this fundamental difference. A tax on consumption, such as a sales tax that is imposed at a flat rate, means that it is regressive in character, bears no relation to ability to pay, and falls with the greatest weight on men of the smallest incomes, because they spend most of that income on living expenses.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. If the gentleman will permit, I think the only trouble with the gentleman's tax on expenditure is that he is 10, 15, or 20 years ahead of the time. I think he is right, but it will work a perfect revolution in our form of taxes, and the committee was afraid to undertake it at this time.

Mr. MILLS. I am not criticizing the committee, but I understand anyone who brings forward a novel proposition must expect to have it pretty well analyzed and criticized before he gets anywhere. [Applause.]

Mr. LONDON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLS. Gladly.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LAYTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time may be extended for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time is in control of the gentleman from Michigan and the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. FORDNEY. I have request for double the time which is at my command, but I will yield the gentleman five additional minutes.

Mr. LONDON. I desire to ask whether the proposition of the gentleman from New York involves an exemption in favor of families for a minimum standard of comfort?

Mr. MILLS. What I do, I will say to my colleague from New York, is to give an exemption of $4,000 to families on all expenditures. In addition, the bill gives them certain exemptions for medical and hospital care, and so on. I provide a $4,000 exemption for a family and $2,000 for a single man. After that all expenditures are taxed at a graduated rate rising to 40 per cent, though, of course, the rate, if necessary, could be made higher.

Now, let me point out the advantages of this scheme. You do away at once with the whole problem of tax-exempt securities, which otherwise is insoluble. In the second place, you do away with the present injustice against partnerships as compared with corporations that has been much too little spoken of in tax discussions here in Washington. It is a great injustice and calls for a remedy. In the third place, the proposition has all the merits which can be urged in favor of a sales tax, but in addition it maintains the principle of graduation, which I believe has come to stay in this country, because it recognizes that men must be taxed in accordance with their ability to pay so there shall be equality of sacrifice. [Applause.] In the fourth place, as I have already pointed out, it not only discourages wasteful expenditure but it puts a positive premium on thrift. Every other tax we have been discussing does just the opposite. There is no incentive to save if through an inheritance tax the Government is going to take 50 per cent of what you leave. There is no tendency to take a business risk if when you are successful the Government is going to take 70 per cent of your profit. The whole tendency under the present system is to spend all you have got and enjoy it as much as you can, because if you do not the Government will take it anyhow. Now, here is a tax which says to the average citizen, "My friend, the Government recognizes the value of thrift. It recognizes that in a growing country such as ours it is absolutely necessary that capital should be saved year by year for reinvestment so that the country may grow with maximum rapidity, increase its productivity, which can only be done through the accretion of new capital, and thus raise the standard of living of all of its people."

And if you will do your share and save, what you save and reinvest will be taxed at a moderate rate, but what you blow in on high living we will make you pay for at 50 and 60 per cent. The proposition is novel to us, but it is not new in tax history. You will find that as early as the middle of the nineteenth century John Stuart Mill advocated this as the only sound kind of income tax. He was met with the objection that it was a rich man's tax, because the rich man could save more than the poor man and would profit more. This was his answer:

It has been further objected that since the rich have the greatest means of saving, any privilege given to savings is an advantage bestowed on the rich at the expense of the poor. I answer that it is bestowed on them only in proportion as they abdicate the personal use of their riches; in proportion as they divert their income from the supply of their own wants to a productive investment, through which, instead of being consumed by themselves, it is distributed in wages among the poor. If this be favoring the rich, I should like to have it pointed out what mode of assessing taxation can deserve the name of favoring the poor.

[Applause.]

What was true in Mill's time is true now.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR].

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New York [Mr. MILLS], who has just preceded me, has made a very interesting address. He is something of a student of the subject of taxation apparently, and I hesitate to question some of the statements he has made for fear I may not have understood him correctly, and I would not intentionally place him in a wrong position. I take it, however, first, that he is opposed to the inheritance tax. A man under the laws of this Government may accumulate all the money and all the property he wants, fifty or a hundred million dollars, and yet he can carry that with him to his grave or leave it to his children or legatees who have had no hand in accumulating that property. The gentleman from New York opposes such tax. I would make that tax higher, and it is made higher in practically every other country on the principle of taxing according to ability to pay.

The following figures are illuminating. To Representative RAMSEYER, of Iowa, I am indebted for the following valuable comparisons:

Comparative wealth of three governments for 1920, taken from the Statistical Abstract, is as follows:

United States	$250,000,000,000
Great Britain	80,000,000,000
France	70,000,000,000

During the last fiscal year Great Britain collected from estates $231,962,940, France collected for same period from the same source $179,160,743. United States receipts for same period and from estates $150,000,000.

Based on comparative wealth, which includes 26,000 millionaires in this country, among them the richest people in the world, our inheritance tax to bring proportionate revenues would be about as follows:

Great Britain accrued incomes from estates	$231,962,940
France	179,160,743
United States based on English rates	695,888,720
United States based on French rates	627,062,600
United States revenues under proposed law	150,000,000

Although we collect less than one-quarter of the proportionate amount collected in England or France, the gentleman from New York [Mr. MILLS] objects to any collections from inheritance, while I would raise such taxes from 100 per cent to 300 per cent to more nearly conform with tax rates on same sources of revenue in other countries.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. MILLS] is opposed to the principle of a graduated income tax, notwithstanding he believes in the principle of a graduated spending tax of 3 per cent instead of an income tax which reaches to 70 per cent, including surtax, under existing law, and to 40 per cent in the pending bill. The gentleman from New York [Mr. MILLS] is opposed to an excess-profits tax. He is opposed to any tax on profits or a tax based on the ability to pay. That, of course, is an attack upon the whole tax system that we have. He is opposed to the greatest tax authorities in the world. If our system is wrong, then we should repeal it. If his is right, it ought to be enacted. But to adopt his spendings tax we repudiate the experience of the world and propose to try a modified consumption tax that, under any other name, is equally objectionable.

I want to question one or two of the statements that he made as to the seriousness of taxing wealth in this country. He speaks the protest of wealth against our tax laws. Gentlemen, you have listened to this often; you have heard it through the press constantly, and you may have grown to believe in it, because there is an organized propaganda through the press and in evidence on every hand that money will not be invested because of the surtax and excess-profits tax under existing laws of this country. That is a serious problem. As I understood the gentleman from New York [Mr. MILLS], who has just preceded me, the taxes are heavier here than in other countries, and he cited Italy, Great Britain, and other countries. Any man who is familiar with the principles of taxation knows that the income tax in this country is easier and much less in amount for ordinary incomes than in Great Britain until you pass the $250,000 income.

Let me again quote some exact data from experts of the Treasury Department who have made comparisons on this subject:

<sup>1</sup> These income-tax rates now pass each other at $250,000 annual income. Under the plan I propose to reinstate, the 1918 rates, 4 per cent will be added to above rates, so that our rate would pass that of Great Britain at $200,000 but will average far below the English rates on incomes under that amount.

The foregoing statement of comparative income tax rates in the United States and Great Britain, prepared by Treasury officials, discloses the following:

At $3,000 the rate in Great Britain now is six times that of the United States.

At $5,000 the rate in Great Britain now is over six times that of the United States.

At $20,000 the rate in Great Britain now is over three and one-half times that of the United States.

At $50,000 the rate in Great Britain now is about two and one-fourth times that of the United States.

At $100,000 the rate in Great Britain now is about one and one-half times that of the United States.

At $200,000 the rate in Great Britain now is 5 per cent greater than our tax.

At $250,000 the rate in Great Britain now is about the same as ours.

At $1,000,000 annual income our tax is 16 per cent greater than that of Great Britain.

In other words, either Great Britain is grossly overtaxing incomes from $3,000 to $50,000 or else we are undertaxing them. In estimating wealth based on income it is customary to use $50,000 annual income as a conservative average for entrance into the millionaire class. Of that income, under our laws, less than 20 per cent is deducted, whereas Great Britain takes over 40 per cent of the income, or more than double our rate.

Great Britain proposes to raise existing rates, which I have used for purposes of comparison.

While the British taxation laws are different from our own in several respects, I am informed by a high Treasury authority that, considering local methods of taxation, which in Great Britain covers a multitude of specifically taxed articles, and also taxes for different municipalities, the foregoing tables give a fair comparison of rates of taxation in the two countries.

Six times the income-tax rate at $3,000 and three and one-half times the tax rate at $20,000 are the existing excess rates in Great Britain over the United States, and even at $100,000 annual income, which I assume is nearer that of the gentleman from New York, the British income-tax rate is 50 per cent higher than in this country.

Mr. Chairman, every man familiar with corporation taxation here knows to-day the corporation tax in Great Britain is a 30 per cent flat tax, whereas under the pending bill it is only 12½ per cent, or about 40 per cent of the flat tax on corporations. Eighty per cent has been the highest bracket on excess profits corporation tax in Great Britain. Here it has been only 40 per cent—only one-half. And what is true in Great Britain is true in France and Germany, and other countries that suffered in the war.

Let me give you some other tax figures that are of far-reaching significance when compared with statements just made by the gentleman from New York as to oppressive tax rates in this country. They disclose how mistaken he is in his conclusions that taxes are higher here than elsewhere.

Again I quote from the statement inserted in the RECORD yesterday by Mr. RAMSEYER, of Iowa, to whom the House is indebted for the illuminating figures he has given:

The foregoing figures ought to silence those who make the constant false outcry that we are overtaxing the people in this country compared with other countries.

Great Britain, with one-third the ability to pay, is raising revenues of $5,142,609,000 for 1921 and 1922, or raised to our own comparative taxing ability to about $15,500,000,000 for next year, whereas on page 4 of the committee report the estimated revenues in the United States for 1922 are as follows:

An amount of $4,427,643,000 for 1922 compared with $15,500,000,000, the amount that would be raised under English rates, carries its own argument why American business men, financiers, and taxpayers generally should discount statements like these from the gentleman from New York, so glibly uttered, that business is harassed by taxes.

Again let me call attention to losses of $197,600,000 in the above revenue taxes for 1922 and "Miscellaneous" $487,643,000 are likely to reduce the total revenue to little more than an even $4,000,000,000 when actual receipts are reported for 1922.

Mr. MILLS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FREAR. With pleasure.

Mr. MILLS. What is the normal income tax in Great Britain?

Mr. FREAR. I will say that our income tax passes their tax at $250,000 annual income. Up to that point, our tax is only one-sixth of the British rate at $3,000, and less than one-half of the British rate at $50,000 annual income.

Mr. MILLS. The British normal tax is 30 per cent.

Mr. FREAR. On corporations.

Mr. MILLS. On individuals.

Mr. FREAR. I have given the Treasury comparisons on both normal and surtaxes combined, which is the actual tax paid. I will say in Great Britain to-day they are raising far more than three times as much taxes as we are based on ability to pay, and that those who represent wealth and are complaining of high taxes here should study comparative tax rates in order to appreciate their good luck in living in America.

Mr. MILLS. Would the gentleman be in favor of putting on a normal tax of 25 per cent?

Mr. FREAR. I am not sure that I understand the scope of the question as to what is to be considered, but when you say this country is being taxed to death I have furnished you undisputable evidence that we are taxed less than one-third of what they are taxed in Great Britain, and yet you cry aloud with mistaken statements and arguments because we tax excess profits and collect a surtax. Here is a Washington paper which last night stated that Congress has not kept faith with the people. It says:

THE EXCESS-PROFITS TAX.

It will be difficult to reconcile the decision of the House Republican caucus to continue the excess-profits taxes until next year with either good faith or good judgment.

In the presidential campaign if there was any one point on which the spokesmen for both the major parties were agreed, it was that the excess-profits tax was to be immediately repealed, as it was of necessity an inequitable one and one that gravely hampered business and inflated prices.

HAVE WE KEPT THE FAITH?

This cry comes from a paper whose publisher, a man of vast wealth, has consistently demanded a repeal of the excess-profits tax, a repeal of the higher surtaxes, an appeal for the iniquitous consumption tax editorial in an adjoining column, and incidentally this paper was one of two Washington papers, both of whose publishers are men of great wealth and who have iterated and reiterated editorially their opposition to any soldiers' compensation act, such as passed the House last session.

These papers were among the first to demand that we take the boys by law—boys from 18 to 35—and send them to fight our battles; that we pay them $1 a day, out of which the boys contributed their allotments and insurance, while those who opposed the soldiers' compensation bill with their influential papers had left great incomes after paying their excess profits and surtaxes.

It sounds like a pretty cold-blooded proposition for such publishers now to berate Congress because the House had refused to date back the excess-profits repeal to January, 1921, instead of 1922, as decided by the conference.

In the published accounts of the conference it was stated that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] and I had differed in the form of the motion, and that the motion of Mr. MANN prevailed. One hundred and eighty-five Republicans present at the conference know that I moved that the House be allowed to vote on the proposal to postpone repeal of the excess-profits tax and surtax to January 1, 1922. This was vigorously opposed by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH], who introduced the resolution, and others. I accepted Mr. MANN's substitute without any vote that the conference decide the question, and upon that question 98 Republicans voted to keep in the Treasury the $540,000,000 that would be raised in taxes in 1921 from excess profits and surtaxes. I will not discuss that proposal but say that the vote was not between Mr. MANN's motion and my own but between the Longworth proposal and my own as amended by Mr. MANN. In that case, as in the case of the dye-embargo vote, the bill as reported by the committee was amended as stated, and in each case I endeavored to make the bill better and easier to defend.

It is that vote in conference which the Washington paper finds is a lack of good faith on the part of a majority of House Republicans.

Mr. Chairman, that editorial is an indictment of the House, and we get it constantly from two papers published in the city of Washington. Undoubtedly the publishers are compelled to pay these taxes, but the public should know the motive that actuates criticisms. I have no quarrel with anyone, but I do resent constant unjust criticism from those who are interested because they will have to pay the tax. Taxation according to ability to pay has been the standard adopted by governments and tax authorities for over a century. It is the only correct principle, and those best able to pay taxes should willingly contribute to make up for those who can not pay because they have nothing to contribute. Taxes should be levied according to the ability to pay. An endeavor to do that has been made in this bill, excepting, as I say, in the repeal of the excess-profits tax and of the income surtax, and I think both of those positions are wrong. I believe these taxes should be retained.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FREAR. I regret I have not the time. I desire to discuss several matters, otherwise I would be glad to yield.

Now, I want to consider this question of keeping faith with the people, because it has been repeatedly urged on Congress from various sources. We are asked to keep faith with the people and to repeal the excess-profits tax and we are asked to keep faith with the people by repealing the surtaxes. Gentlemen, the war is only just over. The entire world is prostrate. We find ourselves owing $24,000,000,000, and we have got to pay it. Our annual expenditures are four times those of prewar times. We have got to raise the tax. We can not get back to normal times. We can not get back to the times before the war, because we owe twenty-four times as much as we did before the war, subject to the collection of foreign debts owing us of about $10,000,000,000.

There was, prior to the war, in this country a period of great profiteering on contracts made by American manufacturers, financiers, and business men on loans and on goods sold to governments abroad. This was followed when we went into the war by constant profiteering on our own Government and our own people. Enormous profits were made not only on cost-plus contracts, but on other contracts, and inflation was started in this country, and men became enormously wealthy. Twenty-six thousand millionaires is said to be the number of millionaires who accumulated over $1,000,000 each largely during the war. The spirit of profiteering extended throughout the country. The Government stepped in early in the profiteering game and began taking a part of this money for the support of the Government, 50 per cent in some cases, when the profits were extraordinarily high.

That immediately impressed but did not discourage the people who had been profiteering. They started an organized propaganda immediately after the war and before the last election, first to repeal the excess-profits tax, and, second, to repeal the surtax. They advocated a sales tax on everything that we eat and wear, whereby every man, woman, and child in this country would be taxed. That idea has its exponents. It is much the same as the "spending tax" of the gentleman from New York [Mr. MILLS]. That was the program.

A fight was squarely started against the sales tax. The real interests were pulled out into the open and sales-tax arguments refuted until long before our committee started to draw this revenue bill the sales tax was out, and out for good, for it was a political and economic liability. It is not claimed by the same interests that we are not "keeping faith" with the Republican platform adopted at the convention at Chicago that we would reduce taxes. We never agreed to repeal the surtaxes on wealth. We never agreed to wipe out the excess-profits taxes. Nowhere in that platform can an implied promise to do so be found, and we can not repeal such taxes unless we supply something else in their stead which are better, not unless we wish to face an outraged people. There were over 26,000,000 votes cast at the last election. There are 10,000,000 farmers in the country, in round numbers. I have a letter here speaking in behalf of 2,000,000 farmers, addressed to the President, protesting against the repeal of the excess-profits tax. I have other letters from farming organizations against such action. Are we keeping faith with the farmers in this bill that proposes such repeal? Is the faith one that exists with the handful of wealthy people who pay the excess-profits tax, who want to be relieved of the burden? There are over a million miners in this country. Are we keeping faith with them when we propose in this bill to repeal this tax on wealth? There are over 4,000,000 domestics and over 4,000,000 other laborers in this country not in the classified list.

HOW ARE WE KEEPING FAITH?

Are these the people you, my fellow committeemen, are going to keep faith with when you repeal in this bill the excess-profits tax? Eight hundred and fifty thousand carpenters and over a million railroad workers are asking us to keep faith. Who are we asked by these special pleaders of privilege to keep faith with? Let us study the facts briefly. We are raising about $4,000,000,000 from all sources; $450,000,000, as was said in the conference the other day, in 1922 will be from excess profits. Ninety million dollars will be from the surtax. Before any excess-profits tax is levied the law grants an 8 per cent exemption to begin with. That is given first of all. Then comes the $3,000 exemption to all corporations before the 20 per cent bracket takes place. Yet you say men of wealth are holding back their money and do not intend to put it into the current of business because we are taxing them so much. It is said they are going to put their money in exempt securities. But they are paying $90,000,000 to-day on that, high surtaxes that represents many times that amount not in exempt securities, so that they are not putting all their money in exempt securities or trying to dodge all taxes.

How many people are paying the surtax based on $100,000 income a year? That has been considered as the standard, so far as I have been able to ascertain, that will reach the 32 per cent high surtax provided in the bill. There are 4,499 people paying above the 32 per cent, according to official reports in 1918. I quote from page 18, Statistics of Income, 1921, of whom 627 had incomes in 1918 of $300,000 or over, and 67 people reported incomes of $1,000,000 or over. These are to be relieved from high surtaxes by this bill.

We are asked by the propaganda and by those who profess to have made some promise to some one that now we relieve these people from surtaxes and keep faith with 4,499 people. Out of the 26,000,000 voters at the last election, I ask you how you are going to answer the question with whom you kept the faith?

Corporations making returns in 1918 numbered 317,579. Of these 115,518 reported no net income and 202,061 corporations reported of which 68,973 were below $2,000 net income, leaving 133,088 corporations that reported a total war-profits and excess-profits tax of $2,505,565,939 for 1918. Of that number 1,026 corporations contributed over $1,400,000,000, or nearly 55 per cent of the total. Those are the people whom we are asked to keep faith with principally. If such faith was pledged it ought to be kept, but no man living had power to pledge the country's faith to any such preposterous proposal. Now, I ask you, my colleagues, with 26,000,000 votes cast at the last election and this constant reiteration to "keep faith with the people," whom are you going to keep faith with? Will it be the 4,499 people who are going to pay the surtaxes in 1922 and these comparatively few corporations that are going to pay the bulk of the excess-profits taxes or will it be keeping faith with 26,000,000 voters, who place their confidence in the political party in power? We must decide. I say in all fairness that I do not want to do any injustice, and that suggestion was offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. MILLS], who just spoke; but when we date back to January 1, 1921, the excess-profits tax and the surtaxes, this, in effect, is what we do. The argument of practically every man who comes out for the repeal of the excess-profits tax has been, "We pass it on; we collect it from the consumer." In other words, we have been asked to repeal the tax because it is only an additional burden to the consumer, who finally pays it. Well, if that be true—and I do not concede it—but if it be true, then these corporations have collected thus far in the calendar year 1921 most of the $450,000,000 from consumers that will be paid from excess-profits taxes. These corporations have collected it from the people, according to their contention, and have passed it on to the consumer and have put it into their pockets, waiting for the tax collector, to whom they expect to pay it at the end of the year.

Now, under the proposition of the gentleman from New York [Mr. MILLS] and others we are asked to go back to the 1st of January, 1921, and allow these corporations to keep that money which they say they have collected by passing on the tax to the consumer, money which they ought to pay to the Government. What an absurdity. That is no justification for the action we took the other day, the only sensible action that it is possible to take, although I contend the excess-profits tax is a just tax and ought not to be repealed, but might properly be amended. What is true of that tax is true to a certain extent of the high surtaxes, which bring, in 1921, $90,000,000, which we are asked to repeal as of January 1, 1921. The charge is that if you do not reduce the surtaxes the money is going to be invested in tax-exempt securities; but there is $90,000,000 in taxes the principal of which has not been invested in tax-exempt securities and that will be collected this year and paid to the Government under the law. Why date it back to January 1, 1921, when the law has specifically fixed the tax, and it is a tax based on ability to pay? I say, why should it not be collected? Why should this tax be repealed when it is shown that it is bringing in good revenues and is paid by those best able to pay from their large wealth?

LOSSES IN REVENUE.

Mr. Chairman, it is claimed that the income and excess-profits tax has grown less and those who favor their repeal speak gleefully of that reduction. Of course, tax collections have decreased, and as tax dodging and investing in tax-free securities and other methods are devised it is possible that a further decrease may result, but in England, France, Germany, and other countries where they raise several times as much tax as we do proportionately, the tax is paid, and when not paid, then the alternative of a capital tax is certain to reach wealth whoever acknowledges ownership. It is a certain means of securing money to run the Government, and it does not mean getting alms from wealth or manna from heaven. It is simply a just way of asking those who have the wealth and who refuse to contribute proportionately to the maintenance of the Government of which they are a part to meet their obligations as good citizens. If they can secure better protection and better rates of taxation elsewhere, of course, the ships are sailing and like the Astors they will be welcome elsewhere, but it would seem that they should prefer to remain here and do their part.

Mr. Chairman, I feel that this question of propaganda in regard to taxes ought to be momentarily commented upon. Practically every large paper in the country, every influential paper—and they are very powerful—has demanded the repeal of these taxes affecting excess profits and high surtaxes. Those in positions of power speak through these papers, and they speak often and loud to legislators who are supposed to heed the voice of warning. The 26,000,000 voters back home have but little voice. They have but very little influence. They have but very few to speak for them. Who can be heard against such odds? I do not assume to be one of these and am only voicing a protest against yielding to those whose principal argument is against paying any taxes they can escape. As the chairman of our committee, Mr. FORDNEY, said one day, "The very interesting thing about our hearings is that every man who comes before us wants to have the tax shifted to the other fellow." And that is true here. I have had a number of tax experts in my office from the Treasury Department, and every one of them says that the excess-profits tax is an honest, fair, and just tax, because it is a tax on the ability to pay. Taxes on profits? Do you want no limitation of profits? What can be fairer than excepting 8 per cent profits and $3,000 exemption before the tax applies? If the rate is not sufficient increase it, but the principle is sound.

Why should we not say to a man, "Within reason you may make a profit without tax, but when you make large profits then you pay over part in taxes and help the poor fellows who can not pay any tax." When the Government must have revenues, what better means can be found of levying taxes than on ability to pay as measured by profits? The New York gentleman referred to the people back in the agricultural districts. Yes; I know them. I know the conditions there. I know what confronts the farmer. If he can not pay his taxes on his home, what does the tax collector do? He sells the home out from over the farmer's head for taxes whether he can pay the taxes or not. That is the situation with the man who pays more taxes, ten times over according to ability to pay, than those who ride in limousines and who come here and ask for this relief from the excess-profit tax and high surtaxes.

HOW TAXES HIT THE FARMER.

These men in the agricultural districts can not pay. They can not get their stock to market to-day. They are confronted with high transportation charges, and they pay a tax on every bushel of grain and every pound of meat they get to market. Sometimes the charges eat up the product. They pay school taxes, town taxes, county taxes, State taxes, and they pay if they have any property in sight. They are the people who are asked to pay a consumption tax on everything they eat, drink, and wear. They are the people without a powerful press to insist on a repeal of their taxes; they are the people who can not talk, nor have they an enormous propaganda to express their demands. It was a war propaganda at first that gave the press and the power controlling a part of the press a weapon that has been wielded successfully since the war. The large influential papers swung in with the war propaganda. Then they took up this propaganda for the repeal of the excess-profit tax and to reduce the surtaxes. We know that they are very influential, very strong, and those they represent are powerful. The committee has yielded to this proposition. The argument has been very hard, and so in this bill we have here repealed the excess-profit tax and the surtaxes from January 1, 1922. I think it is wrong. We have lost $540,000,000 through that proposition. We are levying to-day in this bill a flat tax of 12½ per cent, which does injustice, as we are informed, to the small corporations. Of course, every tax will necessarily do injustice, but let us study the effect of the 2½ per cent flat tax substitute which we are enacting in place of the excess-profits tax to be repealed. Remember the excess-profits tax will bring in $450,000,000 in a poor business year of 1921, whereas Secretary Mellon estimates a 2½ per cent increase flat tax on corporations at only $111,250,000, or less than one-quarter of the amount lost to the Treasury.

HOW THE 2½ PER CENT FLAT TAX WORKS.

I have received a statement of comparative taxes to corporations based on the existing excess profits tax law and the proposed 2½ per cent increase that is illuminating. It is prepared by Mr. Beck, an accountant, and according to Treasury experts the figures are accurate:

On an invested capital of $10,000 it shows that at 25 per cent income the tax under the present law will be $50 and under the bill it will be $62.50. With a 33½ per cent profit the tax of $133.33 is raised to $166.67.

On $20,000 capital, 15 per cent profit, tax of $100 is raised to $125.
On $50,000 capital, 10 per cent profit, tax of $300 is raised to $375.
On $100,000 capital, 5 per cent profit, tax of $300 is raised to $375.
On $100,000 capital, 10 per cent profit, tax of $800 is raised to $1,000.

On $150,000 capital, 5 per cent profit, tax of $550 is raised to $687.50.

On $150,000 capital, 10 per cent profit, tax of $1,300 is raised to $1,625.

On $200,000 capital, 5 per cent profit, tax of $800 is raised to $1,000.

On $200,000 capital, 10 per cent profit, tax of $1,980 is raised to $2,250.

On $500,000 capital, 5 per cent profit, tax of $2,300 is reduced to $1,625.

On $500,000 capital, 10 per cent profit, tax of $6,060 is reduced to $6,000.

On $1,000,000 capital, 5 per cent profit, tax of $4,800 is raised to $6,000.

On $1,000,000 capital, 10 per cent profit, tax of $12,860 is reduced to $12,250.

The foregoing rates indicate the effect of the 2½ per cent tax which it is contended will strike the smaller corporations which, without exception, pay an increase on ordinary rates of profit, while all corporations of $500,000 or over making 10 per cent will pay less taxes. For illustration, at 20 per cent income the tax in this company is reduced from $20,060 to $12,250, and at 25 per cent its tax is lowered from $31,560 to $15,375.

With an annual loss of $338,000,000 through substitution of the 2½ per cent tax for the excess-profits tax, the above figures speak for themselves.

Without reference to profits, a flat tax is adopted that reduces the tax paid by large corporations on large profits, whereas the excess-profits tax is graduated to divide the profits based on rate of increase. I can not conceive how that is right in principle.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The gentleman is making a very interesting argument, and I would like to ask him what does he say about the excess profits and large surtaxes being responsible for the present condition of business?

Mr. FREAR. Not in the slightest degree, in my judgment. I do not believe a single wheel will be started by taking off all such taxes. Here is the trouble: We have been through a horrible war, lost millions of men and billions of property. The same condition is true of Great Britain, of France, and of all the other countries except Germany, and they are all suffering under as heavy taxation as is this country. Overproduction, deflation, high costs of everything, excessive freights, and a spirit of profiteering that clings to the retail trade are among reasons ascribed by Treasury experts to a condition that is world-wide. We must raise taxes and we must meet Government obligations, and we can never return to prewar conditions. Let me ask the gentleman, does he suppose that when this bill passes with the repeal of the excess-profits taxes that these men so relieved are going right out and put their money into business unless they can see a profit?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I thought it would help business to repeal the excess-profits tax.

BUSINESS NOT DEPENDENT ON TAXES.

Mr. FREAR. It will help business to the same degree as repealing the tax on freight. We are repealing the 3 per cent tax on freight in this bill, and, as you heard the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] say, the railroads raised freight rates 85 per cent since the war began. A reduction in freight rates will be helpful to trade, particularly in the manufacturing business, but the 3 per cent tax is insignificant in comparison. It is urged constantly, like everything else, that we must repeal excess-profits taxes and surtaxes because they were passed on to the consumer. When deflation came, then they said they were taking their money out of business because of the tax. Every man is taking his money out of business unless he can make a profit, and it is business and not taxes that is to blame. This slight tax comparatively has very little to do with it, in my judgment, because conditions are the same the world over; conditions are not due to taxes. They are due to natural conditions, high transportation, laws affecting business, preventing men from shipping products, and other fundamental causes of the present world depression. Those are the reasons for present conditions, and we can not change conditions by pulling at our boot straps or remitting all taxes, if that were possible.

Mr. Chairman, I am not satisfied with this bill and have registered many objections in committee to its terms and have tried to make it better according to my judgment. It has objectionable features, but I am going to vote for it, for I think it is better than the present law, due to the many small, exasperating taxes that the country hopes to have repealed. I know that the committee has worked faithfully for seven months, and the wonder to me is that we managed to sit that length of time in one room together. Most of the committee were good-natured and put up with the rest of us. The chairman has done a good work; he has worked day and night, and we have brought in this bill. It is not a perfect bill; we know that, but it has many things to commend it to the country.

Mr. COCKRAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FREAR. I will.

Mr. COCKRAN. I have listened attentively to every speech and have failed to get light on one subject. What does the gentleman calculate will be the total diminution of revenue by reason of these changes?

Mr. FREAR. I think the chairman gave the amount as seven hundred and ninety million and some odd thousand dollars. That was the reduction.

Mr. COCKRAN. That is predicated upon the fact that the business of the country will remain the same as last year.

Mr. FREAR. I am not sure of that. It is the Treasury estimate.

Mr. COCKRAN. Well, that is very important.

Mr. FREAR. So many elements enter into it; for instance, a certain amount is going to be derived from the sale of surplus war goods. We are going to get more out of the back taxes, according to estimates, and we expect to get money from various sources that are not affected by general business conditions.

Mr. COCKRAN. Assuming that the expectation is disappointing and that there should be a continued depression in business the same as there has been for three months, where, then, do you think the revenue of the country would stand with respect to the requirements?

Mr. FREAR. I have not the information, and no one can give more than an estimate based on past experience.

Mr. COCKRAN. Has the committee any information about it?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. If the gentleman from Wisconsin will permit, in the bill as now drawn we have a margin of two hundred millions, and, after all, we anticipate that the payments to the railroads and other items will not be so large.

Mr. COCKRAN. Is any provision made in the bill in case that expectation should be disappointed? I see there are a number of calculations, expectations, and anticipations—a general Micawberous attitude on the part of the majority. Suppose these expectations be disappointed, has any contemplation been made at all of the possibility of supplying the deficiency?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I have just stated that the bill carries an ample margin.

Mr. COCKRAN. Two hundred million dollars?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. More than that.

Mr. COCKRAN. How much more than that? The gentleman stated $200,000,000?

Mr. FREAR. May I ask both gentlemen not to take up the rest of my time?

Mr. COCKRAN. I wanted to get some light on the subject.

Mr. FREAR. I will say that the $200,000,000 margin was put there within the last two or three days, and made possible because of the dating of the $540,000,000 as of the 1st day of January, 1922, instead of 1921, in so far as the repeal of the excess-profits tax and the surtax are concerned. We managed through the conference to retain that tax for the present year.

Mr. COCKRAN. And that is, I understand, the margin on the $4,000,000,000 requirement.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, just a word to the gentleman from New York. The committee in making its estimate has not figured on the same total net income as was received in 1920. The total net income of corporations in 1920 was something like $8,000,000,000. For the year 1921 we are figuring on a net corporation income of $4,800,000,000, as I remember it. That is, we figure on the receipt of only a little more than half the amount of net income this year that was received last year.

Mr. FREAR. Of course, it must necessarily be according to estimates. If the gentleman from New York will examine the estimates of Secretary Houston, offered November 20, 1920—about nine months ago—which, I think, were illuminating, he will find that Secretary Houston's estimates of expenses were about $4,900,000,000, and expenditures of about $4,700,000,000, with about $200,000,000 for a margin, as I now remember the figures. I am frank to say that I agree with the suggestion the gentleman from New York seems to make—that we ought to have as large a margin as we safely can go on. I feel that there ought not to be any reason for doubt or for failure to meet all proper obligations, even though the taxes left a good margin for the Treasury to go on, and I have so stated in my additional views found in the report.

I offer estimates that may be of value in this connection:

Secretary Mellon, August 11, 1921, gave estimates of fiscal year income, as follows:

Normal income tax	$470,000,000
Income surtaxes	380,000,000
10 per cent corporation tax	445,000,000
Additional 2½ per cent corporation tax	111,250,000
Back tax collections	300,000,000
Miscellaneous internal revenue	1,293,750,000

3,000,000,000

Other revenues:

Customs, new law	370,000,000
Salvage	200,000,000
Other miscellaneous	287,643,000

857,643,000

Additional 2½ per cent corporation tax (inserted by the committee)

111,250,000

968,893,000

Total revenue

The statement has been materially modified by committee changes in the bill.

In this connection I quote from Secretary of the Treasury Houston's report, November 20, 1920 (p. 276), estimated 1922 Government receipts, $4,919,730,000; expenditures (p. 278), $4,363,274,092. Foreign loans approximating $10,000,000,000 will require long extensions and afford no immediate relief.

It is impossible in a few words briefly to indicate different estimates or work of the committee as represented in the present revenue bill. Only by extraordinary efforts can expenditures be kept below estimated receipts, and in so doing a policy must be adopted of continuing new accounts with floating debt items that were to have been paid out of current receipts.

Mr. Chairman, I want to thank the members of the committee for what they have done in helping to bring out this bill. I think the House owes them a debt of gratitude. I am not entirely satisfied with the bill, but I believe it is as good a bill as we could bring out in view of all of the conditions that exist and of the many opposing views that we tried to bring into agreement.

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FREAR. Yes; certainly, to my colleague from North Dakota.

Mr. YOUNG. I regret very much that I did not have the opportunity of hearing all of the gentleman's remarks. Does the gentleman intend to support the bill on the final vote?

Mr. FREAR. I have so stated, and I am perfectly willing to put myself on record as intending to vote for the bill, because I believe it is as good a bill as we could bring out. I am willing to accept the bill, because I know the purpose of those engaged in its make-up has been to do the best they can for the people, and I know they are conscientious and that they believe that we have a safe margin of revenues to go on, although I have not been in agreement on that point.

Mr. YOUNG. I make the inquiry upon the theory that it has been changed in so many respects in accordance with the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. FREAR. I trust that the changes, if any, that were made through my influence have not been to the injury of the bill. I am sure the gentleman believes they may have secured some improvement, and I have stated to many persons that I feel the gentleman from North Dakota has offered several important and desirable proposals that were adopted by the committee.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FREAR. Yes; certainly, to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. SEARS. I understood the gentleman to say that this bill reduces taxes about $736,000,000.

Mr. FREAR. About $790,000,000 according to the report. I said that was the statement given out.

Mr. SEARS. In last night's Evening Star I noticed the statement that four hundred and some-odd million dollars of this would not become operative until 1923.

Mr. FREAR. I would not be able to give the gentleman the exact figures, but the report gives the data on which the bill stands.

Mr. LONDON. That appears from the report.

Mr. SEARS. If that is correct, that is after the elections in 1922.

Mr. FREAR. I am willing to allow the report to stand as it is. I did not write the report, although I did write the additional views which express my own ideas on the bill.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FREAR. Yes; certainly.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The gentleman from North Dakota referred to some changes made in the bill. What were those changes?

Mr. FREAR. One of the changes I think the gentleman from North Dakota had reference to was a change in the date with respect to when the repeal of the excess-profits tax and the surtaxes would become operative, from 1921 to 1922. That saves over $300,000,000 to the Treasury, net over the proposed corporation flat tax.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Then I do not understand there have been any changes made in the bill since it was introduced?

Mr. FREAR. No; none to my knowledge; that was offered the day before the bill was introduced. None, so far as I know; no important changes.

Mr. CROWTHER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FREAR. I will.

Mr. CROWTHER. In regard to the suggestion that we ought to have as large a balance as possible that we may with honor and integrity keep the obligations of American citizens in this matter of the war debt, does not the gentleman think that the people of the country who are to pay this would like to have at least a hint as to when England is going to pay the $10,000,000 which she owes, the interest on the money and so forth?

Mr. FREAR. I have had that question asked me frequently.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FREAR. I would like five minutes in which to answer the question.

Mr. FORDNEY. I yield the gentleman five additional minutes.

Mr. FREAR. I will say I have often thought this was the proper answer. How are you going to collect that money from foreign Governments if they do not pay? Are you going to send our Army and our Navy over there and make an effort to collect it? They are up against the same conditions that confront us. This is purely a business as well as an international proposition. We must urge payments but can not compel action that would affect our relations with foreign Governments. I have a good deal of sympathy for the Secretary of the Treasury, although I do not believe in giving entire power to the Secretary of the Treasury to extend these loans, as is proposed by a pending resolution. I said that from the start. I believe it is a question where we have got to allow that matter to work itself out with the best pressure that can be brought to bear upon the foreign Governments to pay their debts, and I believe the Senate and House ought to be represented when such terms and loan negotiations are had, and we should then pass upon those terms.

Mr. LONDON. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. FREAR. Yes; certainly.

Mr. LONDON. Are not the people more interested in the resumption of trade than in the payment of the debt, the resumption of trade throughout the world?

Mr. FREAR. Unquestionably I think that is true. And let me say, gentlemen, these are practical economic questions and they have very little relation to politics; I think we all are joined together in this purpose to help business conditions and to benefit the people, because we are all anxious for prosperity to return no matter what administration it comes under. Gentlemen, I thank you. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman yields back four minutes.

Mr. COLLIER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LONDON].

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, the proposed bill is a deserving partner of the tariff bill. Of course, all taxes are ultimately paid by the men who work. The great majority of those who work and who render useful service to society are poor and can ill afford to have a substantial share of their earnings spent for taxes.

A tax means that portion of the income of society which goes to maintain the Government. We are all interested in having as little government as possible and that the Government should cost as little as possible. I say we are all interested; we should be all interested.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LONDON. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I suppose that statement is made on the assumption that everybody works?

Mr. LONDON. Well, yes; but some people work other people. [Laughter and applause.] And it is this privileged group that is responsible for the removal of the excess-profits tax. Those who are opposed to an inheritance tax and those who are opposed to a surtax belong to the group of people who work all other people all the time. [Applause.] A good deal has been said here by the chairman of the committee [Mr. FORDNEY] about the waste of money during the war, as if war itself were not the worst form of waste. For every real hero, for every man capable of martyrdom, that war produces it calls forth thousands of lip patriots and thousands of rogues ready to take advantage of the man who sacrifices himself. It has been so in every war. Along with the real hero, war brings to the surface every profiteer, every scoundrel, every blackguard, every hypocrite. Nothing shows so much the moral bankruptcy of plutocracy as war does. During the saddest crisis of this country and of the world American plutocracy has been robbing the American people and has been exploiting the Government under whose flag their own boys were fighting in the trenches.

In the histories of the United States there is related the incident which orators refer to so frequently of the Revolutionary boys under Washington marching barefooted at Valley Forge. Let it be explained that the contractors of that day supplied to the Revolutionary soldiers shoes with paper soles instead of leather soles, so that when they stepped on the ice the soles stuck to it. One of our best American historians explains the period of hideous corruption that followed the Civil War by the fact that the noblest men on both sides fell on the battle field and the rascals survived. And there is a great deal of truth in it.

I told you a few days ago about the clever quip of Napoleon, who wrote to the Directory:

Gentlemen, you assumed that our commissaries would do some stealing, but you also took for granted that they would send some supplies to the army. They did the stealing, but did not send supplies.

In this last war the stealing, the thievery, the plundering was nonpartisan, except that the Republicans, who have a much larger number of plutocrats, have gotten away with the lion's share of it. I wonder how much of it went into the Republican campaign fund.

Of course, plutocracy is corrupt. It develops kleptomania instead of a national conscience.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The gentleman would not have been in favor of going to war, even though the conditions were otherwise?

Mr. LONDON. What has my vote against the war to do with stealing, I would like to know. What has it to do with the cost-plus contract? I remember that during the war the gentleman from Michigan asked me whether I favored a strike in the trenches, and I said, "No." He asked, "Why not?" and I said I would give the reason why. At the front and in the trenches the captain in advance of his boys exposes his breast to the enemy, while in the industrial world the captain rifles the pockets of the soldier. That is the difference. Of course, you always put up the flag to protect all rascality. I am glad to see that the gentleman who asked that question is laughing.

Now, my colleague from New York [Mr. MILLS] opposes, of course, an inheritance tax.

He is radically opposed to it, and he cites the experiences of Italy, England, France, and what not. From the report of the Commission on Industrial Relations, which has been submerged by the war, it appears that 2 per cent of the American people own 65 per cent of the wealth. Do you realize what a danger it is to a democracy? Democracy, genuine democracy, social democracy, is not animated by envy of the rich. There is nothing in wealth, there is nothing in expensive dress or jewelry that gives meaning to life. It is the fact that 2 per cent of the people control 65 per cent of the means of livelihood of the entire people that constitutes the danger. These 2 per cent control the greater part of the factories, mines, plants, railroads, and banks of the country, and that makes them the ruling class. And what is most dangerous is that this financial aristocracy, through its ownership of the press and its control of colleges, shapes public opinion and molds our legislation.

You have your corrupt practices act. What does it amount to? You confine your Senators to the expenditure of $10,000 within a State, but what about a man who has at his service powerful newspapers? He is not reached by the corrupt practices act. Through the press the plutocrat feeds the people every day with falsehoods, and is not a bit less of a menace than the man who supplies adulterated food. Democracy can not live under the rule of these large fortunes. They amuse me, those defenders of plutocracy. They speak of the desire for gold as the only inspiration of the human race. They forget that commercialism in its present sense is comparatively recent. What is known as the industrial revolution is not more than 150 years old. We forget that less than 150 years ago the commercial class was treated with contempt.

Money making in the modern sense is something more than a mere desire for gold. In the intense industrial struggle which has assumed gigantic proportions and which is frequently international in its scope, one has to fight to get on top if he does not want to be crushed.

The plutocrat does not own his gold. He is owned by it.

I said at the very outset of my remarks that the poor man ultimately pays all taxes, and that the rich man always finds a way of shifting the burden upon the poor. While that is true, it is also true that the rich man does not want to pay the tax in the first instance.

The ruling classes have always tried to make the poor pay for the privilege of being ruled.

Just now every family of five persons pays in the neighborhood of $300 a year in taxes.

The average man who does not have to make payment to the collector of revenue does not realize that he pays taxes. He does not know that he pays the tax every time he buys an article, and that the man who sells him the article charges him so much more because he has to send his check to the collector.

The present burden under which the people are groaning is primarily due to the war. So far as taxation is concerned, we are still on a war footing. The annual charge for interest on the war debt is close to a billion dollars. The expenses for the Army and Navy are bigger than they were before the war.

During the war this Government conscripted the young men of the country and sent them to the trenches. The Government should not hesitate to make those who can afford it pay for the expense of the war. The wealth of plutocracy is certainly not more sacred than the lives of the people. Enough large fortunes have been accumulated to wipe out the entire public debt.

Every time we permit the transmission of millions of dollars by inheritance we help to perpetuate the most dangerous, the most contemptible, kind of aristocracy—the aristocracy of cash. The accumulated fortunes of the rich represent the incorporated labor of millions of men. These fortunes are the product of the toil of the worker of the factory, of the mine, and of the fields. It is the product of the brain of the inventor. It is the creation of the scholar. It is a social product; it is social property and a social trust. It is too dangerous a power to be wielded by the few. Through taxation these large fortunes should be taken hold of by the State to be used by the community as a social fund for the promotion of the welfare of the entire Nation.

Instead of repealing the surtax and the excess-profits tax, we should increase them. A tax on land values and an inheritance tax large enough to restore to the people what in truth belongs to them should be adopted as a part of our taxation program.

I desire to call your attention to another and what I consider a more important aspect of the problem of taxation, namely, the reckless waste of resources in our modern society.

The iniquity of our present industrial system, which we Socialists refer to as the capitalistic system, lies principally in its nonsocial and antisocial character. Its defenders argue that it promotes progress and civilization. The truth is that the commercial classes have not produced a single poet, artist, sculptor, philosopher, or scholar of note. Such inventions as capitalism has stimulated are minor adaptations of great principles, enunciated by profound thinkers, whom the commercial world has contemptuously treated as worthless dreamers.

The money seeker can not enter the higher realms of human endeavor. He is incapable of taking a national or a social view of things. He has no regard for the future. What he is interested in is immediate profit. That is why the profit system is so wasteful of the real wealth of the Nation; is so destructive of human and natural resources.

This lack of vision reflects itself in our legislation.

With industry dislocated, with millions of men out of employment, there have been introduced 4,000 bills for the distribution of the trophies of war. We are to give to the mother who has lost a boy on the fields of France a button from the vest of a Bavarian soldier as a souvenir and reward. The Secretary of Labor in the statement which he has just submitted to the Senate estimates the number of unemployed as nearly 6,000,000. What a calamity. What an appalling waste of human energy, of human life itself. This idle industrial army means an economic loss of at least $60,000,000 daily, if one is to speak in terms of dollars only.

If I as a Socialist were to suggest, in order to relieve the situation, the undertaking of public works, or that the War Finance Corporation be utilized in order to give employment, just as you are trying to help the agriculturists through the War Finance Corporation—or saying that you are trying to help them, which would be more nearly correct [laughter]—you would deride me as one who seeks to subvert our Government.

When our boys were examined for the draft what did we find?

We found that more than 30 per cent, more than thirty out of every hundred, were unfit, physically unfit, for service. So little regard did we pay to the richest of all our assets, our human assets.

I have before me a bulletin of the department of health of New York. It was prepared by a conservative officer of the city of New York in 1919. He says:

At the present time one child out of every five in New York City is so seriously undernourished as to demand immediate attention, while two additional children out of every five are on the borderland between good health and undernourishment.

In May, 1919, wages reached their highest point. Think of the waste of human material and human resources in the failure to take up the problem of child welfare. Private capital, the aristocracy of cash, can not be trusted with problems that interest the entire society.

Take our forests. See what they have done with our forests. They have destroyed them. They have given no care for the next day. Five-sixths of our forests have been completely destroyed. Here is what Mr. Pinchot, the best authority on the subject, said on March 26, 1921. I read part of his letter:

Five-sixths of the original timber is gone. Forest devastation has converted timberlands as large as the forests of all Europe (excluding Russia) into barren, idle wastes, and this desolation is spreading at the rate of 3,000,000 acres a year. We are cutting what is left four times faster than it is being reproduced.

Four-fifths of the standing timber in America is in private hands. It is being destroyed as rapidly as ever. Half of the privately owned timber in this Nation is held by 250 owners. In the State of Washington, for example, five holders own nearly half of the privately owned standing timber in the State. This control in a few hands, the United States Forest Service tells us, "will steadily increase as timber depletion continues, approaching a natural monopoly in character."

The little group of big timberland owners has grown rich and powerful from forest devastation, and naturally does not want it stopped. They are anxious rather to perpetuate the commercial advantage which their unregulated ownership of these huge forest areas brings with it. But they can do so only so long as they can stave off effective control of forest devastation.

We are threatened with a nation-wide famine of this indispensable material, complicated by a growing monopoly.

Let us take up the question of water power, and we will find there again that the failure to develop our water power involves a loss of at least $10,000,000,000.

The potential water power is variously estimated as not less than 60,000,000 horsepower, and as much as 300,000,000 by no less an authority than Steinmetz. Only 10,000,000 horsepower has so far been put to use, with a saving of 33,000,000 tons of coal annually. When one realizes that water power, unlike coal or oil, is not destroyed by use, he will see that the damage which we inflict upon ourselves by our indifference is incalculable.

The same is true of our waste of minerals.

When we come to agriculture, the very mainstay of the life of the Nation, we find that we utilize only half of the arable land of the United States. Boasting that we are the greatest in everything, our average yield per acre is less than one-half that of Germany, and not much more than one-third that of England.

Inadequate use of fertilizers, antiquated farming methods, the use of primitive implements, insufficient utilization of water resources for irrigation, all these things tend to keep down our agricultural output.

Have you ever stopped to think of the economic loss entailed by the presence of more than five and one-half millions of illiterates? The inefficiency of the illiterate is particularly striking in industry.

Former Secretary of the Interior Lane estimated that the country was losing through illiteracy $825,000,000 a year.

The average worker loses from 10 to 12 days a year from preventable diseases. Tuberculosis is largely a preventable disease.

The committee on elimination of waste in industry of the Federated American Engineering Societies submits as its judgment that the economic loss from preventable disease and post-ponable deaths is $1,800,000,000 annually.

I can not take up at this time the waste involved in useless occupations, in avoidable competition, bad management, and improper equipment, nor can I go into the question of reclamation of swamp lands, of irrigation, of preventing floods, of the utilization and extension of waterways. I can only point out the necessity of taking a national inventory. I can not undertake to make it.

What I would like to call to the attention of this Congress in considering this fiscal question of taxation is the throwing away of our resources, both human and material, both spiritual and economic, a waste that we should not be guilty of. Let us but learn to think in terms of national welfare and we will save in one year fifty times as much as we can possibly raise by any taxation measure. New problems have arisen in the world, problems that could not have been dreamed of by Jefferson and Washington. They could lay down principles only. They could give us a foundation only. It is for us to continue the work of building a free nation. [Applause.]

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. FESS, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having under consideration the bill (H. R. 8245) to reduce and equalize taxation and amend and simplify the revenue act of 1918, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

By Mr. CALDER:

A bill (S. 2428) for the relief of the Interstate Transportation Co.; and

A bill (S. 2429) for the relief of George Howell; to the Committee on Claims.

AMENDMENT OF THE NATIONAL PROHIBITION ACT.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President—

Mr. STERLING. If the Senator will yield, I desire to renew the motion that I made on yesterday that the Senate disagree to the amendments made by the House of Representatives to Senate amendments numbered 10, 15, and 32 to House bill 7294, known as the antibeer bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Dakota moves that the message from the House relative to House bill 7294, the bill referred to by him, be taken from the table and laid before the Senate.

Mr. STERLING. Yes; that is my motion.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I shall not oppose the motion unless it is going to lead to debate, in which case I should like to request the Senator to withhold his motion for the purpose of taking up the business which is before the Senate or which was before the Senate when we took a recess last night. If we are to have a long debate on the subject, with the probable result that we secured yesterday, I should object to it. I would like to know from the Senator what the situation is, in his opinion.

Mr. STERLING. I will say to the Senator from Michigan that I do not anticipate any debate at all. This is a mere formal matter in order that we may keep the record straight, in order that it might appear from the RECORD that the Senate disagrees to certain amendments made by the House to certain amendments of the Senate before the appointment of conferees on the part of the House, so that it may be certain from the RECORD itself that the amendments made by the House to the Senate amendments have been disagreed to and that the amendments made by the House are properly in conference; that is all.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I can not have any criticism of the Senator for making his motion at all. He has a perfect right to do so. I wish to submit to the Chair a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. If the motion of the Senator from South Dakota shall prevail it would displace the unfinished business which is now before the Senate, would it not? The Senator from South Dakota moves that the Senate disagree to certain House amendments to another bill, and, as I understand, the road bill is now before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will call the Senator's attention to paragraph 7, of Rule VII, which reads:

7. The Presiding Officer may at any time lay, and it shall be in order at any time for a Senator to move to lay, before the Senate any bill or other matter sent to the Senate by the President or the House of Representatives, and any question pending at that time shall be suspended for this purpose. Any motion so made shall be determined without debate.

The Chair would hold that it would not become the unfinished business, but that the unfinished business is merely suspended for the determination of this motion.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Very well. Then, do I understand that the motion made by the Senator is not debatable?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion to take the measure from the table is not debatable, but the motion to disagree to the House amendments, of course, would be debatable.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I wish to ask a question, not that it will have any bearing on the result of whatever may come out of the motion of the Senator from South Dakota, but with a view of ascertaining what the proper parliamentary motion is under the circumstances. The Senator moves to disagree to some amendments which the House made to the Senate amendments. Would not the proper motion, Mr. President, be for the Senate to insist upon its own amendments?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator ask that as a parliamentary question of the Chair?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It would be the view of the Chair that the parliamentary situation is this: The Senate passed a House bill with Senate amendments and at the same time requested a conference with the House. It must be assumed that it was done upon the theory that the House would disagree to the Senate amendments and that time would be saved by requesting a conference upon that assumption. The House, however, did not disagree to the Senate amendments, but amended and agreed. The Chair, therefore, is of the opinion that the two Houses have not yet reached a state of disagreement, but will have if the action of the Senator from South Dakota prevails.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Would not a state of disagreement arise if the Senate insisted upon its original amendments?

Mr. STERLING. If the Senate disagrees to the amendments of the House, is not that all that we should attempt in this motion—to disagree to the amendments of the House?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that if the motion of the Senator from South Dakota prevails it will then be in order to insist.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, has the Senate yet insisted upon the amendments that it made to the House bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The House has amended the Senate amendments with amendments, and the Senate up to this point has not acted upon the action of the House.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I understand that, but the Chair stated a moment ago that when the Senate amended the House bill it had requested a conference. That is so, but the RECORD shows that the Senate did not insist upon its amendments. It requested a conference without insisting upon its amendments.

Mr. STERLING. No; that was not the motion at least that was made. I do not know what the RECORD shows.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I do.

Mr. STERLING. I had the motion that I wished to make in mind before making it, and the motion was that the Senate insist on its amendments, request a conference, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I have looked at the RECORD. The Senator may have made a motion to insist, but the RECORD does not show it, and we go by the RECORD.

Mr. STERLING. I am very confident that those are the exact words used in making the motion. I did not examine the RECORD afterwards to see whether or not it appeared in that form.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I did; and if the RECORD is not corrected the RECORD is the record and the official record.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that he is informed that the RECORD shows that there was merely a request for a conference without insisting upon the Senate amendments.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. That is what I say.

Mr. STERLING. That may be. I am not disputing that fact, but I know the language I used.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under that record the House acted within its rights and properly in amending the Senate amendment; and therefore it seems to the Chair that the motion of the Senator from South Dakota is clearly in order.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I do not doubt that it is in order. I did not intend to make any point of order against it. I was wondering why that was made, rather than a motion to insist on the Senate amendments.

Mr. STERLING. I know that that was the motion, although the RECORD did not so get it. I had made the motion before.

Mr. LODGE. It is the customary motion.

Mr. STERLING. Yes.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. STERLING. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. LODGE. The CONGRESSIONAL RECORD does not bind, as I understand. There is only one official record of this body, and that is the Journal. Now, does the Journal show that motion in the same way? I presume it does.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that the Journal does not show that a motion was made to insist.

Mr. LODGE. That, of course, is the only official record.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. Can the two be included in the one motion—that the Senate disagree to the House amendments and insist upon the amendments of the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is willing to be corrected, but the Chair's first impression would be that the motion would be in order, but is a divisible motion.

Mr. STERLING. I make that motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that, of course, if the motion to insist should be carried it would have to go back to the House. It would not go to conference.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Let me ask the Senator a question. The Senator states that he makes the motion so that the record may be straight. May I ask him what progress the conference committee has made?

Mr. STERLING. The conference committee are in disagreement yet upon just one amendment, and I think there is a probability that they will reach an agreement to-day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state, if he may, his understanding of the parliamentary situation, namely, that if the motion to disagree shall prevail, without any further motion the conferees will have immediate jurisdiction of the papers, and can proceed to conference. If the motion to insist shall be made and prevail the matter will have to go back to the House before the conferees can assume jurisdiction.

Mr. STERLING. I hope some confidence will be put in the conferees on the part of the Senate, and that the motion will be simply that there be a disagreement to the amendments made by the House.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. BROUSSARD. What would be the parliamentary situation if the Senate did not act favorably on this motion? Would that have the effect of agreeing to the House amendments?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would prefer, because it will require some time, to wait until that matter comes up and he has an opportunity to examine the question.

Mr. BROUSSARD. I am sure that a great many Senators would be guided by a knowledge of what would be the rule with the matter in such a condition.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is not prepared to express an opinion at this time upon that question.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, may I be allowed a word on that subject?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. WARREN. When the pending motion carries, that puts it in the hands of the conferees. Then a motion of the Senate to instruct those conferees does instruct, if it carries.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes.

Mr. WARREN. But it does not instruct them in any way unless the Senate, by a majority vote, may so instruct them.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, is the bill in conference now? I understand that the conferees have agreed upon all except one matter, and yet apparently, from the motion of the Senator from South Dakota, the bill has not yet been sent to conference.

Mr. STERLING. I will say to the Senator that the bill is in conference; but in order that the record may be straight with reference to the authority and jurisdiction of the conferees now upon these particular amendments this motion is made. We have been in conference in regard to other amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator from South Dakota that the bill can not be in conference, because the conferees can not act without the papers, and the papers are upon the Secretary's desk.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Would it be unparliamentary to ask where the bill is and what situation it is in?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is here in the Senate, upon the Secretary's desk, and the Senator from South Dakota has now moved to take it up, and that is the motion before the Senate.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I supposed it had been taken up. I supposed the motion now was to disagree.

Mr. STERLING. To take it up for the purpose of making the motion to disagree. That is the object in taking it up.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The Senator has already moved to disagree.

Mr. STERLING. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The first question that the Chair will put to the Senate is, Shall the Senate proceed to the consideration of this bill?

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7294) supplemental to the national prohibition act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Dakota now moves that the Senate shall insist—

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. That the Senate disagree to the amendments of the House to its amendments numbered 10, 15, and 32.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon the motion of the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, does not the Senator propose to disagree to the House amendment to the Senate amendment known as No. 32?

Mr. STERLING. Certainly. That is involved in this motion.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Judging from the three amendments mentioned by the Secretary, it was not.

Mr. STERLING. Amendments numbered 10, 15, and 32 are the amendments in disagreement.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, if the motion to disagree prevails, those papers will remain here, because there is no direction to send them anywhere. Is not that the case, without some further motion?

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would be of the opinion that if the motion to disagree should prevail, the papers would go back to the House of Representatives, and the House of Representatives would have an opportunity to recede.

Mr. LODGE. Suppose the motion to disagree should fail?

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Oh, if it should fail?

Mr. LODGE. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Then the matter would go to conference, the two Houses being in full disagreement.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me at this point?

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator will allow me just a moment, suppose the motion to disagree should fail?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is the same question that the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD] put to the Chair. To be very frank, the Chair is familiar with the rule of the House of Representatives upon that question, but he is not familiar with the rule of the Senate, and he would like to be advised with reference to it when it comes up.

Mr. LODGE. My object in making the inquiry is that I think the Senate ought to know the effect of its vote. Now, the papers are here.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will again state that the Chair is not prepared to express an opinion upon that question, and will have to rule upon it when it arises.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, if the Senator from South Dakota will yield to me for a moment, surely on this important matter there should be no mystifying; and I do not assert that anyone is attempting to mystify. There should be no underbrush to be cleared away. Why can not the usual motion, which has been made for one hundred and thirty-odd years in such cases, be made in this case as in all others; to wit, that the Senate insist upon its amendments—

Mr. LODGE. That is the proper motion.

Mr. ASHURST. Ask a conference with the House, and that the Chair appoint the conferees? Then there is no complexity. Then he who runs may read, and possibly he who reads will run; but certainly a babe in the woods will know what we are doing. There will be nothing under cover. There can be no camouflage. We have disagreed to many House amendments, we have asked for a conference, and we have insisted on our own amendments. We insist on our own amendments because we are not children making mud pies. We do not make an amendment to-day and disagree to it to-morrow. This is the Senate of the United States, about the business of the people, and not making mud pies. An amendment is a serious thing. Therefore, why does not the Senator—who is a direct and a very useful Senator—make the motion that always is made? Why adopt this course that is zigzag, that is incomprehensible to some intellects, my own included?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator from Arizona that what makes the difficulty in the situation is that the Senate has already requested a conference, and the conferees have been appointed.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senate has already requested a conference. That is quite true, because I happen to be a humble member of the conference, or was; and, of course, I assume that there was a conference or I would not have been called in; but now we are told that there are some amendments as to which we doubt whether they are in conference or not. The papers are here, but the conference is called. Let us have no mystification about this or any other question. Let us have a square-up, man-fashion contest, moved in the usual way. Let all the amendments be before the conferees, and let the Senate adopt the usual motion.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, it does not seem to me that there is any particular mystification about this, except as Senators mystify it or seek to mystify it. Conferees were appointed upon the part of the Senate when the bill passed the Senate with 32 amendments, and I suppose the conferees on the part of the Senate thereby would have jurisdiction to consider all amendments. Then the bill goes to the House, and the House itself, after conferees have been appointed here, considers the bill and makes amendments to certain Senate amendments. Is it not the action here simply to disagree to these amendments made by the House since our conferees were appointed? Having disagreed, will not the conferees originally appointed by the Senate have jurisdiction, if this motion prevails, to disagree to these amendments made by the House, and would not the papers then go to the conferees who have been appointed? I have here the record made in the Senate of the appointment of its conferees and the record made by the House in appointing its conferees.

Mr. LODGE. My impression is that when the Senator made his motion he made the usual motion to insist, and I am surprised at the Record, I confess.

Mr. STERLING. I am surprised at such a record, if that is the Record.

Mr. LODGE. Did not the Senator include also the usual sentence asking a conference with the House?

Mr. STERLING. Certainly. The motion was in words as follows, Mr. President, that the Senate insist upon its amendments made to House bill 7294, that it request a conference, and that the Chair appoint conferees on the part of the Senate. That was the motion.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD does not so state it. I looked at it yesterday.

Mr. LODGE. How did the conferees come to be appointed? Mr. BRANDEGEE. I suppose that if the Senator said what the Record indicated he did—

Mr. LODGE. Where is the Record? What does it say?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. It is right here.

Mr. ASHURST. It is found on page 4742 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of August 8.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The Senator requested a conference, and the Senate voted.

Mr. LODGE. Let us have what purports to be the Record.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I am not objecting to the Senator finding it. I wanted to ask the Chair if the motion to insist upon the Senate amendments would take precedence of a motion to disagree to the House amendment to the Senate amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of the opinion that it would not.

Mr. LODGE. Here is the Record:

Mr. STERLING. I move that the Senate request a conference with the House of Representatives upon the bill and amendments, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

There was a request for the appointment of conferees, and, of course, there could be a request for the appointment of conferees only if there was an insistence on the part of the Senate.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. There was no motion to insist upon the Senate amendments.

Mr. LODGE. It is left out of the Record.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I do not know but that it was left out of the motion, too.

Mr. LODGE. I do not think it was. I heard the Senator make the motion, and I think it was the usual motion.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. That is not my recollection about it.

Mr. STERLING. It was not left out of the motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon the motion of the Senator from South Dakota to disagree to the amendments of the House to the Senate amendments, which have been stated by the Secretary.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I inquire of the Senator from South Dakota whether those various amendments which he is asking the Senate now to disagree to have been presented to the Senate seriatim, with an opportunity afforded us to vote separately upon them? It is possible that some of those amendments we might desire to accede to, and if his motion prevails, I understand it would preclude the possibility of a consideration of any of those amendments separately.

Mr. STERLING. Certainly; that is what it involves, a disagreement.

Mr. KING. Is the Senate now willing to commit itself to the entire program of the Senator, and assent to what his motion implies, that we disagree to all those amendments? I should like to know what they are, so that I could vote intelligently. I might be willing to agree to some and I might disagree to others. Is the Senator unwilling that we may take that course?

Mr. STERLING. No; that is not involved in the motion. I am proceeding upon the very theory on which the conferees were originally appointed on the part of the Senate, supposing that the Senate desired that conferees should stand by the amendments made. The amendments made by the House are contrary to the amendments made by the Senate, and I supposed as a matter of course that the Senate would disagree to the amendments made by the House.

Mr. KING. Then, as I understand the Senator's position, it is that the action of the House is a mutilation of the action of the Senate as to all amendments which we have made, and the Senator's motion is now that we adhere to the position which we formerly took, and disagree to the position taken by the House?

Mr. STERLING. Certainly, that we disagree to the amendments made by the House, because they are not in conformity with the amendments made by the Senate.

Mr. KING. The Senator thinks the House has not improved the Senate amendment?

Mr. STERLING. That is it.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I call the attention of the Senate to amendment No. 32. The Senate passed the antibeer bill which precludes the manufacture of vinous, spirituous, and malt liquors for beverage purposes, and yet, if the Senate should agree to the House substitute for this amendment it would be lawful to manufacture vinous, spirituous, and malt liquors for beverage purposes in the home. In other words, I believe if the House amendment on this point were adopted, there would in all probability be set up under the law miniature stills and breweries in hundreds if not thousands of places. To that your conferees can not agree, because the Senate was serious when it said: "We do not want beer manufactured for any purpose, in the home or out of the home."

Mr. STERLING. Let me say to the Senator from Arizona—

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator from South Dakota states the question accurately when he says he is insisting on the amendments made by the Senate.

Mr. STERLING. No report has been signed, of course, or this motion would not have been made.

Mr. ASHURST. I know it.

Mr. STERLING. There has been no agreement reached yet on the amendment the Senator refers to.

Mr. ASHURST. I know that, and I am not criticizing the Senator. He has labored faithfully in this matter, and I do not want what I say to be construed as implying the contrary.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Mr. President—

Mr. ASHURST. Let me have the floor for a moment more. Under the amendment as the House now proposes, I repeat, there would be set up miniature stills and breweries in a thousand places and thus would occur the very thing we are trying to prevent.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President—

Mr. ASHURST. Let me finish. Moreover, I ask attention to the amendment 32, the so-called Stanley amendment, an amendment agreed to on August 8 with a unanimity in the Senate I have rarely observed in my 10 years' service here. That amendment was submitted to at least 20 Senators before it was presented. This Senator made a suggestion and that Senator made a suggestion, and most of them were constructive amendments; so completely did the Stanley amendment express the views of the Senate that it was agreed to without a division and by unanimous consent. If the Senate conferees were to agree to the House substitute for the so-called Stanley amendment we would destroy, nullify, and render inoperative the Stanley amendment. I do not wish to discuss that amendment just now—reserving a discussion of its effect for another time—more than to say that, as I view the Stanley amendment, it is nothing more nor less than a reaffirmation of the fourth and fifth amendments to the Constitution, and I need not make a long speech here to tell Senators that the time has come, not only with regard to liquor laws but all other laws of the United States, when men must not be searched and women must not be stopped upon the public highways by a stranger who has no warrant. The time has come when no man must further enter the American home without a writ, and the Stanley amendment, adopted by the Senate, I repeat, with a unanimity scarcely theretofore known in the Senate, provides that not only in the enforcement of liquor laws, but all other laws of the United States, the great rights guaranteed to American citizens by the fourth and fifth amendments to the Constitution are preserved in their entirety.

As one of the conferees of the Senate on the bill under discussion I serve notice—and the Senate may remove me as a conferee if it wishes—that I shall not sign a report which will in any way weaken the Stanley amendment. I yield to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I wanted to ask the Senator from Arizona if he thought the amendment adopted by the House of Representatives in lieu of the Stanley amendment legalizes the manufacture of intoxicating liquors in dwelling houses.

Mr. ASHURST. I do; and I will read the House amendment to the Stanley amendment for the consideration of the Senator, who has not only won for himself a place upon our great Judiciary Committee but who has also won for himself a place as one of the leaders of that committee. This is what we are asked to agree to in lieu of the Stanley amendment:

Sec. 6. That no officer, agent, or employee of the United States, while engaged in the enforcement of this act, the national prohibition act, or any law in reference to the manufacture or taxation of, or traffic in, intoxicating liquor, shall search any private dwelling without a warrant directing such search, and no such warrant shall issue unless there is reason to believe such dwelling is used as a place in which liquor is manufactured—

Does it stop there? No; it goes on and says: for sale or sold.

If the amendment stopped after the word "manufactured," it would have said enough, and would have been eligible to accomplish the purpose we seek, to wit, prevent manufacturing for home consumption. But they say, "manufactured for sale or sold," implying to a man with the Volstead per cent of common sense—that is, a half per cent of common sense—that he could manufacture it for his own use. The maxim, "Expressio unius, est exclusio alterius," applies and says to the country, not only by inference but directly, that "You are at liberty to set up stills in your houses for the manufacture of home-brew as far as this law is concerned."

I have no quarrel with lawyers who disagree with my view; but I know that the language was inserted there for some purpose, and I am opposed to any law which will directly or indirectly permit or encourage the manufacture of spirituous, vinous, or malt liquor for beverage purposes. After many years of labor the forces of reform and good government won their fight for prohibition, and I am happy to say I do not believe that prohibition will be broken down or removed within the lifetime of any person now living. I hope prohibition will remain and endure to bless our countrymen. I am therefore opposed to any amendment that will grant to any person the right to manufacture intoxicating liquor in the home for beverage purposes.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. That would be a great privilege, Mr. President. But what I wanted to suggest to the Senator is that it does not seem to me, following, as best I could, as the Senator read the amendment, that it contains anything which would prohibit an officer from searching a house. It does not legalize the manufacture of intoxicating liquors, even for domestic consumption, in one's family.

Mr. ASHURST. But I see the Senator's point.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. It prohibits an officer from searching a house without a search warrant.

Mr. ASHURST. Yes, it does; but I am not satisfied with the amendment which the House has proposed in lieu of the Stanley amendment. I want to go into that question later. It is sufficient for me to say now that as the servant of the Senate, as long as I am on this conference—and I would be delighted if the Senate would remove me immediately—I shall never agree to a conference report which weakens or changes the Stanley amendment for two reasons: First, I agree with it in principle; second, in the conference I am the servant of the Senate, and the unanimity of the Senate in agreeing to the Stanley amendment was so great that I would not feel at liberty to disregard that unanimously expressed opinion.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, personally I do not see that it makes any difference whether the Senate disagrees to the amendments of the House to the Senate amendments or simply insists on the Senate amendments. I regard the Stanley amendment as vitally necessary.

The eighteenth amendment to the Constitution prohibits the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors. To enforce that eighteenth amendment to the Constitution Congress passed the Volstead Act. There is another amendment to the Constitution, the fourth amendment, which provides as follows:

The right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects, against unreasonable searches and seizures, shall not be violated and no warrants shall issue, but upon probable cause, supported by oath or affirmation, and particularly describing the place to be searched and the persons or things to be seized.

The Senate amendment proposes that no officer who is enforcing the Volstead Act, or the medical beer act, shall make an unreasonable search, or deprive a person of his constitutional guaranties, without being held to have committed a misdemeanor.

Anyone who violates the provisions of the Volstead Act commits a misdemeanor. It ought to be provided that anybody who violates the fourth amendment to the Constitution would be committing a misdemeanor. If it is a misdemeanor to violate the liquor law it ought to be a misdemeanor to deprive a free-born American citizen of a part of the Bill of Rights which was put into the Constitution a year after the Constitution was formed. On what theory can anybody deny it, when the fourth amendment to the Constitution provides that the right of the people which existed before the Constitution was made, the right of the people to be secure against unreasonable searches and seizures as to their persons, their houses, their papers, and their effects, meaning their chattels and possessions of every kind, shall not be violated?

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I yield.

Mr. STERLING. I wish to say to the Senator that the conferees on the part of the Senate are considering every single question that the Senator from Connecticut now raises in the consideration of the House amendment to the Senate amendment.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I assume that they are. I hope they are.

Mr. STERLING. They are.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I have no doubt about it, and I have no doubt they will give it due consideration.

In pursuance of the idea suggested by the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], I simply wanted to express the opinion that an amendment to the bill simply making it a misdemeanor to deprive an American citizen of his constitutional guaranty ought to be defended by the American Senate to the last ditch. The question as to whether a doctor shall prescribe a bottle of beer to his patient or whether he shall prescribe a pint of whisky every 10 days or every 100 days is a trivial one as compared to this great constitutional right. The question of the fundamental guaranties of American liberty, for which the United States struggled in bloody war, is paramount, especially as compared with the beer bill or doctor's prescription bill. The question of regulating the practice of medicine, recognizing alcoholic stimulants as medicine, and then declaring the doctor shall not prescribe the amount of that medicine that he thinks the patient needs, sinks into comparative insignificance as compared with the upholding of our constitutional rights. Those who are trying to pass the bill to regulate the medical profession and who are taking the position that in order to enforce the provisions of that bill they must deprive the whole American Nation of the guaranties contained in the Constitution of the United States have raised a question which is fundamental. Some of the proponents of the legislation say they do not think the Volstead Act can be effectively enforced unless the constitutional guaranties of citizens of the United States as to their personal liberties are torn into shreds.

The amendment cited by the Senator from Arizona, offered by the House as a substitute for the Senate amendment which preserves our constitutional liberties as free men, simply provides that no prohibition officer shall break into a man's house and search it without a warrant.

Mr. ASHURST. His dwelling house.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Yes; his dwelling house. The language of the Constitution protects all your houses, whether you dwell in them or not. "Your right to be secure in your persons, your effects, your houses, and your papers shall not be violated," said our charter of liberty.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President—

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Just a moment, before this idea escapes me, and then I will yield.

The House is willing to say that it shall be a misdemeanor if a person breaks into your house and searches it, but is not willing, apparently, to extend to a free American citizen the right of having it constituted a misdemeanor if his person is violated. According to that, they protect your dwelling house against a raid on suspicion but will not protect your person or your papers or your effects.

Has American liberty come to that state, Mr. President? If so, American citizens had better migrate and live under a monarchical and despotic form of government than under the starry banner that guarantees the Bill of Rights.

I now yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. STANLEY. Is it against any law of the United States for a man to have alcoholic liquors in his home?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I do not understand that the Volstead Act prohibits the possession of liquors if they are not held with the intent of selling them or otherwise violating the provisions of the Volstead Act.

Mr. STANLEY. Suppose an officer should make an affidavit to secure a search warrant that A or B has alcoholic liquors in his home for his own personal use, he could not secure the warrant to enter a residence upon any such allegation, as I understand it.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I do not suppose any man competent to be a justice of the peace would issue a search warrant authorizing an officer under the Constitution, which provides that no warrant shall issue except upon probable cause supported by oath or affirmation and particularly describing the premises to be searched and the property to be seized, to search one's home, unless the person making the affidavit would swear that in his judgment the liquor alluded to by the Senator was held in the premises for the purpose of being disposed of in violation of the law.

Mr. NELSON and Mr. STANLEY addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield, and if so, to whom?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I yield first to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. STANLEY. The House amendment provides that they must procure a warrant to enter a home unless liquors are being sold in that home, and that then they have the right even to go into the home without the warrant. The amendment simply provides that if a man has liquor in his home for his personal use, an officer can not enter it without a warrant, when he could not enter it with a warrant even if some officer were fool enough to issue it. The author of that amendment was lacking in a sense of humor.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I now yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. NELSON. I wish to say to the Senators who are discussing the amendment that it is still in conference. The conferees have not agreed on the amendment, and it is not involved in the motion that is made in reference to the other three amendments. The amendment to which the Senator from Connecticut and the Senator from Kentucky have referred is in conference, and we have not yet agreed to the House provision.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I thank the Senator, but he gives me no new information. I understood all the amendments were in conference as soon as we sent them back to conference, although they are technically on the Secretary's desk at present. As I understand, the conferees have not agreed, and I am perfectly sure that all three of the Senate conferees, being able members of the Senate Committee on the Judiciary and able lawyers and good Americans and their own masters, will carefully consider this fundamental question, as fundamental as has ever been raised in the United States of America. I hope during their consideration that they will duly appreciate that this amendment was not hastily drawn, and it was not put on by the Senate simply to be discarded in conference, or to get the bill in conference. It was accepted by the distinguished Senator from South Dakota, one of the conferees, as a proper amendment, and I think the Senator suspects that the Senate will stand by their previous action to protect the liberties of the American people.

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator allow me further?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Certainly.

Mr. NELSON. I wish to remind Senators of another thing. They are interested in that particular amendment, but if they succeed in defeating the bill or defeating any action of the conference committee, the bill itself and the amendment which they are discussing will be in the air and we will have no law on the subject.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Yes; but I would trust the American Congress to pass a law in the future, whether the doctor's beer bill survives or fails, that will protect the constitutional guarantees to American citizens.

Mr. BROUSSARD. I think it would make no difference at all whether the bill passes or not, because the present law is being interpreted just as though the bill were the law.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The bill to me is so un-American and so unwise that I think there would be very few mourners at the obsequies if the bill should die before it is born. It is not yet born.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. ASHURST. Oh, no, Mr. President. I thought the Senator from Connecticut had concluded. I wish to take the floor when the Senator concludes.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I have said about all I care to about the matter at this time. I feel that it is a question of importance, not the beer question, but the question whether the American Senate should formulate legislation to carry out one provision of the Constitution and decline to formulate legislation to carry out an amendment to the Constitution which was adopted almost at the time the Constitution was adopted by the States, and the Constitution never would have been ratified by the States unless that fourth amendment had been promised.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me—

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That amendment, long before the Constitution itself was adopted, was a part of the constitution or charter of every colony of Great Britain, and every State in the Union recognized it before our independence had been recognized. So it was not only a part of the organic law of the Federal Government, but a part of the organic law of the constituent parts, as well as a part of the organic law of Great Britain ever since Magna Charta.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The Senator is quite right. I do not care to address the Senate at length upon that feature of the question at this time, but when the matter comes from the conference committee, if there shall be any yielding of the great principle contained in the fourth amendment, the cases upon this point will be brought before the Senate and the Senate's attention invited to the history of the whole proceeding.

Mr. Justice Bradley in the great case of Boyd against United States, in the One hundred and sixteenth United States Reports, page 616, traces the origin and history of the fourth amendment, and that is further illuminated and ratified and affirmed in a great opinion by Mr. Justice Day in the case of Weeks against United States (232 U. S., p. 383). I think it is as late as 1914. There is absolutely no question that the rights guaranteed by the fourth amendment against unreasonable searches and seizures pertain to the person and personal property of every citizen just as surely and just as perfectly as they do to his real estate.

Mr. REED. May I suggest to the Senator that the doctrine was reaffirmed in all its strength as late as last December by the Supreme Court of the United States?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I have no doubt of it.

The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] is quite right. The principles which are contained in the fourth amendment to the Constitution were a part of the law of every colony of America before the Government of the United States was formed at all; they were a part of the law of England before our Government was formed and before the Colonies were formed, and they are the bulwark of English liberty from which we inherit and trace our whole constitutional law and theory of government.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, at the risk of tediousness I am going briefly to sketch the history of the fourth and fifth amendments to the Constitution, as there is a large attendance in the Senate. It is almost presumptuous, however, in the Senate of the United States to do that, as most Senators are familiar with that history.

These noble amendments are as follows:

"[ARTICLE IV.]

"The right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects against unreasonable searches and seizures shall not be violated, and no warrants shall issue but upon probable cause, supported by oath or affirmation, and particularly describing the place to be searched and the persons or things to be seized.

"[ARTICLE V.]

"No person shall be held to answer for a capital or otherwise infamous crime unless on a presentment or indictment of a grand jury, except in cases arising in the land or naval forces, or in the militia, when in actual service in time of war or public danger; nor shall any person be subject for the same offense to be twice put in jeopardy of life or limb; nor shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself, nor be deprived of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; nor shall private property be taken for public use without just compensation."

A gentleman the other day calling upon me asked, "Did you ever read Lord Coke's famous maxim in Lemayne's case," to wit, "The house of every man is to him as his castle and for-treas, as well for his defense against injury and violence as for his repose"? I said, "Yes, I am familiar with Coke, but that was law 1,000 years before my Lord Coke adorned the bench."

Mr. President, before the English conquest of Britain the English people lived in a country now called Schleswig, a district in the heart of the peninsula that separates the Baltic from the northern seas. The dwellers in this particular locality were an outlying fragment of what was called the Engle or English folk, the bulk of whom probably lay in what was later called Lower Hanover and Eastphalia and Westphalia. These Engles in the heart of this peninsula set up their forms of government; they met in the forests, and with their loud and guttural yeas and nays and sometimes by clashing their spears against their shields as a substitute for a viva voce vote they adopted a code of laws.

One of the principles they set into positive law and adopted before Hengist and Horsa landed on the island of Thanet in A. D. 449 was the constitutional provision that "a man's house was his castle," and that he was and ought to be secure and free therein from unreasonable searches and seizures. So we perceive that when the Angles came over from Jutland under the leadership of Hengist and Horsa and landed on the island of Thanet they brought with them those English fundamentals as to the liberty of the citizen or subject and they planted them deep and strong in the island of Britain.

When we talk, therefore, of English history we must remember that English history begins with the landing of Hengist's war band in the year I have above mentioned. These warriors under the leadership of Hengist, these sons of liberty, were drawn somewhat from the Jutes, as well as the Angles. When English history began, therefore, there was already established freedom from unreasonable seizures and searches. The years glided into the centuries and this provision, amongst many others guaranteeing personal freedom from the encroachments of tyranny, was observed by practically all reigning monarchs until King John so outraged and violated the laws and constitution of his country that there occurred his famous quarrel with his barons and he took refuge on one bank of a little stream called Runnymede; with himself on one side of the stream and his barons on the other they framed a treaty or charter known to history as Magna Charta, signed by King John, June 15, 1215, on a small island in the middle of the stream. This same John once received some excellent advice at the tournament at Ashby, for he had in his train a man who never flattered him; a man of good sense, named Waldemar Fitzurse. The day that the disinherited knight first tilted, King John attempted to carry out his own sweet will on a certain subject in a manner that would prove ruinous; whereupon Waldemar Fitzurse said, "If Your Grace attempts it, it can but prove ruinous to your projects." John replied, "I entertained you, sir, for my follower, but not for my counselor." Whereupon Waldemar gave John advice that all men of high station could well afford to consider when he said, "Those who follow Your Grace in the paths you tread acquire the right of counselors, for your interests and safety are not more deeply pledged than our own."

But say the pundits and the scholars, Magna Charta says nothing about freedom from unreasonable seizure and search; Magna Charta says nothing about requiring warrants to be issued before a citizen is stopped on the highway and his baggage examined and his pockets searched. Let us examine this statement and see how much thereof is true.

I can read but little Latin but I can read English; the original and individual articles of Magna Charta, as they were prepared and offered seriatim, were written in Latin, but when the entire Charta was adopted and engrossed and was ready for the King's signature, it was written in Norman-French, and we must read it in the light of what its words meant 706 years ago.

I will ask Senators to bear with me while I read paragraph 24 of Magna Charta.

No sheriff, constable, coroner, or other our bailiffs shall hold "Pleas of the Crown."

We must view that language in the light of what it then meant, and it meant at that time that sheriffs and coroners and constables, bailiffs, and King's minions had been in the habit of going to the thatched cottage of the peasant and to the castle of the baron, and there these officers and King's minions would invade that cottage or castle and hold court; these officers and minions would command that the householder open the strong box, the larder, or the pantry; they would pry open the chest in which he kept his relics, his heirlooms, his private papers, and his title deeds and muniments showing his right to possession to his lands; the penalties which these officers, sheriffs, bailiffs, and King's minions inflicted were degrading and painful and were contrary to law.

Section 24 of Magna Charta denounced that conduct, and the King agreed that his sheriffs and constables and coroners should never thereafter hold court.

Some years after the granting of the great charta a doubt arose as to the precise meaning of some of its sections, although it was pointed out by the lawyers of the day—and the only lawyers of that day were ecclesiasts—that the guaranties in Magna Charta were sufficient to secure the liberty of freemen; nevertheless, in the reign of Edward I, in 1297, the Confirmatio Chartarum was promulgated. I will read a comment thereon from John Fiske's Civil Government in the United States:

The words of this important document, from Prof. Stubbs's translation, are given as the best explanation of the constitutional position and importance of the charters of John and Henry III. "This is far the most important of the numerous ratifications of the great charter. Hallam calls it 'that famous statute, inadequately denominated the confirmation of the charters, because it added another pillar to our constitution, not less important than the great charter itself.' It solemnly confirmed the two charters, the Charter of the Forest (issued by Henry II in 1217; see text in Stubbs, p. 338) being then considered as of equal importance with Magna Charta itself, establishing them in all points as the law of the land; but it did more. 'Hitherto the king's prerogative of levying money by name of tallage or prise from his towns and tenants in demesne had passed unquestioned. Some impositions, that especially on the export of wool, affected all the king's subjects. It was now the moment to enfranchise the people and give that security to private property which Magna Charta had given to personal liberty.'

The Great Charter signed in 1215 and the Confirmatio Chartarum which was signed in 1297 are in pari materia and must be read together; the one dealt particularly with the citizen's personal liberty and the other dealt especially with his property rights. No man since that time has succeeded in the English-speaking world, or wherever it has been pretended there was a government of law instead of men; in questioning the rights of freemen set out in these two documents.

The leading English case on this subject is that of Entick versus Carrington and Three Other King's Messengers, reported at length in Howell's State Trials. In this case, as it is reported in Howell's State Trials, officers of the law had broken in and seized books and papers belonging to the plaintiff under color of a warrant issued by the secretary of state. Action was brought for trespass against the officers making the seizure. The defendants attempted to justify under the warrant. It was conceded that such warrants had been issued for many years and executed without question. The case was argued before a full bench, and Lord Camden, at the Michaelmas term in 1765, delivered the decision, holding that such a seizure could not be justified except by a warrant issued by a court upon proper proof, and that even on a warrant issued by the secretary of state it was utterly in violation of the English common law.

This was therefore the law of England when our Federal convention met in 1787 to form the Constitution of the United States.

It was understood by all the Colonies to be the law.

It is common knowledge that the framers of the Federal Constitution encountered many practical difficulties in writing a Constitution that would be acceptable to the majority of the Colonies. Hence it was widely believed that amendments would frequently be resorted to as time and march of events required. Virginia, along with New York, Massachusetts, and Pennsylvania, at that time was a pivotal State, and when the Federal Constitution was considered at the Virginia convention called to pass upon ratification of the Federal Constitution that eagle of oratory, that premier of statesmen, Patrick Henry, was in the Virginia convention, and he challenged Washington's views; he challenged James Madison, he of the superb intellect; he challenged the Wythes, the Pendletons, and the Innesses, and all that splendid galaxy of scholarship and statesmanship that enriches the annals not only of Virginia but of the world, and he demanded to know why a Bill of Rights guaranteeing the privileges and immunities of the citizen had been omitted from the Federal Constitution. The Virginia State convention, after a prolonged debate, was only able to ratify the Constitution by a majority of 10 votes, so ably did Patrick Henry argue against it because it did not contain the Bill of Rights which Englishmen brought over from Jutland to the island of Thanet in 449, which they affirmed in 1215, in 1279, in 1689, and which Lord Camden declared so eloquently.

James Madison, later President of the United States, pledged his word that at the earliest opportunity he would use his intellect and his energy toward immediately placing into the Federal Constitution the requisite amendments guaranteeing the citizens' rights, privileges, and immunities, and as soon as the Virginia convention had finished the work of ratification it adopted resolutions expressing its desire for the amendments, the Bill of Rights, demanded by Patrick Henry. These resolutions were forwarded to the governors of the various States, and as far as men could be bound in faith and honor, as far as men could be bound in statesmanship and in politics, the amendments guaranteeing the citizen's individual rights and his liberties were by common consent agreed to, and it was understood everywhere that these amendments would be proposed to the States by the first Congress.

The first bill to be considered by the newly organized Congress of the United States, of course, was a bill to raise revenue, to get something into the Treasury to pay the expenses of the Government; but on July 21 James Madison, who was a Member of the House, arose and asked that these amendments be considered. Why was not this superb intellect sent to the Senate? The reason is that he had voted to ratify the Constitution without the Bill of Rights, and Patrick Henry resorted to the unusual circumstance of bringing out two candidates for the Senate against Mr. Madison, to wit, Mr. Grayson and Richard Henry Lee; thus Madison was defeated for the Senate, because he did not stand for the Bill of Rights; but he came to the House of Representatives, and on the 21st day of July, 1789, he arose and "begged the House to indulge him in further consideration of amendments to the Constitution," and he pointed out that the faith and honor of Congress were pledged; that the faith and honor of public men everywhere were pledged to amendments securing to the citizens such guaranties as were comprehended within the first 10 amendments.

Twelve amendments were proposed to the States, and 10 of them, including the fourth and fifth, were ratified within 2 years and 15 days. Thereafter, as far as Americans are concerned, and as far as the Constitution itself is concerned, they were and are a part and parcel of the original Constitution, as much so as if they were signed on the 17th of September, 1787, when the main instrument itself was signed.

It has been asserted from time to time that if there be a desperate case the citizen may be searched without a warrant, his pockets explored, his carriage stopped. Mr. President, we are not justified in looking to the mischief; we are not justified in looking to the end to be accomplished; we are sworn to uphold the Constitution. If there be amendments which the common people understand, they are the fourth and fifth amendments. We require no lawyer to tell us what these two amendments mean; they are plain; there has been less litigation over the fourth and fifth amendments than over any other amendment, because anyone can understand them who can read or will try to comprehend language. It is so plain that, as I said a few moments ago, he who runs may read. As the learned Senator from Connecticut said, in the case of Boyd versus the United States (116 U. S., 616), the opinion by Mr. Justice Bradley reviewed Lord Camden's opinion and gave a history of the fourth and fifth amendments. I will read the syllabus only, not tiring the Senate with the decision, but will ask unanimous consent to include the entire decision in the Record as an appendix to my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ASHURST. I read from the syllabus:

It does not—

Who is this talking? Some demagogue on the hustings seeking to get votes by appealing to the populace? No. This is the Supreme Court of the United States speaking.

It does not require actual entry upon premises and search for and seizure of papers to constitute an unreasonable search and seizure, within the meaning of the fourth amendment; a compulsory production of a party's private books and papers to be used later against himself or his property in a criminal or penal proceeding or for forfeiture is within the spirit and meaning of the amendment.

It is equivalent to a compulsory production of papers to make non-production of them a confession of the allegations which it is pretended they will prove.

Mr. Justice Bradley in the great case of Boyd against United States, in the One hundred and sixteenth United States Reports, page 616, traced the origin and history of the fourth amendment, and that is further illuminated and ratified and affirmed in an opinion by Mr. Justice Day in the case of Weeks against United States (232 U. S., p. 383). There is absolutely no question that the rights guaranteed by the fourth amendment against unreasonable searches and seizures pertain to the person and personal property of every citizen just as surely and just as perfectly as they do to his real estate.

I read the syllabus:

This protection—

What protection? The protection of the fourth and fifth amendments—

This protection reaches all alike, whether accused of crime or not, and the duty of giving it force and effect is obligatory on all entrusted under our Federal system with the enforcement of the laws. The tendency of those executing the criminal laws of the country to obtain convictions by means of unlawful seizures and enforced confessions, the latter often obtained after subjecting accused persons to unwarranted practices destructive of the rights secured by the Federal Constitution, should find no sanction in the judgments of the courts, which are charged at all times with the support of the Constitution and to which people of all conditions have a right to appeal for the maintenance of such fundamental rights.

I call attention to a recent case, which was decided as late as February 28, 1921, by the Supreme Court of the United States. In that case a man was suspected of illegal acts, which concerned his loyalty. Under such circumstances the temptation to obtain evidence by any means was great. Likewise the temptation to a court to sustain the legality of the seizure was great. Officers of the United States Army succeeded in placing a man in the defendant's establishment who purloined certain of his papers. How did the court treat that case when the papers were brought in evidence?

The court states:

It was objected on the trial, and is here insisted upon, that it was error to admit these papers in evidence, because possession of them was obtained by violating the rights secured to the defendant by the fourth and fifth amendments to the Constitution of the United States. The fourth amendment reads:

"The right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects against unreasonable searches and seizures shall not be violated, and no warrant shall issue but upon probable cause supported by oath or affirmation, and particularly describing the place to be searched and persons or things to be seized."

The part of the fifth amendment here involved reads:

"No person * * * shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself."

The court comments:

It would not be possible to add to the emphasis with which the framers of our Constitution and this court in Boyd v. United States (116 U. S.), The Silver Thorn Lumber Co. v. United States (251 U. S.), Weeks v. United States (and various other cases cited), have declared the importance to political liberty and to the welfare of our country of the due observance of the rights guaranteed under the Constitution by these two amendments.

The effect of the decision cited is: That such rights are declared to be indispensable to the "full enjoyment of personal security, personal liberty, and private property"; that they are to be regarded as of the very essence of constitutional liberty; and that the guaranty of them is as important and as imperative as are the guaranties of the other fundamental rights of the individual citizen—the right to trial by jury, to the writ of habeas corpus, and to due process of law. It has been repeatedly decided that these amendments should receive a liberal construction, so as to prevent stealthy encroachments upon or "gradual depreciation" of the rights secured by them, by imperceptible practice of courts, or by well-intentioned but mistakenly overzealous executive officers. (See U. S. v. Gouled, advance opinions, U. S. Supreme Court, 1920-21.)

No true lawyer has ever pretended that it was constitutional, without a warrant, to stop a man and search his trunks, grips, and pockets unless you saw him in the actual commission of a crime; and if he is seen in the actual commission of a crime a private citizen may make an arrest. Upon that question the Senate's expression was emphatic. It was unanimous. As I said a moment ago, many Senators were consulted upon it. So strongly did it appeal to Senators that it was agreed to practically by unanimous consent.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield, just for information?

Mr. ASHURST. Certainly.

Mr. KING. I have not been able to follow the proceedings of the House in dealing with the so-called Stanley amendment. Will the Senator please advise me, and perhaps other Senators, whether the House took a position adverse to that for which the Senator is now contending, and whether they favor legislation which would abrogate the provisions of the amendment to the Constitution which are so essential for the preservation of personal rights?

Mr. ASHURST. It is my opinion—and, of course, I am responsible for my own opinion—that the amendment in lieu of the Stanley amendment is vicious in two regards. First, it would permit the setting up and operation of breweries and distilleries in the home if the brew or the spirits were manufactured for beverage purposes, to be consumed there. That is the first vice. The second vice is that it would permit an officer without a warrant to search a barn; it would permit him to search any part of your premises except your actual dwelling house. He could search your garage, your stable, your room in an apartment house, or hotel, if you be quartered in a hotel. He could search your car, your baggage, and your person without a warrant; your wife, who might be journeying over the Lincoln Highway at midnight, could be searched by a stranger, and should a stranger obtrude his vulgar face into the car and say, "I want to search this car; I suspect the presence of liquor," he could do it under the law without a warrant if the House amendment is enacted.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. STANLEY. Under that authority he could search your bedroom or your berth where you or your wife are asleep on any conveyance.

Mr. ASHURST. Yes; without a warrant.

Mr. STANLEY. Absolutely.

Mr. ASHURST. I believe an officer should have the right to search a bedroom, bureau, chiffonier, and all else with a warrant. I believe the officer armed with a warrant, who exhibits it, should be able to say, "Stand aside. I have a warrant. Here is the majesty of the Constitution speaking. I am going to search you, your premises, and all."

Mr. KING. Where the proper predicate is laid.

Mr. ASHURST. Where the proper predicate is laid, and the warrant is regular.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to interrupt him right there?

Mr. ASHURST. Certainly.

Mr. HEFLIN. That is when some good citizen has gone to a court of justice and has named this place as a place that is violating the law.

Mr. ASHURST. Precisely.

Mr. HEFLIN. He has taken upon himself the responsibility of going upon record as making that accusation.

Mr. ASHURST. Precisely.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield.

Mr. STANLEY. I wish to say here and now, as the author of that amendment, to which I gave more than passing thought before offering it, that it was not the purpose of the author of that amendment, it was not the purpose of a Senate which seriously considered it, to facilitate the operations of the bootlegger or the moonshiner. This amendment was submitted to and discussed by many Senators here who never cast a "wet" vote in their lives. The ranking member of the Finance Committee, the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], assisted in drawing the amendment. The Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] made valuable suggestions. I took up this amendment deliberately with men who were known for their earnest advocacy of temperance legislation, men who had championed the cause of the Anti-Saloon League, but who still had some reverence for the palladium of every American's rights, the Constitution of the United States. It was not the purpose of the author of this amendment, as I have said, to facilitate the operations of the bootlegger or the moonshiner. It was the purpose of this amendment to leave the law where the Constitution left it, to leave the officer armed with the proper authority, the right to go anywhere the law was being violated and to seize liquor anywhere it was being made or vended, but to protect the person and the property of the citizen and the sanctity and the privacy of the home not only from insolent and unauthorized officers but from bandits, who literally infest this country, masquerading as officers of the law for the purpose of committing thefts and robberies upon the helpless citizens of the United States.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, what the learned Senator says is of course true, and I thank him for his interruption. It is a valuable contribution to my speech. Since he has mentioned the fact that the amendment was submitted to those who have always been friends of prohibition, I will advert to that question. I had not intended to do so. I have never struck an opponent in the back, and I do not think I ever will; but the liquor traffic is one thing in the economy of this country that I am willing to strike in the back or below the belt; but I am unwilling to strike the rights of the American people below the belt or in the back. Since it has been adverted to that the amendment was passed upon by those Senators friendly to prohibition, I want to say that is true. I have never cast a vote that could be called a "wet" vote. It is a matter of principle with me. I believe that one of the ravaging, destructive things of our national life was the use of alcoholic liquor, ardent spirits, and it was a great day in the history of America when the Sheppard amendment to the Constitution was ratified. It meant the freedom of our sons from the baleful influence of this damnable stuff—alcohol—that has ruined so many clever fellows and sent them down a steep and everlasting declivity into perdition; but there are other great questions. One of them is the assurance that we shall not impair the rights of American citizens for which governments themselves exist; and when such rights of the citizens no longer exist, the Government ought to fall and will fall.

I repeat that the House substitute is vicious, because it might legalize breweries and distilleries in the dwellings. I repeat that the House substitute for the Stanley amendment is doubly vicious in that it would permit the searching of your person, sir, on the public highway by strangers without a warrant. You may desire to motor to Harrisburg, or from Salt Lake City to Los Angeles or San Francisco. You may be in a lonely part of the country. You can be stopped by a stranger whose face you have never seen and who presents no warrant and your automobile searched, your grip broken open, your pockets rifled and explored, under the law as proposed by the House committee; and to that I do not agree.

Mr. McCORMICK, Mr. STANLEY, and Mr. REED addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arizona yield, and to whom?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield to the Senator from Illinois. He rose first.

Mr. McCORMICK. I should like to suggest that the Senator is suggesting long and unusual excursions. Baltimore to Washington would be more usual.

Mr. ASHURST. I made that journey some years ago in an automobile, and I will say here that I would, I think, if stopped by a man without a warrant, have set an example that I hope other citizens would have emulated. If I had been stopped—I had no liquor with me—and the face of a stranger had been thrust into my car, I would have said, "Will you please show me your warrant?" If he had said, "I have no warrant," I would have used something more than words, and that is what the American citizen ought to do. When a man raps at your door, when a man says, "Hold up, sir; I want to search your pockets; I want to search your house," and further says, "I have no warrant," you are a very poor American if you do not knock him down.

At this juncture in my remarks I want to say that nothing I have said must be construed in any way as a criticism or a reflection upon the attitude of the leader of the Senate conferees on this question, the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING]. He is standing for the Stanley amendment, in my judgment, although I have no right to quote him.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President—

Mr. ASHURST. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. STANLEY. As indicative of the thought that has been given to this earnest desire to preserve the integrity of the Constitution of the United States an amendment which incorporates in words verbatim a portion of the amendment that I offered was offered by one of the greatest lawyers in America and one of the most accomplished Senators that ever adorned this body, the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED].

Mr. ASHURST. Why, yes; that is true, and now it is suggested to me, possibly by those who think I might be so spineless a cactus as to fall over when they say it, "Your attitude indicates that you may favor the liquor traffic"; and I pass that suggestion by as idle wind that I respect not. I suppose we all look for votes more or less; but a man who would look for votes or pay the slightest attention to the political result in a question of this importance deserves to get no votes. The question is of such importance that it transcends all petty questions as to whether anybody is reelected or not.

The makers of our Federal Constitution and the framers of the first 10 amendments were never tired of quoting the immortal words of the elder Pitt, used in his speech on "The Excise," words as brilliant as a diamond with many facets; words which to-day are fresh, pure, and sparkling; I regret that I am unable to quote them verbatim, but as I remember them, they were as follows:

The poorest man may in his cottage bid defiance to all the force of the Crown. It may fall; its roof may shake; the wind may blow through it; the storms may enter; the rain may enter—but the King of England can not enter. All his forces dare not cross the threshold of the ruined tenement.

So, Mr. President, as one of your humble servants and a conferee, it is my intention to refuse to sign any conference report that recedes from or changes the Stanley amendment. This is not a threat. It is simply a statement. If you wish to change your servant you have a right to do so, and I would welcome it, but as long as I serve as your conferee I can not abandon and throw away an opinion on an amendment that was unanimous in the Senate and that meets my own view. I shall not sign any conference report that will tend to set up a still even in a private home, or would do that which is worse, allow the present wild and desperate forays to be continued, and citizens to be searched and herded like cattle. I think when the Judiciary Committee makes its report, as it some day will, it may disclose to the Senate that men have been gathered up like so many swine, herded in halls, denied the right to see a lawyer, denied the right of habeas corpus, denied the right to be heard, no warrant issued—not in a Western State, but in an Eastern State. The time has come when, if men are to be deprived of their liberty, it must be done under the law and the Constitution.

APPENDIX.

SYLLABUS.

Boyd v. United States.

ERROR TO THE CIRCUIT COURT OF THE UNITED STATES FOR THE SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF NEW YORK.

(Argued Dec. 11, 14, 1885. Decided Feb. 1, 1886.)

Mr. Justice Bradley delivered the opinion of the court.

This was an information filed by the district attorney of the United States in the District Court for the Southern District of New York in July, 1884, in a cause of seizure and forfeiture of property against 35 cases of plate glass seized by the collector as forfeited to the United States under section 12 of the "act to amend the customs revenue laws and to repeal moieties," passed June 22, 1874 (18 Stat., 186).

It is declared by that section that any owner, importer, consignee, etc., who shall, with intent to defraud the revenue, make, or attempt to make, any entry of imported merchandise by means of any fraudulent or false invoice, affidavit, letter, or paper, or by means of any false statement, written or verbal, or who shall be guilty of any willful act or omission by means whereof the United States shall be deprived of the lawful duties, or any portion thereof, accruing upon the merchandise, or any portion thereof, embraced or referred to in such invoice, affidavit, letter, paper, or statement, or affected by such act or omission, shall for each offense be fined in any sum not exceeding $5,000 nor less than $50, or be imprisoned for any time not exceeding two years, or both; and, in addition to such fine, such merchandise shall be forfeited.

The charge was that the goods in question were imported into the United States to the port of New York subject to the payment of duties, and that the owners or agents of said merchandise, or other person unknown, committed the alleged fraud which was described in the words of the statute. The plaintiffs in error entered a claim for the goods and pleaded that they did not become forfeited in manner and form as alleged. On the trial of the cause it became important to show the quantity and value of the glass contained in 29 cases previously imported. To do this the district attorney offered in evidence an order made by the district judge under section 5 of the same act of June 22, 1874, directing notice, under seal of the court, to be given to the claimants requiring them to produce the invoice of the 29 cases. The claimants, in obedience to the notice, but objecting to its validity and to the constitutionality of the law, produced the invoice, and when it was offered in evidence by the district attorney they objected to its reception on the ground that in a suit for forfeiture no evidence can be compelled from the claimants themselves, and also that the statute, so far as it compels production of evidence to be used against the claimants, is unconstitutional and void.

The evidence being received and the trial closed, the jury found a verdict for the United States condemning the 35 cases of glass which were seized, and judgment of forfeiture was given. This judgment was affirmed by the circuit court, and the decision of that court is now here for review.

As the question raised upon the order for the production by the claimants of the invoice of the 29 cases of glass and the proceedings had thereon is not only an important one in the determination of the present case but is a very grave question of constitutional law, involving the personal security and privileges and immunities of the citizen, we will set forth the order at large. After the title of the court and term, it reads as follows, to wit:

"THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA V. E. A. B., 1-35, THIRTY-FIVE CASES OF PLATE GLASS.

"Whereas the attorney of the United States for the Southern District of New York has filed in this court a written motion in the above-entitled action showing that said action is a suit or proceeding other than criminal arising under the customs revenue laws of the United States, and not for penalties, now pending undetermined in this court, and that in his belief a certain invoice or paper belonging to and under the control of the claimants herein will tend to prove certain allegations set forth in said written motion, hereto annexed, made by him on behalf of the United States in said action, to wit, the invoice from the Union Plate Glass Co., or its agents, covering the 29 cases of plate glass marked 'G. H. B.', imported from Liverpool, England, into the port of New York in the vessel Baltic and entered by E. A. Boyd & Sons at the office of the collector of customs of the port and collection district aforesaid on April 7, 1884, on entry No. 47108:

"Now, therefore, by virtue of the power in the said court vested by section 5 of the act of June 22, 1874, entitled 'An act to amend the customs revenue laws and to repeal moieties,' it is ordered that a notice under the seal of this court, and signed by the clerk thereof, be issued to the claimants requiring them to produce the invoice or paper aforesaid before this court in the court rooms thereof in the United States post-office and courthouse building in the city of New York on October 16, 1884, at 11 o'clock a. m., and thereafter at such other times as the court shall appoint, and that said United States attorney and his assistants and such persons as he shall designate shall be allowed before the court, and under its direction and in the presence of the attorneys for the claimants, if they shall attend, to make examination of said invoice or paper and to take copies thereof; but the claimants or their agents or attorneys shall have, subject to the order of the court, the custody of such invoice or paper, except pending such examination."

The fifth section of the act of June 22, 1874, under which this order was made, is in the following words, to wit:

"In all suits and proceedings other than criminal arising under any of the revenue laws of the United States the attorney representing the Government, whenever in his belief any business book, invoice, or paper belonging to, or under the control of, the defendant or claimant, will tend to prove any allegation made by the United States, may make a written motion, particularly describing such book, invoice, or paper, and setting forth the allegation which he expects to prove; and thereupon the court in which suit or proceeding is pending may, at its discretion, issue a notice to the defendant or claimant to produce such book, invoice, or paper in court at a day and hour to be specified in said notice, which, together with a copy of said motion, shall be served formally on the defendant or claimant by the United States marshal by delivering to him a certified copy thereof, or otherwise serving the same as original notices of suit in the same court are served; and if the defendant or claimant shall fail or refuse to produce such book, invoice, or paper in obedience to such notice, the allegations stated in the said motion shall be taken as confessed, unless his failure or refusal to produce the same shall be explained to the satisfaction of the court. And if produced, the said attorney shall be permitted, under the direction of the court, to make examination (at which examination the defendant or claimant, or his agent, may be present) of such entries in said book, invoice, or paper as relate to or tend to prove the allegation aforesaid, and may offer the same in evidence on behalf of the United States. But the owner of said books and papers, his agent or attorney, shall have, subject to the order of the court, the custody of them, except pending their examination in court as aforesaid." (18 Stat., 187.)

This section was passed in lieu of the second section of the act of March 2, 1867, entitled "An act to regulate the disposition of the proceeds of fines, penalties, and forfeitures incurred under the laws relating to the customs, and for other purposes" (14 Stat., 547), which section of said last-mentioned statute authorized the district judge, on complaint and affidavit that any fraud on the revenue had been committed by any person interested or engaged in the importation of merchandise, to issue his warrant to the marshal to enter any premises where any invoices, books, or papers were deposited relating to such merchandise and take possession of such books and papers and produce them before said judge, to be subject to his order, and allowed to be examined by the collector, and to be retained as long as the judge should deem necessary. This law being in force at the time of the revision, was incorporated into sections 3091, 3092, 3093 of the Revised Statutes.

The section last recited was passed in lieu of the seventh section of the act of March 3, 1863, entitled "An act to prevent and punish frauds upon the revenue, to provide for the more certain and speedy collection of claims in favor of the United States, and for other purposes" (12 Stat., 737). The seventh section of this act was, in substance, the same as the second section of the act of 1867, except that the warrant was to be directed to the collector instead of the marshal. It was the first legislation of the kind that ever appeared on the statute book of the United States, and, as seen from its date, was adopted at a period of great national excitement, when the powers of the Government were subjected to a severe strain to protect the national existence.

The clauses of the Constitution to which it is contended that these laws are repugnant are the fourth and fifth amendments. The fourth declares "the right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects, against unreasonable searches and seizures shall not be violated, and no warrants shall issue but upon probable cause, supported by oath or affirmation, and particularly describing the place to be searched and the persons or things to be seized." The fifth article, amongst other things, declares that no person "shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself."

But in regard to the fourth amendment it is contended that whatever might have been alleged against the constitutionality of the acts of 1863 and 1867, that of 1874, under which the order in the present case was made, is free from constitutional objection, because it does not authorize the search and seizure of books and papers, but only requires the defendant or claimant to produce them. That is so; but it declares that if he does not produce them the allegations which it is affirmed they will prove shall be taken as confessed. This is tantamount to compelling their production; for the prosecuting attorney will always be sure to state the evidence expected to be derived from them as strongly as the case will admit of. It is true that certain aggravating incidents of actual search and seizure, such as forcible entry into a man's house and searching amongst his papers, are wanting, and to this extent the proceeding under the act of 1874 is a mitigation of that which was authorized by the former acts; but it accomplishes the substantial object of those acts in forcing from a party evidence against himself. It is our opinion, therefore, that a compulsory production of a man's private papers to establish a criminal charge against him, or to forfeit his property, is within the scope of the fourth amendment to the Constitution, in all cases in which a search and seizure would be; because it is a material ingredient, and effects the sole object and purpose of search and seizure.

The principal question, however, remains to be considered. Is a search and seizure or, what is equivalent thereto, a compulsory production of a man's private papers, to be used in evidence against him in a proceeding to forfeit his property for alleged fraud against the revenue laws—is such a proceeding for such a purpose an "unreasonable search and seizure" within the meaning of the fourth amendment of the Constitution? Or is it a legitimate proceeding? It is contended by the counsel for the Government that it is a legitimate proceeding, sanctioned by long usage and the authority of judicial decision. No doubt long usage, acquiesced in by the courts, goes a long way to prove that there is some plausible ground or reason for it in the law, or in the historical facts which have imposed a particular construction of the law favorable to such usage. It is a maxim that, consuetudo est optimus interpres legum; and another maxim that, contemporanea expositio est optima et fortissima in lege. But we do not find any long usage or any contemporary construction of the Constitution which would justify any of the acts of Congress now under consideration. As before stated, the act of 1863 was the first act in this country, and, we might say, either in this country or in England, so far as we have been able to ascertain, which authorized the search and seizure of a man's private papers, or the compulsory production of them, for the purpose of using them in evidence against him in a criminal case, or in a proceeding to enforce the forfeiture of his property.

Even the act under which the obnoxious writs of assistance were issued (note by the court, 13 and 14 Car. 2, ch. 11, sec. 5) did not go as far as this, but only authorized the examination of ships and vessels, and persons found therein, for the purpose of finding goods prohibited to be imported or exported, or on which the duties were not paid, and to enter into and search any suspected vaults, cellars, or warehouses for such goods. The search for and seizure of stolen or forfeited goods or goods liable to duties and concealed to avoid the payment thereof are totally different things from a search for and seizure of a man's private books and papers for the purpose of obtaining information therein contained or of using them as evidence against him. The two things differ toto coelo. In the one case the Government is entitled to the possession of the property, in the other it is not. The seizure of stolen goods is authorized by the common law; and the seizure of goods forfeited for a breach of the revenue laws, or concealed to avoid the duties payable on them, has been authorized by English statutes for at least two centuries past (note by the court, 12 Car. 2, ch. 19; 13 and 14 Car. 2, ch. 11; 6 and 7 W. & M., ch. 1; 6 Geo. I, ch. 21; 26 Geo. III, ch. 59; 29 Geo. III, ch. 68, sec. 153, etc.; and see the article "Excise, etc." in Burn's Justice and Williams's Justice, passim, and Evans's Statutes, vol. 2, p. 221, subpages 176, 190, 225, 361, 431, 447), and the like seizures have been authorized by our own revenue acts from the commencement of the Government. The first statute passed by Congress to regulate the collection of duties, the act of July 31, 1789 (1 Stat., 29, 43), contains provisions to this effect. As this act was passed by the same Congress which proposed for adoption the original amendments to the Constitution it is clear that the Members of that body did not regard searches and seizures of this kind as "unreasonable," and they are not embraced within the prohibition of the amendment. So, also, the supervision authorized to be exercised by officers of the revenue over the manufacture or custody of excisable articles, and the entries thereof in books required by law to be kept for their inspection, are necessarily excepted out of the category of unreasonable searches and seizures. So also the laws which provide for the search and seizure of articles and things which it is unlawful for a person to have in his possession for the purpose of issue or disposition, such as counterfeit coin, lottery tickets, implements of gambling, etc., are not within this category. Commonwealth v. Dana (2 Met. (Mass.), 329.) Many other things of this character might be enumerated. The entry upon premises, made by a sheriff or other officer of the law, for the purpose of seizing goods and chattels by virtue of a judicial writ, such as an attachment, a sequestration, or an execution, is not within the prohibition of the fourth or fifth amendment or any other clause of the Constitution; nor is the examination of a defendant under oath after an ineffectual execution, for the purpose of discovering secreted property or credits, to be applied to the payment of a judgment against him obnoxious to those amendments.

But, when examined with care, it is manifest that there is a total unlikeness of these official acts and proceedings to that which is now under consideration. In the case of stolen goods the owner from whom they were stolen is entitled to their possession; and in the case of excisable or dutiable articles the Government has an interest in them for the payment of the duties thereon, and until such duties are paid has a right to keep them under observation, or to pursue and drag them from concealment; and in the case of goods seized on attachment or execution the creditor is entitled to their seizure in satisfaction of his debt; and the examination of a defendant under oath to obtain a discovery of concealed property or credits is a proceeding merely civil to effect the ends of justice, and is no more than what the court of chancery would direct on a bill for discovery. Whereas by the proceeding now under consideration the court attempts to extort from the party his private books and papers to make him liable for a penalty or to forfeit his property.

In order to ascertain the nature of the proceedings intended by the fourth amendment to the Constitution under the terms "unreasonable searches and seizures" it is only necessary to recall the contemporary or then recent history of the controversies on the subject, both in this country and in England.

The practice had obtained in the Colonies of issuing writs of assistance to the revenue officers, empowering them, in their discretion, to search suspected places for smuggled goods, which James Otis pronounced "the worst instrument of arbitrary power, the most destructive of English liberty, and the fundamental principles of law, that ever was found in an English law book;" since they placed "the liberty of every man in the hands of every petty officer." (Note by the Court: Cooley's Constitutional Limitations, 301-303 (5th ed., 368, 369).) A very full and interesting account of this discussion will be found in the works of John Adams, vol. 2, Appendix A, pp. 523-525; vol. 10, pp. 183, 233, 244, 256, etc., and in Quincy's Reports, pp. 469-482; and see Paxton's Case, do., 51-57, which was argued in November of the same year (1761). An elaborate history of the writs of assistance is given in the Appendix to Quincy's Reports, above referred to, written by Horace Gray, Jr., Esq., now a member of this court. This was in February, 1761, in Boston, and the famous debate in which it occurred was perhaps the most prominent event which inaugurated the resistance of the Colonies to the oppressions of the mother country. "Then and there," said John Adams, "then and there was the first scene of the first act of opposition to the arbitrary claims of Great Britain. Then and there the child Independence was born."

These things, and the events which took place in England immediately following the argument about writs of assistance in Boston, were fresh in the memories of those who achieved our independence and established our form of government. In the period from 1762, when the North Briton was started by John Wilkes, to April, 1766, when the House of Commons passed resolutions condemnatory of general warrants, whether for the seizure of persons or papers, occurred the bitter controversy between the English Government and Wilkes, in which the latter appeared as the champion of popular rights, and was, indeed, the pioneer in the contest which resulted in the abolition of some grievous abuses which had gradually crept into the administration of public affairs. Prominent and principal among these was the practice of issuing general warrants by the Secretary of State for searching private houses for the discovery and seizure of books and papers that might be used to convict their owner of the charge of libel. Certain numbers of the North Briton, particularly No. 45, had been very bold in denunciation of the Government, and were esteemed heinously libellous. By authority of the secretary's warrant Wilkes's house was searched and his papers were indiscriminately seized. For this outrage he sued the perpetrators and obtained a verdict of £1,000 against Wood, one of the party who made the search, and £4,000 against Lord Halifax, the Secretary of State who issued the warrant. The case, however, which will always be celebrated as being the occasion of Lord Camden's memorable discussion of the subject, was that of Entick v. Carrington and Three Other King's Messengers, reported at length in 19 Howell's State Trials, 1029. The action was trespass for entering the plaintiff's dwelling house in November, 1762, and breaking open his desks, boxes, etc., and searching and examining his papers. The jury rendered a special verdict, and the case was twice solemnly argued at the bar. Lord Camden pronounced the judgment of the court in Michaelmas Term, 1765, and the law as expounded by him has been regarded as settled from that time to this, and his great judgment on that occasion is considered as one of the landmarks of English liberty. It was welcomed and applauded by the lovers of liberty in the Colonies as well as in the mother country. It is regarded as one of the permanent monuments of the British Constitution, and is quoted as such by the English authorities on that subject down to the present time. (Note by the Court: See May's Constitutional History of England, vol. 3 (American ed., vol. 2), chap. 11; Broom's Constitutional Law, 558; Cox's Institutions of the English Government, 437.)

As every American statesman, during our revolutionary and formative period as a Nation, was undoubtedly familiar with this monument of English freedom, and considered it as the true and ultimate expression of constitutional law, it may be confidently asserted that its propositions were in the minds of those who framed the fourth amendment to the Constitution, and were considered as sufficiently explanatory of what was meant by unreasonable searches and seizures. We think, therefore, it is pertinent to the present subject of discussion to quote somewhat largely from this celebrated judgment.

After describing the power claimed by the secretary of state for issuing general search warrants, and the manner in which they were executed, Lord Camden says: "Such is the power, and, therefore, one would naturally expect that the law to warrant it should be clear in proportion as the power is exorbitant. If it is law, it will be found in our books; if it is not to be found there, it is not law."

"The great end for which men entered into society was to secure their property. That right is preserved sacred and incommunicable in all instances where it has not been taken away or abridged by some public law for the good of the whole. The cases where this right of property is set aside by positive law are various. Distresses, executions, forfeitures, taxes, etc., are all of this description, wherein every man by common consent gives up that right for the sake of justice and the general good. By the laws of England every invasion of private property, be it ever so minute, is a trespass. No man can set his foot upon my ground without my license, but he is liable to an action though the damage be nothing; which is proved by every declaration in trespass where the defendant is called upon to answer for bruising the grass and even treading upon the soil. If he admits the fact, he is bound to show, by way of justification, that some positive law has justified or excused him. The justification is submitted to the judges, who are to look into the books, and see if such a justification can be maintained by the text of the statute law or by the principles of the common law. If no such excuse can be found or produced the silence of the books is an authority against the defendant and the plaintiff must have judgment. According to this reasoning it is now incumbent upon the defendants to show the law by which this seizure is warranted. If that can not be done, it is a trespass."

"Papers are the owner's goods and chattels; they are his dearest property; and are so far from enduring a seizure that they will hardly bear an inspection; and though the eye can not by the laws of England be guilty of a trespass, yet where private papers are removed and carried away the secret nature of those goods will be an aggravation of the trespass, and demand more considerable damages in that respect. Where is the written law that gives any magistrate such a power? I can safely answer there is none; and therefore it is too much for us, without such authority, to pronounce a practice legal which would be subversive of all the comforts of society."

"But though it can not be maintained by any direct law, yet it bears a resemblance, as was urged, to the known case of search and seizure for stolen goods. I answer that the difference is apparent. In the one, I am permitted to seize my own goods, which are placed in the hands of a public officer, till the felon's conviction shall entitle me to restitution. In the other, the party's own property is seized before and without conviction, and he has no power to reclaim his goods, even after his innocence is declared by acquittal."

"The case of searching for stolen goods crept into the law by imperceptible practice. No less a person than my Lord Coke denied its legality (4 Inst., 176); and therefore if the two cases resembled each other more than they do, we have no right, without an act of Parliament, to adopt a new practice in the criminal law, which was never yet allowed from all antiquity. Observe, too, the caution with which the law proceeds in this singular case. There must be a full charge upon oath of a theft committed. The owner must swear that the goods are lodged in such a place. He must attend at the execution of the warrant, to show them to the officer, who must see that they answer the description. * * *

"If it should be said that the same law which has with so much circumspection guarded the case of stolen goods from mischief, would likewise in this case protect the subject by adding proper checks; would require proofs beforehand; would call up the servant to stand by and overlook; would require him to take an exact inventory and deliver a copy; my answer is that all these precautions would have been long since established by law, if the power itself had been legal; and that the want of them is an undeniable argument against the legality of the thing."

Then, after showing that these general warrants for search and seizure of papers originated with the Star Chamber and never had any advocates in Westminster Hall except Chief Justice Scroggs and his associates, Lord Camden proceeds to add:

"Lastly it is urged as an argument of utility that such a search is a means of detecting offenders by discovering evidence. I wish some cases had been shown where the law forceth evidence out of the owner's custody by process. There is no process against papers in civil causes. It has been often tried, but never prevailed. Nay, where the adversary has by force or fraud got possession of your own proper evidence there is no way to get it back but by action. In the criminal law such a proceeding was never heard of, and yet there are some crimes, such, for instance, as murder, rape, robbery, and housebreaking, to say nothing of forgery and perjury, that are more atrocious than libelling. But our law has provided no paper search in these cases to help forward the conviction. Whether this proceeded from the gentleness of the law toward criminals or from a consideration that such a power would be more pernicious to the innocent than useful to the public I will not say. It is very certain that the law obligeth no man to accuse himself, because the necessary means of compelling self-accusation, falling upon the innocent as well as the guilty, would be both cruel and unjust, and it would seem that search for evidence is disallowed upon the same principle. Then, too, the innocent would be confounded with the guilty."

After a few further observations his lordship concluded thus: "I have now taken notice of everything that has been urged upon the present point, and upon the whole we are all of opinion that the warrant to seize and carry away the party's papers in the case of a seditious libel is illegal and void." (Note by the Court: See further as to searches and seizures, Story on the Constitution, secs. 1901, 1902, and notes; Cooley's Constitutional Limitations, 299 (5th ed., 363); Sedgwick on Stat. and Const. Law, 2d ed., 498; Wharton Com. on Amer. Law, sec 560; Robinson v. Richardson, 13 Gray, 454.)

The principles laid down in this opinion affect the very essence of constitutional liberty and security. They reach further than the concrete form of the case then before the court, with its adventitious circumstances; they apply to all invasions on the part of the government and its employees of the sanctity of a man's home and the privacies of life. It is not the breaking of his doors and the rummaging of his drawers that constitutes the essence of the offense, but it is the invasion of his indefeasible right of personal security, personal liberty, and private property, where that right has never been forfeited by his conviction of some public offense—it is the invasion of this sacred right which underlies and constitutes the essence of Lord Camden's judgment. Breaking into a house and opening boxes and drawers are circumstances of aggravation, but any forcible and compulsory extortion of a man's own testimony or of his private papers to be used as evidence to convict him of crime or to forfeit his goods is within the condemnation of that judgment. In this regard the fourth and fifth amendments run almost into each other.

Can we doubt that when the fourth and fifth amendments to the Constitution of the United States were penned and adopted the language of Lord Camden was relied on as expressing the true doctrine on the subject of searches and seizures, and as furnishing the true criteria of the reasonable and "unreasonable" character of such seizures? Could the men who proposed those amendments in the light of Lord Camden's opinion have put their hands to a law like those of March 3, 1863, and March 2, 1867, before recited? If they could not, would they have approved the fifth section of the act of June 22, 1874, which was adopted as a substitute for the previous laws? It seems to us that the question can not admit of a doubt. They never would have approved of them. The struggles against arbitrary power in which they had been engaged for more than 20 years would have been too deeply engrained in their memories to have allowed them to approve of such insidious disguises of the old grievance which they had so deeply abhorred.

The views of the first Congress on the question of compelling a man to produce evidence against himself may be inferred from a remarkable section of the judiciary act of 1789. The fifteenth section of that act introduced a great improvement in the law of procedure. The substance of it is found in section 724 of the Revised Statutes, and the section as originally enacted is as follows, to wit:

"All the said courts of the United States shall have power in the trial of actions at law, on motion and due notice thereof being given, to require the parties to produce books or writings in their possession or power, which contain evidence pertinent to the issue, in cases and under circumstances where they might be compelled to produce the same by the ordinary rules of proceeding in chancery; and if a plaintiff shall fail to comply with such order to produce books or writings it shall be lawful for the courts, respectively, on motion, to give the like judgment for the defendant as in cases of nonsuit; and if a defendant shall fail to comply with such order to produce books or writings it shall be lawful for the courts, respectively, on motion as aforesaid, to give judgment against him or her by default." (Note by the Court: Sixty-two years later a similar act was passed in England, viz, the act of 14 and 15 Vict., ch. 99, sec. 6. See Pollock on power of courts to compel production of documents, 5.)

The restriction of this proceeding to "cases and under circumstances where they [the parties] might be compelled to produce the same [books or writings] by the ordinary rules of proceeding in chancery," shows the wisdom of the Congress of 1789. The court of chancery had for generations been weighing and balancing the rules to be observed in granting discovery on bills filed for that purpose in the endeavor to fix upon such as would best secure the ends of justice. To go beyond the point to which that court had gone may well have been thought hazardous. Now it is elementary knowledge that one cardinal rule of the court of chancery is never to decree a discovery which might tend to convict the party of a crime or to forfeit his property. (Note by the Court: See Pollock on production of documents, 27; 77 Law Lib. 12 [8].) And any compulsory discovery by extorting the party's oath or compelling the production of his private books and papers, to convict him of crime or to forfeit his property, is contrary to the principles of a free government. It is abhorrent to the instincts of an Englishman; it is abhorrent to the instincts of an American. It may suit the purposes of despotic power but it can not abide the pure atmosphere of political liberty and personal freedom.

It is proper to observe that when the objectionable features of the acts of 1863 and 1867 were brought to the attention of Congress it passed an act to obviate them. By the act of February 25, 1868 (15 Stat., 37), entitled "An act for the protection in certain cases of persons making disclosures as parties or testifying as witnesses," the substance of which is incorporated in section 860 of the Revised Statutes, it was enacted "that no answer or other pleading of any party, and no discovery or evidence obtained by means of any judicial proceeding from any party or witness in this or any foreign country, shall be given in evidence or in any manner used against such party or witness, or his property or estate, in any court of the United States, or in any proceeding by or before any officer of the United States in respect to any crime or for the enforcement of any penalty or forfeiture by reason of any act or omission of such party or witness."

This act abrogated and repealed the most objectionable part of the act of 1867 (which was then in force) and deprived the Government officers of the convenient method afforded by it for getting evidence in suits of forfeiture; and this is probably the reason why the fifth section of the act of 1874 was afterwards passed. No doubt it was supposed that in this new form, couched as it was in almost the language of the fifteenth section of the old judiciary act, except leaving out the restriction to cases in which the court of chancery would decree a discovery, it would be free from constitutional objection. But we think it has been made to appear that this result has not been attained, and that the law, though very speciously worded, is still obnoxious to the prohibition of the fourth amendment of the Constitution as well as of the fifth.

It has been thought by some respectable members of the profession that the two acts, that of 1868 and that of 1874, as being in pari materia, might be construed together so as to restrict the operation of the latter to cases other than those of forfeiture; and that such a construction of the two acts would obviate the necessity of declaring the act of 1874 unconstitutional. But as the act of 1874 was intended as a revisory act on the subject of revenue frauds and prosecutions therefor, and as it expressly repeals the second section of the act of 1867 but does not repeal the act of 1868, and expressly excepts criminal suits and proceedings and does not except suits for penalties and forfeitures, it would hardly be admissible to consider the act of 1868 as having any influence over the construction of the act of 1874. For the purposes of this discussion we must regard the fifth section of the latter act as independent of the act of 1868.

Reverting, then, to the peculiar phraseology of this act, and to the information in the present case, which is founded on it, we have to deal with an act which expressly excludes criminal proceedings from its operation (though embracing civil suits for penalties and forfeitures), and with an information not technically a criminal proceeding, and neither, therefore, within the literal terms of the fifth amendment to the Constitution any more than it is within the literal terms of the fourth. Does this relieve the proceedings or the law from being obnoxious to the prohibitions of either? We think not; we think they are within the spirit of both.

We have already noticed the intimate relation between the two amendments. They throw great light on each other, for the "unreasonable searches and seizures" condemned in the fourth amendment are almost always made for the purpose of compelling a man to give evidence against himself, which in criminal cases is condemned in the fifth amendment; and compelling a man "in a criminal case to be a witness against himself," which is condemned in the fifth amendment, throws light on the question as to what is an "unreasonable search and seizure" within the meaning of the fourth amendment. And we have been unable to perceive that the seizure of a man's private books and papers to be used in evidence against him is substantially different from compelling him to be a witness against himself. We think it is within the clear intent and meaning of those terms. We are also clearly of opinion that proceedings instituted for the purpose of declaring the forfeiture of a man's property by reason of offenses committed by him, though they may be civil in form, are in their nature criminal. In this very case the ground of forfeiture as declared in the twelfth section of the act of 1874, on which the information is based, consists of certain acts of fraud committed against the public revenue in relation to imported merchandise, which are made criminal by the statute; and it is declared that the offender shall be fined not exceeding $5,000 nor less than $50, or be imprisoned not exceeding two years, or both; and in addition to such fine such merchandise shall be forfeited. These are the penalties affixed to the criminal acts, the forfeiture sought by this suit being one of them. If an indictment had been presented against the claimants, upon conviction the forfeiture of the goods could have been included in the judgment. If the Government prosecutor elects to waive an indictment, and to file a civil information against the claimants—that is, civil in form—can he by this device take from the proceeding its criminal aspect and deprive the claimants of their immunities as citizens, and extort from them a production of their private papers, or, as an alternative, a confession of guilt? This can not be. The information, though technically a civil proceeding, is in substance and effect a criminal one. As showing the close relation between the civil and criminal proceedings on the same statute in such cases, we may refer to the recent case of Coffey v. The United States, ante, 436, in which we decided that an acquittal on a criminal information was a good plea in bar to a civil information for the forfeiture of goods arising upon the same acts. As, therefore, suits for penalties and forfeitures incurred by the commission of offenses against the law are of this quasi-criminal nature, we think that they are within the reason of criminal proceedings for all the purposes of the fourth amendment of the Constitution, and of that portion of the fifth amendment which declares that no person shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself; and we are further of opinion that a compulsory production of the private books and papers of the owner of goods sought to be forfeited in such a suit is compelling him to be a witness against himself within the meaning of the fifth amendment to the Constitution, and is the equivalent of a search and seizure—and an unreasonable search and seizure—within the meaning of the fourth amendment.

Though the proceeding in question is divested of many of the aggravating incidents of actual search and seizure, yet, as before said, it contains their substance and essence and effects their substantial purpose. It may be that it is the obnoxious thing in its mildest and least repulsive form, but illegitimate and unconstitutional practices get their first footing in that way, namely, by silent approaches and slight deviations from legal modes of procedure. This can only be obviated by adhering to the rule that constitutional provisions for the security of person and property should be liberally construed. A close and literal construction deprives them of half their efficacy and leads to gradual depreciation of the right, as if it consisted more in sound than in substance. It is the duty of courts to be watchful for the constitutional rights of the citizen and against any stealthy encroachments thereon. Their motto should be obsta principiis. We have no doubt that the legislative body is actuated by the same motives, but the vast accumulation of public business brought before it sometimes prevents it, on a first presentation, from noticing objections which become developed by time and the practical application of the objectionable law.

There have been several decisions in the circuit and district courts sustaining the constitutionality of the law under consideration, as well as the prior laws of 1863 and 1867. The principal of these are Stockwell v. United States (3 Clifford, 284), In re Platt and Boyd (7 Ben., 261), United States v. Hughes (12 Blatchford, 553), United States v. Mason (6 Bissell, 350), United States v. Three Tons of Coal (6 Bissell, 379), United States v. Distillery No. Twenty-eight (6 Bissell, 483). The first and leading case was that of Stockwell v. United States, decided by Mr. Justice Clifford and Judge Shepley, the law under discussion being that of 1867. Justice Clifford delivered the opinion, and relied principally upon the collection statutes, which authorized the seizure of goods liable to duty, as being a contemporaneous exposition of the amendments and as furnishing precedents of analogous laws to that complained of. As we have already considered the bearing of these laws on the subject of discussion, it is unnecessary to say anything more in relation to them. The learned justice seemed to think that the power to institute such searches and seizures as the act of 1867 authorized was necessary to the efficient collection of the revenue, and that no greater objection can be taken to a warrant to search for books, invoices, and other papers appertaining to an illegal importation than to one authorizing a search for the imported goods; and he concluded that, guarded as the new provision is, it is scarcely possible that the citizen can have any just ground of complaint. It seems to us that these considerations fail to meet the most serious objections to the validity of the law. The other cases followed that of Stockwell v. United States as a precedent, with more or less independent discussion of the subject. The case of Platt and Boyd, decided in the district court for the southern district of New York, was also under the act of 1867, and the opinion in that case is quite an elaborate one; but, of course, the previous decision of the circuit court in the Stockwell case had a governing influence on the district court. The other cases referred to were under the fifth section of the act of 1874. The case of United States v. Hughes came up first before Judge Blatchford in the district court in 1875 (8 Ben., 29). It was an action of debt to recover a penalty under the customs act, and the judge held that the fifth section of the act of 1874, in its application to suits for penalties incurred before the passage of the act, was an ex post facto law, and therefore, as to them, was unconstitutional and void; but he granted an order pro forma to produce the books and papers required in order that the objection might come up on the offer to give them in evidence. They were produced in obedience to the order and offered in evidence by the district attorney, but were not admitted. The district attorney then served upon one of the defendants a subpoena duces tecum, requiring him to produce the books and papers; and this being declined, he moved for an order to compel him to produce them, but the court refused to make such order. The books and papers referred to had been seized under the act of 1867, but were returned to the defendants under a stipulation to produce them on the trial.

The defendants relied not only on the unconstitutionality of the laws, but on the act of 1868, before referred to, which prohibited evidence obtained from a party by a judicial proceeding from being used against him in any prosecution for a crime, penalty, or forfeiture. Judgment being rendered for the defendant, the case was carried to the circuit court by writ of error, and, in that court, Mr. Justice Hunt held that the act of 1868 referred only to personal testimony or discovery obtained from a party or witness, and not to books or papers wrested from him; and, as to the constitutionality of the law, he merely referred to the case of Stockwell, and the judgment of the district court was reversed. In view of what has been already said, we think it unnecessary to make any special observations on this decision. In United States v. Mason, Judge Blodgett took the distinction that, in proceedings in rem for a forfeiture, the parties are not required by a proceeding under the act of 1874 to testify or furnish evidence against themselves, because the suit is not against them, but against the property. But where the owner of the property has been admitted as a claimant, we can not see the force of this distinction; nor can we assent to the proposition that the proceeding is not, in effect, a proceeding against the owner of the property, as well as against the goods; for it is his breach of the laws which has to be proved to establish the forfeiture, and it is his property which is sought to be forfeited; and to require such an owner to produce his private books and papers, in order to prove his breach of the laws, and thus to establish the forfeiture of his property, is surely compelling him to furnish evidence against himself. In the words of a great judge, "Goods, as goods, can not offend, forfeit, unlade, pay duties, or the like, but men whose goods they are." (Note by the court: Vaughan, C. J., in Sheppard v. Gosnold, Vaughan, 159, 172, approved by Ch. Baron Parker in Mitchell qui tam v. Torup, Parker, 227, 236.)

The only remaining case decided in the United States courts to which we shall advert is that of United States v. Distillery No. 28. In that case Judge Gresham adds to the view of Judge Blodgett, in United States v. Mason, the further suggestion, that as in a proceeding in rem the owner is not a party, he might be compelled by a subpoena duces tecum to produce his books and papers like any other witness; and that the warrant or notice for search and seizure, under the act of 1874, does nothing more. But we can not say that we are any better satisfied with this supposed solution of the difficulty. The assumption that the owner may be cited as a witness in a proceeding to forfeit his property seems to us gratuitous. It begs the question at issue. A witness, as well as a party, is protected by the law from being compelled to give evidence that tends to criminate him, or to subject his property to forfeiture. Queen v. Newell (Parker, 269; 1 Greenleaf on Evid., secs. 451-453). But, as before said, although the owner of goods, sought to be forfeited by a proceeding in rem, is not the nominal party, he is, nevertheless, the substantial party to the suit; he certainly is so after making claim and defense; and in a case like the present, he is entitled to all the privileges which appertain to a person who is prosecuted for a forfeiture of his property by reason of committing a criminal offense.

We find nothing in the decisions to change our views in relation to the principal question at issue.

We think that the notice to produce the invoice in this case, the order by virtue of which it was issued, and the law which authorized the order, were unconstitutional and void, and that the inspection by the district attorney of said invoice, when produced in obedience to said notice, and its admission in evidence by the court, were erroneous and unconstitutional proceedings. We are of opinion, therefore, that the judgment of the circuit court should be reversed, and the cause remanded, with directions to award a new trial.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I had intended making some remarks on this question and I probably shall at a later date; but I want to make an inquiry of the conferees, based upon an article in the New York Times of this morning. I read from page 17:

Special to the New York Times.

It states:

Another victory was scored by the advocates of home brew to-day when the Senate and House conferees reached a complete agreement on the Campbell-Willis beer bill.

Of course they did not reach an agreement, and that part of the article is doubtless incorrect, and is immaterial. But the article contains this statement:

Wayne B. Wheeler, spokesman for the Anti-Saloon League, who was closeted with the conferees throughout the day behind closed doors, expressed the view that the amendment would not legalize home brewing or distilling. He declared that it would merely make it more difficult to obtain evidence against violators of prohibition laws.

I am not concerned in this gentleman's opinion, but I would like to ask if it is true that Wayne B. Wheeler was closeted with the conferees?

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I think I might well decline to answer that question if I so desired, as not being material at all; but I will answer it. Mr. Wayne B. Wheeler was not closeted with the conferees during the meeting of yesterday. Mr. Wayne B. Wheeler came into the conference room after we had concluded our work for the day, and after we had decided on the questions. He was there a few minutes before we finally left the room. But Mr. Wayne B. Wheeler, so far as any action or word of his yesterday was concerned, had nothing whatever to do with any vote or any action whatever taken by the conferees.

Mr. REED. How about day before yesterday?

Mr. STERLING. Day before yesterday I did not see Mr. Wayne B. Wheeler.

Mr. REED. I do not—

Mr. STERLING. I will answer the question with reference to yesterday. Mr. President, it seems to me just a little bit impertinent for a Senator to make an inquiry as to who was present at the time the conferees were in session considering the business before them. I decline to answer further than I have answered.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I am quite content with that sort of an answer. No witness ever pleases me better than the gentleman who declines to answer. It is a constitutional right, provided constitutional grounds are alleged to exist; and I am willing to assume they exist in this case. But the Senator, who is generally a very mild mannered man, very genial, and exceedingly polite, states that it is insolent to ask this question.

Mr. STERLING. I did not use the word "insolent."

Mr. REED. That it was impertinent.

Mr. STERLING. I did say "impertinent."

Mr. REED. I will accept the amendment.

Mr. STERLING. I think it is not pertinent to any question now before the Senate.

Mr. REED. "Impertinent" has several meanings.

Mr. STERLING. I do not mean it in any particularly opprobrious sense, but I mean it as impertinent.

Mr. REED. The Senator now states that he means that it is immaterial. Mr. President, I do not think it is immaterial. I do not think it is impertinent. I do not think it is insolent to inquire. I do think it is the business of the Senate.

Conferees usually meet behind closed doors. A Senator who is not on the conference, according to my understanding, is not in the habit of going to a conference room to try to interpose his judgment or opinion. The thought of the whole transaction is that these two bodies of men meet, the one side to represent the Senate, the other side to represent the House, and to compose, if possible, the differences existing between the two Houses of Congress. However we may regard the two Houses of Congress, however the public may have come to regard them, they nevertheless are the legislative bodies representing the greatest country on earth. They are the agency created by the people to bring into law the will of the people. When differences exist between the two bodies of Congress, the chosen representatives of each body meet to compose those differences, and I say that the admission of a paid lobbyist, if he was admitted, to interfere in the deliberations between these two bodies of men, meeting to compromise the differences of the Congress, was not only an innovation but a piece of unwarranted and unmitigated insolence. Such conduct is destructive of unembarrassed legislation, and it is unfair, for it admits the representative of one side to a controversy.

Have we three bodies of legislators, one the House, another the Senate, and the third the Anti-Saloon League? When the Senate conferees seek to reach an agreement with the House conferees, is there a third party to be consulted, a third organization to be drawn into the deliberations? If Wayne B. Wheeler, representing the Anti-Saloon League, then why not some gentleman representing the "saloon league," if such a thing exists?

The truth is, this is lobbying gone mad. The lobbyist who infests Washington, even though he confines his activities to appearing before the standing committees convened in open session to publicly argue questions pending and to buttonholing Members of Congress, has for a long time been a stench in the public nostrils.

We have had antilobbying investigations carried on for years. The anathema maranatha of the Presidents of the United States have been heaped upon them. We have criticized them for their pestiferous activities in invading the offices of Members of Congress. We have held them up to obloquy and scorn as they have sat in the galleries of the two Houses; but it appears that this gentleman—and I take the refusal of the Senator to answer a question as an admission—has the impudence to carry his propaganda and his presence into the secret, if not sacred, confidences of the conferees.

Mr. President, it is the unwritten law of this body that we do not ask a conferee, when reporting, to state what any member of the conference said or to tell how any member of the conference voted; but that which is denied the Senate is at least in part given to this gentleman, who has the cool effrontery to walk into a conference meeting. I say such conduct is the business of the Senate, and I say it is not impertinent to inquire about it.

Mr. President, I am anxious to see the eighteenth amendment to the Constitution given every chance to function. When it became a part of the fundamental law of the United States it became my law. I have little respect for those who supported that amendment in the Senate and in the House who have been, since its enactment, deliberately violating its plain provisions.

I have little respect for a man who votes for prohibition with whisky on his breath, whether he be in or out of Congress. But the amendment was adopted. As I remarked the other day, I made no opposition to the passage of the Volstead Act, although I believed it to be a measure of great extremity and of unnecessary harshness.

But, sir, we are now presented, not with the question of enforcing a law of the land, a fundamental law, but we are faced with the proposal, as I construe the so-called beer bill, of violating the fundamental law of the land.

Just one word on that. Before the eighteenth amendment was passed everyone conceded that the Federal Government had no power to interfere with the manufacture, sale, or use of intoxicating liquors within the States. The power conferred by the eighteenth amendment is expressly limited to the prohibition of the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors for beverage purposes. The beer bill, so called, prohibits the prescribing of beer for medicinal purposes. Unless the word "beverage" is construed to include "medicinal," then there is no constitutional authority to pass this statute. If the language employed in the Constitution and the bill is given its ordinary meaning, then the terms "medicinal" and "beverage" are not synonymous. A court that declares them to be synonymous will disgrace the temple of justice where it convenes, I care not whether it be the Supreme Court of the United States, sitting in the Capitol, or a justice of the peace holding forth at the crossroads.

What is it that distinguishes a free country from a despotism? It is not the form of government, for a government may be monarchical in form and yet afford great liberties to the citizen and protect him in those liberties. Whether the government be an autocracy, a democracy, or a republic by name, the question of freedom or slavery is always to be determined by this test: Are the people protected in their natural rights, in their great fundamental rights, those rights which Thomas Jefferson wrote into the Declaration of Independence in the words "the right to life, liberty, property, and the pursuit of happiness are inalienable"? The government that protects those rights is a free government. The government that denies them is a despotism.

Jefferson wrote those words in the light of the history of the world. He knew the policemen of Louis XIV had proceeded without warrant to ransack the homes of cringing subjects. He had seen men dragged to the Bastille without a charge and there allowed to rot through the long and bitter years. He was gazing at the picture of Europe and witnessing the spectacle, repeated recently in Russia, of policemen at any hour of the day or night battering down the doors of homes, searching the premises, beating the occupants of the house into insensibility, and dragging them into exile, shrinking, cowering creatures, not citizens, but subjects and slaves.

In this light, and in the light of English history, was written the fourth amendment. It was intended to forever guarantee to every man the right to walk the highways without molestation, and without search, the right to maintain his home, his barn, his "curtilage," if you please, and to hold it sacred against the invasion of any man. Even the king himself was halted at the threshold. The "right of castle" was above the right of the monarch, even though the "castle" was a hovel occupied by an impoverished cottager.

The exception made was when a court, according to the law, issued its warrant, supported by oath, giving authority to a representative of the court to enter under the form and protection of the law. That law has been graven upon the tablets of our hearts. It is blazoned above the temple of American liberty. For a century it has been affirmed and reaffirmed by the courts of the land.

I have no respect for a man, whether he be a Member of the House of Representatives or elsewhere, who proposes to whittle down the Constitution of the United States, who tries to leave it, as does this amendment of the House, so that an officer can go into every building except a residence, who puts the discovery of a bottle of beer above the Constitution, who in the pursuit of his favorite pastime of hunting somebody who may take a drink is willing to destroy that Constitution in defense of which he held up his hand and before Almighty God swore he would maintain, protect, and preserve.

A man who thinks more of "getting" a bootlegger than he does of preserving the palladium of human liberty is not fit to be in a legislative body and he is not fit to be a citizen of the United States. I have more respect for an anarchist who, in his ignorance and blindness, stands upon a soap box declaiming against all government than I have for the man who will in this body or the House of Representatives swear before the Almighty that he will preserve the Constitution of the United States and then employ the authority and power the people vested in him to destroy that sacred instrument.

Nevertheless we find an amendment brought in here which reads:

That no officer, agent, or employee of the United States, while engaged in the enforcement of this act, the national prohibition act, or any law in reference to the manufacture or taxation of, or traffic in, intoxicating liquor, shall search any private dwelling without a warrant directing such search, and no such warrant shall issue unless there is reason to believe such dwelling is used as a place in which liquor is manufactured for sale or sold.

Then follows a definition of a private dwelling.

Read that in connection with what was rejected. The language rejected was:

That any officer, agent, or employee of the United States engaged in the enforcement of this act, or the national prohibition act, or any other law of the United States, who shall search or attempt to search the property or premises of any person without previously securing a search warrant as provided by law, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor.

That language they rejected, and yet it is the Constitution of the United States, buttressed and backed by the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States from the first day down to the present time. They reject it as unworthy a place in the statute books of the country, although its blazing light comes from the Constitution itself.

They also rejected this language:

Any person not a duly authorized officer, agent, or employee of the United States who shall, under color of claim to be acting as such in the enforcement of this act, or the national prohibition act, or any other law of the United States, subject or cause any person to be subjected to the deprivation of any rights, privileges, or immunities secured or guaranteed by the Constitution of the United States shall be deemed guilty of a felony.

Then they bring in a proposition which—

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. REED. I will yield in just one moment—which by implication authorizes every act of vandalism, every act of illegality, every act of unlawful and unconstitutional invasion that may occur, except such as take place within the home.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President—

Mr. REED. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. STERLING. I merely want to ask the Senator in regard to the language that he has quoted—and I understand that he has quoted from the amendment that he originally offered, a part of which language is incorporated in the amendment adopted by the Senate—whether he does not think that language is too broad and comprehensive and vague, in a way, and that if we attempt to cover the questions involved in the amendment we should not say that it should be unlawful without cause to search and seize and make arrests, to detain, and so forth, any individual, rather than to use the broad language that the Senator has used in his amendment?

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I need not digress to inquire whether the amendment I offered could have been improved in its phraseology; that is not the question. The principle is the thing, and there can be no debate about the principle save between those who favor the principle and those who oppose it.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me a moment?

Mr. REED. I yield for a moment for a question. Does the Senator wish to introduce a bill?

Mr. WARREN. I merely desire the Senator to yield for a moment.

Mr. REED. I will ask the Senator not to ask me to let him introduce a bill, for I am nearly through, and I shall yield the floor in a moment.

Mr. WARREN. I did not wish to introduce a bill now, but I wish to make a suggestion right in line with what the Senator is now saying, and, as I understand, he is about to conclude. Of course, the Senator and I voted on the same side of this question. The motion is merely to take the matter to conference, and I very much desire that it may go there quickly in order that there may be brought out a measure which, of course, will be a preferred measure; but in order to facilitate the convenience of Senators, I simply desire to say that when the matter again comes up there will be an opportunity for the Senate then to discuss it when the conference report is made.

Mr. REED. I wish to read just a few words from the decision of Boyd against The United States. That is a case where the Government undertook to compel the production of certain books and papers. In discussing the history of the fourth amendment, the court says:

In order to ascertain the nature of the proceedings intended by the fourth amendment to the Constitution under the terms "unreasonable searches and seizures," it is only necessary to recall the contemporary or then recent history of the controversies on the subject, both in this country and in England. The practice had obtained in the Colonies of issuing writs of assistance to the revenue officers, empowering them, in their discretion, to search suspected places for smuggled goods, which James Otis pronounced "the worst instrument of arbitrary power, the most destructive of English liberty, and the fundamental principles of law that ever was found in an English law book," since they placed "the liberty of every man in the hands of every petty officer." This was in February, 1761, in Boston, and the famous debate in which it occurred was perhaps the most prominent event which inaugurated the resistance of the Colonies to the oppressions of the mother country. "Then and there," said John Adams, "then and there was the first scene of the first act of opposition to the arbitrary claims of Great Britain. Then and there the child independence was born."

The court further declares:

As every American statesman during our revolutionary and formative period as a Nation was undoubtedly familiar with this monument of English freedom, and considered it as the true and ultimate expression of constitutional law, it may be confidently asserted that its propositions were in the minds of those who framed the fourth amendment to the Constitution, and were considered as sufficiently explanatory of what was meant by unreasonable searches and seizures.

The great end for which men entered into society was to secure their property. That right is preserved sacred and incommunicable in all instances where it has not been taken away or abridged by some public law for the good of the whole.

The cases where this right of property is set aside by positive law are various. Distresses, executions, forfeitures, taxes, and so forth, are all of this description, wherein every man by common consent gives up that right for the sake of justice and the general good. By the laws of England every invasion of private property, be it ever so minute, is a trespass. No man can set his foot upon my ground without my license but he is liable to an action, though the damage be nothing, which is proved by every declaration in trespass where the defendant is called upon to answer for bruising the grass and even treading upon the soil. If he admits the fact, he is bound to show, by way of justification, that some positive law has justified or excused him.

The justification is submitted to the judges, who are to look into the books and see if such a justification can be maintained by the text of the statute law or by the principles of the common law. If no such excuse can be found or produced, the silence of the books is an authority against the defendant and the plaintiff must have judgment.

Continuing, the court, at page 633, states:

We have already noticed the intimate relation between the two amendments. They throw great light on each other. For the "unreasonable searches and seizures" condemned in the fourth amendment are almost always made for the purpose of compelling a man to give evidence against himself, which, in criminal cases, is condemned in the fifth amendment; and compelling a man "in a criminal case to be a witness against himself," which is condemned in the fifth amendment, throws light on the question as to what is an "unreasonable search and seizure" within the meaning of the fourth amendment. And we have been unable to perceive that the seizure of a man's private books and papers to be used in evidence against him is substantially different from compelling him to be a witness against himself. We think it is within the clear intent and meaning of those terms. We are also clearly of opinion that proceedings instituted for the purpose of declaring the forfeiture of a man's property by reason of offenses committed by him, though they may be civil in form, are in their nature criminal.

At page 635 we find this language:

It is the duty of courts to be watchful for the constitutional rights of the citizen, and against any stealthy encroachments thereon. Their motto should be obsta principiis. We have no doubt that the legislative body is actuated by the same motives; but the vast accumulation of public business brought before it sometimes prevents it, on a first presentation, from noticing objections which become developed by time and the practical application of the objectionable law.

In Weeks against United States (232 U. S., 390) Mr. Justice Day quotes with approval from Cooley on the Constitution:

Judge Cooley, in his Constitutional Limitations, pages 425, 426, in treating of this feature of our Constitution, said: "The maxim that 'every man's house is his castle' is made a part of our constitutional law in the clauses prohibiting unreasonable searches and seizures and has always been looked upon as of high value to the citizen."

At page 390 the learned justice says:

"Accordingly," says Lieber in his work on Civil Liberty and Self-Government, 62, in speaking of the English law in this respect, "no man's house can be forcibly opened, or he or his goods be carried away after it has thus been forced, except in cases of felony, and then the sheriff must be furnished with a warrant and take great care lest he commit a trespass. This principle is jealously insisted upon."

Continuing, Justice Day declares:

In the Boyd case, supra, after citing Lord Camden's judgment in Entick v. Carrington (19 Howell's State Trials, 1029), Mr. Justice Bradley said (630):

"The principles laid down in this opinion affect the very essence of constitutional liberty and security. They reach further than the concrete form of the case then before the court, with its adventitious circumstances; they apply to all invasions on the part of the Government and its employees of the sanctity of a man's home and the privacies of life. It is not the breaking of his doors and the rummaging of his drawers that constitutes the essence of the offense, but it is the invasion of his indefeasible right of personal security, personal liberty, and private property, where that right has never been forfeited by his conviction of some public offense—it is the invasion of this sacred right which underlies and constitutes the essence of Lord Camden's judgment."

In Bram v. United States (168 U. S., 532) this court in speaking by the present Chief Justice of Boyd's case, dealing with the fourth and fifth amendments, said (544):

It was in that case demonstrated that both of these amendments contemplated perpetuating, in their full efficacy, by means of a constitutional provision, principles of humanity and civil liberty, which had been secured in the mother country only after years of struggle, so as to implant them in our institutions in the fullness of their integrity, free from the possibilities of future legislative change. (P. 391.)

Observe this warning found on pages 392 and 393:

The tendency of those who execute the criminal laws of the country to obtain conviction by means of unlawful seizures and enforced confessions, the latter often obtained after subjecting accused persons to unwarranted practices destructive of rights secured by the Federal Constitution, should find no sanction in the judgments of the courts which are charged at all times with the support of the Constitution and to which people of all conditions have a right to appeal for the maintenance of such fundamental rights.

The efforts of the courts and their officials to bring the guilty to punishment, praiseworthy as they are, are not to be aided by the sacrifice of those great principles established by years of endeavor and suffering which have resulted in their embodiment in the fundamental law of the land. (P. 393.)

I call special attention to this language of the opinion:

The effect of the fourth amendment is to put the courts of the United States and Federal officials, in the exercise of their power and authority, under limitations and restraints as to the exercise of such power and authority, and to forever secure the people, their persons, houses, papers, and effects against all unreasonable searches and seizures under the guise of the law. This protection reaches all alike, whether accused of crime or not, and the duty of giving to it force and effect is obligatory upon all entrusted under our Federal system with the enforcement of the laws. (Weeks v. United States, 232 U. S., 1 c., 391. Opinion by Justice Day.)

Even a fanatic hot in pursuit of quarry ought to be halted by the opinion of the great jurist I have quoted.

The Weeks case is followed and approved in Lumber Co. against United States (251 U. S., 385. Opinion by Justice Holmes.)

The facts appear in the syllabus.

SYLLABUS.

The fourth amendment protects a corporation and its officers from compulsory production of the corporate books and papers for use in a criminal action against them, when the information upon which the subpoenas were framed was derived by the Government through a previous unconstitutional search and seizure, planned and executed by its officials under color of a void writ, provided the defense of the amendment be seasonably interposed and not first raised as a collateral issue at the trial of the indictment.

OPINION.

The proposition could not be presented more nakedly. It is that although, of course its seizure was an outrage which the Government now regrets, it may study the papers before it returns them, copy them, and then use the knowledge that it has gained to call upon the owners in a more regular form to produce them; that the protection of the Constitution covers the physical possession but not any advantages that the Government can gain over the object of its pursuit by doing the forbidden act. Weeks v. United States, 232 U. S., 383, to be sure, had established that laying the papers directly before the grand jury was unwarranted, but it is taken to mean only that two steps are required instead of one. In our opinion such is not the law. It reduces the fourth amendment to a form of words. The essence of a provision forbidding the acquisition of evidence in a certain way is that not merely evidence so acquired shall not be used before the court, but that it shall not be used at all. The knowledge gained by the Government's own wrong can not be used by it in the way proposed.

I call attention to two very recent cases, one of which was mentioned by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE], the case of Felix Goulded against the United States, which was decided as late as February 28, 1921, by the Supreme Court. In that case a man was suspected of illegal acts which concerned his loyalty. Under such circumstances the temptation to obtain evidence by any means was great. Likewise the temptation to a court to sustain the legality of the seizure was great. Officers of the United States Army succeeded in placing a man in the defendant's establishment who purloined certain of his papers. How did the court treat that case when the papers were brought in evidence?

The court states:

It was objected on the trial, and is here insisted upon, that it was error to admit these papers in evidence, because possession of them was obtained by violating the rights secured to the defendant by the fourth and fifth amendments to the Constitution of the United States. The fourth amendment reads:

"The right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects against unreasonable searches and seizures shall not be violated, and no warrant shall issue but upon probable cause supported by oath or affirmation, and particularly describing the place to be searched and persons or things to be seized."

The part of the fifth amendment here involved reads:

"No person shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself."

The court comments:

It would not be possible to add to the emphasis with which the framers of our Constitution and this court in Boyd v. United States (116 U. S.), Silverthorne Lumber Co. v. United States (251 U. S.), Weeks v. United States (and various other cases cited), have declared the importance to political liberty and to the welfare of our country of the due observance of the rights guaranteed under the Constitution by these two amendments.

The effect of the decision cited is: That such rights are declared to be indispensable to the "full enjoyment of personal security, personal liberty, and private property"; that they are to be regarded as of the very essence of constitutional liberty; and that the guaranty of them is as important and as imperative as are the guaranties of the other fundamental rights of the individual citizen—the right to trial by jury, to the writ of habeas corpus, and to due process of law. It has been repeatedly decided that these amendments should receive a liberal construction, so as to prevent stealthy encroachments upon or "gradual depreciation" of the rights secured by them, by imperceptible practice of courts, or by well-intentioned but mistakenly overzealous executive officers.

If the court was writing that decision now, I think they would include some of the Members of the House of Representatives as those willing to make encroachments.

The other opinion is in the case of Lawrence Amos against United States, argued December 13 and decided February 28, 1921. In that case prohibition officers searched a man's place of business and then searched his house. They found a half pint of moonshine whisky in the place of business, and they found, I think, 2 quarts at his home. When they went to his home his wife was present; they told her they were prohibition officers and had come to search the house and the woman made no resistance. Thereupon the great Government of the United States pleaded that they had been licensed to come into the house with the consent of the housewife. The court, briefly setting forth the facts, states:

After the jury was sworn, but before any evidence brought had been offered, the defendant presented to the court a petition, duly sworn to by him, praying that there be returned to him the described property of his which it was averred the district attorney intended to use as evidence at the trial and which had been seized by J. P. Coleman and C. A. Rector.

The plaintiff in error, whom we shall designate defendant, as he was in the court below, was tried on an indictment containing six counts. He was found not guilty on the first four counts, but guilty on the fifth, which charged him with having removed whisky on which the revenue tax had not been paid to a place other than a Government warehouse, and also on the sixth, which charged him with having sold whisky on which the tax required by law had not been paid.

After the jury was sworn, but before any evidence was offered, the defendant presented to the court a petition, duly sworn to by him, praying that there be returned to him described private property of his which it was averred the district attorney intended to use in evidence at the trial, and which had been seized by J. P. Coleman and C. A. Rector, officers of the Government, in search of defendant's house and store "within his curtilage," made unlawfully and without warrant of any kind, in violation of his rights under the fourth and fifth amendments to the Constitution of the United States.

Upon reading of this petition and hearing of the application it was denied, and, exception being noted, the trial proceeded.

Coleman and Rector were called as witnesses by the Government and testified: That, as deputy collectors of internal revenue, they went to defendant's home, and, not finding him there, but finding a woman who said she was his wife, told her that they were revenue officers, and had come to search the premises "for violations of the revenue law"; that thereupon the woman opened the store and the witness entered, and in a barrel of peas found a bottle containing not quite a half-pint of illicitly distilled whisky, which they called "blockade whisky"; and that they then went into the home of defendant, and, on searching, found two bottles under the quilt on the bed, one of which contained a full quart and the other a little over a quart of illicitly distilled whisky. The Government introduced in evidence a pint bottle containing whisky, which the witness Coleman stated "was not one of the bottles found by him, but that the whisky contained in the same was poured out of one of the two bottles that had been found in defendant's house on the bed under the quilt, as stated." On cross-examination both witnesses testified that they did not have any warrant for the arrest of the defendant, nor any search warrant to search his house, and that the search was made during the daytime, in the absence of the defendant, who did not appear on the scene until after the search had been made.

After these two Government witnesses had described how the search was made of defendant's home without warrant either to arrest him or to search his premises, a motion by counsel to strike out their testimony was denied and exception noted.

This statement shows that the trial court denied the petition of the defendant for a return of his property, seized in the search of his home by Government agents without warrant of any kind, in plain violation of the fourth and fifth amendments to the Constitution of the United States, as they have been interpreted and applied by this court in Boyd v. United States (116 U. S., 616; 29 L. ed., 746; 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 524); in Weeks v. United States (232 U. S., 383; 58 L. ed., 652; L. R. A. 1915 B, 834; 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 341; Ann. Cas. 1915 C, 1117); and in Silverthorne Lumber Co. v. United States (251 U. S., 385; 64 L. ed., 319; 40 Sup. Ct. Rep. 182), and also denied his motion to exclude such property and the testimony relating thereto, given by the Government agents after both were introduced in evidence against him, when he was on trial for a crime as to which they constituted relevant and material evidence, if competent.

The answer of the Government to the claim that the trial court erred in the two rulings we have described is that the petition for the return of defendant's property was properly denied because it came too late when presented after the jury was impaneled and the trial to that extent commenced, and that the denial of the motion to exclude the property and the testimony of the Government agents relating thereto, after the manner of search of defendant's home had been described, was justified by the rule that in the progress of the trial of criminal cases courts will not stop to frame a collateral issue to inquire whether evidence offered, otherwise competent, was lawfully or unlawfully obtained.

Plainly the question thus presented for decision are ruled by the conclusions this day announced in No. 250, Gould v. United States.

There is nothing in the record to indicate that the allegations of the petition for the return of the property, sworn to by the defendant, were in any respect questioned or denied, and the report of the examination and appropriate cross-examination of the Government's witnesses, called to make out its case, shows clearly the unconstitutional character of the seizure by which the property which it introduced was obtained. The facts essential to the disposition of the motion were not and could not be denied; they were literally thrust upon the attention of the court by the Government itself. The petition should have been granted, but it having been denied the motion should have been sustained.

The contention that the constitutional rights of defendant were waived when his wife admitted to his home the Government officers, who came without warrant demanding admission to make search of it under Government authority, can not be entertained.

We need not consider whether it is possible for a wife, in the absence of her husband, thus to waive his constitutional rights, for it is perfectly clear that, under the implied coercion here presented, no such waiver was intended or effected.

It results that the judgment of the district court must be reversed and the case remanded for further proceedings in accordance with this opinion.

What renders this attempt to ravish the Constitution the more remarkable is that two United States district courts in construing the very act we are amending have forcefully reaffirmed the cases I have quoted and again warned those who disregard the rights of freemen that the Constitution is still a bulwark against which they can not prevail.

I quote from the opinion of Judge Sater, of the district court of the southern district of Ohio, in United States against Rykowski (267 Fed., 870-871):

Under the act of June 15, 1917 [the Volstead Act] a search warrant can not be issued except upon probable cause supported by affidavit naming or describing the person and particularly describing the property and place to be searched. The commissioner, before issuing the warrant, must examine on oath the complainant and any witnesses he may produce, and must require their affidavits or take their depositions in writing and cause them to be subscribed by the parties making them. The affidavits or depositions must set forth the facts tending to establish the grounds of the application or probable cause for believing them to exist. An enumeration of all the provisions of the act, which only states the essentials to the procurement of a warrant, which have long been required in English-speaking countries, is unnecessary, as the statute is readily accessible to those desiring to avail themselves of or who are required to act under its provisions.

This extended expression of my views is for the purpose of bringing to the attention of United States commissioners and those seeking search warrants the long-established conditions on which a search warrant may issue, and what the contents of such warrants must be when granted. The eighteenth amendment to the Federal Constitution is as sacred as the fourth and fifth amendments, but no more so. They stand on an equality. There is no inconsistency between them. The Volstead Act, like any other law, should be enforced as long as it is on the statute book. Efforts for its enforcement should be along legal lines, lest the law be made odious and the ultimate result be the defeat of justice.

I quote from the opinion of District Judge Fitzhenry, in U. S. v. Kelih (272 Fed., 489):

By the fourth amendment to the Constitution the people declared the limit beyond which Congress was not to go in authorizing search warrants. But, of course, Congress has the power to add further limitations upon the issuance of search warrants if it deems proper. By the passage of the national prohibition act Congress has seen fit to add a further limitation to the issuance of search warrants in liquor cases, where it provided:

"No search warrant shall issue to search any private dwelling occupied as such unless it is being used for the unlawful sale of intoxicating liquor, or unless it is in part used for some business purpose such as a store, shop, saloon, restaurant, hotel, or boarding house." National prohibition act, Title II, paragraph 25. (U. S. v. Kelih, 272 Fed., 489. Opinion by District Judge Fitzhenry.)

The opinion in the Amos case refers to "implied coercion." There is implied coercion every time a man stops you upon the highway and states that he is a revenue officer. The citizen under such circumstances fears to stand upon his rights. There is the implied coercion when they come to the home or the place of business of a citizen, and these men well understand it. Well may we say there is implied coercion, for more than once they have resorted to force, and I have been informed they have even killed people who have dared to resist them.

Mr. President, the question as to whether doctors can give beer to patients may not be very material. It is, in my judgment, material. It seems to me we are running mad when we deny to a doctor the right to give beer to some old man or old woman who needs it; but if the old man or old woman dies without it, sad as it may be, the country will still survive.

It may be a very bad thing for a man to make whisky that he is not entitled to make, but if some of it is made and some of it is sold the country will still survive. It may be a bad and wicked thing for a man to carry a half pint of liquor in his grip or in his pocket, but if he does so, and drinks it, although he may kill himself, the country survives. The Constitution survives. Liberty continues to live. But when, in order to stop these practices, the fanatics and the hypocrites and the well-intentioned but misinformed of the country are willing to tear out the chief pillars that support the temple of human liberty—the fourth and fifth amendments—it is time that the plain truth should be stated to the people of this country. It is time we should call a halt. If the Constitution is ever destroyed, let the Senate Chamber be the place where its defenders will make the final stand for its preservation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon the motion of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING], who has moved that the Senate disagree to the amendments made by the House to Senate amendments numbered 10, 15, and 32.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, the Senator understands that to mean that the conferees will insist upon the amendments that the—

Mr. STERLING. That the Senate had agreed to.

Mr. REED. Yes.

Mr. STERLING. Certainly.

Mr. REED. Insist upon all of them and reject the House amendments?

Mr. STERLING. We shall insist on them, of course, in conference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from South Dakota.

The motion was agreed to.

INTERSTATE HIGHWAY SYSTEM.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the amendment of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1072) to amend the act entitled "An act to provide that the United States shall aid the States in the construction of rural post roads, and for other purposes," approved July 11, 1916, as amended and supplemented, and for other purposes.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, the question before the Senate, as I understand, is on the amendment offered by the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] to strike out section 8 of the road bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. HARRELD] to that section. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 7, line 22, it is proposed to strike out the words "and directed."

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Mississippi suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gooding	McCormick	Simmons
Ball	Hale	McKellar	Stanley
Borah	Harreld	McNary	Sterling
Brandegee	Harrison	Nelson	Sutherland
Broussard	Heflin	New	Townsend
Calder	Jones, Wash.	Norbeck	Trammell
Capper	Kellogg	Oddie	Wadsworth
Caraway	King	Phipps	Walsh, Mass.
Curtis	Ladd	Reed	Warren
Fletcher	Lenroot	Sheppard	Willis
Glass	Lodge	Shortridge

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to announce the absence of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES] on account of death in his family. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

I desire, also, to announce the absence of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] on official business. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-three Senators have responded to their names. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the names of the absentees.

The reading clerk called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. CAMERON and Mr. HITCHCOCK answered to their names when called.

Mr. POINDEXTER, Mr. SWANSON, Mr. NICHOLSON, Mr. JONES of New Mexico, Mr. STANFIELD, and Mr. POMERENE entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-one Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

The pending question is the amendment to the committee amendment proposed by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. HARRELD] to strike out, on page 7, line 22, the words "and directed."

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I do not intend to discuss the motion to amend made by the Senator from Oklahoma. I just want to get the parliamentary situation straightened out, in my own mind, at least. Is that offered as an amendment to my amendment?

Mr. TOWNSEND. The amendment of the Senator from New York is in the nature of a motion to strike out, and the amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma is to perfect the text of the portion which the Senator from New York moves to strike out.

Mr. KING. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President. Of course, the acceptance of the amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma would not preclude the putting of the motion offered by the Senator from New York?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No; that will be the next amendment to be considered.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I want to say just a word, Mr. President. I hope this amendment will not prevail, but I do not propose to discuss it at length. I want the Senate to understand that one of the contentions that is made now is that the authorization of the Congress in these matters is not always observed.

Mr. SIMMONS. I wish to add to what the chairman of the committee has said that in my judgment if that change is made section 8 might just as well be stricken out of the bill.

Mr. HARRELD. Mr. President, under that provision of the committee amendment the Secretary of War can prevent the delivery of any of this material to the Secretary of Agriculture by simply refusing to declare that it is surplus.

Mr. SIMMONS. In that case he would have to find the fact, and the assumption is that the Secretary of War would find the fact as the fact is and not find it against the fact.

Mr. HARRELD. As a matter of fact, though, he must find that it is surplus before he can authorize it to be delivered, and so to direct him to do a thing simply leaves him in the attitude of refusing to declare that it is surplus. So that after all you can not reach this material unless the Secretary of War is willing to allow it to be allotted to the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, the way the section now reads, the Secretary of War is authorized and directed to turn over these surplus supplies. If you strike out "and directed," although he would be authorized to turn it over, there would be no direction to turn it over and there would be pressure brought to bear on him so as not to turn it over, and in the absence of this instruction to turn it over there will be some excuse for him not to turn it over. But if we leave that in the law he will say, then, to those who bring that pressure to bear, "I have no discretion in the matter now as to turning it over. Here is the surplus, and I am directed by an act of Congress to turn it over." That gives him something to hide behind.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is upon the motion to strike out section 8, the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] to the committee amendment.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I do not intend to take the time of the Senate, but in a rather hastily conducted colloquy yesterday with the Senator from Michigan, I was asked the question as to how many motor trucks the War Department had. I misunderstood the question, and answered it by saying 9,000. That is not correct. I realized the error after the colloquy had ended, but did not have an opportunity to correct the statement. I had in mind another matter which involved 9,000 trucks. That is the number of trucks which the Post Office Department has received from the War Department. The fact is that the War Department has all told, I believe, in the neighborhood of 17,000 to 18,000 trucks, which, according to their earnest statement to the committee, is 1,500 less than the number of trucks they ought to have for an Army of 150,000.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Then they have no surplus.

Mr. WADSWORTH. No. Something was said yesterday, too, about surplus property. This thing is of such vast importance, and involves so many hundreds of millions of dollars, that we ought to have all the facts we can get on it. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] asked me certain questions, or made certain observations, about the sale of property, and I might just as well put the last authentic figures into the Record. This statistical report is under date of August 13 and contains information on the subject of sales of surplus supplies up to July 29, 1921. Up to that date, practically the 1st of August, the present month, there had been received from sales $827,-$18,848, and there had been transferred to other departments $134,000,000 worth of property. The total of sales and transfers up to August 1, therefore, is $961,952,459.

To show that they are still working at it, because some Senator asked why they do not sell more, let me give a little further data. The question indicated that the Senator has not asked about the matter and informed himself. In the five weeks immediately prior to July 29 they sold $10,500,000 worth of stuff for cash. They transferred $4,398,000 worth to other departments. In other words, sales are going on all the time, and I have been contending that the property should be sold by the Federal Government and the money put into the United States

Treasury rather than be given away to any other Government or community.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President—

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield to the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. SIMMONS. Can the Senator give us any information as to the original cost of the things that have been sold?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I can. I have it right here. The receipts for the property which has been sold have netted the Government 55.9 per cent of the cost price.

Mr. WARREN. That is the average of all sales?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The average of all the sales, 55.9 per cent. I stated to the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] yesterday that it was 55 per cent. I understated it by nine-tenths of 1 per cent.

Now, just a word—

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, before the Senator leaves that subject, is he able to inform the Senate whether the prices now being obtained represent as large a percentage of the cost as those earlier obtained?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; of course, not. The percentages which are now being obtained, of course, are lower than those obtained in the first six or seven months of the activity, for two obvious reasons. When the sales commenced prices in this country and all over the world were very high and they got good prices for things. Secondly, the things that were easiest to sell naturally sold first and the longer the activity continues the harder it is, comparatively speaking, to clean up the surplus, the department finding itself in possession, months and perhaps two or three years after the war, of things that civilians will not buy except at purely nominal figures, so of course the percentage of recovery is bound to gradually go down, down, down.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Can the Senator put into the RECORD the amount sold in each month, or in each year?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I can not do that now.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Certainly.

Mr. McKELLAR. I wish to ask the Senator if the figures he has there include the $400,000,000 worth to the French Government?

Mr. WADSWORTH. They do not; only things sold in this country.

Mr. McKELLAR. In the United States?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. I wished to call attention to that.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Now, just a word about the motor vehicles. I think Senators ought to know about these, because I hear so many observations that must be founded on incomplete knowledge. Just let me read this, as an official statement coming from the War Department, not gotten up for the purpose of this debate at all, but sent out as a part of a regular statistical report:

On December 18, 1920, the Secretary of War authorized the disposition of 26,995 motor vehicles by transfer to other Government activities and by sale at public auction. On July 1, 1921—

That is just this summer—

this surplus was increased by 1,562 motor vehicles, making the total surplus 28,557. Up to August 6, 1921—

Only 10 days ago—

22,704, or 80 per cent of that surplus, had been disposed of. This surplus—

That is, the 28,557, which has been declared since December 18, 1920, just last winter—is in addition to the 44,225 motor vehicles declared surplus and disposed of prior to November 16, 1920.

In other words, the War Department has given away or has sold 66,000 motor vehicles; and yet Senators say that it is difficult to get anything out of the War Department. Of the 66,000, 44,000 were given away. Against that I protest. That is the reason why I offer the amendment to strike out section 8, which will perpetuate this policy of transferring, free of charge, Government property from one department to another without anything being credited to the first department or charged to the second and what is ultimately done with the property.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I should like to inquire of the Senator from New York if he has the figures showing the percentage of cost of motor vehicles that has been derived from sales?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am afraid I have not. There are only two statistical tables here in this whole volume with respect to surplus property, and they do not go into such detail as that. I could give the Senator a good deal more information on the general character of property sold and the amount received for the different kinds of property, but I do not think I can give the percentage of recovery on each kind.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I was rather curious to know what percentage had been received from motor vehicles.

Mr. WADSWORTH. A very small percentage.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. That is what I suspected.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is because the ones that have been sold are practically the worn-out trucks. Nearly all those that have been given away were the good ones. Occasionally some bad ones were given away besides, but thousands of brand-new trucks that had never been used at all, thousands and thousands of them, were given away. Of course there is no recovery on them.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I was led to make this inquiry by an observation down at Camp Pike, in Arkansas, last winter. I observed there several acres of trucks out in the weather not being cared for in any respect. I understand that since that time a shelter of some sort has been put over them, but there were acres of them there then just simply exposed to the elements and no use being made of them whatever. I might add that at that time I observed a number of sheds there that were not being utilized at all.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, I hope the amendment of the Senator from New York will not be adopted. What was the situation when we entered upon this policy? The Federal Government was voting money to aid the States, which were required to put up an equal amount in an extensive road-building program. We voted over $100,000,000 for that purpose. That work has been going on. At that time confessedly the States could not buy the machinery and road material in the market to enable them to go on with the work to the extent that they were doing.

At that time the War Department had a vast amount of this material, which would have to be sold in the market or turned over to the States for a useful purpose for the benefit of all the people of the United States. Confessedly, taking the high prices, the Senator admits the War Department only got 55 per cent of the cost, and yet that material was worth par full cost to the States.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That figure is on every kind of thing which they sold. The list of articles which they sold would cover a whole page. There were many different kinds of articles.

Mr. KELLOGG. Presumably they did not get any more for the road material than they got for the other material.

Mr. WADSWORTH. But they did not sell the new trucks.

Mr. KELLOGG. That was worth more than 55 per cent of the cost to the States, and it enabled the country to go on immediately with a road program and enabled the States to get the material. The Senator's mistake, it seems to me, is that he treats the War Department as entirely separate from the United States and the people of the United States, and he treats the State governments in the same way. I had always supposed that the War Department was simply an agency of the people of the country, of the Government, and that the States were really a part of the Union, and to aid the States with material as well as to aid them with money was one of the objects of Congress in passing the legislation.

The argument now made is that the War Department can have no accounting. There is nothing to prevent the War Department from having a complete accounting for everything that is turned over, and charging it on the books so they will know exactly where they stand.

The argument is made here that the States have been selling this material and a great deal has been made of what has been done in the State of Ohio. Immediately when the charge was made in the newspapers or wherever it was about these things, the Agricultural Department undertook to find out just how much had been done. They asked every State to report and 40 of the 48 States have reported. They have made a calculation and as nearly as they can determine, and they have determined it very accurately, I think, about one-half of 1 per cent of the material which has been awarded to the States was found unfit for road work for various purposes—machines worn out, parts of machines worn out, or parts of machines that were not suitable, and they have been sold. It is a bagatelle as compared to the whole. Many States have not sold any. The State of Minnesota has not sold anything and many others have not.

Suppose the States had not sold this material, would it have been any money in the pockets of the people of the country to send it back to some camp to have it handed back to the War Department and the War Department then sell it? The War Department now confessedly has a very large amount of material which it has not yet sold three years after the close of the war, and if it is used for the benefit of all the people of the country, it is not turning it over to a foreign Government or alien Government or giving it away. It is being used by the people of the United States.

Why is it that some of the States received certain material that was not available for building roads? The Department of Agriculture has said that they made out requisitions and received invoices or statements from the War Department of the material furnished and that the material furnished did not comply with the inventory furnished and that when some of the material was received it was unfit for use and has been sold, but the amount that has been sold is very small.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Has the Senator made any inquiry as to whether the Department of Agriculture has requisitioned 5,000 horses from the War Department?

Mr. KELLOGG. I have not.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Does the Senator suppose the War Department could avoid filling that requisition accurately?

Mr. KELLOGG. Yes; the War Department can refuse to fill it under the law.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Not if the horses are declared surplus.

Mr. KELLOGG. Yes; they can. I do not agree with the Senator in his construction of the law at all. I am not anxious for the War Department to give away material, but it is economy for all the people to have material that confessedly can not be sold to-day for 50 per cent of its cost and can not be used by the States.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I am somewhat surprised at the argument made by the able Senator from Minnesota. I think that his criticism, certainly implied, of the argument made by the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] is somewhat unfair and scarcely up to the high standard which the Senator from Minnesota usually maintains.

He complains because of the suggestion that the War Department is separate from the States, and insists that he had supposed that the War Department was an agency of the people because the Government belongs to the people. Of course, this Government belongs to the people; no one denies it. The people, under the Constitution and the law, direct the course of the Government. Departments can be created and the representatives of the people can direct that money be taken from the Treasury, or property taken from one agency and transferred to another. But because of such power there is no sufficient reason, Mr. President, why we should pursue policies that are unwise and uneconomical and that are at variance with the principles of sound and sane business administration and of common sense.

Mr. KELLOGG. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. KING. Yes.

Mr. KELLOGG. In what has this policy been uneconomical?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, it is to my mind not only productive of waste and extravagance but gross inefficiency in administration if the course here advocated is followed.

The employment of revolving funds, the transfer of money or property from one agency to another, particularly when no accounting is required, the adoption of a system which permits the use of funds appropriated for one year, or for a specific purpose, to be expended during some following year and for a different purpose; the transfer of property from one department to another—all or either of these things tend to waste and extravagance. Such a course, in my opinion, should not be permitted. I assert that it is uneconomical when departments or agencies or States or executive instrumentalities, either of the Federal Government or of the States, may obtain property for the asking, property which belongs to the Government and has not been paid for by the Government itself. Gifts, as a rule, are not appreciated; and officials, no matter how honest, are not as careful with funds or property attained as gifts. If they have to tax the people to purchase needed property in communities they will use less and bestow better care upon the same.

My information is that considerable property has been distributed to the States, which was absolutely necessary for their use, and that if the States had been compelled to buy the same they would have acquired but a fraction of it. As long as it was being freely distributed States took much not needed. If gratuities are to be distributed, few objections are made to its reception, even though its use is problematical. Indeed, we know of the millions foolishly expended by the people, because the property acquired is bought at "bargain prices." We are very glad to receive property when we can get it for nothing.

When property is received by transfer from one agency of the Government to another without payment the demands for such transfer will be far greater than if the property must be paid for in cash or charged against the appropriation account given by Congress to such purchasing agency.

Mr. President, the proper thing to do, in justice to the War Department, which is charged with enormous appropriations, and out of which the property in question was paid for, is to authorize the War Department to sell the surplus, and if the States want the surplus to give them the preference right to purchase, but let them pay for it, and pay the fair cash value of the same. The money so paid would go into the Treasury, and would reduce taxation pro tanto. Senators talk as though the War Department owned the property and intended to dispose of it for the benefit of some officers or some agency. The property is owned by the United States. The War Department is only the custodian, and if it sells the property the money is covered into the Treasury. It thus relieves the people of the burden of taxes to the extent of the amount so placed in the Treasury.

As stated, if there is surplus property let it be sold and give the States who need it for road building the preference right to buy.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is a very different proposal; I should subscribe to a proposition of that kind at any moment; but politics will creep into this thing of free transfers and dispositions of property just as surely as we sit here in the Senate. When the Government says, "I stand ready to give you something," the demand will be accelerated by those who are politically interested in becoming popular through the free distribution of something belonging to the Government.

Mr. KING. I stated, Mr. President, that it is unfair to the War Department, charged as it has been with billions of dollars of appropriations in carrying on the war, now to charge against it property which it can sell and recoup some of its losses and put on the credit side some of the funds with which it has been charged.

It has been stated here—and no one denies it—that $100,000,000 of property have been turned over to the Agricultural Department for distribution among the States. What credit has the War Department for that $100,000,000? What did the States pay for that $100,000,000 of property? Theoretically the Government of the United States appropriates $1 for road purposes for every dollar which the States appropriate; actually the Federal Government is putting up more than 50 per cent. The Federal Government puts up the 50 per cent of cash, and then, by the votes of Senators and Representatives, it takes away $100,000,000 of property of the United States and turns that over to the States, forsooth, because the "Government of the United States belongs to the people!"

Mr. President, everybody seems willing to take something from the Government. In this Chamber Senators condemn the extravagance of administration and the burdens laid upon the people and then vote to spend hundreds of millions which are not imperatively required or to take property from the Government which could be sold for some amount, which would diminish the aggregate sum required for governmental expenses. It seems as though everyone was ready to put his hand into the Treasury or upon the property of the Federal Government. Few seem to regard the taxpayers or to have the interests of the Government at heart. Let me add that if we have the interests of the Government at heart we have the interests of the people at heart. If we serve our country well we serve the people well. The $100,000,000 worth of property which has been turned over to the States ought to have been sold by the War Department, giving the States the preference right to buy that which they required.

My good friend from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] yesterday said that the policy which had been pursued was opposed by some of the manufacturers of automobiles, trucks, and so forth. I have no knowledge upon that matter. It would seem to me that no advantage would be derived by the manufacturers from the adoption of what I insist is the fair and rational course to pursue.

My suggestion is not that the materials not required by the War Department be kept from the market. On the contrary, I have heretofore advocated the prompt sale of all surplus supplies. Months ago I offered measures compelling the sale of all surplus war supplies and materials. I now suggest that in making such sales the States have the first opportunity to secure such commodities as they need in their road work. This course would not result in the situation claimed by the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. President, the argument made by the Senator from New York yesterday upon the pending motion is unanswerable. We may bandy words and profess great devotion to the people, but the plain fact is that we are asked to commit the Government to a wasteful and foolish policy, one which in the end will hurt the States and injure the people. If we persist in this policy of transferring from one department to another property regarded as surplus, we will witness the development of a vicious and wasteful system, which will invade other departments and corrode and corrupt administrative activities. It will lead to demands that property which may be required by a department of the Government be declared surplus in order that States or municipalities or Federal agencies may secure it without cost. It will encourage departments to part with property which may be valuable and of service in order that officials therein may get newer designs or different makes. If property may be declared as surplus for the purpose of having some other agency or States acquire it, the inclination to so declare it will be greater, because it will be recognized that the department so parting with the property will be able to secure an appropriation for needed supplies. This policy will lead States and Federal agencies to agitate to secure a finding that certain desired property is surplus. The evils are so numerous that will flow from this plan that I can not see how Senators can support it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McNARY in the chair). Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. WADSWORTH. From a very hasty examination of other sections of the pending bill, I discover a provision which authorizes the transfer of title to real estate in the possession of the United States between departments without the authority of Congress.

Mr. KING. Of course, Mr. President, that will follow. Pretty soon we shall permit the various departments of the Government, under general, sweeping statutes such as this, to "swap" and exchange property at will and to make distribution of property which some official of the Government may not think is presently needed. Some man may be particularly interested in the development of some activity with which he is not charged, and he may declare some property as not necessary for the agency with which he is connected, in order that it may be declared surplus for distribution to some agency or instrumentality of the Government in which he may have some indirect interest. I do not mean a financial or a pecuniary interest—it may be merely a sentimental interest; but the policy is wrong. As I have said, Mr. President, and as I now repeat, the continuation of this policy now will lead to its extension until there will be demands for a general distribution of all property in all departments and all agencies of the Government to the States.

If we are going to declare property unnecessary or unsuitable for service in any agency or department of the Government, there ought to be a board charged with the disposition of it; and, if some other department needs it, let that department pay for it its reasonable value, crediting to the department or bureau parting with the title and charging the other department or bureau which obtains it with the value or the amount to be paid, and charge that against the appropriation which is made to the purchasing agency or department. So, with respect to surplus property held by the War Department, if we are to give to the States any rights in the matter let us pass a law by which property that may be declared to be unnecessary for use by the War Department shall be sold, the preference right to purchase being given to the States.

If I understood the Senator from Minnesota correctly, he differed from the construction placed upon section 8 by the Senator from New York. His interpretation, as I understood him, of that section was that there was no obligation whatever upon the War Department, if it has, for example, 5,000 horses which are unnecessary for immediate use in the War Department, to honor the requisition which might be made by the Department of Agriculture. Section 8 reads:

That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed—

He has no discretion; he is "directed"— to transfer to the commission—

The section having been amended, it now reads "the Secretary of Agriculture"— upon his request all surplus war material, equipment, and supplies not needed for the purposes of the War Department but suitable for use in the improvement of highways, and that the same shall be distributed among the highway departments of the several States—

And so forth.

Now, first, the Secretary of War is commanded to transfer, upon the request of the Secretary of Agriculture, "all surplus war material, equipment, and supplies"—under what circumstances? When "not needed." What do the words "not needed" mean? They interpret themselves—not needed now; not needed within a reasonable time in the future; not essential for the conduct of the activities of the War Department.

One Senator a moment ago adverted to the fact that there was some property still on hand not disposed of. It was only recently that Congress decided to reduce the Army to 150,000 men. It would have been improvident in the extreme for the War Department to have disposed of equipment needed for an army of 200,000 men before the Army had been reduced to 150,000 men. The reduction which was effectuated only a few days ago by reason of legislative enactment, of course, will result in considerable property of the War Department not now being needed. Therefore, if there are 5,000 horses or any other number not now needed by the War Department and requisition were made by the Secretary of Agriculture, the Secretary of War would be compelled to make the transfer. I am not able to follow the learned Senator from Minnesota in his position that this section would not impose the obligation upon the Secretary of War to make transfer, upon request, of any property which he has and which is not needed immediately or within a reasonable time by the War Department.

Mr. President, it seems to me that the only wise and the only proper thing to do is to strike out this section. If we are going to depart from the policy which we announced of having a 50-50 contract, let us say so. It is not a 50-50 contract; it has been heretofore 33-66-3—that is to say, the Federal Government appropriated $200,000,000 and the States put up $100,000,000—and this bill, if there shall be any considerable surplus property under the War Department, will mean the Federal Government shall put up another $100,000,000 in cash and a large amount, $25,000,000 or $50,000,000 worth, of property, and the States shall only put up $100,000,000 in cash. It is deceptive on its face. It is not a 50-50 proposition. In the interest of honesty, in the interest of fair dealing with the departments, in the interest of economy, and finally in the interest of the people themselves the motion of the Senator from New York should prevail.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I regard this section of the bill as so important that I am not willing to let the argument of the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] go entirely without answer.

The Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] on yesterday stated that he had for months been battling with this same question upon the floor of the Senate, and the Senator stated what is true. Every time any proposition has been made here that took from the War Department any of its surplus war materials, the Senator from New York, acting as the spokesman of the War Department, has strenuously opposed such proposition. When the proposition was made to transfer these trucks and tractors to the States for the purpose of road construction under the cooperative plan the Senator from New York was here, speaking not so much for himself as a Senator or as the chairman of the Military Affairs Committee, but speaking the wishes of the War Department, opposing it. Then we were told that there were no more of these machines than were needed or might in the near future be needed.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SIMMONS. Just a moment, if the Senator pleases. Then we thrashed out the question of whether it should be the policy of the United States Government to turn over to the States, to aid in the construction of roads, such surplus war materials as it might have; and after a long discussion, in this Chamber, at least, it was decided by a definite and an emphatic majority that that policy should be adopted and pursued by the Federal Government; and, notwithstanding the attitude of the War Department, it turned out that they had as many as 44,000 trucks that they could spare to the States.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President—

Mr. SIMMONS. I now yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Surely the Senator does not mean to leave the impression that the War Department at that time contended that they did not have a surplus of trucks?

Mr. SIMMONS. I think the Senator is right with reference to the first application, but there was a second application here. There was a bill passed here, I think during the last Congress, in connection with which that argument was made, and trucks have been distributed since then.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I think the Senator is mistaken. He probably refers to the bill which was passed directing the Secretary of War to turn over tractors—just tractors.

Mr. SIMMONS. Possibly the Senator is right; but I am not mistaken in supposing and in stating that the Senator, speaking for the War Department, every time a contribution on the part of the Government of these war materials to the States was proposed, spoke in opposition to it, and in strenuous opposition to it at that. I am not mistaken about that, and I am not mistaken in the statement that each time the Senate of the United States and the House of Representatives have overruled that contention of the War Department, and have adopted as a policy the turning over of these materials to the States as soon as they became unnecessary for war purposes.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SIMMONS. We have recently reduced the Army, reduced it, I believe, 70,000 men; and if the trucks and materials that were on hand before the Army was reduced were sufficient—and nobody has denied their sufficiency—then there must be a surplus of trucks and a surplus of war materials when we have reduced the Army at least one-third.

Now, Mr. President, the Senator admits that there are about 18,000 trucks.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Motor vehicles of all kinds.

Mr. SIMMONS. Motor vehicles and trucks of all kinds. That would seem to me to be quite a large number, but I make no point about that. If there are not more than the War Department needs, this bill does not require them to turn over a single one. I do not understand—and I want to be very frank about it, and I should like to have the attention of the Senator from New York when I say this—I do not understand this attitude of the War Department with reference to turning over this material to the States for road construction. So far as the interest of the War Department is concerned, that is safeguarded by the provision that they shall not be required to turn over any materials unless there is a surplus.

Now, what interest has the War Department in attempting to thwart this policy of the Government? Can it be that the War Department insists that its privilege of selling these war materials shall not be curtailed? That is its only interest in the matter. The department does not have to turn over a single machine or a single item of material if it is needed for war purposes. It is only in case it is not needed that this bill requires the department to turn it over.

What objection can the War Department interpose to that policy of the Government, unless the War Department thinks that the privilege of selling these war materials is a valuable privilege with which it does not desire to part? I know that sometimes the right to sell these enormous supplies that were left on our hands when the war closed has been thought to be quite a privilege, and I am afraid that it is a privilege out of which great profits at times have been made without the same inuring to the Government. I do not say that anything of that sort enters into this transaction, but I do say that I can see no reason why the War Department should interpose its objection here when its interests are absolutely safeguarded by the terms of the bill, unless it wants to preserve the right to sell these war materials.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. SIMMONS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Would it interest the Senator to know that the War Department has taken no attitude whatsoever on this matter, that I do not represent the War Department, and that I have not discussed it with the department, either with the Secretary or with other persons?

Mr. SIMMONS. Then the opposition which the Senator makes here to-day is not at all inspired by the War Department?

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is not.

Mr. SIMMONS. I am glad to hear it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is inspired by my own conviction as to the proper course to pursue.

Mr. SIMMONS. I am glad to hear it. Now, Mr. President, let me pass from that.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, would it interrupt the Senator—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. SIMMONS. I do.

Mr. KING. The Senator will observe—and I do not rise in a controversial spirit—that this section does not relate to the present and has no time of expiration, but it is a continuing policy, so that a hundred years from now, if this were not changed, and as often as there was any surplus property, the War Department would have to turn it over to the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. SIMMONS. And while the Government is contributing to the construction of roads in the States.

Mr. KING. Yes. Does the Senator think that it is a wise policy to pass general statutes requiring this department and all departments to turn over to the States any property they may happen to have that is surplus?

Mr. SIMMONS. No; not as a general proposition; but this is a proposition to turn over the surplus of the War Department to the States for the purpose of aiding in the construction of a work in which the Government is an equal partner. Senators say that the States ought to pay one-half of the value of these machines if they are turned over to them.

Mr. KING. I hope the Senator does not impute that to me. I made no such statement.

Mr. SIMMONS. Well, that has been stated here.

Mr. President, what would be the situation if the States and the Government had no trucks, we will say, for the purpose of constructing good roads, and had to enter into the market and purchase those trucks anew? The Federal Government would have to pay one-half of the price of each truck that might be purchased, because it is a copartner on equal terms in the building of these roads. Fortunately the Government has on hand a large number of trucks available for this use. The Government, if it sells those trucks, will get only 50 cents in the dollar for them. Many of them are new. They are just as good as new trucks bought by the Government for this purpose. They will get only 50 cents in the dollar. Who will get the other 50 cents? Why, the speculator will get the other 50 cents. The Government could not sell these trucks, worth a hundred cents in the dollar, if it put them upon the market, at more than 50 cents in the dollar. If they are sold that 50 cents must be given to the speculators. Why, then, should the Government hesitate to turn these trucks over to the States? It will get credit for fully one-half the value of the trucks, and in that case the 50 cents will be given to the State instead of being given to a speculator.

That is the way this transaction will work out. If you sell those trucks the Government will get half price. The Government is under obligation to pay one-half of the expense of the construction of the roads. If this is a gift to the States on the one hand, the alternative to that proposition, if the trucks were sold, would be a gift of that amount to speculators who might buy them.

Mr. HEFLIN obtained the floor.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for just a moment? I will probably not impose upon him any longer.

Mr. HEFLIN. I will yield.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator from North Carolina has just said something about gifts to States; at least he used that expression. I desire his attention to this dispatch, which I am going to read. It appears in the Rutland, Vt., Daily Herald of Wednesday morning, August 17. It is headed, "Vermont will get share of explosive." I hope Senators do not think this is confined to trucks alone. The article reads:

BURLINGTON, August 16.

Information has been received by the agricultural extension service of the University of Vermont from the Bureau of Public Roads of the United States Department of Agriculture to the effect that 96,000 pounds of picric acid, a high explosive, has been allotted to Vermont.

This explosive is suitable for use in clearing stumps and stones from agricultural lands.

No landowner can secure more than 1,000 pounds. The details concerning plans for distribution are now being sent to the Vermont county agents.

That is done under this free distribution of materials useful in highway work.

Mr. TOWNSEND. With the permission of the Senator from Alabama, I would like to say, just in connection with that, because I happen to know something about the situation, that the Government has a great many of these explosives on hand, which were stored, and which it would cost about all they were worth to move down to some of those Southern States where they were going to move them. They had a surplus on hand with practically no market for them, and it was suggested and understood that they were still intending to store them.

The proposition was that those explosives should be used by the stump-land States and other States which required these explosives, and they are to be purchased by those States. The department fixes the price which shall be paid for this picric acid that is to be used in the States. I happen to know something about that, because I have had much correspondence about it, as has the Senator from Wisconsin, in obtaining these explosives.

The object was to put them on the market, so that they could be purchased at the Government cost price, or at a reasonable price, for use, instead of permitting their storage in these various places where they were stored.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Will the Senator state how it is that the Bureau of Public Roads has jurisdiction over it?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I do not know. I did not know that it had any jurisdiction over it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The article states that.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I think the article which the Senator has read is entirely misleading. The control is in the Secretary of Agriculture, who, of course, is over the Bureau of Public Roads, and the Senator voted to keep him over the Bureau of Public Roads and over the other divisions of the Department of Agriculture. It is, however, the Secretary of Agriculture with whom these transactions are made.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Not through the Bureau of Public Roads?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I never heard that that was the case before.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I admit that would put a very different light on it, but this dispatch seems rather authentic, stating how much of this explosive can be secured to blow up stumps.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I do not think there is any truth in that statement at all; I think it is entirely a mistake, either in print, or the man who sent out that information did not understand the situation.

AMENDMENT OF NATIONAL PROHIBITION ACT.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, a few moments ago I made some remarks in regard to the proceedings in the conference committee which had under consideration what we commonly call the beer bill. It is the bill which proposes to deny doctors the right to prescribe beer to sick people.

I, of course, was listened to with attention by the hired lawyer who usually occupies a seat in the gallery watching the proceedings of the Senate. I assume he was here to-day. At least he was not very far away, for he has prepared a statement for the press, and in order that it may be given early publicity I send it to the desk and ask to have it read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LENROOT in the chair). The Secretary will read as requested.

The reading clerk read as follows:

"The charge by Senator REED that I sat with the conferees on the beer bill on the date mentioned is not true," said Wayne B. Wheeler, general counsel of the Antisaloon League.

In spite of the fact that Senator STERLING denied this, Senator REED continued his speech on the theory that his charge was true. I went to the committee room when they closed their work for the day and urged them to agree on something in order to secure a vote before the recess and prevent the opening of the breweries. This is what Senator REED and other wet Senators are attempting to accomplish in their filibuster on this bill. This amendment on search and seizure was evidently injected into the bill by the wets to muddy the waters and cause delay.

The same beer interests that corrupted the politics of the Nation are back of this beer bill. One hundred thousand dollars' worth of imported malt liquors in one lot is now ready for distribution if the passage of this bill is delayed until after the recess and the beer regulations are issued. The invisible lobby back of this filibuster to force medical beer on the country does not seem to worry those who are vituperative and abusive of the dry advocates, who work in the open.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I dislike to take the time of the Senate on so small a matter, but I have concluded that I may be warranted in consuming a few minutes.

I read to the Senate a clause from an article in the New York Times, stating that "Wayne B. Wheeler, spokesman for the Anti-Saloon League, who was closeted with the conferees throughout the day behind closed doors, expressed the view," and so forth.

I inquired of the Senator in charge of the conference report whether that was true. The Senator replied, in substance, that he did not sit with the committee on that day. I then asked whether he had sat with the committee or had been with the committee on any day, and the Senator declined to answer that question.

There is no denial yet that this gentleman did not sit with the committee or see the committee or interfere with the committee. The denial is that—

I went to the committee room when they closed their work for the day and urged them to agree on something. * * * This is what Senator REED and other wet Senators are attempting to accomplish in their filibuster.

Again, he said:

The charge by Senator REED that I sat with the conferees on the beer bill on the date mentioned is not true.

"On the date mentioned." Mr. President, evidently this gentleman, Mr. Wheeler, has proceeded far enough in the study of the law to know that there is such a thing as a negative pregnant, but evidently not far enough to know that a negative pregnant is taken as an affirmation. A negative pregnant is found when a man charges that A B at the hour of 1 o'clock did a certain thing, and the answer is, "I deny that at 1 o'clock I did that particular thing."

It was an old dodge of the old pleader, and the courts exploded it, and said that that sort of a denial was not a denial, but amounted to an admission. Why is it that this man, who for 15 or 20 years has made his living as a lawyer, with this one client—the Anti-Saloon League—does not have the manhood to state in this paper that he never at any time sat with this committee or the members of this committee, or that he went to them and buttonholed them and interfered in their work; that he had the impudence to follow them to their counsel room? Why does he not deny it in that way? Why does he put out something in this form, which he hopes will deceive the public?

There is an old definition of a lie, that it is something told with the intention to deceive. It may be literally true upon its face, literally construed, but if it be put out to create a false impression it is none the less a falsehood.

Just a word more. Mr. Wheeler says in this statement:

I went to the committee room when they closed their work for the day and urged them to agree on something in order to secure a vote before the recess.

I repeat, what business was it of this man to go to the committee room to interfere in a conference, either during or before or after their deliberations, when, as we all understand, that is something that Representatives and Senators rarely, if ever, do? What was he doing there?

This man talks about "the invisible lobby." The difference between the invisible lobby and the visible lobby, first, is that we can see the visible lobby in the person of this hired lawyer, who has been for 15 or 20 years making his living as a legislative agent. He is visible so often that he can not deny his visibility, but if he had to pay a license tax of $10 a day to enter the galleries of the Senate I think it would make heavy inroads into his salary, because he is always here. He has just as much right here as a representative of the Standard Oil and no more, as a representative of any interest and no more. He is a lobbyist, pure and simple, acting for pay.

This lobbyist, this gentleman who makes his living lobbying, who probably has not had a dollar from any other source in the last 15 years, has the insolence to send out a statement charging that a filibuster has been carried on in the Senate and is being carried on against the beer bill.

I charge that when he wrote that statement he wrote a deliberate, willful, premeditated, cold-blooded falsehood, and he knew it.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. STANLEY. The vote on that bill was taken at the instance of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD] and others, upon the insistence of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE], who has never yet been charged with being a prohibitionist, and over the objection of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING], the Senator from Ohio, and the other proponents of this bill, who asked for delay; and the gentleman to whom the Senator refers—I will not call him a lobbyist—was in the gallery at the time and knew it.

Mr. REED. Well, if he is not a lobbyist, I would like to know what he is. He certainly is not a lawyer; that is, he is not practicing law in the ordinary sense.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. STERLING. I wish to correct a statement made by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY]. I understood him to refer to the vote taken. Does the Senator mean the final vote on the bill by the Senate?

Mr. STANLEY. Yes; the final vote was taken at the instance of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE], who asked that the vote be taken. He insisted that a vote be taken. The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD] had an amendment that was pending, and the Senator from Missouri asked him to withdraw it, and the so-called opponents of the bill—not the proponents of the bill but the proponents of the Constitution of the United States—urged that the vote be taken that day or it would not have been taken that day, as the Senator from South Dakota knows full well and as the Record will show.

Mr. STERLING. Does the Senator from Kentucky say that the Senator from Kentucky himself on the day the vote was taken urged a vote on the bill?

Mr. STANLEY. Oh, no; I did not say that.

Mr. STERLING. I understood the Senator to say that.

Mr. STANLEY. I did not refer to the Senator from Kentucky. He is a small pea in the dish.

Mr. STERLING. The Senator said the proponents of the bill were opposed to the vote.

Mr. STANLEY. They were, and the RECORD will show it.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. REED. I will yield to the Senator from Louisiana if the Senator from South Dakota is through.

Mr. STANLEY. If I am not mistaken the Senator from South Dakota objected to taking a vote at that time.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Mr. President, in order to get the record straight on this question I wish to read from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of August 8, 1921, just before the vote was taken, as shown on page 5184:

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from South Dakota if it is his purpose to press the bill to a vote this evening? There are a number of Senators who desire to discuss this rather important question, but I understand an executive session is desired.

Mr. STERLING. No; I do not desire to push the matter to a vote to-night.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Vote! Vote!

Mr. STERLING. I think I shall not press for a vote to-night.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. SPENCER].

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I merely wish to suggest to the Senator from South Dakota that for a week or more various Senators who desire to go away and others who have been away and have come back have had their movements interfered with by the uncertainty of having a vote on this bill. Certain Senators want to go away to-night and others to-morrow. I hope we can dispose of this measure to-night. I am willing to sit late if the Senator desires further time, and I think we should dispense with an executive session this evening.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President—

Mr. STERLING. I yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. PENROSE. I sincerely hope that we can vote this afternoon. I concur in the view of the Senator from Connecticut. The Finance Committee adjourned in the midst of important hearings to permit the Members to come here on the assumption that they were to vote on various phases of the bill. That great committee is in session from 10 o'clock in the morning until 5 or 6 in the evening, and if they are to break up their meetings every 20 minutes to come to the Senate and vote, we shall never get through the gigantic task reposed in us. I sincerely hope that we can vote this afternoon.

Mr. STERLING. I hardly expected to reach a vote on the bill this afternoon. I now ask the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] if it is desired to have an executive session?

Mr. CURTIS. We do want a short executive session; and I wish to have an amendment to a Senate joint resolution reconsidered and the joint resolution passed if possible, but I do not wish to interfere with the vote on the pending bill.

Mr. STERLING. I will yield for the purpose of an executive session.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Mr. President, reserving the right to offer further amendments, I move that the bill be recommitted; and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

So it will be seen that, in succession, the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE], the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE], and myself, all three of us opposing the measure, insisted that the vote be taken that afternoon.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, if the Senator from Missouri will permit me—

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. STERLING. That is a very strained construction that the Senator from Louisiana puts upon the RECORD as read by him. I am very glad, indeed, that he read the RECORD, for the RECORD does not show that I opposed or that any of the proponents of the bill opposed the vote on that evening on which the final vote was taken.

For a time it was a question whether it was advisable to proceed to a vote on that evening, and I frankly state that, but I had not expected at any time during the day up until that time, the time of the colloquy to which the Senator refers, that there would be a vote on the bill that day. I did not expect a vote on the bill to be reached until the next day, when I fully expected a vote would be reached. It was something of a surprise to me that Senators should urge a vote on that evening. That is the fact.

Mr. REED. While the Senator makes that statement which undoubtedly shows that so far as he was concerned he was willing to take a vote whenever he thought the Members were present who ought to be here, he will also concede that there was not anything like the semblance of a filibuster at all.

Mr. STERLING. Yes; and who in charge of a bill—

Mr. REED. Would not do as the Senator did?

Mr. STERLING. Is not likely to look around and see who is present?

Mr. REED. Absolutely. The Senator had the right to do that, but the RECORD shows that the other side were not trying for more time, but were willing to come to a vote, and the Senator in charge of the bill I am sure will say, as a fair man—

Mr. STERLING. I never raised any question of that kind.

Mr. REED. That there never was any semblance of a filibuster here.

Mr. STERLING. Not at that time. There had been before, and I am not saying but that there has been since. It had ended at that time.

Mr. KING. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. KING. Upon the day in question, at an earlier hour in the day, I had taken the floor to speak briefly, not upon the bill but about lobbies and lobbyists and their pernicious and wicked activities in Washington in procuring and in suppressing legislation. While I had the floor opponents of the measure and, as I recall, one or two who were favorable to the measure asked me if I would not kindly desist so they could get a vote that evening. I yielded the floor, expecting to take it again when I could get the opportunity and conclude the observations which I desired to submit. I recall that the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY], right in the midst of my speech, asked if I had any objection to the beer bill being taken up and considered and a vote taken immediately, and I said no and promptly sat down.

Mr. STERLING. I recall very well the fact to which the Senator from Utah refers and his courtesy in the matter, and I appreciated it very much.

Mr. WILLIS and Mr. STANLEY addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. REED. I will yield first to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. WILLIS. If the Senator from Missouri will permit me, I think I should be allowed to say a word since my name has been brought into this matter by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY]. I had forgotten the occurrence to which attention was called by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD], but I do now recall that I made the remark attributed to me on page 4740. I did ask the Senator from South Dakota whether it was his purpose to press for a vote, and I wish to state the reason why I asked that question.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Mr. President—

Mr. WILLIS. I have been considerably interested in this legislation—

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President—

Mr. WILLIS. Will the Senator permit me to finish this brief statement?

Mr. STANLEY. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIS. I have been interested in this legislation and I had sat here hour after hour listening to the speeches of those opposed to the bill. There were some things I should have been glad to discuss but I refrained from speaking at length, in order to expedite the passage of the bill. I had in mind to make some observations upon the measure, and that is why I asked the Senator from South Dakota the question, but I should not like to have the idea go forth or have the purpose attributed to me of seeking to delay the passage of the bill. I willingly gave up the opportunity to indulge in extended debate upon the measure in order that there might be a vote.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Ohio yield to me?

Mr. WILLIS. The Senator from Missouri has the floor.

Mr. STANLEY. Will the Senator from Missouri yield to me?

Mr. REED. I yield, gladly.

Mr. STANLEY. I make haste to assure the Senator from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS] and the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] that I did not mean even indirectly to infer or charge that they were attempting to delay a vote upon the measure in the way of a filibuster or that they were attempting to delay the legislation. The fact is I could readily see why the Senator from South Dakota and the Senator from Ohio might prefer a vote the next morning. There has been no effort on the part of either of them to delay the legislation.

While I do not agree with the Senator from Ohio or the Senator from South Dakota in their views on the bill, I do take this occasion to say that in their management of the bill they have shown the highest quality of courtesy and statesmanship and a disposition to tell the simple truth, to advocate the cause in a high and dignified manner, worthy of their places in this great body, and in marked distinction and contrast to some of the performances of some other people, for whom I hope they are not responsible.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. BROUSSARD. I wish to reply to the Senator from Ohio that I merely read from the RECORD, and I think that the RECORD was very fair. If it needed any explanation, I think the Senator has made it, but I did not put into his mouth any words except what I read from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I should have been through long before this, because I did not expect the colloquy to take so long, but I wish to make one or two further observations. I think it was pretty well known that there was no filibuster. Everybody in the Chamber knows there was no filibuster. If there had been a filibuster on the bill it probably would not have passed its second reading at this time.

There is another terrible thing stated in this charge, to wit, that there is $100,000 worth of imported malt beverages in one lot now ready for distribution. That is a terrible thing, is it not? About how far would $100,000 worth of malt beverages go in the United States? If it is needed for sickness at all, if it is a medicine at all, it probably would not supply the legitimate, honest prescriptions that would be made up for three days' time in the United States.

The trouble is this country is bigger than the conception of the paid lawyers who roost around in the galleries of the Senate and pose as respectable gentlemen when they are nothing but common lobbyists. I propose hereafter to call them by their right names.

Then we find the usual charge that the beer interests are back of the bill. I do not know what the beer interests are back of, because I have not been pestered with lobbyists on either side of this question, but I do know that I never heard of a brewer coming here to Washington or sending here to Washington or writing here to Washington asking anybody to have beer prescribed as a medicine, because no brewery could make any money manufacturing beer for medicine if the law is enforced and its manufacture held down to the mere question of beer for medicine. It is all right to talk about beer lobbyists, and everybody who comes here on the other side of the question is a lobbyist; but give us one of these gentlemen who is lobbying for pay and making his living out of it, and if he is on the dry side of the question he is an angel of light. The sunlight as it comes down from the sky is purified as its rays strike his celestial wings.

He may threaten, he may bully, he may collect money out of the United States and fill his coffers, he may live on the fat of the land, he may buttonhole Congressmen, he may thrust himself into the confidential conferences of committee meetings which are held to reconcile the differences of the two Houses—he may do all that—yet he is a saint, the chariot of fire is waiting for him, the mantle of divinity is falling through the air for his shoulders. Let anybody else express an opinion to a committee or to a Congressman and it is an "invisible lobby," covered with corruption and reeking with crime. That is the kind of mental viewpoint some of these gentlemen get.

Now, the gentleman makes another statement in which he says:

This is what Senator REED and other wet Senators are attempting to accomplish.

Of course, a man of this type is utterly incapable of appreciating the fact that another man might not have believed in prohibition, but, a constitutional amendment having been adopted which he is sworn to uphold, he intends in good faith to uphold it. I can readily understand the character of mind which can not at all appreciate the fact that there are men in the world who, even if the Constitution were leveled at something that they believed was right, nevertheless would observe the Constitution in its letter and in its spirit.

I have never been a "wet" citizen, and I have never been a "wet" advocate. I have insisted that the people of every county in my State and in other States should regulate these matters for themselves. I have believed in local government. I was glad to see the change of public opinion which reduced to a minimum the consumption of alcoholic drinks. I did not believe that the legislatures of three-fourths of the States of the Union had the right to force a law regarding local matters upon the people of those States against their protest. I believed that if that were done bad results would follow. Of course, however, the gentlemen to whom I am now adverting can not understand how any man who is wedded to the old principles of the Constitution which reserve certain rights to the people of the States of this Union could be opposed to taking over these powers by the Federal Government against the will of the people of some of the States. We find those gentlemen still standing here, willing now to break down one of the chief pillars of the Constitution, in order that they may have their way in the enforcement of this proposed law. I am not arguing to them; I do not expect to change them.

Ephraim is joined to idols; let him alone.

However, the people of this country are beginning to awaken to the fact that their Constitution is being assailed, and when awakened they will know how to deal with such men and such measures.

I have merely this to say in conclusion: Reference has been made here about a filibuster; but this bill passed the House of Representatives on June 27; it passed the Senate with amendments on August 5. It was a month and about eight days in passing through this body. During that interval some of the most important legislation that has been before the Senate in a year was here awaiting action and had to be disposed of. This bill was debated, first and last, a much shorter time than is the average bill. It was generally called up in the morning hour and only the morning hour, for other bills had the right of way.

Mr. President, I have spent too much time on this question; but I serve notice that scandal mongers sending out false statements, paid hirelings who sit in the galleries of the Senate, will not be permitted hereafter to masquerade under the cloak of respectability.

INTERSTATE HIGHWAY SYSTEM.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the amendment of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1072) to amend the act entitled "An act to provide that the United States shall aid the States in the construction of rural post roads, and for other purposes," approved July 11, 1916, as amended and supplemented, and for other purposes.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I shall detain the Senate but for a moment. The Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] suggested that under section 8 of the pending bill the War Department might be called upon to turn horses over to the States for use in the construction of roads. I have never before heard that construction placed upon a provision of this kind. I know that such a practice never has prevailed in the past and it never will prevail in the future. The section simply means that war materials—explosives, if you please, which are useful in blowing up hills and in blowing rocks out of the earth and for various other purposes—if they are of no use to the Government, may be given to the States for road-construction purposes. In that case, why should not that policy be pursued?

The section refers in the main to Army trucks, auto trucks, and similar materials which are of use to the States in the construction of roads.

I want to say just a word further. The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] struck the nail on the head when he said we already have on hand surplus materials which are needed for the construction of roads in the States. The States provide half and the Federal Government provides half of the fund to construct roads in the States; therefore, if the material is not available, it will be necessary to take the Federal money and State money and buy it. If a truck which is needed costs $2,000, the Federal Government will have to put up $1,000 out of the Treasury and $1,000 will come from the State to buy something which the Government already owns and for which it has no use.

Mr. President, in ordinary times we would not favor having the Government buy material and transfer it to the States for the construction of roads; but the material to which reference is made was acquired for use in a war that might have extended until now, but it ended. So we have the surplus material on hand and we want to use it, and there is no other way in which it will so benefit the masses of America as allowing it to be used in the construction of roads.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, I desire to propound an inquiry to the Senator from Alabama. I understood him to say that it was not the policy of the department, or had not been the policy in the past, to give away horses. Did the Senator hear the statement which the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] made on that point yesterday?

Mr. HEFLIN. I did not hear the statement.

Mr. WILLIS. I call the Senator's attention to page 5114 of the RECORD, from which it will appear that it has been the policy to do that very thing as the law now stands, because a letter was sent to the highway commission of the State of Ohio to that effect. The letter was placed in the RECORD by the Senator from New York and says in part:

Only last week I received a letter requesting me to advise the largest number of horses I would be willing to accept out of a 5,000 allotment.

So it has been the policy, at any rate in the past, whatever it may be in the future.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, no such thing has ever happened in any Southern State that I know anything about or any other State except Ohio. Ohio is the only State that has had the gall to ask for war horses for use on the roads.

Mr. WILLIS. I do not propose to allow the Senator from Alabama, simply because he was not here when the letter was read and did not know what took place in the Senate, to misrepresent the position of the State of Ohio. The Department of Agriculture asked the State of Ohio if it would not receive these horses, and the State of Ohio through its highway department informed the Agricultural Department or the Bureau of Roads that it would not receive the horses. The State of Ohio has not at any time made any request for horses.

Mr. HEFLIN. I beg the Senator's pardon; I misunderstood the situation. Then, I am glad that Ohio has not asked for war horses for use in the construction of roads. So it comes back to my proposition, Mr. President, that none of these horses have been used in the construction of public roads. The bill has reference to material, to explosives, if you please. If the War Department does not need them, why not use them in the blowing up of stumps and rocks in the roads? It has reference to Army trucks. If the War Department does not need them, why not use them? Otherwise, as the Senator from North Carolina has said, the States and the Federal Government together would have to buy the trucks. So I trust that the motion of the Senator from New York will not prevail.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LENROOT in the chair). The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (putting the question). By the sound the "noes" seem to have it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I ask for a division.

On a division the amendment was rejected.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I present an amendment, to be inserted at the conclusion of section 2 of the committee amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 3, at the end of line 5, in the amendment reported by the committee, it is proposed to insert the following:

The term "State funds" includes for the purposes of this act funds raised under the authority of the State or any political or other subdivision thereof.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I understand the object of the amendment of the Senator from Ohio, and I do not know that there is any objection to it. There is no objection if it does not conflict with the terms of the bill, but, as I have said to the Senator privately, I am not entirely clear as to what the effect will be upon the other provisions of the bill. Therefore, with the understanding that I shall give the matter consideration in conference, when we may come to a better understanding of it, I have no objection to the amendment going in.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, very briefly, if I may, I should like to say that there is some little question as to what the term "State funds" as used in section 10 may include. A strict construction of the term would perhaps limit it to funds provided by the State authorities in contradistinction to the county or other authority. Now, it turns out that in Ohio our road fund is raised in part by a State levy, in part by the county, in part by the township, and in part the expense is assessed upon the abutting property. This is done under an arrangement between the State and the several subdivisions thereof, and if county funds were raised there might be a question as to whether or not they would be embraced in the term "State funds."

There is another situation as applied to the State of Arkansas. I am advised that there they do not raise their road funds by State levy, but they have road districts or divisions, and the funds are raised in those several divisions.

Again, I understood in a conference with the junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LADD]—and I regret that he is not here—that he had some doubt as to whether the phraseology contained in section 10 would enable the people of his State to take advantage of these funds. I dare say that all that the proponents of this bill are concerned in is that the funds furnished by the Federal Government shall be matched by other funds, and it makes no difference to the Federal Government whether those funds are raised wholly by State levy and paid wholly out of the State treasury, or in part out of the State treasury, in part out of the county treasury, in part out of the township treasury, or out of funds raised by any subdivision thereof.

I think that the Senator from Michigan and myself are one in the thought that we simply want these Federal funds matched with other funds. As I said to the Senator, while I think this language amply meets his views as well as my own, if upon further reflection the conferees should believe that this language should be changed to meet the situation as we understand it, of course that can be done.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, under that statement I am willing that this amendment shall go in. This bill, as the Senator understands, provides a system of roads; the States select 7 per cent, and it divides those roads into two classes. What the Government is interested in is the construction of those roads.

Mr. POMERENE. And their maintenance.

Mr. TOWNSEND. It might be that a county would not be included in that system, or a township or other subdivision; but I think I understand the general purpose of the Senator, and if upon due consideration it works all right I am satisfied to let it go in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, going upon the theory that this bill will not be acted upon to-night, I submit an amendment which I expect to offer to-morrow, or, if not to-morrow, at the proper time.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Why does the Senator think the bill will not be acted upon to-night?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is upon the Senate substitute, as amended, for the House amendment.

Mr. NEW. Then I offer the following amendment:

I move to amend by striking out the figures "$100,000,000," in line 18, section 23, page 17, and inserting in lieu thereof the figures "$50,000,000"; and by striking out the figures "$50,000,000" where they occur in lines 19 and 20 of the same page and section, and substituting in each case the figures "$25,000,000."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 17, line 18, the sum to be appropriated, strike out "$100,000,000" and in lieu thereof insert "$50,000,000." It then reads "for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922." On line 19 strike out "$50,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$25,000,000." It reads, following those figures, "of which shall become immediately available, and $50,000,000 of which shall become available six months after the passage of this act." On line 20, strike out "50,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$25,000,000."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon the amendment proposed by the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, on that amendment I desire to say just a very few words.

I am not opposed to an effort here to construct good roads throughout this country. If it requires the cooperation of the Federal Government and the investment of Federal money in aid of the States, I shall not object to that, but I do think that this is certainly the time for the closest economy in the effort to obtain even those things which we most need. We have not the money with which to obtain many things which we greatly desire and of which we are in very great need. The plea comes from every quarter for close economy.

I believe that to cut this appropriation in half will meet with popular approval. Whether it does or not, I believe it should be done. I am proposing it not because of any hostility toward the idea of having the Government aid the States in this matter, but because I feel first that the Government has not $100,000,000 to apply at this time to that purpose, and because even the road department admits it can not expend so large a sum to good advantage this season. Inasmuch as this reduction does not interfere at all with the inauguration of the plan, I very strongly urge that we go about it in a little more reasonable and restricted way than by appropriating so large a sum as $100,000,000.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President, I had hoped that we might get some accurate estimate of the sums available under previous appropriation bills, but unexpended. It has been suggested, of course, that the amendment of the Senator from Indiana might be modified to read "twenty-five million" and "fifty million." I believe that we would do more wisely if we made it read "fifteen million" and "twenty-five million." If, as the winter goes on, it becomes manifest that the revenues under the new law are going to be productive of sums equal to those anticipated, and if it should appear at the regular session that more money is needed to go on with the work in the spring, we can take the steps necessary to appropriate more money. There are a few Senators who are opposed to the principle of this act, but I believe there are a good many who are opposed at this time to the appropriation of millions when we are by no means certain as to the unexpended balances to the credit of the road fund. Am I not right on that score?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, there is a difference in the statements which have been presented to us. If the Senator means by "the unexpended balance" the money that has not actually been paid out for the construction of roads under contract, there might be practically forty or fifty million dollars; but practically all of it is under contract. There may be some money that was appropriated or the project approved in the last days of June where the contract has not been actually completed, but that is a limited amount; but the money that has been allotted, and for which contracts have been let, must be met. That money must be paid in.

I do not think there is enough money available now to carry on even a reasonable program of road construction between this time and next June. I am willing, possibly, so far as I am concerned, to concede that it will take somewhat less money to carry out the road work during the succeeding six months than it will during the following six months.

Mr. McCORMICK. Will the Senator repeat that statement? There was some conversation here, and I did not catch it.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I have no doubt that the States that are depending upon Federal aid could get along with less money from now until the end of the six months than they would actually require to carry out their programs during the next succeeding six months. I should seriously object, however, to reducing this appropriation more than $25,000,000. Last year we had more than $100,000,000.

Mr. McCORMICK. And the year before.

Mr. TOWNSEND. And the year before that. If we should reduce this appropriation $25,000,000, making immediately available the appropriation of $25,000,000, and then allowing $50,000,000 to carry out the reasonable program—because it is not more than a reasonable program—that has been adopted by the States, I think we would be doing all that we could afford to do. This means the employment of men during the coming winter. In a large number of the States this work will be conducted during the wintertime.

Mr. McCORMICK. Does the Senator think that many of the men who will be employed are men who have been released from the Army?

Mr. TOWNSEND. It will employ some of the men. It will not add to the unemployed as much as reducing this appropriation or discontinuing the work would add.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I yield.

Mr. NEW. One fear that I have is that the men who are to be employed in this work will have to be paid for by other men who are not employed.

Mr. TOWNSEND. If the Senator means that we ought no longer to engage in Federal aid in the construction of roads, that argument might be good; but I do not believe in that argument. I believe that it is the best investment of public money, when it is honestly and efficiently expended, to expend it on road work along the lines of the bill which is presented here, which I think fairly well protects the expenditure of this money against waste and confines it to a system of roads throughout the country which are absolutely necessary to the return of prosperity. I do not believe anything more can be done to assist in the return of prosperity than to build up the proper roads of this country, to aid in the problem of transportation. Therefore, Mr. President, I hope this amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana will not prevail. I think it is too much of a reduction.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Indiana to the amendment of the committee.

On a division, the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, I move to amend by reducing the appropriation from $100,000,000 to $75,000,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment to the amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The Senator from Indiana proposes, on page 17, line 18, to strike out "$100,000,000" and in lieu to insert "$75,000,000."

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President, will the Senator indicate if he does not intend to amend, in line 19, to make "$50,000,000" read "$25,000,000," so as to reduce the appropriation immediately available to $25,000,000, but leave the appropriation available six months later at $50,000,000? That will permit the work to go on this winter under the unexpended appropriation.

Mr. NEW. Yes, Mr. President, I desire to have that amendment made if the pending amendment to the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I have considered this question. I have talked with the officials in the Bureau of Public Roads. I have tried to harmonize this appropriation with the financial condition of the country and, although I do not speak for the committee, personally I shall not object to a reduction of $25,000,000 in the proposed appropriation, making the amount immediately available $25,000,000.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, notwithstanding the acquiescence or surrender, whichever it may be, of the Senator from Michigan, I hope that the amendment will not be agreed to. There are a hundred ways of economizing better than this. There are many absolutely harmful expenditures of money which ought to be stopped. There are very many excrescences that ought to be lopped off. Nothing is of more importance than to get the farmer's produce from his farm to the railway station, to the river or lake landing, or to the coast city. What is this $100,000,000 after all? How many battleships does it amount to? How many soldiers, how many useless employees lying around the public doors of the departments and in the Capitol in Washington? Money is being spent in a hundred ways, in the duplication of work in the departments, on account of a lack of a budget system to restrain expenditures, where we can make economies which would be in the interest of the people themselves.

Mr. President, I think everybody will clear me of any effort, now or heretofore, to indulge in demagoguery, and when I speak about the people, or about the masses, I do not do it because that is the popular way of talking, but I say it in this connection because the people themselves get little or no benefit from most of the expenditures of the Federal Government, which in itself to a very large extent is a sort of a fifth wheel in most of its functionings; whereas when you come to good roads people not only get the benefit but the "mudsills" of the people get it, the farmers, upon whom rests the entire structure in the long run, the man who is first hurt and latest relieved when bad times come, and the man who does the most work, the longest hours, with the least relief, and without any labor union to help him out.

Mr. President, I have some objections to this bill, because I think it has somewhat lost sight of the fact that the object of our good-roads legislation is just what I have intimated, and now we are beginning to be told that we ought to have through routes, interstate roads, not good for the people at large. You can not rival the railroads and rivers with automobile transportation of freight. We are getting too much away from the good roads freight transportation to the good roads passenger transportation, which is a secondary consideration altogether.

So far as the public benefit is concerned, it must come chiefly from enabling me to carry 10 bales of cotton to market, 12 or 15 miles away, over a good road, with the same expenditure of animal force and man supervision that is now required to carry 3 bales of cotton, and that analogy applies to all the other products of the farm.

I know, by personal observation, that even a gravel road, which is not the very best form of metal road, will enable the same horsepower and the same man supervision to carry 10 bales of cotton, worth $50 a bale, or $500 worth of product, to the market, that will suffice to carry 3 bales of cotton worth $150. It is even worse than that with corn, because the same 2-mule wagon would carry from 14 to 20 bushels of corn, and a truck traveling over a good road can carry as much corn as the truck can hold; it depends upon the size of the truck.

But I want to utter a warning now, Mr. President, against the idea of allowing, now or hereafter, this good roads idea to be prostituted to the use of tourists, travelers, joy riders, or to anything else—as its main purpose, I mean; it may come along incidentally—except getting the farmer's product on the innumerable post routes of this country from his farm to his railroad station, his river, or lake, or seacoast landing. That is what it was originally intended for. That is the great, main, emergent utility of the legislation, and I hope the amendment will be defeated, and that every amendment which shall undertake to reduce the amount which the committee has found it possible to recommend for this purpose shall be defeated, because this is one of the cases, and one of the very few cases, where expenditure is not waste, but is investment.

The same thing may be said to a limited extent about the Navy and the Army, but not to the same extent, because they are investments for possible war, and this is an investment for actual, existing, continuing peace, and even as wicked and mean as humanity is, as insane and as foolish as it hitherto has been, the general average in a civilized country, in years of peace toward years of war, is about 20 to 1. So that every investment for peace purposes possesses twentyfold the merit of any investment for war purposes.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, I do not desire to delay at all a vote on the amendment to the amendment or on the amendment itself; I am very anxious to have a vote. But I want to make a brief statement touching an amendment which I was urged to offer by the Ohio Good Roads Federation. The amendment desired was to have inserted, after the word "funds," in line 10, on page 10, the words "or funds under the control of the State or subject to its order."

I have examined very carefully the amendment prepared by my colleague [Mr. POMERENE], which has been adopted, and I believe it will accomplish the purpose which these people who are interested in good roads have in view. Therefore I shall not offer the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon the amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW] to the committee amendment.

Mr. HARRISON. I ask for the yeas and nays on that.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BROUSSARD (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES]. I transfer that pair to my colleague [Mr. RANDELL] and vote "nay."

Mr. GLASS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM], which I transfer to the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] and vote "nay."

Mr. HALE (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] to the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE] and vote "yea."

Mr. HARRISON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. WATSON] and vote "nay."

Mr. JONES of New Mexico (when his name was called). I transfer my general pair with the Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD] to the senior Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] and vote "nay."

Mr. KELLOGG (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. LODGE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. WELLER] and vote "yea."

Mr. POMERENE (when his name was called). Again announcing my temporary pair with the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. SPENCER], I withhold my vote.

Mr. STERLING (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH]. Not knowing how that Senator would vote, I withhold my vote.

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). Transferring my pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE], who is unavoidably absent, to the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. DIAL], I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BROUSSARD (after having voted in the negative). I voted in the negative after transferring my pair to my colleague. I understand that my colleague [Mr. RANDELL] is paired with another Senator. Therefore I withdraw my vote.

Mr. TRAMMELL (after having voted in the negative). I voted, but neglected to state my pair. I have a pair with the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT], which I transfer to the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. WATSON] and vote "nay."

Mr. CARAWAY. I have a pair with the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. MCKINLEY]. I am unable to obtain a transfer, and therefore withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I would vote "nay."

Mr. KING (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER]. I have arranged a transfer with the senior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING], who has a general pair with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], so that by a double transfer we are both permitted to vote. I will therefore allow my vote to stand.

Mr. STERLING. Under the statement made by the Senator from Utah, notwithstanding the absence of my pair, I am entitled to vote. I will therefore vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. STANLEY. I have a general pair with my colleague [Mr. ERNST]. In his absence, I withhold my vote.

Mr. MCCORMICK. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK], which I transfer to the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] and vote "yea."

Mr. TRAMMELL (after having voted in the negative). Since my former statement with regard to my pair and its transfer, I find that another Senator had transferred his pair to the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. WATSON]. Being unable to obtain a transfer, I am compelled to withdraw my vote. If permitted to vote, I would vote "nay."

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I wish to announce the unavoidable absence on the business of the Senate in attendance at a meeting of the Finance Committee of Senators PENROSE, SMOOT, DILLINGHAM, WATSON of Indiana, SUTHERLAND, McCUMBER, and WALSH of Massachusetts.

The result was announced—yeas 21, nays 18, not voting 57, as follows:

Mr. STANLEY. I wish to announce the absence of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] on official business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McNary in the chair). Forty-three Senators having answered to their names, there is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the roll of absentees.

The reading clerk called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. NORBECK and Mr. WATSON of Indiana answered to their names when called.

Mr. STANFIELD and Mr. TRAMMELL entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-seven Senators having answered to their names, there is not a quorum present.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I realize that if we secured a quorum and called for a vote, we would not then have a quorum for the vote, as that seems to be the disposition of the Senate at this hour. Therefore, I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, August 19, 1921, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, August 18, 1921.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Mighty God, while angels bless Thee, may a mortal lip Thy name? Thou art the vine, we are the branches. We therefore cling to Thee. Our souls bear witness that we can not live by bread alone. Bestow upon us gifts according to Thy wise direction. Those whose pathways are checkered with light and shade, with joy and fears, may their faith and devotion be as a spiritual incense that sweetens the soul and reveals unto them our Father in heaven. Through Christ, our Savior. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed joint resolution of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. J. Res. 103. Joint resolution changing the name of the Veterans Bureau to "United States Veterans Bureau."

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to Senate concurrent resolution 7 of the following title:

That the bill (H. R. 7456) to provide revenue, to regulate commerce with foreign countries, to encourage industries of the United States, and for other purposes, as passed by the House of Representatives, be printed as a Senate document with an index, and that 6,000 additional copies be printed, of which 2,000 shall be for the Senate document room; 2,000 for the House document room; 1,000 for the Committee on Finance of the Senate; and 1,000 for the Committee on Ways and Means of the House.

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate joint resolution of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. J. Res. 103. Joint resolution changing the name of the Veterans Bureau to "United States Veterans Bureau"; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

THE REVENUE.

The SPEAKER. The House automatically resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of Union for the further consideration of the revenue bill, and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] will resume the chair.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 8245) to reduce and equalize taxation, to amend and simplify the revenue act of 1918, and for other purposes, with Mr. WALSH in the chair.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I suggest that the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. OLDFIELD] use some of his time.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I think we ought to have a quorum here, and I make the point of no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas makes the point of no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Forty-two Members present; not a quorum. The Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, when the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. WALSH, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having under consideration the revenue bill, H. R. 8245, found itself without a quorum; whereupon he ordered the roll to be called, when 301 Members answered to their names, and he handed in the list of absentees to be printed in the Journal and Record.

The SPEAKER. A quorum is present. The committee will resume its session.

Accordingly the committee resumed its session, with Mr. WALSH in the chair.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, I yield one hour to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. OLDFIELD]. [Applause.]

Mr. OLDFIELD. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, there are some jokers in this bill, and at least one joke has appeared in the public press with regard to the procedure on this bill. In the Washington Herald this morning—a paper owned and controlled, as I understand, by Mr. Hoover, the Secretary of Commerce, appears the following statement with regard to this bill:

UNDER SPECIAL RULE.

The tax bill was brought before the House under a special rule fixing a vote on the measure for 3 p. m. Saturday and opening the doors to all amendments. The rule was adopted 223 to 115 on a straight party vote.

Now, gentlemen, if that is not a joke, I do not know a joke when I see it. [Laughter.] I saw the following statement in the same paper on yesterday:

A party caucus—

Speaking of the Republican caucus—

The Republicans turned down the recommendations of President Harding, Secretary of the Treasury Mellon, and the majority of the Republican members of the House Ways and Means Committee, that reduction of the taxes on rich corporations and wealthy individuals be made retroactive to January 1 last.

I noticed in the New York papers of yesterday that Wall Street was in gloom when that intelligence was conveyed to the Stock Exchange, and I want to say to you gentlemen that all the rest of the country will be in gloom when these provisions take effect under this bill. [Laughter.]

Now, gentlemen, a great deal has been said about the revenue act of 1918. The press of the country said that Mr. KITCHIN, who was the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee at that time, was placing the burden of taxation upon the North and upon the East, that the South was in the saddle, and many Republican Members of Congress made that statement on this floor, that we were burdening the North and the East and letting off the South in the matter of taxation, for the purpose of carrying on the war.

In that connection I think I ought to read to you a statement which I clipped from the Philadelphia Public Ledger on the 28th day of last month, and I will read it to you:

When CLAUDE KITCHIN, of Scotland Neck, N. C., was, as chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, framing the tax bills under which the Government raised money for the war the charge was freely made by many Republican speakers and newspapers that the South was seeking to place the burden of taxation upon the North because the latter had most of the money. Of course, this was in a measure true, because taxes must be laid where there is money. Where everybody is poverty stricken little revenue can be raised, no matter how heavy the taxation is. That the Democrats played no favorites, sectionally speaking, is shown, however, by the income-tax returns for 1919. The average amount of income tax returned from North Carolina, for instance, was $269, as against $237 for Pennsylvania. Louisiana paid $245 against Illinois's $235, and Arkansas $126 as against $118 for Iowa, $103 for Indiana, $125 for Colorado, etc. The tax returns show that there was no sectionalism. The North paid the most because the money was here, but the individual burden was no greater than it was in the South.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OLDFIELD. Yes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Does the gentleman intend to have read during the course of this debate the telegram from Scotland Neck instructing all Democratic Members to oppose this bill, upon which telegram the action of the gentleman and his colleagues seems to be predicated?

Mr. OLDFIELD. I expect, Mr. Chairman, to read that telegram in my speech if I have the time. If I have not, I expect to extend my remarks and include that telegram in the Record.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I hope it will be read.

Mr. OLDFIELD. I shall be very glad to read it if I have the time.

Mr. LONGWORTH. We should be very glad to hear it.

Mr. OLDFIELD. We will put it in the Record and you can read it.

Now, gentlemen, in this bill there are a great many jokers. I want to confine myself to this bill in this debate.

I say to you to-day that on page 11, section 207, you have a provision in here that will relieve a lot of rich speculators of the country of just taxes. I want to read it to you.

(b) In the case of any taxpayer (other than a corporation) whose ordinary net income and capital net gain together exceed $40,000, there shall be levied, collected, and paid, in lieu of the taxes imposed by sections 210 and 211 of this title, a tax determined as follows:

"A partial tax shall first be computed upon the basis of the ordinary net income at the rates and in the manner provided in sections 210 and 211, and the total tax shall be this amount plus 15 per centum of the capital net gain, etc."

In other words, they do not collect a tax on the capital net gain like they tax other gains in business. For example, under that section an individual might buy an apartment house in Washington in 1913, for which he paid $100,000. If that apartment house sells in 1921 for a million dollars he would have a net gain of $900,000, and yet under that provision he would have the right to separate that gain from all other gains, and his $900,000 would be taxed only 15 per cent. Why do you not tax the $900,000 profit at the rate of 32 per cent as you do other individuals who have an income of as much as $66,000? I think the court will sustain that interpretation. I remember quite well that a very bright lawyer came before the Ways and Means Committee and urged that provision on the theory that the people dealing in real estate—buying real estate and buildings for investment—would not sell them because they would have to pay so much to the Government. How much do you lose in revenue under this provision? Under that state of facts, under the present law the man would have to pay approximately $380,000 in taxes, and under this provision he would have to pay only $135,000. We say it is not fair to the rest of the people when you relieve rich speculators of taxation in that sort of fashion. You can not explain it to the American people. It seems that Republicans are never happier than when they are relieving rich individuals and rich corporations of taxes.

Now I must hurry along, for I have only one hour, and many other Democrats want to speak upon this bill. Take the excise taxes on page 69 of the bill. Under the present law we tax the excess of $5 a square yard on carpets, for example, at 10 per cent. You are not going to lose any money from this provision but you are shifting the burden to the less wealthy class of individuals, because you amend the law by saying:

Carpets and rugs, including fiber, if sold for more than $3.50 a square yard, 5 per cent.

Under the present law we tax the excess of $5 a square yard on carpets at 10 per cent. You take in a larger class of people because you reduce the price of the carpets. You will get more money than you do under the present law, but you get it from the less wealthy of the country. In other words, you are shifting the burden from those who are better able to pay to those who are less able to pay.

Mr. BACHARACH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OLDFIELD. Yes.

Mr. BACHARACH. What class of poor people would purchase carpets for $3.50 a square yard at wholesale?

Mr. OLDFIELD. More will purchase at $3.50 a yard than they would at $5.

Mr. BACHARACH. But this $3.50 applies to the wholesale trade.

Mr. OLDFIELD. There will be more people purchase carpets at $3.50 than they would at $5 a yard, and the gentleman knows it.

Mr. BACHARACH. If my colleague will yield, I think he misunderstands the provision. Three dollars and a half is the wholesale price, and the other provision—$5—was for the retail price.

Mr. OLDFIELD. Under the present law you have a tax on the excess over a certain price, and you put the tax on the entire price in this bill.

Mr. BACHARACH. Oh, yes; but this applies to $3.50 wholesale.

Mr. OLDFIELD. On the whole carpet but not on the excess. Now, take the next provision: Under the present law we tax the excess of over $50 on trunks, and in this bill you reduce the percentage to 5 per cent and the value of the trunks to $30. Therefore you take in more people and you shift the burden from those who are better able to pay it to those who are less able to pay it.

Valises, traveling bags, suit cases, hatboxes used by travelers, and fitted toilet cases, if sold for more than $15, 5 per cent.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The gentleman does not seem to appreciate that those are the manufacturer's price.

Mr. OLDFIELD. Yes; this is a sales tax which will be passed on to the consumers of America. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Now, I want to discuss that more fully.

Purses, pocketbooks, shopping and hand bags, if sold for more than $4, 5 per cent.

Under the present law it is $7.50 and the tax is 10 per cent on the excess over $7.50.

Portable light fixtures, including lamps of all kinds and lamp shades, if sold for more than $10, 5 per cent.

We had an excess of $25. They have taken in a greater number of purchasers in the country, and, therefore, they are shifting the burden.

Umbrellas, parasols, sunshades, if sold for more than $2.50, 5 per cent.

We have in the present law a tax of 10 per cent on the excess over $4.

I notice also that you reduce the tax from 10 per cent in the present law to 5 per cent on tennis rackets, billiard and pool and golf balls. It does seem that the people who buy these articles could contribute as much as 10 per cent on the price toward helping pay the war debt.

In section 810 of the bill you reduce the 10 per cent tax to 5 per cent on sculpture, paintings, statuary, art porcelains, and bronzes to adorn the homes of the rich.

House or smoking coats or jackets and bath or lounging robes, if sold for more than $3, 5 per cent.

You can not buy one for less than $3. You shift the burden there and put it on the people less able to carry the burden, for that takes in everyone.

In this bill you repeal the provision taxing electric fans, and you say that you lose $280,000 in taxes. Of course, that is not much, but I take it that the people of this country who are able to buy portable electric fans would be able to pay the small tax provided in the present law. If you repeal that, and you have repealed it, then you must find $280,000 from some other source.

You say in the report that you want to reduce the surtaxes and repeal the excess-profits taxes, especially the surtaxes. And why? Because you say it forces the rich and wealth of the country to place their money in tax-exempt securities.

That is the excuse you give, and we hear the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Fess] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. MILLS] crying out in favor of a constitutional amendment prohibiting the issuing by the States and cities and counties of the country of tax-exempt securities, and they say that if you will do that the rich would not put their money into that kind of security, but would put it in productive industry. You say you want no more tax-exempt securities for the reason that the rich of the country put their money in those securities instead of in productive industry. Under the present law a man can buy as much as $160,000 of Government bonds, if he will purchase them properly and according to law, and they are exempt from taxation, and in this bill you increase that amount to $335,000. Why do you do that? In one breath you say you do not want any more tax-exempt securities because those tax-exempt securities are causing the rich of the country to place their money in them instead of in productive industries, and in the next breath in this very bill you violate the very excuse you lay down as an excuse for the legislation you carry in the bill, because on page 82 of the bill we find the following provision:

Sec. 1010. The various acts authorizing the issues of Liberty bonds are amended and supplemented as follows:

(a) On and after January 1, 1921, 4 per cent and 4½ per cent Liberty bonds shall be exempt from graduated additional income taxes, commonly known as surtaxes, and excess-profits and war-profits taxes, now or hereafter imposed by the United States upon the income or profits of individuals, partnerships, corporations, or associations, in respect to the interest on aggregate principal amounts thereof as follows:

Until the expiration of two years after the date of the termination of the war between the United States and the German Government, as fixed by proclamation of the President, on $125,000 aggregate principal amount; and for three years more on $50,000 aggregate principal amount.

You do not want any more tax-exempt securities, yet you double, more than double, the tax-exempt securities that one can buy to-day under the present law. How are you going to explain that? I hope Mr. LONGWORTH or Mr. TREADWAY or some other gentleman of the Ways and Means Committee will explain why it is that in one breath you do not want tax-exempt securities and in the next you increase the amount of exemption. So long as you play falsely with the people and try to mislead them on these tax-exempt securities you could not in a thousand years get them to adopt a constitutional amendment such as Mr. MILLS proposes, and they ought not to do it if you are going to treat them in that sort of fashion.

The Republican Party in this proposed legislation is running true to form. You are trying to relieve the wealthy of the country; you are trying to relieve the great multimillionaires and the income of the big corporations and place the burden somewhere else. You say that you lose $450,000,000 because of repealing the excess-profits tax.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OLDFIELD. Yes.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. The gentleman just now read a provision of the law which is to be extended until after the proclamation of peace. Can the gentleman conceive of any reason for postponing the effect of any law until the formal proclamation of peace?

Mr. OLDFIELD. Not this kind of a law, of course. You admit that you lose $450,000,000 when you repeal the excess-profits tax and you gain $133,750,000 by your corporation flat tax of 12½ per cent. The trouble is that you relieve the big corporations, the profiteering corporations, of $450,000,000 and place the burden on the little corporations, as I shall be able to show you before I finish. But you are running true to form.

There is nothing unusual about this proposed legislation, coming from the Republicans. In 1862 you placed an income tax on the statute books of 3 per cent, I think it was. In 1863 you increased that to 5 per cent, and in 1865 to 10 per cent. Why? To get money to carry on the Civil War, in order to win the war, if you please. In 1870 what did you do? You repealed the income tax law and placed the burden through consumption and other taxes on the people generally, thereby relieving the rich of that time and placing the burden of paying for that war on the masses of the people of America. [Applause on the Democratic side.] That is what you are doing to-day. There can be no question about it, not the slightest doubt. I dare say that half of the Republicans of the House will agree with the statement that I am about to make, because I have talked with some of them and I know they will. In 1918 the revenue act contained a provision taxing stock dividends of corporations, and those stock dividends must be worth something to these corporations, otherwise they would not issue them. In 1920 I believe it was, on March 8, the Supreme Court of the United States, by a 5 to 4 decision, declared the stock-dividend provision of the law unconstitutional. The court might change. In the legal tender cases the Congress of the United States sent the cases back to the Supreme Court, and the Supreme Court changed. Why don't you do that? In this bill you could get $300,000,000 by taxing a privilege, if you please—taxing the privilege of these corporations to issue stock dividends. Let me show you how ridiculous you will make yourselves in passing this sort of legislation. I can not for the life of me understand how any Republican can give a satisfactory excuse for the passage of this legislation. I think it is the most vicious bill that I have ever seen in my term of service here. I can not understand how any honest man can support this legislation, regardless of politics. Let us look at this. I have here a statement prepared for me by the Treasury Department. There have been a billion and a half dollars' worth of stock dividends issued since that decision. A tax of 20 per cent on the privilege of issuing those stock dividends would bring in $300,000,000 to the Treasury, and it would not hurt the rich. Here they are:

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OLDFIELD. I will.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. I call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that the Louisville & Nashville Railroad now has petitioned the Interstate Commerce Commission asking permission to issue $54,000,000 of stock dividends.

Mr. OLDFIELD. That is right. I thank the gentleman. Now—

Mr. CONNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OLDFIELD. I will.

Mr. CONNELL. Will the gentleman kindly tell me how stock dividends increase the value of the stock?

Mr. OLDFIELD. Will the gentleman kindly tell me why they are so anxious to issue stock dividends if they are not valuable?

Mr. CONNELL. It is out of the surplus.

Mr. OLDFIELD. Why not pay the surplus to the stockholders, if you please, and let them pay the tax on it?

Mr. CONNELL. But the gentleman—

Mr. OLDFIELD. These big corporations issuing these stock dividends knew when they issued them that the Republican Party was liable to come into power, and they knew you would reduce the surtax, that you would reduce or repeal the excess-profits tax, you would reduce the tax on the rich, if you please, and then after that they can sell those dividends and pay the lower taxes.

Mr. CONNELL. But the gentleman did not tell me how you increase the value of the stock.

Mr. OLDFIELD. I shall not go into that at this time, but I want to say this: I believe they ought to pay for this privilege. I think they ought to pay for it, and I believe the people of America will say so. Take the Crane Co., which issued 200 per cent stock dividends; take the North Texas Oil Co., which issued a 500 per cent stock dividend; take the Franklin Yarn Co., which issued a 2,000 per cent stock dividend. The Standard Oil Co. of Nebraska just a few days ago issued a 200 per cent stock dividend. Gentlemen, why do you not tax them? I will tell you why you do not tax them. You do not tax them because the tax would fall upon those who are most able to bear the burden of taxation to run this Government and pay the war debt.

Mr. CONNELL. When the stockholder gets a stock dividend he has to pay a tax according to the value of the stock.

Mr. OLDFIELD. He will sell the stock and not pay as much taxes. But I will put this in the Record, and it shows the big stock dividends which have been issued since the Supreme Court decided that case. Now, let me discuss for a little while the question of the excess-profits tax, and I want to say at the outset that there was never a more just tax written on the statute books of America than the excess-profits tax. [Applause on the Democratic side.] It is simply nothing more or less than a graduated income tax on profits; excess profits, if you please. I have some maps here, which I shall use at this point. I am greatly indebted to Mr. Howard Clinton Beck, a certified public accountant from the State of Michigan, who has prepared the figures here, which show you without any question, gentlemen, that upon the rich you decrease the taxes, and upon the poor corporations, the weak corporations, you increase the taxes. Do you agree with me? There can be no question about it. Let me show you. It is so outrageous I do not see how any man can afford to repeal the excess-profits tax and substitute the flat corporation tax of 12½ per cent, as proposed in this bill. This is in the blue figures [indicating], and it shows that the corporation pays more than under the present law. Take a corporation with $5,000 invested capital. If it makes 50 per cent on its capital, a little corporation, it pays $12.50 more in taxes than it does under the present law.

Mr. BACHARACH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OLDFIELD. I will.

Mr. BACHARACH. I have got exactly the same thing on that proposition you have there.

Mr. OLDFIELD. I have here, without going into all these figures—

Mr. BACHARACH. The gentleman has 50 per cent here, and under the present law a man having an invested capital of $5,000, 50 per cent under the present law, he pays $50 under the new law.

Mr. OLDFIELD. Sixty-two and a half dollars.

Mr. BACHARACH. No; he pays $37.50, $12.50 increase on $2,000 exemption.

Mr. OLDFIELD. Here are the figures. The $5,000 corporation invested capital; when it makes 50 per cent it will pay $50 tax under the present law. Under the proposed law it will pay $62.50.

Mr. WOODRUFF. If the gentleman will permit, I will say the table of figures the gentleman has in his hand is a copy of the same table I received this morning from Mr. Beck, but it is not the table referred to by the gentleman who just interrupted. That table was drawn on the 15 per cent basis.

Mr. DUNBAR. Fifty per cent on $5,000 invested capital would be $2,500.

Mr. OLDFIELD. That is right.

Mr. DUNBAR. I understand under the revenue law any corporation with a capital stock of $5,000 that does not make $3,000—

Mr. OLDFIELD. $2,000.

Mr. REAVIS. Does the gentleman agree?

Mr. OLDFIELD. No; I do not.

Now, gentlemen, I want to say this, that there can be no question about the accuracy of these figures. There is not an expert in the Treasury Department who will dispute the accuracy of them. You take a corporation with $50,000 capital stock, and under the present law when it makes 5 per cent it would pay $50. Under the proposed law it would pay $62.50, or $12.50 more. When it makes 6 per cent it would pay $25 more; when it makes 8 per cent it would pay $50 more; when it pays 10 per cent it would pay $75 more; when it makes 15 per cent it would pay the Treasury $47.50 more than the present law. Now, when the corporation begins to profiteer a little bit more and makes 20 per cent, it pays $340 less. When it makes 25 per cent it will pay $1,177.50 less than under present law.

When it makes 33½ per cent it will pay $2,093.34 less than under the present law. When the same corporation profiteers to the extent of making 50 per cent on its invested capital under the provisions of this bill it will pay $4,285 less taxes than under the present law. In other words, the more these corporations profiteer on the people the less taxes they will have to pay.

The Democratic Party believes that the more these corporations make the more they are able to pay and should pay more toward paying the war debt and the running expenses of the Government. You would reverse this and say to the corporations, if you will plunder the people, we will relieve you of taxation. Now, I hope some gentleman on the Republican side will tell the House and the country just why you take this unholy position.

What have the people done to you that you want to see them robbed and plundered by these large corporations? It seems to me that the people were very generous with you in the last election. And this is the way you repay them. Now, gentlemen, I want to answer some other arguments brought forward by Republicans to discredit the excess-profits tax. You say the law is the cause of the high cost of living; that it has increased prices.

Gentlemen, that is propaganda bought and paid for and circulated by special interests. Not one word of truth in it. Now, let us see what the facts are. This table gives you the facts better than I can in words and shows the indefensible inequity of this bill.

EFFECT OF THE REPEAL OF THE EXCESS-PROFITS TAX.

The new revenue bill reported by the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives contains a provision for the repeal of the present excess-profits tax on corporations and an increase in the normal tax from 10 to 12½ per cent.

The effect of this proposed law on those corporations whose invested capital is from $5,000 to $10,000,000, and who are earning from 5 per cent to 50 per cent thereon, is shown in the following exhibit. Those corporations whose capital and income are in the block between the heavy black lines will pay more tax under the proposed law, while those to the right and below the second black line will pay less tax.

that time. He had spent years educating the American people up to his idea and his idea was right and proper, but when he changed the people of America failed to change with him, and the people of America to-day are as much in favor of free lumber as they ever were. Mr. Hoover knows that we can not have exports unless we have imports. He has said it upon many occasions, before and after he appeared before the Ways and Means Committee; hence I think Mr. Hoover had better profit by the experience of Mr. Pinchot and stay on the right track on this question.

Great Britain during the war did a much better job in writing her income tax laws than we did. Right at the beginning of the war a law was passed taking 80 per cent of the profits of corporations and business generally. We left them two or three times as much as they had formerly been making in our taxation scheme.

Now, another thing, gentlemen. The year 1918 was the year of the highest excess-profits tax rates. Out of 6,700 corporations, it is shown that 3,000 of that number paid no excess-profits taxes whatsoever. These 3,000 corporations amounted to just about one-third of the invested capital in all of the 6,700 corporations. Is it not reasonable to presume that these corporations who did not make enough to pay an excess-profits tax did not have some influence over prices of commodities in this country?

Take two merchants in the same town, for example. One of them does not make enough to pay an excess-profits tax, yet he competes with the man across the street who does make enough to pay an excess-profits tax. If the merchant who makes enough to pay an excess-profits tax tries to pass this tax on to the consumer, what would happen and what has happened all over the country? The little merchant will get the business and use his influence to hold down the prices. No; the trouble is that these excess-profits taxes are surplus of these corporations; and all the economic writers agree upon the proposition that the net surplus of a corporation, when you tax only the net surplus of a corporation, can not be passed on to the consumers.

As a matter of fact, these people profited to the extent of billions. They charged all that the public could bear. Now the reaction has come, and because they can not make exorbitant profits like they did during the war they come before the Congress of the United States and ask it to relieve them of taxation, and then, if it does, they will continue to profiteer, if it is possible to do so when normal conditions return.

Ah, gentlemen, you can not afford to do it. The people of America understand this proposition. Do not be misled by the great wave of propaganda that has been sweeping over this country for the past year and a half. I wonder, and I know that you must wonder, how many millions of dollars have been expended in propaganda to make the people believe that excess-profits taxes are passed on to the consumer; that they are responsible for the high cost of living, and, therefore, get all of the people behind the proposition and have these corporations relieved of their just burden of taxation. That is all this whole question means—nothing more, nothing less. This is not legislation by facts; this is not legislation by economic truths, but it is legislation by propaganda paid for by special interests. [Applause.]

While our soldiers were in France—2,000,000 of them and 2,000,000 in the camps of this country; 4,000,000 soldiers under arms—2,000,000 at the front bleeding and dying for the people of America, for our institutions that they might survive and continue, these corporations profiteered to the extent of fifteen or twenty billion dollars, and now that the war is over the boys have come home, many of them wounded and maimed and out of employment, you want to place the burden of paying the Great War debt upon the masses of the people of the country, including these boys; the fathers and mothers of these boys.

It is not fair. No party will ever be able to sustain any such program. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Let us take up the other proposition, the surtaxes, on the large individual incomes. Now, gentlemen, the same is true of the surtaxes. You can not defend that proposition. There is not a man in this House or in America that can defend it. And yet it is in this bill, and you gentlemen know it. But you can not defend it and you know you can not defend it. You have permitted the Republican members of the Ways and Means Committee to bring in this bill with that provision, when they knew that provision was in it, because we had Mr. Beck's statement several days ago, and they have passed it around to Secretary Mellon and Dr. Adams and other experts of the Treasury Department, and the Ways and Means Committee knew what effect this bill was going to have. And you permitted them to come in here and hog-tie you. You are not going to give us an opportunity to vote against that proposition.

It will absolutely destroy your party if you permit it to remain in the bill, or any other party. [Applause on the Democratic side.] It will destroy the country, and I do not want to see the country destroyed. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, let us take up the proposition of the reduction of high surtaxes. Let us see how that operates and see if you can defend that, if you please. Here is a man who has an income of $70,000 under this bill and he pays $20 less tax than under the present law. This does not amount to much, but you will relieve the rich, and you ought not to do it. If he has an income of $72,000, his tax is reduced $60; if it is $74,000, it is reduced $120; if it is $76,000, it is reduced $220; if it is $78,000, it is reduced $300; if it is $80,000, it is reduced $420; if it is $82,000, it is reduced $560; if it is $84,000, it is reduced $720; if it is $86,000, there is a reduction of $900; if it is $88,000, there is a reduction of $1,100; if it is $90,000, there is a reduction of $1,320; if it is $92,000, there is a reduction of $1,600; if it is $94,000, there is a reduction of $1,800; if it is $96,000, there is a reduction of $2,100; if it is $98,000, there is a reduction of $2,400; if it is $100,000, there is a reduction of $2,700; if it is $150,000 income, there is a reduction of $10,720; and if he has $200,000 income, you reduce his surtaxes $24,720; if he has an income of $300,000 per year, you reduce his taxes $52,720; if he has $500,000 income, you reduce his taxes $114,700; if he has a $1,000,000 income a year, you reduce his taxes $274,720; and if he has $1,500,000 income annually, you reduce his taxes by this bill $439,720; if he has a $2,000,000 income, you reduce his taxes $604,720.

The above comparison is upon the basis that the surtax upon all incomes above $68,000 shall be 32 per cent. No change is made in the rates of surtax on incomes of $68,000 or less, nor is there any change made in the normal tax rate. Exemption is taken in the above comparison at $2,000.

Now, gentlemen, I do not know whether you can defend that or not. I do not believe you can. You are going to place these burdens on the masses of the people. If you do not change it while this bill is in progress you will do it later.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OLDFIELD. I will.

Mr. JONES of Texas. How much does this reduce it on incomes under $70,000?

Mr. OLDFIELD. None.

Mr. SEARS. But no one over and above $1,000?

Mr. OLDFIELD. No.

Mr. KINCHELOE. How much reduction under this bill, except the $500 exemption, to a man that makes $5,000 to $10,000?

Mr. OLDFIELD. No reduction at all from $5,000 to $66,000, absolutely none. How can you explain it to the people of America? They are not as partisan as they used to be. How are you going to explain that when a man has an income of $70,000 or more per year you decrease his taxes?

Mr. CARTER. The gentleman has stated there the reduction in the taxes, running in different amounts—

Mr. OLDFIELD. Yes.

Mr. CARTER. Has he any information as to how many there are in each one of those classes? If he has, will he put it in the Record?

Mr. OLDFIELD. Yes; I will do it. On the $1,000,000 and over there are 65 persons, or were, according to the last report of the Treasury Department.

Mr. CARTER. How many were there in the $70,000 class?

Mr. OLDFIELD. You relieve 15,000 or 16,000 people in all in America.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman also put in the RECORD the message of President Wilson recommending this?

Mr. OLDFIELD. Oh, I will put something in the RECORD here. Here is what President Wilson said on May 20, 1919:

The main thing we shall have to care for is that our taxation shall rest as lightly as possible on the productive resources of the country, that its rates shall be stable, and that it shall be constant in its revenue-yielding power. We have found the main sources from which it must be drawn. I take it for granted that its mainstays will henceforth be the income tax, the excess-profits tax, and the estate tax. All these can be adjusted to yield constant and adequate returns and yet not constitute a too grievous burden on the taxpayer. A revision of the income tax has already been provided for by the act of 1918, but I think you will find that further changes can be made to advantage both in the rates of the tax and in the method of its collection. The excess-profits tax need not long be maintained at the rates which were necessary while the enormous expenses of the war had to be borne; but it should be made the basis of a permanent system which will reach undue profits without discouraging the enterprise and activity of our business man. The tax on inheritances ought, no doubt, to be reconsidered in its relation to the fiscal systems of the several States, but it certainly ought to remain a permanent part of the fiscal system of the Federal Government also.

[Applause on the Democratic side.]

That is what President Wilson said, and President Wilson never advised the Congress of the United States in a single line of a message or in a statement to the press to reduce the high income taxes on corporations and rich individuals in the way you have done it in this bill.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield at this point?

Mr. OLDFIELD. No; I regret I have not the time.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The gentleman does not want to have it appear in his speech?

Mr. OLDFIELD. No; I do not want to have anything the gentleman says appear in my speech. [Applause and laughter on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Chairman, I was very much surprised at the statement made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. MILLS] yesterday. He made a splendid speech. I have heard him make the same speech before the Committee on Ways and Means, and the effect of it, what he really meant in what he said yesterday, I will tell you. I do not know whether his speech is in the RECORD or not, but I heard every word of it, and he is a very interesting speaker and a very able gentleman. The effect of that speech was that the Congress of the United States can not collect these high taxes from the big corporations and the super-rich individuals of this country. He says it makes no difference what Congress does; it makes no difference what kind of a law you place on the statute books of America; these men will find some escape from its provisions. Has the time come when the Congress of the United States can not tax the big corporations like the Steel Trust and the Standard Oil Trust and the rich people of America? I say to you that they have entirely too much influence in this country now. They have too much influence, gentlemen. When they can avoid the law, when you can not make them pay taxes, something is radically wrong with your system of government, if you please. That is the purport of the remarks of the gentleman from New York [Mr. MILLS] yesterday.

I want to put in the RECORD a statement that I saw in the New York Times on August 7, a statement by Henry H. Klein, the first deputy to the commissioner of accounts. He has just issued a book called "Dynastic America and Those Who Own It," in which he estimates the amount of about 400 great American fortunes, and puts forth the proposition that the Constitution should be amended to provide for the limitation of fortunes, especially those fortunes in possession of heirs. He dedicates his work "To those who believe in constitutional government of, by, and for the people," and interspersed through the sections and paragraphs are quotations bearing upon his contention, such as the following:

[From the New York Times, Aug. 7, 1921.]

The Federal Constitution is intended to preserve free institutions in the United States. It was amended for prohibition and woman suffrage. Why not amend it to limit excessive private fortunes?

The Sherman antitrust law has failed to check extortion by private monopoly. Why not check the greed of those who control private monopoly?

This book proves that wealth is concentrated. History records that the decline of civilization in a nation begins with wealth concentration.

Excessive private fortunes are in the hands of the third, fourth, and fifth generations, who exerted little or no effort to obtain them. Why not limit what these individuals can have, and stimulate worthy ambition?

On the same thesis the author has written books entitled "Bankrupting a Great City" and "Standard Oil or the People." He has been employed by several investigating committees, and in public life has taken every opportunity to expound the theories again set forth in his latest book.

500 FORTUNES OF $5,000,000.

"At least 500 other persons died during the present generation leaving between $5,000,000 and $10,000,000 each," writes Mr. Klein. He gives a partial list of these as:

Edward W. Morrison (Chicago), Charles J. Harrah, Peter Doelger, M. C. D. Borden, Robert Bacon, Eva S. Cochran, William Whitehead, Mary G. Pinkney, Charles G. Thompson, David H. Tolman, Mrs. E. C. Bryce, David Dows, Robert Pringle, James A. Garland, Otto Huber, George S. Bowdoin, Nathaniel Thayer, James J. Goodwin, J. Livingston, Richard M. Colgate, John H. Converse, Francis L. Loring, Baroness von Zedwitz, George W. Crossman, Mrs. Eleanor Pell, Phelps, A. G. Spalding, William H. Walker, W. van R. Smith, Abraham Abraham, Edward K. Bacon, Jacob Langeloth, Byron L. Smith, Charles Kohler, Mary Ann Chisholm, Cora F. Barnes, William W. Cole, George F. Baer, Charles E. Cotting, Helen C. Juilliard, John M. Burke, Ellen S. C. James, Andrew Freedman, Charles G. Gates, Louis C. Hamersley, John R. Marshall, Charles H. Marshall, Charles H. Steinway, John D. Crimmins, Stephen B. Elkins, Oliver Ames (Boston), Jason S. Rogers, Charles H. Tenney, Ernst Thälman, Hobart Williams, B. Guggenheim, L. Arthur Hinkley, Julia L. Butterfield, W. V. van Vleck, Charles G. Emery, Elizabeth M. Anderson, Luther Kountze, Ralph J. Preston, Max J. Breitenbach, and John B. Stanchfield.

The list of those who died in the present generation leaving between $1,000,000 and $5,000,000 is too long to print, he says. It contains several thousand names.

NEW ROCKEFELLER ESTIMATES.

The author devotes a section of his book to the Rockefeller and Standard Oil fortunes under the heading, "The largest estates are from Standard Oil."

"In a single lifetime," he says, "John D. Rockefeller has amassed a fortune greater than that of any other individual or family. His wealth is estimated at $2,400,000,000, including the holdings in the foundations."

"Mr. Rockefeller is worth $1,000,000,000 in oil alone. His railroad holdings are estimated at $400,000,000. His holdings in industrial corporations outside of Standard Oil are appraised at $400,000,000, and his interest in gas, electric light, and traction is fixed at several hundred millions more. He has several hundred million dollars in bonds of the United States and other countries and in the bonds of cities and States. He owns many millions in real estate and mortgages. Part of this vast wealth is held in the foundations. When Mr. Rockefeller dies his estate will show far less than he owns because a large share of his fortune has already been transferred to his children."

"More than 40 families in the United States have in excess of $100,000,000 each. More than 100 other families have in excess of $50,000,000 each. More than 300 other families have in excess of $20,000,000 each."

"Estimated income-tax returns show that John D. Rockefeller's taxable income is about $40,000,000 a year; William Rockefeller and the late Henry C. Frick, $10,000,000 each; Morgan, Baker, Harkness, Armour, Ford, Payne, Vanderbilt, Field, Green, Harriman, Guggenheim, Astor, Hill, Mellon, and Phipps, $5,000,000 each; the Stillman family, Ryan, Schwab, du Pont, Clark, Brady, and Whitney, $3,000,000 each; Schiff, Duke, Eastman, Kahn, Swift, Rosenwald, Blair, Huntington, Flagler, Widener, Stotesbury, and Pratt, $2,500,000 each."

"Others whose taxable incomes are estimated to exceed $2,000,000 a year are Penfield, Converse, Gould, Reid, Rogers, Hearst, Mills, Davison, Belmont, John D. Ryan, Gary, Bidings, Cochran, Pullman, Couzens, Pierce, Doheny, Chapin, Wendel, Goelet, Woolworth, Plant, Arbuckle, Rhineland, James, Morris, Moore, Phelps, Dodge, Lamont, and Warburg."

"The gross income of most of these persons far exceeds the taxable amount. The gross income of John D. Rockefeller, for example, is about $140,000,000 a year. His income in 1907, the panic year, was estimated at about the same amount. Prior to that time it was estimated at $6,000,000 a month."

Now, gentlemen, if you can not pass a tax law in America that will reach these people, if the Congress of the United States can not pass a tax law that will make the ultrarich share the burden of this war debt, then we had better look elsewhere. We had better limit fortunes in this country, if we can not do it in any other way, and double and treble the inheritance taxes. Take, for example, a few estates in this country—the Vanderbilt and Astor estates, the Morgan, Harriman, and Hill estates, and a few others—which control the railroad systems and in large part the food products of the country, the coal mines of the country; and if you can not reach them by excess-profits taxes, gentlemen, you will have to find some other way to do it. Mr. Mills says you can not pass a law that they can not evade. I believe that Congress could force these people to pay the taxes, to pay this war debt. The trouble is you Republicans do not want to make them pay their just proportion of taxes.

Oh, gentlemen, what is the effect of this legislation? You take these big corporations, and you find that there are about 100,000 corporations in America that would not have to pay much of tax under this proposed law, while there is another 100,000 which you would make pay more, because they would make less. Those who make less pay proportionately more tax under this proposition. There are about 10,000, however, in the class here [indicating on diagram] which you relieve of from half a million to a million dollars in taxation annually. In effect you are licensing profiteering. You are telling these great corporations that profited in America while the masses of the people were fighting the battles of the country on the battle fields of France, trying to save civilization, to go on and continue their profiteering. When the masses of our people were fighting and bleeding and dying, gentlemen, these corporations that you are going to relieve of taxes now were profiteering and did profiteer to the extent of $38,000,000,000 in the years from 1916 to 1920, inclusive. They made that much profit after all taxes were paid, and now you say you are going to shift that burden from them to the masses of the people and the small corporations, whom you will compel to pay $2,000,000,000 war debt. But the people, gentlemen, will revolt against this outrage. You know they will.

I know how Mr. Fordney will attempt to explain it. Every farmer's organization in America from every State in the Union have been appealing to the Congress, "For God's sake, do not repeal the excess-profits tax and the high surtaxes." The gentleman from Michigan will explain his failure to comply with their wishes by saying to them, when they tell him, "You did an awfully unwise thing when you passed that law repealing the excess-profits tax," Mr. Fordney will say, "What are you talking about? Did we not pass the emergency tariff bill for the benefit of the farmer?" He will attempt to close the whole business up by saying, "Did we not pass the emergency tariff bill for the farmer?" [Applause on the Democratic side.] But as to that tariff bill, I think it has done one good thing; it has disillusioned the American farmer with regard to protective tariffs on farm products. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Gentlemen, in the general tariff bill you are going to place on the statute books almost a prohibitive tariff, because the Senate Finance Committee, as I understand, has agreed to adopt the American valuation scheme. What does that mean? You are going to hold the American market for the American manufacturers at all hazards. You are going to permit them to charge monopoly prices, and after they have charged monopoly prices in this country under your tariff system, gentlemen, then you encourage them and tell them they may profiteer, and the more they profiteer the less taxes proportionately they will have to pay.

That is the situation, gentlemen. There could be nothing plainer than that proposition. If you are going to place on a corporation an income tax, for God's sake why don't you graduate it up, and the more profit the corporation makes compel it to pay more taxes. But here the more it makes the less it pays. Can you explain it or defend it? Not a man in this House or elsewhere can deny those figures.

I say to you, my friends, that when the flower of the youth of America was fighting the battles of the people and of civilization itself in France, those soldiers came almost entirely from the masses—of course, naturally so, because 95 per cent of the people of America and every other country are composed of the masses, not the rich. I do not cast any reflection on the rich man's son who went to war. He did a good thing. It is all right, but in the very nature of the case there were only a few rich men's sons who went to war. In other words, you sent the sons of the masses of the country to fight the battles of the country, to protect these great corporations, to protect these great institutions, to protect their profits while the war was going on, permitting them to make profits to the extent of $38,000,000,000, and after the war is over you come back and by your legislation you make the weak corporations and the masses of the people pay the great war debt. Another thing, under this bill you know you are going to have a deficit. You know it can not raise the amount of money you will require to run the Government. Therefore you provide in this bill for the issuing by the Treasury of $500,000,000 in short-time certificates. You know you are not going to raise the money, and it looks to me like you have traded this legislation for campaign funds, campaign contributions, if you please. You evidently have done it. No honest, sane person, without pressure being brought to bear on him, would ever vote for a proposition like this. No party would do it, and I believe that if you had not hog tied yourselves with this rule you would not vote for it Saturday. Now the question is, Are you going to shift the burdens of taxation to pay this great war debt onto the shoulders of the same men, and their fathers and mothers, who fought the battles of the country in France? That is the question here to-day. While you have the power to do it if you want to, my friends, I hope you are not going to do it.

During the campaign, when Gov. Cox was saying that the Republican Party was going to spend $15,000,000 or $20,000,000 to elect its candidate for the Presidency, I saw in the papers one day where Secretary Weeks, former Senator John Weeks, made a statement in reply. I served in the House with Mr. Weeks. I liked him personally very much. He is a splendid gentleman. I saw in the New York papers in great headlines the statement that Senator Weeks addressed a group of business men in reply to the statement of Gov. Cox. The paper went on to say how many billion dollars were represented in the audience. There were a few hundred people at the meeting. Senator Weeks's answer was this: "Ah, gentlemen, suppose it does cost $15,000,000 or $20,000,000 to elect the Republican ticket; it will be worth it to the business men of the country." That is what Secretary Weeks said. He said, "It will be worth more than that to you, gentlemen."

Ah, gentlemen, it will be worth more than that to them if you put this bill on the statute books, because you admit you will relieve these great profiteering corporations that have made this $38,000,000,000 of $450,000,000, thirty times $15,000,000, in taxes. Ten thousand of them made $30,000,000,000 during the war. All of them put together made $38,000,000,000, and 10,000 of them made four-fifths of that money. One thousand of them made more than half of it, or $16,000,000,000. In other words, you are letting off not to exceed 10,000 corporations; and when you take off the burden you automatically place it on weak corporations, and you do it, gentlemen, knowing the facts and knowing the results. You also admit in your report that you relieve the multimillionaires of $90,000,000 in surtaxes.

Now, gentlemen, I have taken all the time I care to in the discussion of this bill. My time is about up, but I hope and trust that there will be enough independent Republicans on that side to unite with a solid Democratic minority to defeat this proposition, and let your Ways and Means Committee come in here with a proposition that every honest man in America can stand upon, whether he be a Democrat or a Republican. If you would fix this thing so that it would bear equally on all corporations, the Democrats would vote for it. They would all vote for it if you would equalize it and make all of the corporations of the country and all the rich individuals pay proportionately their just part of the war debt; but, of course, they can not afford to vote for this sort of a bill. In fact, no honest man can afford to vote for it.

Now, the Democrats are in this position: Of course, you did not permit us to help write the bill. But that is not all. You did not permit us to have the facts that you had. We have not got the facts. I do not know whether you have the facts or not.

I do not believe you have. I know you have not disclosed the facts. It seems that the President of the United States has the best minds around him that Wall Street can furnish. [Applause and laughter.] There is no better Wall Street man in America than your Secretary of the Treasury; and yet, gentlemen, he made a better proposition than you have put up here. The Secretary of the Treasury did that. You are not only fixing to destroy your party, but you are fixing to destroy the country. [Applause.] I thank you, gentlemen. [Prolonged applause.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. GREENE of Vermont having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had disagreed to the amendments made by the House of Representatives to the amendments numbered 10, 15, and 32 made by the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7294) entitled "An act supplemental to the national prohibition act."

THE REVENUE.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY]. [Applause.]

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I had supposed that there was likely to be a campaign for the election to Congress next year, but after hearing the very able address of my friend from Arkansas [Mr. OLDFIELD] I want to say to my colleagues on the Republican side that it is useless to think of any of us returning. Let us pack our trunks and decide that there will be no Republican Party recognized in the Sixty-eighth Congress. [Applause and laughter.] If we are to take the statement of the gentleman from Arkansas at its full value, that is exactly what will happen. Now, I have always enjoyed political campaigns. I have taken part in a good many in the last few years up in the old Bay State, and I am disappointed and sad at heart at this moment to think that there will not be any campaign next year if we are to believe the eloquent words of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. OLDFIELD]. It is always very interesting to see how sorry our Democratic friends are over the tremendous mistakes they tell us we make. However, our old party has weathered the storms of opposition pretty well, and I am inclined to think that the oratory of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. OLDFIELD] will not be as great a factor in the minds of the masses of the voters of this country as his eloquent words have been here this morning to his Democratic colleagues. He brought great joy to their hearts by his announcement of the obliteration of the Republican Party, and it seems to me we are apt to survive such errors of criticism as he has made.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes; very briefly.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I do not think the eloquence of the gentleman from Arkansas will be so troublesome to the Republican Party as the figures which he presented. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. TREADWAY. If the figures which the gentleman from Arkansas presented are no nearer correct than was his statement in regard to the exemption of Liberty bonds, we will stand by the figures. He told us that under the present law the exemption of $165,000 of Liberty bonds under the bill we presented to the House will be doubled. I think you will find that a little later on proof will be brought that the additional exemption of Liberty bonds is about $10,000 instead of doubling his $165,000.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The gentleman from Arkansas only made a mistake of 50 per cent.

Mr. TREADWAY. That is all, and probably his other figures are no nearer right than those on the Liberty bonds. Now, my friends, I want to call attention to the sober thought of the parties last year when this subject of taxation and revision was before us. The Republican Party in its convention at Chicago adopted a plank reading as follows.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I understood the gentleman to question the accuracy of the figures that were placed in the Record by the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. TREADWAY. I do not question his good intentions.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman put the correct figures in the Record?

Mr. TREADWAY. I have no reason to revise the public accountant's draft of any figures which he may file. If they are correct, we will be glad to give them full credit, and certainly the voters, according to the gentleman from Arkansas, will give them full credit.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts yield for a moment?

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I understood the gentleman from Arkansas made a positive statement that in this bill the exemption of outstanding Liberty bonds was doubled.

Mr. TREADWAY. I heard him say that.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I wish to say that he made a mistake of 100 per cent, because they are not exempt except possibly one issue of $10,000.

Mr. TREADWAY. I will yield time to the gentleman from Ohio to read the clause in the bill which exempts these Liberty bonds.

Mr. LONGWORTH. It is as follows:

Until the expiration of two years after the date of the termination of the war between the United States and the German Government, as fixed by proclamation of the President, on $125,000 aggregate principal amount; and for three years more on $50,000 aggregate principal amount.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I do not think the Republican Party has time to revise the statistics of Democratic speeches; we have not finished the auditing of the book accounts of the Democratic administration yet.

Mr. TREADWAY. That is true, and we have not collected the taxes to meet the big bills that they left.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. You will have to hurry if you do.

Mr. CRISP. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes.

Mr. CRISP. My friend will recall that in the Ways and Means Committee Mr. Beck's statement was presented, and one member asked Mr. McCoy and Dr. Adams if it was correct. I interposed and said it would be unfair to expect the gentleman to give an answer as to the accuracy of these figures without investigation, and the committee acceded to that and referred it to them. Did they make a report saying wherein it was inaccurate?

Mr. TREADWAY. Evidently the inaccuracy was discovered, because—

Mr. FESS. If the gentleman will yield, the figures were all hypothetical. I have read the statement, and where the difference of 40 per cent and 30 per cent would be made it would be so much reduction. The question is not whether the figures are correct but whether the profit would be made on the same basis that if the heavens fall we would gather larks. The excess-profit tax defeats the profit.

Mr. TREADWAY. The excess-profit tax unless business improves will be a minor factor when the tax on corporations is made up next year.

Mr. FESS. It will repeal itself.

Mr. TREADWAY. It will repeal itself. Now, gentlemen, let us return to the question of the platform of the two parties last year. The reference to this subject in the Republican platform adopted at Chicago early in June reads as follows:

But sound policy equally demands the early accomplishment of that real reduction of the tax burden which may be achieved by substituting simple for complex tax laws and procedure, prompt and certain determination of the tax liability for delay and uncertainty, tax laws which do not for tax laws which do excessively mulct the consumer or needlessly repress enterprise and thrift.

That was the platform that the Republican Party adopted early in June. Later on, in the latter part of June or in the first part of July, the Democratic Party assembled its delegates in San Francisco, and having had the opportunity of careful perusal of the Republican plank they were able to copy it in phraseology and in meaning, perhaps improving the phraseology a trifle. They had the good example the Republicans had set them in the month previous, and here is what the Democratic Party evolved in its plank:

We advocate tax reform and a searching revision of the war revenue acts to fit these conditions, so that the wealth of the Nation may not be withdrawn from productive enterprise and diverted to wasteful or nonproductive expenditure. We demand prompt action by the next Congress for a complete survey of existing taxes and their modification and simplification, with a view to secure greater equity and justice in tax burdens and improvement in administration.

In view of the language of that plank adopted by the Democratic Party in San Francisco it is amusing, when a bill is brought in here doing exactly what the platform called for, to have the members of that party endeavor to find excuses for not voting for the bill based upon their own expressions of faith. If the element of partisanship had not again crawled under the tent here, it seems to me that you would do as we did. When you brought in the revenue revision act, acting as a minority then in good faith, we supported your revision of tax measures, and to-day we are placing a bill before you in conformity with your own platform that calls for your support in the same nonpartisan spirit that we supported your measure three years ago.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. For a very brief question.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The Members of the minority party at that time sat throughout the making up of the bill, did they not?

Mr. TREADWAY. We did.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. They participated in it in its entirety.

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes; but we voted without the element of partisanship at all.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Have the minority Members at this time had any such opportunity?

Mr. TREADWAY. We were warned from the floor and in the committee by the acting minority ranking member that whatever we did we could not do business with you, that you were not going to vote for the bill, and that warning was given to us before we tried to frame the bill. That is the reason the Republicans saw fit to frame this measure without the nonpartisan assistance which we hoped to secure from you.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Massachusetts yield to me for a moment?

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Can the gentleman from Tennessee name an instance where at any time, when this country was not actually at war, the Democrats, when in the majority, have invited the Republicans to participate in the framing of a revenue or a tariff bill?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. In 1916.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Not at all, nor in 1917.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. In 1916 the revenue bill which was then made up was made up by the action of both parties.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I am convinced that the gentleman is entirely wrong, but let me ask him about an even later bill, the revenue bill of 1917. Were the Republicans invited to participate in the making of that bill?

Mr. CRISP. I will answer yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. They were not only invited to participate, but they did.

Mr. LONGWORTH. In the minority report on the revenue bill of 1917, as late as the middle of January, only two months before war was declared, which was signed by every Republican, I find the following:

The minority members of the Ways and Means Committee having had no opportunity to formally confer with the majority in the matter of raising revenue to meet Treasury deficiencies decline to accept responsibility for the bill H. R. 20573, which the majority has submitted to the House.

That reflects the courtesy accorded the Republicans by the Democratic majority two months before the war was actually declared. Let us have a few facts in this debate, if for nothing more than a diversion. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. TREADWAY. If I may resume my remarks after the complete answer of my colleague to the question of the gentleman from Tennessee, I wish now to touch on another phase of the formation of this bill. It is well expressed in the words of the Secretary of the Treasury in his letter to the committee of August 10, from which I quote:

I can not too strongly emphasize that the program outlined in this letter depends upon the reduction in expenditures which the administration expects to accomplish, and that the anticipated savings can be effected only by the most consistent and determined effort to cut expenditures.

That represents the attitude of the administration. It represents the attitude of the Republican majority of this House. We stand here pledged and intending to cut the expenditures to the very bottom possible and carry on the affairs of the Government, and this bill is framed with that in view. It is framed under the direction and leadership of the head of the administration, exactly as the head of a family will cut his expenditures in accordance with his income. No family can live happily and contentedly that does not live within its income, and that is exactly what the head of this great family of this country asks here to-day—the production of a revenue sufficient to meet our necessary expenses, and the cutting of expenditures so that we may live within the income which we produce. A careful examination of the bill will show that the bill which we have presented here complies exactly with the program outlined.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. For a brief question.

Mr. STEVENSON. It will take less time than the gentleman will take in explaining. Why, then, do you provide here for an extension of $500,000,000 of certificates that are authorized to be sold by the Treasury to make up any deficit that may occur?

Mr. TREADWAY. If the gentleman will restrain his ardor, possibly we will get to that point shortly.

Mr. STEVENSON. It is apropos of the statement the gentleman is making.

Mr. TREADWAY. This is not alone a matter of redemption of party pledges. It is intended to be a direct aid to the people for as rapid a return to normalcy as is possible. Our children's children will be grandfathers and grandmothers long before the debts of this war are paid.

And that is right. It is a correct theory and principle that the beneficiaries of this Great War should help pay the expenses of it. It is carefully estimated that 42 per cent of the cost of the war has been paid to the present time. That is our fair share, and the rest should be a debt upon future generations. The tax problem, therefore, resolves itself into a very fair equation. We must provide cash for current expenses. We must meet the interest on the public debt, and we must establish a sinking fund on a sound basis. When these features are properly cared for the duty of the present generation is performed. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] in his usual characteristic and impulsive manner yesterday referred to the reduction of the surtax as taking the burdens off of the rich. This, too, was the great call of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. OLDFIELD] again this morning, and they both say that our constituents will call upon us for an explanation. I repeat it is always interesting to see the worry and the fret our Democratic friends have that the will of the people is to be worked off or against the Republican Members. Do not worry too much about that, my Democratic friends. We will take care of that, and if there is no harder problem presented to us in the next campaign than the complaint of the gentleman from Texas about the surtax removals, I think the Republican majority will be more likely to be increased than diminished in the next House. That is also advanced in respect to the prophecy of the gentleman from Arkansas this morning. Ever since the income tax became effective, and more particularly since the very high taxes were placed on incomes of large size, the one great effort of the taxpayers of that class has been to shift the burden exactly as he described. In order to avoid this very thing these higher brackets have been eliminated. The method pursued by that class of incomes as has been suggested by the Democrats is not a State's prison offense. But it is not in accordance with the views of the gentleman from Arkansas, and is something for which they should be prosecuted. They have only availed themselves of the opportunity which our laws and our Constitution provide, namely, they can purchase municipal tax-exempt securities, and they can also further the interests, of course, of those amounts in local communities. If there is one thing, my friends, that we ought to do, it is to get at those tax-exempt securities. Now, our lawyer friends tell us that the only way to reach them is through a constitutional amendment. We are going to try to reach that point in a quicker manner. This bill will provide by an amendment to be offered by the committee for the establishment of a commission to study that very question and suggest a means of preventing the escape from taxation of what are now tax-exempt securities.

Mr. KING. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. TREADWAY. I will yield to my friend from Illinois.

Mr. KING. I ask merely for information. Why is it that the bill provides practically for the exemption of foreign debentures from taxation, of property invested by an American in foreign enterprises?

Mr. TREADWAY. I will say in reply to the inquiry of my friend from Illinois that the question of the investment of money in foreign enterprises is a very intricate and deep one. In spite of the fact our Democratic friends say that we have given no attention to this subject, it has had the very careful consideration of the Republican members of the Ways and Means Committee. I do not think I am breaking any committee confidence when I say that a subcommittee was appointed, of which I had the honor to be a member, to look into the very subject to which the gentleman refers. At first there was strong opposition to the exemption from taxation on that kind of an investment, but in consultation with a man who has the reputation of being the greatest expert on the expansion of the foreign trade—and I refer to one of the members of the Cabinet—we were informed that the provision would permit the expansion of foreign trade and reach out through our securities and our business into channels that to-day are closed markets to us on account of the different methods of taxation in those countries or the different exemptions allowed by foreign countries to those engaged in the foreign trade. So that, in spite of our original dislike to a provision for the foreign trader or the foreign corporation, we were led to the belief that it probably would be a great benefit to the development of foreign trade, particularly in South America. It was with that in view that the provision to which the gentleman from Illinois referred was placed in the bill. I hope to see very excellent results from that provision. Have I answered the gentleman's question to the extent that he desired?

Mr. KING. The gentleman has answered in a very intelligent way, although he has not convinced me.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. TREADWAY. I will yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. FESS. Is it true that the foreign countries in their taxation upon American investments make it so high that no Government can add a tax—

Mr. TREADWAY. I thought I covered that in my answer to the gentleman from Illinois. That is exactly it; that other countries have such exemptions that our manufacturers and our business people are placed at a greater disadvantage in the endeavor to do business in foreign countries. It is only to take care of that situation that the sections about foreign traders and foreign trade corporations have been incorporated. I will say also to the gentleman from Illinois that it is expected another amendment will be offered that will still further confine the possibilities of any abuse under this section. In other words, it is not an income derived from securities, but rather from money placed in business now, that this exemption is to apply.

Mr. KING. If a man owns $100,000 in debentures issued by a foreign trading company based upon the foreign securities, he would not be required to pay any tax into the United States Treasury?

Mr. TREADWAY. Well, I do not think that the gentleman in the details of it is quite correct. I made the general statement in reply to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KING].

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield on that point?

Mr. TREADWAY. I will yield.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KING] that I think in some respects his point is well taken, that it is simply a question of investment purely in foreign securities. It is to be looked after by a committee amendment which makes a provision that 50 per cent of the foreign investment must be an actual going investment.

Mr. TREADWAY. I said that, but did not go into the detail of 50 per cent. It must be income from business—not simply from investment.

Mr. HAUGEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I will yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. HAUGEN. To what extent are investments in other countries exempted from taxation, American investments, under the proposed bill?

Mr. TREADWAY. It is not the exemption of securities from other countries; it is exemption of our money going into foreign trade.

Mr. HAUGEN. Investment in other countries?

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes. You can not buy a foreign government bond to-day and not pay an income tax on it, so far as I know. This is just the reverse. This is to take American capital and put it into foreign countries. The gentleman is asking about the reverse position.

Mr. HAUGEN. They are investments in foreign countries. If an American invests his money in foreign countries he is exempt from taxation?

Mr. TREADWAY. There must be 50 per cent engaged in the business of the country. The point of this foreign-trader proposition entirely centers around the desire to take American capital and do a business, not making an investment, but do a business that will be beneficial to American interests in the development of trade.

Mr. HAUGEN. Investment in farms, for instance?

Mr. TREADWAY. Certainly. I do not know why it would not apply to farms.

Mr. RAKER. The legislation is for the purpose of encouraging Americans living in America to invest their money in foreign business and foreign trade?

Mr. TREADWAY. In competition with other countries.

Mr. RAKER. They can remain in the United States and still receive the benefit of the law?

Mr. TREADWAY. They can still remain citizens of the United States and carry on subsidiary agencies, or something of that nature, in foreign countries. There are many instances now where American capital is invested in foreign countries, and it is doing business at a great inconvenience and in unfair competition with other countries that have some such provision as we are establishing in this law. It was first taken up in the so-called Chinese act which was passed some months ago, and in a sense it liberalizes that.

Mr. Chairman, I find that my time is nearly up, and I will ask the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] if he will yield to me another half hour?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I yield to the gentleman 25 minutes more.

Mr. TREADWAY. Now, if I can proceed without interruption—

Mr. STEVENSON. Before the gentleman gets to his regular speech—

Mr. TREADWAY. I do not wish to be discourteous to the gentleman—

Mr. STEVENSON (continuing). I wanted to ask a question about what you were talking about as to appointing a commission to devise some method to get around the question of exempt securities. You started to state that and then were interrupted by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KING].

Mr. TREADWAY. I did not intend to say "get around," but I meant to overcome.

Mr. STEVENSON. You said that you wanted to get a quicker way than by amending the Constitution. If the committee has any plan, I would like to know what it is.

Mr. TREADWAY. I am glad the gentleman called my attention to that. We have the very best evidence that by reducing these surtaxes holders of these large incomes will be inclined to return higher incomes in their Federal reports, and thereby the Government will be directly benefited. At any rate, the effort will be strongly made to later on legislate so as to accomplish this purpose, and the report of the commission will be eagerly awaited. The subject is too big a one to hastily draft a title which would undoubtedly be taken to the Supreme Court and on the opinion of lawyers finally become inoperative.

The House has already been informed of detailed figures, both in the committee report and in speeches of my colleagues on the Ways and Means Committee. I will therefore not repeat them, and will devote the remainder of my remarks to the effect this bill has on the masses.

It is, of course, recognized that a large part of the tax receipts come from the big enterprises of the country and the large employers of labor. Indirectly these assessments are of interest to every citizen, but the direct interest is that which you and I personally are called upon to pay for the Government upkeep. We hear or read about and wonder at the large sums paid out for carrying on great enterprises, but what strikes particularly home is the tax paid by the individual citizen. But people having large incomes individually are in a very great minority. It is the average man who is interested in taxation.

I want very briefly to call attention to what this revenue bill does for Mr. Average Man, the man you meet on the street, the man you sit next to at the theater, the man whose children attend school with yours, the man who walks out of the house in the morning either with his lunch put up by his wife before starting or is a patron of the counter lunch room near the office or shop, the man who molds public opinion and is public opinion, in that he is the vast majority of the citizens of the United States. So let us examine this bill as Mr. Average Man is bound to do when the postman brings him an official envelope from the Treasury Department containing a blank to be filled out.

Let us start with the blank itself. Mr. Average Man is a small taxpayer and a loyal citizen, willing to pay his share of the governmental expense. He is not experienced in bookkeeping, and dislikes to pay for expert assistance. After having made out his tax bill for the last three or four years he has had periodical calls from other representatives of the Treasury Department. In very many instances he has been told that his first return was incorrect or his reports for the last five years must be reaudited. In fact, whether he was in business for himself or on a salary with moderate investments, he never knew when his account was closed with Uncle Sam, or when he was to receive another call from the department. Hereafter, under the new bill, no accounts, unless fraud appears, can be reopened after three years, nor can another examiner go over his accounts within one year from the time of the last examination. By agreement between himself and the commissioner a final accounting can also be made, so that Mr. Average Man can know exactly where he stands with Uncle Sam.

Owing to numerous cancellations of taxes, the return sheet of Mr. Average Man will be greatly simplified, and further provision is made for a board to give particular attention to an entire revision of the income-tax report with a view to increased simplicity. So Mr. Average Man need not hereafter be unduly worried or perplexed over making out his return which he has previously felt was not only beyond his skill but beyond that of the proverbial Philadelphia lawyer.

Let us say Mr. Average Man has an annual income of $4,000. He is somewhere between 30 and 40 years of age, has a wife and two children. His aged widowed mother also makes her home with him and is dependent on him for support. Under the present law he is exempt from taxation on $2,000, having three in his household dependent on him he is exempted for $200 additional for each one, or a total of $600, making the exemption he is allowed to deduct $2,600. He has, therefore, been taxed on $1,400 of his salary. This bill gives him an exemption of $2,500, with $400 for each dependent; or, in other words, with a family such as described, he will have an exemption of $3,700 and will only pay tax on $300 instead of on $1,400 under the present law.

Still our Democratic friends tell us that this bill does nothing for the average man.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes.

Mr. BARBOUR. How about an average man with an income of $5,100? How about him?

Mr. TREADWAY. This same thing applies up to $5,000.

Mr. BARBOUR. I refer to the income of a man with $5,100 or from $5,000 to $6,000 or $10,000.

I would like to have the gentleman explain to me, for my information, what the bill does for the average man between $5,000 and $10,000.

Mr. TREADWAY. I think the illustration I am about to give will cover the inquiry of the gentleman from California. If not, I shall be glad to go into further details. It applies completely up to $5,000.

When his day's work is over, Mr. Average Man is likely to go out with his family, possibly to stroll through the park, and on his way home will offer to treat the family to ice-cream cones or soda water. For the last three years he has been obliged to either carry a plentiful supply of coppers in his pocket or bother the store to make change, in that 1 or 2 cents for each cone or drink should be collected for Uncle Sam by the vendor—a bother both to Mr. Average Man and to the storekeeper. The prominence of a nickel and a dime as small currency will be restored, provided the storekeeper does not take undue advantage of Mr. Average Man. If he does, the next time he goes out with his family he is likely to patronize an opposition store. But money must be obtained and the policy of this bill is to collect a moderate and fair tax on the article the storekeeper is selling at a profit, rather than levying the disagreeable tax to which I have referred.

Now, Mr. Average Man's wife has said they need a few household remedies in the house, and on the way home he stops in another store.

Mr. ALMON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes.

Mr. ALMON. What has the gentleman to say in reference to the $10 tax?

Mr. TREADWAY. There will not be any $10 tax on the vendors of soft drinks.

Mr. ALMON. I wanted to see how the gentleman would defend that.

Mr. TREADWAY. If the gentleman will defer his curiosity until to-morrow he will see how that is done.

Mr. ALMON. I shall be pleased to get that information.

Mr. TREADWAY. As I was saying, Mr. Average Man's wife says a few household remedies will be needed. Every one of these practically is stamped to-day in the presence of Mr. Average Man and his wife, and the charge is made accordingly. We have changed this provision so that with practically the same amount of income to be derived we nevertheless will not interfere with the convenience or the purse of Mr. or Mrs. Average Man. The taxes will be turned to the manufacturer.

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes.

Mr. TINCHER. On the proprietary medicines there is no raise of tax. It is simply a change from a stamp tax to a manufacturer's tax?

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes.

Mr. TINCHER. This will apply to patent medicines and toilet articles and so-called luxuries?

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes. I agree with the gentleman. That is the point to which I am coming. In lieu of the stamps to which the gentleman refers in the inquiry the manufacturer under the new bill will be called on to pay a manufacturer's tax of 5 per cent. Let me incidentally say that on the whole I consider this one of the fairest taxes in the bill. If a few articles could be exempted from its provisions, as have tooth powder and tooth paste, I should favor such exemption; but there seems to be no way to describe these articles I have in mind separately.

There has been a tremendous propaganda on in the past week by the patent-medicine people in the country. I had no idea there were so many and different kinds of medicines and cures for man or beast as have been evidenced by the letters and telegrams I have received, as I suppose other Members have also. These patent-medicine companies claim we are taxing the poor man's medicine; but, as a matter of fact, we are transferring the tax from Mr. Average Man. At present, it is put on him with every purchase he makes, whereas under the bill we have here the tax will be placed on the people who, in many instances, are making enormous profits—the manufacturers themselves. That is the explanation.

Mr. TINCER. As to the proprietary articles which are not patent medicines, do you not think it would be fair to apply it to them?

Mr. TREADWAY. If the gentleman can prepare an amendment describing them and not get us into trouble with the Treasury Department in the administration of his amendment, I will be very glad to see it put in the bill.

Mr. BARBOUR. What will prevent the manufacturer from passing that tax on to the consumer?

Mr. TREADWAY. There is nothing to prevent his getting an additional charge for his proprietary medicine, provided the wholesaler will accept the additional price and provided again Mr. Average Man will buy his goods rather than the rival's goods. It is true that there is a possibility that it will be passed on, but it will not be the inconvenient stamp tax that is now collected.

Mr. CHANDLER of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes.

Mr. CHANDLER of Oklahoma. In connection with the proprietary and patent medicines that the gentleman is discussing, is it not a fact that this tax proposed in the bill must be absorbed somewhere between the time the article is manufactured and the time it reaches the consumer? Because if it is not absorbed the consumer must pay $1.05 for an article that is now sold for $1. They will not do it.

Mr. TREADWAY. Is it not evident that that tax can be absorbed when the dollar article in many instances can be bought in a department store for 59 cents?

Mr. CHANDLER of Oklahoma. There is no doubt about that. A great many manufacturers sell these dollar medicines for $4 and $4.50 a dozen.

Mr. TREADWAY. In other words, it is a dollar marked on the wrapper of the bottle, but the price is really what the storekeeper can charge the consumer.

During the day Mr. Average Man's wife wants to indulge in the pleasure ladies so greatly enjoy, namely, shopping. Sometimes she has had a little spare money not actually needed for the support of the household and has wanted to purchase some article perhaps of personal adornment, or of utility, but at what might be a luxurious price. Every article of apparel can be purchased, when this bill becomes law, without the payment of this additional tax which has been burdensome to both her and the storekeeper. There are certain articles, such as carpets, rugs, trunks and valises, umbrellas, parasols, and so forth, selling at above a certain price, which will no longer be added to Mrs. Average Man's bill, but which again will be transferred to the manufacturer, to pay in her behalf.

During the summer season, if living in the city, it may be that Mr. Average Man will wish to take his family on a vacation. To-day the purchase of a car ticket is taxed and the purchase of a seat, so as to ride in extra comfort, or a berth in which to sleep at night, is further taxed. These taxes are entirely removed and this extra expense, either for pleasure or business, no longer is a tax burden.

If he happens to be a traveling man, and is continually on the road as so many thousands of our good citizens are, and makes his sales on a commission basis, he is allowed to deduct his traveling and hotel expenses from his tax return. If he is a small manufacturer and wishes to send his product to market either by freight or express, he will no longer be taxed therefor. The freight and express tax is a direct source of expense on a great many household requirements and necessarily has added to the cost of living. This must, in justice, reduce the cost of many household needs of Mr. Average Man.

Perhaps Mr. Average Man may become fairly well to do and wishes to save in expectation of owning his own home. He has the opportunity under the new bill of investing his savings in a mutual building and loan association and up to $500 his income from this source will be exempted—another evidence of the interest this bill is showing in the home life of the man of moderate means.

If he, or any member of his family, wears glasses and has other than the commonest of mounting, he is now taxed on the total amount of the glass on account of the mounting, but under the new bill spectacles and eyeglasses will be exempt.

Should one of Mr. Average Man's children be a son, inclined to athletic sports, the reduction of 5 per cent tax should be reflected in the price he pays for athletic goods. Should his other child be a daughter, there is a reduction of the tax on her toothsome candy.

In short it will be found that the revenue bill proposed by the Ways and Means Committee carries out the Republican pledge not only to those engaged in the major industries and occupations but more particularly, and of much more importance, it reaches to the home life of Mr. Average Man.

Under its wise provisions the costs of his necessities should be reduced, the cost of the garments he and his family wear should be reduced, the cost of the recreations of himself and family should be reduced, the cost of his traveling, the cost of his shipment of supplies—all should be materially reduced by this bill.

The effects of this bill are far-reaching, entering every household in the country and leading Mr. Average Man to a realization that many of the discomforts as well as expenses of the Great War are becoming things of the past. Again the Republican Party keeps faith with all the people of whom Mr. Average Man is typical. [Applause.]

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BARBOUR. I have interrupted the gentleman from Massachusetts a few times in spite of his request that he be not interrupted, because he is the only speaker so far whom I have heard who has attempted to tell us what this bill actually does.

Mr. TREADWAY. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. BARBOUR. I am asking for information. Does the bill do anything directly for the man with an income of over $5,000 and up to the amount where he begins to get the benefit of the repeal of the surtaxes? We do something directly for the man who has heretofore paid heavy surtaxes, by removing the surtaxes over and above a certain amount; and for the man with an income under $5,000 we do something directly by giving him a $2,500 exemption instead of a $2,000 exemption; but is there any direct benefit to the man with an income of over $5,000 and up to the amount where a man gets the benefit of the repeal of the surtaxes? I refer to direct benefits.

Mr. TREADWAY. He gets the direct benefits, to which I have referred in my remarks, of the various repeals. The man with an income ranging between $5,000 and $32,000 gets the direct benefit that every citizen of the United States will get by the removal of oppressive taxation.

Mr. BARBOUR. I have referred to those benefits as indirect.

Mr. TREADWAY. I differ with the gentleman there. I claim that the bill before us is a direct benefit to every citizen of the United States.

Mr. BARBOUR. I have in mind the direct benefits which are conferred on men whose incomes are in other classes. I have not heard of any benefits conferred by the bill upon men whose incomes are in excess of $5,000, but not up to the point where they get the benefit of the repeal of the surtaxes.

Mr. TREADWAY. When we get above an income of $5,000 we are taking out the great masses of the people. Our Democratic friends have claimed that we do nothing for the masses. I claim just the reverse. There are very few of the masses to whom our friend from Arkansas [Mr. OLDFIELD] refers whose incomes amount to as much as $5,000. We give to those whose income is less than $5,000 the benefit of a $2,500 exemption instead of a $2,000 exemption. A man whose income is from $5,000 to $32,000 can perhaps take his fair share of taxation and still put a little money aside.

Mr. BARBOUR. Why would it not have been a good idea to have continued the additional $500 exemption clear up the line? Why would not that be fair and proper?

Mr. TREADWAY. I think it would be fair and proper if we could remove all of this taxation; but everyone must realize that the Government must continue to exist and perform its functions, and we are not going to let it run in debt in so doing. I stated that we must have money to meet current expenses. We must have money to establish a sinking fund, and we must pay the interest on our debt. Those are the three great things that this bill is providing for, and we are cutting others to the quick, and we are cutting reductions of taxation to the quick.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I think my friend on the right [Mr. BARBOUR] has slightly misunderstood the effect of the additional $500 exemption. It will extend to total incomes of $7,500, and where a man has three children it will go on further up. It applies to every married man whose net income is less than $5,000.

Mr. BARBOUR. Let me read the provision of the bill:

In the case of the head of a family or a married person living with husband or wife a personal exemption of $2,500, unless the net income is in excess of $5,000, in which case the personal exemption shall be $2,000.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes; unless the net income is in excess of $5,000.

Mr. COLLIER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I will yield to the gentleman from Mississippi if I have the time. I thought my time had expired.

Mr. COLLIER. Is it not a fact that incomes of from $5,000 to $65,000 get no direct benefits from this bill?

Mr. TREADWAY. It is not a fact. I take issue with my friend from Mississippi. I take just the reverse position.

Mr. COLLIER. The man with a million-dollar income gets the same benefits which the gentleman refers to as those received by the man with an income between $5,000 and $65,000 a year.

Mr. TREADWAY. I think the general good for all classes of incomes is thoroughly cared for in the bill.

Mr. COLLIER. The man with the income between $5,000 and $65,000 gets the same general good, then, and that only, that a man making an income of $1,000,000 a year gets.

Mr. TREADWAY. Oh, no; that is the same argument that we have been favored with before and has no merit.

Mr. COLLIER. I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin, Mr. JOHN M. NELSON. [Applause.]

Mr. JOHN M. NELSON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY], a member of the Ways and Means Committee, who has just taken his seat, says that this measure is of benefit to the "average man." In that I do not agree with him, but I do agree with him when he states that this measure is of "far-reaching importance." It is, indeed, of "far-reaching importance," not only to the individual Members of this House but to the great political parties and to the people, for it shifts the burden of taxation from those who have to those who have not.

Industrial conditions are now such that the pocket nerve of the "average man," of whom the gentleman spoke, is exceedingly sensitive. He is apt to be alert to find out how we vote on this tax measure. He is likely to listen with great care to the representatives of organized farmers, wageworkers, and consumers who appeared before the Ways and Means Committee protesting against the repeal of the excess-profits tax and the higher income surtaxes, and who now when they learn what this bill does to them are making their protest again by mail and by telegram. All the average men who make up the people of the country are going to listen, because their pocket nerves will be irritated by the heavy, pinching, painful pressure that this bill proposes to put upon them, and which will continue to irritate until this injustice shall be made right. I do not claim the gift of prophecy, but I shall venture to assert that upon this issue—Who shall pay Uncle Sam's taxes?—will be fought out the next and ensuing campaigns.

On this issue, as on every other, there are two sides, and people will take sides dependent upon their point of view. Those who live about the higher peaks of plutocracy will not look at this issue from the standpoint of those who look at it from poverty hill. Out West or down South or up North the Fordney bill will not meet with the enthusiastic favor that it receives in the financial district of the metropolis.

Looking at it from both sides, and especially from the inside, I frankly admit that I am prejudiced against the Fordney bill. I watched closely for months the selfish propaganda behind it; I have given careful study to its provisions, and I have tried earnestly to estimate its effects on the well-being of the American people. The effect of this special interest propaganda has been to increase my prejudice against this measure.

I find myself wholly out of sympathy with the thought expressed by the Fordney bill. To me it says unmistakably, let the people pay the taxes, let the people bear the load of debt brought on us by the war. I do not like the stock argument that the people pay the taxes anyway; that the big fellows add taxes to prices and thus pass them on to the consumer. Even if partly true, I detest it utterly, and far less do I accept the logic of these gentlemen that the law be made to fit the fact, to conform to established business custom. This is mere selfishness. It is the duty of Congress to prevent the shifting, not to legalize it.

I prefer a position based on justice and right. I would have the Fordney bill say, let those who are financially strong and powerful pay their full share of the tax burdens—the men who have the capital and the income. Let the profiteers pay the war debt out of their extortionate profits. Let the idle rich pay, the heirs that inherit vast swollen fortunes, growing from generation to generation. There is poetic justice in the excess-profits taxes and higher income surtaxes being paid by those who wring them out of the American people through monopolies and trusts. Instead of the weak bearing the burdens of the strong, let the strong help bear the burdens of the weak.

Mr. Chairman, I am a Republican. I supported the Republican ticket, National and State. I desire that my party shall do nothing to forfeit the confidence of the country. I value the friendship and respect of party leaders and of my party associates in the House. Being a Republican, I had hoped that I could vote for this bill, but I can not do so. Much as I respect the wishes of the Ways and Means Committee, highly as I respect Representatives who by virtue of their positions are party leaders, I am thinking also of a ways and means committee at home, to whom I am more responsible; and far more important to me than the good will of the party leaders of the House is the good will of the people of my district. Indeed, if I could set aside the question of right that is embodied in this bill, I feel strongly that by voting for it I would risk my political life to please party leaders. My experience has taught me that party leaders are often wrong and the party right. Party leaders are not the Republican Party. The men and women who believe in the principles of Abraham Lincoln, the arch foe of special privilege and oppressive power, the sovereign Republican voters of this land, are the Republican Party, and they are not for the Fordney bill.

Generally, my opposition is based on three fundamental objections. The first is the material fact that by its provisions Uncle Sam's taxes and war burdens, if the Fordney bill passes, will no longer be paid out of the excess profits of the big corporations nor out of the higher income surtaxes of the very rich but out of the earnings of the general public; that it shifts a large part of the burdens of taxation from the financial district of New York to the third district of Wisconsin; and by as much as it decreases the taxes of the captains of industry of Wall Street it increases the taxes of the farmer, merchant, and wageworker of the country.

But every material fact has a moral accompaniment. My opposition to this measure is therefore also based upon the moral fact that by thus transferring the burdens of Government from the stronger to the weaker this bill, in letter as in spirit, overrides the limitations of the moral law. The moral order, which should guide the conduct of nations and citizens, rests upon what is right, just, and equitable; but this bill, by substituting privilege, expediency, and force for these fundamental principles of an ordered moral universe, appears to me to pervert the very object, institution, and function of civil governments.

And, finally, speaking again generally, my opposition is strengthened greatly when I endeavor to forecast the harmful tendency, materially and morally, that all such legislation if not repealed inevitably must have on the life, liberty, and happiness of the common people of my country.

Let me illustrate these general objections in some detail.

Consider the material shifting of the tax burdens. Is it a verifiable fact that the burdens have been shifted? If so, the bill is directly in conflict with the guiding rule given us by President Harding in his opening address to Congress when he said, "The country does not expect and will not approve a shifting of burdens." The acid test of the bill then lies in the word "shifting."

There can be no "shifting" unless there has been some change in our fiscal policy. Therefore, the first endeavor should be to determine the exact scope of any change by contrasting the fiscal policy of the present law with that of the proposed law. This I shall now do by comparing these two fiscal policies in object, in plan, and in results.

A careful study of the law now on our statute books reveals the fact that its sole object was to provide the necessary funds to meet the expenses of war. There is no sign of its looking aside to any special interest.

But one does not study the Fordney bill long without noticing clearly that its purpose is to give business a special privilege. Indeed, the special object is so clearly manifest when we study the provisions of the bill that no one can seriously dispute the admitted fact that the bill was framed with the purpose in view of satisfying business. This object is variously stated and defended in the debate. It is spoken of as "taking the brake off business," "removing the handicap off business," "furnishing relief to business," "bringing about a revival of business activity." So, comparing the purposes of these fiscal policies, we note that while the present law looks to the demands of the country, the proposed law looks to the demands of business.

Is the object of a law a mere arbitrary matter? Had not Mr. FORDNEY and his committee the full power to do as they pleased? Were they limited by any higher law? Has right and wrong any real significance? It would sometimes seem that these terms have no real content in lawmaking and may be ignored at will. Perhaps so, but for the sake of old-fashioned ideals, it should be said that as the present law sought the common good, everybody accepted it in the main as fundamentally right, even its most selfish critics.

The need of the country was great. Its purpose was to provide the revenue to meet the emergency of war. It is true that the war is technically over, but it is equally true that the war debt is still with us. The needs of the country for huge revenues to meet the expenses brought on by the war is undeniable. It would seem that the Fordney bill should have kept this goal steadily in mind until the staggering problems of the war debt had been justly determined by the American people. But the Fordney bill saw fit to turn aside.

Whatever may be one's individual view of moral values, it is the common consent of mankind that Government must conform to moral principles, and looking at the objects of these two fiscal policies, comparing the one with the other ethically, even the man on the street whose moral sense may be debased and dull would unhesitatingly declare that only that law which looks to no special interest but steadily for the common good is fundamentally right.

Having considered the divergent objects of these two fiscal policies, I now desire to direct your attention to their contrasted plans. I shall divide the plans into two parts: (1) Their underlying principles; (2) the formulation of their content.

The plan underlying the existing law was admirably stated from a material point of view by former President Wilson. Speaking to Congress on the subject of Federal taxation, he said:

I take it for granted that its mainstays will henceforth be the income tax, the excess-profits tax, and the estate tax. All these can be adjusted to yield constant and adequate returns and yet not constitute a too grievous burden on the taxpayer.

Doubtless this fiscal policy, clearly outlined by the Executive, was devised by the heads of the revenue departments, who were advised by the experts of the Government and by the best economists of the country. The President used the word "henceforth." He spoke of the fact that these taxes could be "adjusted" so as to yield "constant and adequate returns." It was the formulation of a permanent tax policy, not only for the war but also to bear the burdens of the war debt.

Now, our inquiry should be, Does this policy rest upon sound economic principles? We will call as witnesses the severest critics of the excess-profits tax and the income surtaxes. We might call to the stand to testify their friends, but we will call as witnesses men who have had a part in the propaganda to destroy these taxes.

I will first quote Dr. Thomas E. Adams, the adviser of the Treasury Department. In a carefully prepared magazine article he says:

It is not by lack of thought or through design upon private enterprise that men like Otto Kahn and E. R. A. Seligman have declared that the general aim and theory of the excess-profits tax are sound.

I quote Dr. Adams, because—whether under pressure or not I do not know—he has lent his influence somewhat, although he still speaks of himself as a friend of these taxes, to the critics of the excess-profits tax and higher surtaxes.

Likewise Prof. Seligman admits, in a recent article, the soundness of the plan upon which the present fiscal policy is based. He says:

With all its shortcomings, however, income constitutes the best form that we can devise and explains why in the Great War the backbone of our fiscal system was composed of income and profits taxes.

Mr. Otto Kahn, of the great Wall Street banking house of Kuhn, Loeb & Co., admitted the virtue of these forms of taxes in these words:

I may mention that I am not opposed to the theory of an excess-profits tax. * * * On the contrary, I believe that theory has much to recommend it. * * * In theory it is a wholly just tax.

These admissions are made because the plan of the present law is invulnerable.

The Fordney bill, on the contrary, is virtually constructed without a plan. It is destructive rather than constructive. It destroys entirely the chief mainstay of the present policy, the excess-profits tax, and it breaks off from the top halfway down that other mainstay, the income tax. To offset these destructive acts, it increases 2½ per cent the normal tax on corporations. It gives the Secretary of the Treasury power to meet a deficit by issuing $500,000,000 of certificates of indebtedness. By assuming that the promises of heads of departments to reduce the expenses of government will be made good, it promises to greatly reduce the total sum of revenue to be raised. Various temporary makeshifts are also adopted.

The theory of the Fordney bill seems to rest wholly on expediency, favoritism, and force. It is force that is applied to drive it through the House under an ironclad rule and by an appeal to blind party spirit. It is expediency that removes from the existing law the excess-profits taxes and higher surtaxes. Favoritism grants the additional exemption of $500 to heads of families and $200 for dependent children. The Fordney bill looks ultimately toward an increase of consumption taxes. In fact, an organized propaganda seeks to put through what is known as a tax on sales. This has been prudently left for the Finance Committee of the Senate.

Contrasting the clean-cut plan embodied in the present fiscal policy, intended to be permanent, with the principle of expediency as the groundwork of the present law, seeking to satisfy temporary political exigencies, one is brought irresistibly to the conclusion that the plan of the present law is the work of a high degree of patriotic statesmanship, while that of the proposed law is the handiwork of temporizing partisans.

From the point of view of justice and equity there can be no principle more true than that men with great fortunes and excessive incomes should pay for the protection the Government gives them. These huge fortunes that mount up to hundreds of millions and these great incomes which reach into hundreds of per cent are derived from business protected at home by the police power and courts and abroad by the Army and Navy. The colossal debts of governments are due to the maintenance of armies and navies in the magnitude demanded by men of great financial means, and wars are brought upon nations by these international traders who demand the privilege to traffic with belligerents in munitions of war. Of all people, these men have no just complaint against a law that demands payment of taxes proportionate to protection of property.

Surely, too, it is no less a true and just principle that individuals and corporations should pay according to their financial strength, and the measure of their individual and corporate income is the exact moral measure of their taxpaying ability.

And may I add that it is a perversion of the principle of justice as well as equity, shocking to the moral sense of mankind, that these possessors of great properties and incomes use their power in politics and in Government to enact laws to lift their taxes and to shift them to the backs of the common people.

Contrasting the forms of taxation as formulated by the Treasury experts, the excess-profits tax was worked out in detail thus: An allowance of $3,000 of net income was made exempt from any Federal tax; also a further exemption of 8 per cent on invested capital; after that the rate was 20 per cent on excess profits up to 20 per cent of invested capital and 40 per cent of the net excess profits above 20 per cent of invested capital. A normal tax of 10 per cent was further levied on net income after deducting excess-profits taxes.

This whole excess-profits tax is abolished by the Fordney bill.

Taking up the income tax the experts of the Treasury Department worked out the following progressive rates: First an exemption of $1,000 for a single man, $2,000 for a married man, and $200 for a dependent child; then a tax of 4 per cent up to $4,000 of net income and 8 per cent above $4,000 of net income. This was called the normal income tax, but to get at the higher incomes certain upper taxes called surtaxes were levied. These income surtaxes increased as follows: One per cent to $6,000, then increasing 1 per cent for each $2,000 of net income up to $100,000. From $100,000 to $150,000 the rate is 52 per cent; from $150,000 to $200,000, 56 per cent; from $200,000 to $300,000, 60 per cent; from $300,000 to $500,000, 63 per cent; from $500,000 to $1,000,000, 64 per cent; and above $1,000,000, 65 per cent. Therefore, adding the highest surtax to the normal income tax, it would be 73 per cent on incomes above $1,000,000.

In the Fordney bill this tax is mutilated in that all surtaxes above 32 per cent are abolished, so that an income of $1,000,000 pays no more progressively than an income of $66,000.

Taking up the inheritance tax, we find no material change made.

As substitutes for these changes of rates in the two great tax-producing forms, numerous makeshifts were arbitrarily resorted to. Many of these minor forms of taxation were changed by committee amendments offered in the House under protest from the people, such as taxes on soft drinks, druggists, insurance companies, sporting goods, and the like. On the other hand, a further extension of the evil of exemption of tax-free securities was made as to Liberty bonds and as to capital employed by Americans in foreign trade.

Summing up our analysis, it is quite evident that the changes made are a marked deterioration of the skillful and exact formulation of rates of the existing law. Looking at the contents of the provisions of the Fordney bill as to its destructive effect on the present tax system, I find that it tears to pieces a fiscal policy that was built up in our law by the leadership of both parties, the spirit of partisanship banished, and all backs turned to special interests, its provisions elaborated into symmetrical forms by most skillful tax experts, and the whole law vitalized by unanimous votes of representatives of all parties, not only in the committees but also in both Chambers of Congress, patriotically breathing into it the undivided, uncorrupted, and unconquerable will of the noblest spirit of America.

The results of these two fiscal policies as to their productivity are also instructive. The fiscal policy of the present law has stood the test of experience. This is the fourth year of its trial. It has produced the revenue, the returns have been constant and adequate to meet the needs of the Government. According to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, the Government could depend upon the income and profits tax for three-quarters of the internal revenue. For the year 1920, 73.6 per cent of the taxes came from the income, excess profits, inheritance, and surtaxes. Only 26.4 per cent of the revenue came from consumption and other taxes. For the fiscal year 1921 the income and profits taxes alone yielded $3,225,790,653. In other words, the income and profits taxes produced 70 per cent and all the other taxes produced 30 per cent of the total receipts. This is a complete and decisive proof of the productivity of the excess-profits tax and the income tax in the present law.

The Fordney bill, on the other hand, conceding the productivity as claimed by its author, will not exceed $3,000,000,000. In view of the statement of President Harding that the average yearly expense will amount to $5,000,000,000, the Fordney bill is certain to fall short of one to two billion dollars in revenue. Doubtless the Finance Committee of the Senate will complete the program by an increase of revenue through a sales tax.

When I think of the future needs of the country, the immediate demands for meeting obligations due in 1923, amounting to over $7,500,000,000, and the expressed promise of a bonus to the soldiers of the World War, if not in words clearly in acts of Congress, it seems to me almost incomprehensible that the Committee on Ways and Means dared to tear to pieces the best producing branches of the fiscal policy—a tree which has not failed to bear constant and sufficient returns with which to meet the greatest needs, and to substitute for it a deformed trunk which can not be depended upon to produce anything near the necessities of the Government. But we shall see what the future brings forth. "By their fruits ye shall know them." This much we do know now, that the fruits of the present fiscal policy have been sufficient. The fruits of the proposed law, even the members of the committee admit, are veiled in the darkness of uncertainty.

Therefore, as a result of our study of the acid test, suggested by President Harding, a "shifting" which he said the people "did not expect" and "would not approve," and after contrasting the fiscal policy of the existing law with that of the Fordney bill in object, plan, and productivity, we conclude that the Fordney tax bill makes radical and far-reaching changes in the fiscal policy of the country. These changes are distinctly in favor of the individuals who have the largest incomes and in favor of the corporations that have the largest profits, at the expense of the general public. The 2½ per cent increase of the normal tax is an added burden to the smaller corporations. The losses in taxes from this repeal of the excess-profits tax and from the reduction of the high rates of the income taxes, when the times get better and the profits and incomes are again comparable to those of former years, will be from one to two billion dollars annually. Indeed, it is my opinion that the repeal of the excess-profits tax alone represents a shifting of burdens, even in ordinary times, of at least a billion dollars annually.

Having reached the conclusion that there has been a change of policy, has there been a shifting of the burden from one group to another group of citizens? In order to get a basis of judgment we naturally divide the taxpayers of the country into four groups in accordance with their capital and income. One of the largest but least productive groups would be the wage-workers. Another group, classified according to capital and income, would be the farmers. A third group, classified according to capital and income, would be the smaller merchants.

The last group, classified according to capital and income, would be the so-called captains of industry, the larger manufacturers, and other leaders in commerce, banking, trade, and industry.

From an examination of the tax returns, as well as from common observation, indeed, it is self-evident that neither wage-workers, farmers, nor the smaller merchants pay, to any considerable extent, either income, excess-profits, or estate taxes. In short, the statement has been made on reliable authority that 85 per cent of the population of our country do not pay taxes in these forms. In other words, that only 15 per cent of the people pay either estate, income, or excess-profits taxes. The conclusion is therefore inevitable that the fourth class, the men who have the large capital and receive the large incomes, pay these taxes. It also follows that to the extent that the tax burdens are lifted from the fourth class, they are shifted to the first, second, and third classes. Concretely, what is taken off the burden of the capitalists with the large incomes in the form of excess-profits or income taxes must be either suspended in the air or replaced by other forms of taxation spread out among the wage-workers, the farmers, the merchants, and whatever other groups there may be of the common people. From a study of these taxes it is perfectly self-evident that there has not only been a change in our fiscal policy but there has been an excessive shifting of burdens.

In conclusion, I desire to point out some of its probable effects on party success and national well-being.

I question the wisdom of party leadership that ventures thus to defy the soldiers of the World War, organized wage-workers, and farmers, and the progressive wing of the Republican Party.

Consider first how this bill will be received by the soldiers of the World War. By their representatives and in their letters they have made it clear that they desire justice. They were conscripted by law. They had to leave their positions, some of them lucrative, to accept a wage of $30 per month. I forbear to mention the risk they assumed of loss of limb and life, their suffering and their servitude. While they were compelled to sacrifice income, health, and life, these gentlemen, who are now receiving this relief from payment of their income and excess-profits taxes, were profiteering to the extent of at least $5,000,000,000. The House recognized the justice of this claim. A bill was passed granting the soldiers a bonus. Likewise the Finance Committee of the Senate recognized the justice of the claim, but the President of the United States, in view of the condition of the Treasury and the distress in the country, asked that this bill be referred back to the Finance Committee.

How will the soldiers feel about this reduction in taxes for the relief of these high-class profiteers? So far as the shifting of the burdens goes, it amounts to this, that if the soldier bonus is ever paid after the repeal of the excess-profits tax and surtaxes it will never be paid by the profiteers of the war. The Fordney bill prevents that possibility. The irony of it is that the soldiers will in large part pay for their own bonus.

How will this bill be received by organized farmers and wage-workers of the country? No amount of sugar coating in the way of small exemptions for married men and dependent children will make the bill more palatable to them. Every national farm and labor organization protested against the repeal of the excess-profits tax and a reduction of the surtaxes. Their organs published articles in condemnation of the propaganda of their repeal. The American Farm Bureau Federation in an appeal to the President denounced the Fordney bill in these words:

The new bill will raise the proportion to be collected out of the living wage and pay envelope from 26.4 per cent to over 50 per cent. In 1920 the percentage of tax raised by income and excess-profits taxes was 73.6 per cent of the total, and the amount raised by consumption and other taxes was 26.4 per cent. The burden of both the personal income tax and the excess-profits tax is on net income, and the repeal of one and cutting in two the other is one effort to shift the burdens.

Members of Congress know that the farmers and wage-workers of the country have made their protest, and these organized voters have a way of making their protest good.

Finally, consider the probable effect of this bill on the progressive wing of the Republican Party. Party leadership under Mr. Taft ran the party onto the rocks. Mr. Roosevelt bolted the Chicago convention and placed himself at the head of the Progressive Party. Mr. Taft lost every State but Rhode Island and Utah.

Roosevelt is dead; the progressive spirit still lives. Temporarily progressives worked with conservatives to defeat the League of Nations and the Wilson policies. The overwhelming Republican victory is not attributable to popular confidence in the virtues of Republican but in the disapproval of Democratic leaders. Party leaders fail utterly to understand the progressive protest, and they are as blind now as then in foresight. They fail to realize the conditions that prevail throughout the country. The Esch-Cummins law remains unrepealed, railroads are to receive from the Treasury a half billion dollars more, the Fordney tariff bill raises rates above the Aldrich-Payne bill, the Naval and Military Establishments are still maintained at a cost that approaches $1,000,000,000, the Fordney tax bill repeals the excess-profits taxes and the higher surtaxes.

Conservative leadership is purblind not to be warned by the past. Progressive Republicans stand for the rights of men, for fundamental principles of government, and are moved by humanitarian motives. The progressive movement was in substance a moral protest. Progressive leaders and progressive voters, men and women, demand progressive legislation. If conservative leadership shall continue to insist on steering the ship of state by the old special interest compass, it requires no gift of prophecy to foretell the future.

Mr. Chairman, in conclusion, I shall consider the harmful tendency materially and morally that this legislation, if not defeated, must inevitably have on the life, liberty, and happiness of the people of America. The wrong done to a large portion of the people by this bill I can best present in a pictorial way. This I have tried to do in a farm fable, a tale of three cows, entitled:

THE FORDNEY MILKING MACHINE.

Once I saw a great cow painted on the map of the United States. Her head was turned toward the West where the people fed her the richest fodder. Her well-filled bag hung over the financial district of New York, where captains of industry drained her daily, filling their capacious vaults with her golden product. This cow represents a fact and not a fiction.

For many, many years Uncle Sam had gotten his milk with much ease from an old good-natured country cow of a different breed. She was fed by the common people, East and West and North and South, producing what is known as "consumption" taxes; and she never failed to yield enough for his ordinary family use.

But when the war came Uncle Sam found it necessary to arrange for a third cow to supply his greatly increased needs. Her head was toward the East, not far from a place called Wall Street. The captains of industry were compelled by law to supply her regulated rations, and her bag was placed directly over the Treasury Department. When milked by Uncle Sam's skillful hired man, according to the printed rules and regulations which had to be carefully prescribed, this Wall Street cow—for so she is called—gave forth most bountifully. There were just three paps to her udder. One was called the excess-profits tax—a firm pressure and a rich, golden stream would flow abundantly. The second was called the income tax. It was also a steady and plentiful producer. The third source was called the inheritance tax. It was not used freely, but is a wonderful reservoir of reserve supply.

Now, this Wall Street cow has yielded for four years no less than three-fourths of all of Uncle Sam's needs. Then it so came to pass that through high freight and interest rates distress fell upon the people of the West, and the fodder for the first cow fell off considerably, which failure was gradually reflected, after an orgy of war profiteering, in the vaults of the captains of industry and of their friends in the East.

A cry for relief went up from Wall Street which was heard in the land, for Wall Street can make a big noise when pinched a little. Thereupon the big-hearted gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] hastened to afford prompt relief, with a new-fangled milking machine which he had hurriedly put together with the best help he could get, and thus certain curious adjustments were made to the teats of the tax-yielding bossies.

From the Wall Street heifer Mr. FORDNEY proceeds to cut out entirely the excess-profits pap and to "plug up" the source securely. He cuts off the income surtax pap more than one-half to greatly reduce its yield, and he does nothing to tap the immense reservoir of the inheritance supply.

But, alas, for the old faithful country bossie! Helped by many willing hands, Mr. FORDNEY leads her from daylight into darkness, for the genial gentleman from Michigan is a wizard at darkening cows or counsels with words. Soothing her with soft syllables, he feeds her tiny bits of sweetened "exemption" fodder, drugged with strong hypnotic dope, while experts tap a half dozen new sources of supply in her dried-up udder.

Now, what I am curious to see is what will happen to JOE FORDNEY's new-fangled milking machine, with its "shift" device, when the old country cow comes to and starts to kick? [Laughter and applause.]

What will be the magnitude of the shifting of burdens? This will vary as times are good or bad. For the calendar year the estimates are that the excess-profits tax entirely repealed by this bill and the income surtaxes greatly reduced would amount to $540,000,000. For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, former Chairman Good, of the Appropriations Committee, estimated the excess-profits tax alone at $1,700,000,000. This form of tax has been so highly productive that there is reason to believe that when the times get better the excess-profits tax and higher surtaxes would produce an amount far in excess of their present estimated yield. But whether the excess profits and higher income surtaxes would amount to $540,000,000, as estimated by Chairman FORDNEY, a sum equal to the total cost of Government for one year before the war, or whether they would equal the high figures of the years since the war, the repeal of these taxes means such a colossal shifting of burdens—likely above a thousand millions a year—a shifting that must inevitably speed up the present unequal distribution of the Nation's wealth alarmingly.

The repeal of these forms of taxes at this time must have a disastrous effect upon the country, because the Government needs average $5,000,000,000 a year. It has a twofold evil effect. While it relieves the one group it adds to the burdens of the other groups. No country can long endure the strain of such a grossly unjust law without its being rapidly changed into a condition of oligarchy on the one hand and servitude on the other. It is only a question of time, if this kind of legislation shall prevail, when there will be an end to any semblance of political democracy. For all history proves that with the concentration of a nation's wealth goes also its political power.

This concentration has been made possible by the corporation privilege. Forty years the people of America have struggled with the ever-growing power and attendant evils of that artificial creature. By a process of evolution it has assumed many forms until it now exists in every field save farming as a combination of corporations in some kind of trust or monopoly. Every student of American history knows that in substance free competition in industry, commerce, and trade is virtually at an end.

In some fields there seems to be a semblance of competition, but as a matter of fact the big fellows fix the price and woe be it to the little fellows if they do not behave. Concretely, this general situation is well illustrated by the Standard Oil, the meat packers, the coal operators, and the United States Steel Corporation.

Now, there is an exceedingly great virtue in the excess-profits tax and the higher income surtaxes that most people do not seem to see—a virtue that makes the big combinations of capital fear these taxes far more than any other law on the statute books. The Sherman antitrust law is not to be compared for a moment with the instruments of equalization. Dr. T. S. Adams, the tax expert of the Treasury Department, calls attention to this virtue of the excess-profits tax in these words:

It is in keeping with the best and latest theories of incidents and shifting. It aims at windfalls, the fruits of chance and luck, monopoly gains, war profits, and the like.

Prof. Henry C. Adams, the great tax expert and economist, who recently died, pointed out this great virtue of the excess-profits tax. On the subject of the taxing power of the Nation on price regulation he said:

We shall probably have more of such regulation as time goes on. * * * Under such circumstances, a tax upon excess profits makes the results of price regulation more equitable and more attractive. * * * We can not give to each industry the same opportunities of location, proximity to markets, good shipping facilities, good credit institutions, and good government; but we can make inequalities a little less by imposing a tax upon the differential product—upon excess profits. Conceivably the excess-profits tax may assist materially to promote that equality of opportunity which is necessary to good business as to good citizenship.

Leaders of the farm organizations are not entirely unaware of this immensely great virtue of the excess-profits tax. Mr. H. C. McKenzie of the Farm Bureau Association says:

While recognizing that the first consideration in any scheme of taxation is the raising of revenue, its collateral effects must not be lost sight of and, in so far as practicable, the taxes should be so levied as to tend to the distribution of wealth in the hands of the few.

There is nothing in our law to compare with these forms of taxation as instruments of equalization.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHN M. NELSON. If you will give me time?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. JOHN M. NELSON. Yield me as much time as the gentleman consumes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I will yield the gentleman two minutes. Does not the gentleman know that the experts have shown that the excess-profits tax bears more heavily on the small corporation than it does on the large corporation?

Mr. JOHN M. NELSON. I have read statements of that kind, but also statements by experts to the contrary. Indeed, Members have received printed tables prepared by Mr. Howard Clinton Beck, certified public accountant from the State of Michigan, which Treasury experts admit are correct, and these tables prove conclusively to any fair mind that the proposed repeal of the excess-profits tax in this bill bears most heavily on the smaller corporations and is clearly in favor of the large corporations. However, this was not the point to which I was drawing attention. I wish to point out the virtue of these excess-profits and progressive-income taxes as equalizers.

As equalizers what a wonderful pair of levers are the excess-profits and income taxes that the war placed in the hands of the American people. By adjusting these levers we could solve not only the evils of war profits, of inflation, but also of monopolies and trusts. The Sherman antitrust law must be operated by the Attorney General, and therefore it usually lies idle covered with the cobwebs and dust of the years, but many thousands of men are operating the tax laws and enforcing them to the penny. The Constitution gives undisputed power to the Government to enforce its tax laws. No packed juries, no high-priced attorneys, can interfere with their operation. By means of the excess-profits and income taxes we could solve the monopoly problem and the problem of the high cost of living, and by means of the inheritance tax we can solve the problem of the huge fortunes that are now a menace to our well-being. Shall we permit these levers to be torn out of our hands and wrecked by this Fordney bill? Heaven forbid!

Should these levers be wholly destroyed now, surely the people and their real leaders will make the issue in the next campaign the restoration of these forms of taxation. Upon this issue in the years to come depends real democracy in the American Republic. If the people fail here to hold these points of vantage that war has placed in their hands, the one great good that has come to them out of the war, it means that democracy in government will be ground between the upper and nether millstones of plutocracy and socialism. When plutocracy shall have run its course, then the masses may turn to socialism, and behold—Russia.

Bourbons behind the scenes who are insisting on this reactionary legislation be warned. Why are you not satisfied now with your huge war gains? Why are you not satisfied now with your monopoly profits? Why are you not satisfied now with your heaped-up wealth? Why will you thus insist on putting the Republican Party in jeopardy of disaster and arousing the fury of Demos? Will you never learn that you can not safely override the limitations of the moral law? How can you expect the people to respect your rights if you shirk your duties? How can you think that you can have justice if you constantly practice injustice? How can you hope to reap equity if you sow inequity? Be not deceived. There is a moral Governor in the universe, and He has said: "As ye sow, so shall ye also reap."

I appeal to the Representatives of the American people. If we can not defeat this reactionary legislation, we can at least make our protest by our votes. If we can not prevent its passage now, we can at least make our record right and appeal to the country. We must take our stand against the repeal of these taxes. If the great special interests shall drive us out of these tax intrenchments thrown up in the hour of the country's great peril brought on by these same sinister forces insisting upon the protection of their right to traffic in the materials of war with belligerent nations, if they shall now be permitted to keep intact the proceeds of their ungodly profiteering—unconscionable profits wrung out of the people during the stress of war—if we now permit them to shift the burdens of the war debt with its huge interest charges and with the increased costs of government, including the present Army and Navy programs, then we are, indeed, unworthy Representatives of the American people and deserve not their continued trust.

My appeal, I know, will go unheeded. Many Members have not given this bill the careful study it demands. They do not realize the significance of the excess-profits tax and the higher surtaxes, for, if they did, I am certain that this bill would be defeated by an overwhelming vote. But not realizing what they are doing, having yielded to the fierce spirit of partisanship, and being held in line by a caucus rule, this bill will pass. Be that as it may, it is not the end of the road. There is still left the appeal to the American people and to the God of our fathers. [Applause.]

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I shall spend no time in answering the gentleman who has just preceded me, because there is nothing to answer. He has piled denunciation on denunciation without a syllable of argument or a word of fact.

It is not necessary that I should attempt to answer him or discuss what he has said. I wish, however, to pay attention to some of the speeches on the other side which have preceded me.

The Democratic Party, or at least the Democratic leaders, have always been on the wrong side of every financial question, except when they have occasionally followed Republican plans. They are running true to form to-day. They are splendidly holding their own and keeping up their record.

The history of the Democratic Party has been a history of the support of financial blunders and of fantastic economical theories; it has been a history of prodigal and criminal waste in the last war. Now its leaders come here to-day reversing themselves upon every position they have heretofore taken, and expect the American people to listen to their denunciation of capital and wealth, unsupported by argument, and not based on any facts. Look at their record. No wonder the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER], who now sits smiling before me, did not care to listen to it yesterday. No wonder he said it had been repudiated by the American people. It has time and time again been repudiated by the American people. Away back when I was a boy I heard Democratic orators go out and appeal to the same spirit of prejudice, just as they are doing to-day, saying at that time, "Are you going to pay bondholders in gold when you paid the soldier in depreciated currency?"

I heard them then assert that it did not make any difference, even if we had contracted to pay the interest in gold, we ought not to so pay it; they urged that we break our contracts. Fortunately the good sense of the American people, the honesty inherent in them, never was ready for a moment to support that proposition, and they saw also that it was not good business; that it would not result in maintaining the credit of the American people in the long run; and we paid back every dollar of it. Then, a little later came on the greenback craze, when I heard gentlemen talking a great deal as did the gentleman who just preceded me, in denunciation of wealth and capitalists on every hand. It won in some localities. It won even in my own State; but, like all other Democratic financial theories, it was later abandoned, long ago, and they want to hear no more about it, like the rest of their theories in respect to finance. They said at that time that we must issue great quantities of greenbacks; that it was not necessary to redeem our currency in gold; and the plan would never be successful. Again, they asserted that it would be an injury to the poor man and for the benefit of the rich, but a few years demonstrated that it was for the interest of the whole country, and now nobody claims that the proposition of the Democratic Party was right.

Later on came another financial heresy, supported by the silver-tongued orator of the Platte, Mr. Bryan, who wanted to issue silver in free and unlimited quantities at the heaven-born ratio of 16 to 1. I do not know where my friend from Texas stood at that time, but from the line he took yesterday I would rather infer that he supported the proposition. Whether he did or not, he and his party long ago abandoned it. Now they want to forget it, just as they will what they are saying to-day. They will want to hear no more of what they say to-day when a few years shall have passed by and have shown the propriety, necessity, and the benefits for the people of the United States which are to be found in this bill.

Then came the Great War, when the versatile McAdoo, the Pooh-Bah of the last administration, demonstrated his great ability to get the Nation into debt. Now the burden of carrying this debt is cast upon the Republican Party. The repudiation of the Democratic Party arose from this prodigal waste of which you have heard so much, and it will be years before the Democratic Party hears the last of it. The Democratic Party saddled this enormous debt upon us and we must in some way pay it. That is the reason for this bill. In all of this history do you find one line, one record, one intimation that the Democratic Party through its leaders ought to be trusted to carry out any great financial program? No. Yet I had some hopes that upon this occasion there would be a different line of thought. I had some hopes that they would follow their great leaders. They have had them. Not all of the Democratic Party has been lacking in reason and judgment upon financial questions, but when their real prophet spoke it was as the voice of one crying in the wilderness among lost souls, and the leaders who took charge of the party were blind leaders, who led it into the ditch. During the last campaign, and even before in the last administration of President Wilson, when he had three different Secretaries of the Treasury, what was the policy of the Democratic Party? Every single Secretary of the Treasury recommended the repeal of the excess-profits tax. Every one gave sound and cogent reasons for its repeal. President Wilson himself joined in the recommendation for its repeal, and studying the reports made by his administration I had thought that possibly the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] and the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. OLDFIELD] might be willing to listen to reason. Instead, they seem to think they had found some place where they could appeal to the passion and prejudice of people against the rich and try to make out this bill is one in favor of great wealth and against the poor, as I shall show it is not.

Not only that, but the Democratic candidate went up and down throughout this broad land proclaiming everywhere that the excess-profits tax ought to be abolished. He gave his reasons for it, sound and cogent reasons. And where were the gentleman from Texas and the gentleman from Arkansas at that time? Were they objecting to this program?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I do not know where my friend from Alabama stood, but those gentlemen were heartily supporting it.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I rose merely to call the attention of the gentleman from Iowa to what happened to the candidate who advocated those things.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Oh, he was defeated, but it was on account of Democratic waste and extravagance, because there was no issue between the two parties in the last election as to the repeal of the excess-profits tax. If Mr. Cox had been elected, on Inauguration Day in the parade we would have seen my friend from Texas leading the untirred from the Lone Star State right down the Avenue shouting, "Hurrah for Cox and down with the excess-profits tax." [Laughter.] But now in some way he has changed his views. We heard nothing of that kind during the campaign. We heard no claim that the repeal of the excess-profits tax would necessarily aggrandize the rich and impoverish the poor; nothing of the kind. He waited until the Republican Party brought forward this bill, and then, with the usual perversity of the Democratic leadership, with that fatal facility they have for getting in the wrong, notwithstanding every great financial leader they have on their side has recommended the repeal of the excess-profits tax and the repeal of these high surtaxes, he comes in here and denounces the bill. But that is not all.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. SEARS. The gentleman knows that during the last session of Congress, for the past two years, the Republican Party had a clear majority of about 38 in the House.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I think so.

Mr. SEARS. And a majority in the Senate.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. SEARS. Why was not some of this extravagance corrected and some of these wrongs righted before now?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. We have been doing it right along and in this bill we are going to take off over $700,000,000 of taxes.

Mr. COCKRAN. Off whom?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I shall tell the gentleman from whom we take it.

Mr. COCKRAN. That will be very valuable.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Now, is there anything else my friend wishes?

Mr. COCKRAN. No; we want this.

Mr. SEARS. Is it not a fact that practically during the war the Democrats and the Republicans were equal numerically and that for months you could have elected a Republican Speaker if you had wanted to?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. We tried very hard to elect a Republican Speaker but we failed.

Mr. SEARS. You did not try at all.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I tried the best I knew how.

Mr. SEARS. I do not recall the exact figures, but if you will take the figures you will find the statement is correct.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The trouble was, unfortunately, that we did not have enough votes, and I am sorry my Democratic friends did not come to our support.

Mr. COCKRAN. Now, will the gentleman give the information as to whom this $750,000,000 has been remitted?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I am coming to that. I am not to be diverted from my line of argument.

Mr. SEARS. The gentleman says he tried so hard. Does the gentleman recall that at the close of a night session Mr. Weaver, a Democrat from North Carolina, was unseated and a Republican was seated by a square party vote, showing you could elect a Speaker, that you were in a majority?

Mr. KING. What has that got to do with this bill?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Now, one thing further. I supposed that possibly there might be a little stability in the Democratic Party; just a little. I was not expecting very much, because I knew I had no reason, but I did expect that explicit declarations in a party platform would be regarded as having some little influence if no binding force or effect. Yet the Democratic platform in the last convention explicitly referred to the recommendation of the two Secretaries of the Treasury that had been made in reference to the excess-profits tax and the surtaxes and denounced the Republicans because they did not follow these recommendations and repeal them. During the last campaign they were in the position of denouncing the Republicans because we did not repeal these taxes, but now they come in here and complain because we have repealed them and substituted some more sensible taxes in their places.

Mr. WARD of North Carolina. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I will.

Mr. WARD of North Carolina. The gentleman indicated awhile ago that he would show just from whom you have deducted this $750,000,000, and the gentleman got away from it, I expect inadvertently. Will the gentleman now come back to that question? We are waiting for an answer.

Mr. COCKRAN. With considerable interest.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. This bill is a great bill. As I have said, in the second year it will reduce the taxes of the American people over $700,000,000. It changes the corporation tax from $450,000,000, by the way of excess-profits tax, to something over $267,000,000 by direct corporation tax. Now, this is one of the things, I take it, that my friend from New York is going to complain of and contend, as the gentleman from Arkansas did a short time ago, that this shifting from the excess-profits tax to a direct flat tax was going to hurt the small corporation. I want to give you a little bit of authority on that subject. The gentleman from Arkansas said if you had these small corporations make a small profit that you could figure out they would pay more under this plan, and if you had a big corporation making great profits that you could figure out that they would pay less under this plan. Now, I want to assert, without any fear of contradiction, that every actuary or expert who has tabulated the returns has shown that it is the small corporations that are making the big excess profits and the small corporations that have suffered the most from the excess-profits tax and been compelled to pay the most, while the big corporations, as a rule, have paid the small tax. I hold in my hand a part of the hearings before our committee, and I call attention to a part which I think never was read before the committee and therefore has escaped attention to a large extent. The gentleman who preceded me, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. J. M. NELSON], quoted with approval some statements from Dr. Adams. Here in this book entitled "Hearings on the Revenue Act, 1918, part 1," on pages 41 and 42, are two tables prepared by Dr. Adams. I propose to insert those tables in the RECORD. They have been verified by Treasury experts and ordered printed by a committee that then had a Democratic majority. They can not be contradicted nor changed. They show that the small corporations are the ones that make the big profits, and the big corporations those that make the small profits.

There is not one small corporation in twenty but what makes over 5 per cent, while a very large percentage—my recollection is something like 80 per cent—of the big corporations do not make over that sum. There are very few big corporations going into the high rates—that run into the rates that gentlemen have supposed. Let me read you what Dr. Adams says here and what these figures show in reference to these tables:

The table clearly established the fact that the excess-profits tax does bear with much greater burden upon small corporations than upon large corporations. Of the corporations here reported which have no excess-profits tax to pay (column 1), there are only 10 having less than $20,000 capital and there are 16 having more than $5,000,000 capital. In the highest group, where the excess-profits tax exceeds 50 per cent of the net income, we find 60 corporations having invested capital of less than $20,000 and not one single corporation having a capital of more than $5,000,000.

Mr. WARD of North Carolina. I want to ask the gentleman a question without any politics in it.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. In just a moment, until I have finished this, and I will yield to my friend. It says:

And not one single corporation having a capital of over $5,000,000.

Gentlemen imagine these great corporations were paying high taxes under the excess-profits tax. In this table, which was made in 1918, there was not a single one that ran up to those high rates of 50 per cent. To continue reading from Dr.

Adams—and I may say that he informed me to-day that the situation was still the same:

The smaller corporations are very inadequately represented in the columns which carry light taxes and very much overrepresented in the columns carrying the heavy taxes.

I shall print these tables as an appendix to my remarks. The real fact is, that by this shifting of the excess-profit tax over into a flat tax on corporation incomes we will benefit nineteen out of twenty of the small corporations and not one out of twenty of the big corporations. And that is just exactly what the Treasury figures will show. And yet the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. OLDFIELD] gets up and says that if you have small corporations that only pay a certain amount named in his table their taxes would be increased. Why, you would if you had such corporations, but you have not got them as you have the large corporations. The figures have no foundation in fact.

Now, I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. WARD of North Carolina. I wanted to ask you if you did not think that the only possible explanation of the fact—assuming for this question that it is a fact—the little corporation made a larger income than the bigger—is the enormous volume of watered stock ordinarily carried by the big one? I do not intend to put politics in that.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. There is no politics in that. That is a perfectly fair question.

Mr. WARD of North Carolina. Do you not think it is a fact?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I think it is true to a very considerable extent, but it does not alter the fact that the big corporations do not as a rule pay the excess-profits tax, while the contrary is true as to the small corporations. It only emphasizes the fact that the bill helps the small corporation, as a rule, and increases the tax on the big corporation by the shifting of this tax. That is the fact, as shown by the figures, and there is no escape from them.

They say you have taken off the high surtaxes on the multi-millionaires. Now, there are various reasons given for that, but there is one reason that is all sufficient, an ample reason, that is given by the Treasury Department, that has been given by the Democratic Secretaries of the Treasury as well as Republican Secretaries of the Treasury—is that the returns from the taxes are gradually diminishing, until they are certain soon to reach nothing whatever.

What is the use of continuing this tax if it is not going to yield anything? What are you taking off of people who can take it off themselves if they wish to do so by putting their money in tax-exempt securities? And will they not take it off when they can get as good a yield from a 6 per cent nontaxable security as they can get from one outside that will pay 16 per cent? Are they going to continue to pay this tax when they can escape legitimately?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Does not the gentleman think there is a good deal of force in the suggestion that the reduction in the amount derived from the surtaxes may be due to the general business depression? You take the small man who is not interested in high surtaxes and his business is depressed, and his income is greatly decreased. How can you altogether attribute the decrease in the total of this higher income tax to the cause that you assign?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. For this reason, I will say to the gentleman: because every year these taxes have continued to decline. They declined when profits were mounting as well as when profits were ceasing. The gentleman has the situation transposed. They did not decline so fast while profits were mounting, because it would pay people to keep their securities there.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I think it has been in correspondence with the general business depression.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. That is true in reference to the general income tax, but not in this matter.

Mr. LONGWORTH. May I suggest another element, namely, that the volume of tax-exempt securities has increased over $5,000,000,000 in the last few years.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman from Ohio suggests a very important point. We now have a sum, variously estimated $16,000,000,000 to $18,000,000,000 of tax-exempt securities, and there is no way on earth we can get away from it.

Mr. FEISS. I wanted to state that before the war it was not over $3,000,000,000.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman is right.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. The logic of your argument now is to abolish the income tax because of the multiplication of tax-exempt securities. Why do you not treat the matter in a different way—on the basis of some of the suggestions that have been made by experts—in order to insure the payment of income tax by taking into consideration in framing your law the amount of money that a man has invested in tax-exempt securities? Your experts, Dr. Adams and others, have, I believe, made suggestions along that line.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Not Dr. Adams. That last suggestion in that line was made by the former Secretary of the Treasury. I am absolutely confident that in the light of recent decisions of the Supreme Court he would not recommend it now. I introduced a bill along that line. I would like to reach these tax-exempt securities. They are a great evil. They are a festering sore in our political system, and if there was some way to get rid of them I would like to do it. I introduced a bill, as I said, and had it before the committee and tried to get it through, but they objected on constitutional grounds, and since then, under the recent decisions of the Supreme Court, I do not think that the bill would have a chance to be sustained.

Mr. FORDNEY. Let me say to the gentleman in answer to the question presented a few minutes ago that the fiscal year 1920 was one of the most prosperous years the people of this country ever enjoyed, and yet the taxes paid by people whose incomes were $300,000 or more was 62 per cent less than the taxes paid by those same people in the year 1918.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes. It has been falling off even faster of late. Now I yield to my friend from Illinois.

Mr. MCKENZIE. Suppose there are two corporations incorporated at the same amount, say $75,000 each, and one of them by careful management, by hard work and industry, makes a good profit, while the other, by slovenly management and inattention and carelessness, does not make any profit to speak of, or does not make any profit reaching 8 per cent. Under the excess-profits tax provision you impose a tax on the energy, carefulness, and thriftiness of one corporation, and the other one escapes. In that respect, is not the excess-profits tax vicious?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman is quite correct. But it states only one among many important objections to the excess-profits tax, although this perhaps is the leading objection. The harder a man works, the more attention he gives to his business, the more he is taxed.

Mr. MCKENZIE. That applies to two people engaged in the same business.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman is again correct.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, may I have 15 minutes more?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes; I yield to the gentleman 15 minutes more.

Mr. LAYTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes; I yield to my friend from Delaware.

Mr. LAYTON. Is not the diminution in the amount of money in the shape of taxes from excess profits and surtax accounted for by the provision in the law which allows any one of these men to give for religious or educational purposes any amount of money they see fit and have that amount deducted from their taxable income?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. That is true, but it is of a rather small amount.

Mr. LAYTON. It is not a small amount in my State.

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. KING. I have not heard anybody discuss certain provisions of the bill in the last two days. I want some information on them so that I can vote for it.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. What information does the gentleman want?

Mr. KING. I would like to know why the committee decided to exempt debentures, Edge debentures or debentures issued by banks and factories built up in England and other places, in Armenia, for instance, where labor is cheap. Why do you exempt them? If you can explain that I may be able to vote for the bill. Were any experts called in to give information on that matter?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Is the gentleman talking about the provision for foreign traders?

Mr. KING. Yes. I have not heard anybody on the committee speak of that. It seems to me as if somebody on the outside had dragged that into the bill and that the committee has not considered it. Has the committee had the advice of experts in regard to it?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. So far as I am concerned I do not care whether the foreign traders' provision stays in the bill or not. The committee will present to-morrow an amendment that will altogether change the provision. It will provide that nobody shall be considered a foreign trader unless at least 50 per cent of his income is derived from a business carried on abroad.

Mr. KING. May not that tend to drive American capital out of the country?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I do not think so. So far as the foreign trader provision is concerned, in my judgment, it is not of enough importance to discuss it. I do not care whether it is in the bill or not.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. If an American places his investments in a foreign country, he is taxed over there, is he not?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes. He pays a great deal more tax over there than he does here.

But I want to say a word about excess-profits taxes and the surtax. It is not only that the excess-profits tax puts a premium upon inefficiency and waste and inattention to business, but further than that, neither this committee nor any other body can ever frame an excess-profits tax that will work out fairly, not merely between corporations and individuals, but fairly between corporations engaged in the same business. Originally the excess-profits tax was framed—and I helped to prepare it—in such a way that it took in not only corporations but individuals and partnerships, and in a large number of cases we found we would be penalizing partnerships, and we changed the law. After we had exempted partnerships we were surprised when we were shown certain people would be paying as a partnership $600,000 more than they would as a corporation. Naturally, they wanted to know if that was fair. The real fact about it, gentlemen, is that at present, although you do not know it, we are taxing individuals and copartnerships in business by reason of the surtaxes. Those are the parties that are suffering, not the little corporations, because they run up into the surtax, and we can not equalize them by any excess-profits tax. The only thing we can do is to put this tax on corporate incomes, just as we have done.

Now, another thing with reference to this repeal of the surtax: If we were going to get this money it would be a different thing. I think I have shown by the statements of the former Secretary of the Treasury and of the present Secretary of the Treasury, and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY], I think, has shown how rapidly these returns on the higher incomes were going down to nothing. Soon you will get nothing from them. What will happen under the plan of this bill instead of putting their money into tax-exempt securities they will put it into business, and we will get more money out of these millionaires than we get now, and that is the great justification for the repeal of these taxes.

Now, let us come to some other meritorious features of this bill. Over 600,000 people will be benefited by the raise in the exemptions we have made, which do not benefit the men in the higher brackets. Oh, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] came here, and although he did not have tears in his eyes, because he could hardly squeeze them out, yet with a sob in his voice he said we were doing nothing for the poor man. Who is this "poor man" that we are not doing anything for? Why, he gets a $2,500 exemption up to $5,000 net income, and the man who has a net income of $5,000 is not a poor man. This does not include the allowance for children and dependents, and if he has three children you can add $400 apiece more under this bill. He then has an income of over $6,200, this "poor man" for whom the gentleman from Texas was trying to work up your sympathies yesterday. Do you think that a man who has an income above this amount is so poor that he ought to pay no income taxes? Yet it is not true that we have done nothing for him. He helped pay the transportation taxes, the insurance taxes, the so-called luxury taxes, and others that we have repealed.

Gentlemen on the other side talk about this bill taking the taxes off of wealth and putting it on the poor man. The statement is false. On the contrary, the bill increases no taxes upon anything or anybody. Under this bill alone among the civilized nations of the world we impose no taxes upon the necessities of life. The really poor man, who indulges in no luxuries, pays no taxes to the Federal Government.

Mr. BARBOUR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes; I will yield.

Mr. BARBOUR. Will the gentleman explain a little more fully the statement he has just made that if a man has an income of $6,200 he gets the benefit of the $2,500 exemption?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The term "net income" in the income tax law means the income after taking out losses and other deductions authorized by the law. The term "net income" includes the income after the deductions are taken out. That is about all I have time to say.

Mr. BARBOUR. I am looking for information in this matter.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. That is the situation.

Mr. SEARS. Will the gentleman from Iowa yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. SEARS. What about the young lady stenographer working for $1,500 a year. What is done for her?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Nothing except to take the taxes off some of her clothing and reduce some of her general expenses, reduce her car fare and such things. We have done a whole lot of things, if you will consider them all. The young lady is not suffering.

Mr. SEARS. The gentleman knows there is no difference between this bill and the other bill as far as the young lady stenographer working for $1,500 a year is concerned. There is no exemption.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. There is an exemption of $1,000 in the income tax. Under this bill she will pay an insignificant and petty sum, just as she had to before, and she is better able to pay it than a lot of married men.

Now, my friend from Texas [Mr. GARNER] said this bill would not benefit the average Member of Congress. It will not, because most of them will just about be outside the limit, so that they can not get in under it. I would have been glad, like he would, I suppose, to have had the exemption extended. But there is this about it: The Member of Congress is in a worse position than anybody else. He has got all these expenses here over and above his ordinary expenses that he can not deduct, but which everybody else can deduct. So it is not fair to compare the situation of the average Member of Congress with the ordinary person, who has none of these expenses to pay.

This bill takes off the transportation tax, one of the greatest burdens there was upon the business of the country—a freight tax that the farmer paid both going and coming, a tax which by reason of increase in the rates, when you remember that the farmer has to pay it both ways, is now equivalent to something like 15 per cent above what the old rates were that were in force before the war. This bill abolishes the nuisance taxes, which were paid by everybody. It takes the tax off clothing. It gives the farmer an opportunity to exchange his land for another piece of land without paying any tax whatever if the two pieces are of the same value. It reduces the tax on capital sales so that people can make sales now and the Government will get more and more business will be done. It has redeemed the pledge of the Republican Party to simplify the taxes which are still imposed. These changes in the administrative provisions which the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] talks about, that he said we had made in the interest of the taxpayer, are in the interest of the taxpayer in this way, because they simplify the taxes as far as it is possible to do so. Further, we have provided a board to prepare a simplified return, if that can be done.

The raise in the exemptions and the increased allowance to dependents will benefit 2,000,000 taxpayers to the extent of $70,000,000. The tax on insurance premiums, so annoying to the companies and exasperating to the policyholder, is repealed. We have even repealed the tax on proprietary articles, so that it can no longer be said that there is a tax on the "poor man's medicines." In the next calendar year we reduce the taxes over $400,000,000, now paid mostly by people of small means, as I am not including the reduction in the surtaxes and the corporation taxes.

Gentlemen, the Republican Party pledged itself to simplify the taxes, to reduce the taxes, to place them upon a more equitable basis, to place them where the Government would get a better return and the burdens upon the taxpayer would be lessened, and we have done it all. We will get more out of these big taxpayers in the long run than we do now by the reduction of the surtaxes, if the Treasury experts are correct on this subject, and I know of no better authority.

Now, Mr. Chairman, why does the Democratic Party continue to appeal, as it has for over half a century, to the prejudices and passions of the multitude? Why do Democratic Members now, why will Democratic orators in future, rave against those who have worked, saved, and accumulated when discussing this bill? It can only be because they have not the facts nor argument to support their position. The Republican Party has never in the past proposed any financial policy that has not reverted to the benefit of the whole Nation, rich and poor alike, and this bill is another example of that fact. [Applause.]

ANALYSIS OF PRECEDING TABLE.

These statistics represent 7,899 corporations, covering more than 100 subdivisions of industry, mostly in the general classes of manufacturing, mercantile, and mining industries, selected at random, as they were used in the regular work of deciding appeals under sections 210 and 205 of the excess-profits tax law. These are all normal cases in which no appeal was taken. They are believed to make a very representative showing.

All the corporations are classified according to size measured by invested capital. They are then tabulated in columns 1, 2, 3, etc., according to the percentage of net income to invested capital. Corporations included in column 1 made less than 7 per cent and consequently had no tax to pay. Corporations included in column 5 earned from 20 to 25 per cent on their invested capital in the taxable year; and similarly corporations included in column 15 earned more than 125 per cent upon their invested capital in the taxable year.

Inasmuch as the rate of taxation depends primarily upon the rate of profits, the taxes rise gradually as we move up from column 1 to column 15. Corporations entered in column 1 have no tax at all to pay because they earned less than 7 per cent. Corporations entered in column 5 would pay the taxes which correspond with a rate of earning varying between 20 and 25 per cent; in such cases the tax will vary from 12.25 per cent of the net income to 18.4 per cent of the net income. Corporations entered in column 15 will in all cases pay more than 50 per cent of their net income as excess-profits tax.

The table clearly establishes the fact that the excess-profits tax does bear with much greater burden upon small corporations than upon large corporations. Of the corporations here reported which have no excess-profits tax to pay (column 1) there are only 10 having less than $20,000 capital, and there are 16 having more than $5,000,000 capital. In the highest group where the excess-profits tax exceeds 50 per cent of the net income we find 60 corporations having invested capital of less than $20,000, and not one single corporation having a capital of more than $5,000,000. The smaller corporations are very inadequately represented in the columns which carry light taxes; they are very much overrepresented in the columns carrying heavy taxes. The general import of the figures is well expressed by the following summary conclusions:

Corporations having invested capital of—	Ratio of net income to invested capital.

Mr. COLLIER. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. QUIN].

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] has certainly told us something new to-day. He has announced that this bill is for the benefit of the poor people and against the interests of the rich people, and he has attempted by suggestions that he called arguments to prove that. He also announced that the Republican Party in its last campaign made certain definite promises to the American people, and by what he calls arguments he attempted to demonstrate that the Grand Old Party had carried out that pledge in bringing this measure before this Congress. To my mind, if my friend from Iowa is sincere in his statement, he has to an amazing degree fooled himself. [Applause.] If any man with ordinary horse sense who can read and write will analyze this bill he will find that it proposes to take the burden of taxation off the rich and powerful and to shift it to the shoulders of the masses of the American people. There is no escape from that conclusion when you come to a logical analysis of this bill. I ask the gentleman from Iowa if this bill does not take the burden of taxation as far as it can from those who already have and make big money? And if it does that, where does it place that burden? You are bound to raise and you are raising at least $3,000,000,000 by this bill. When you take off the burden from these great fortunes of the United States, where are you going to get that vast sum of taxes?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Does the gentleman want an answer?

Mr. QUIN. If the gentleman will yield to me more time he may answer, but I have only 10 minutes. You announced to this House that you were doing a just thing when you took off the surtaxes. Can you tell us why it is honest to the American people to take off the surtaxes from great fortunes and great incomes and at the same time add to the taxes to be paid by people in moderate circumstances and all poor people? If the gentleman wanted to do as he said he was doing, why did he not add to the burdens on the rich? Why did he not increase the inheritance taxes paid by those who inherit hundreds of thousands and millions of dollars from legally favored parents or relatives?

If you propose to do what you said the Republican Party pledged itself to do, why did you put in the bill the statement and declaration that the surtaxes are to be repealed. If you carry out that pledge, why is it under the terms of this bill that you exempt from taxation the money that is invested in foreign enterprises by international banking that proposes to put with their American capital in Europe and Asia, operating with pauper labor in competition with American labor and capital invested on American soil that must pay taxes?

You can not come with such sophistry as that, for billions of dollars will be invested in these foreign corporations, and you take the enterprises out of the United States into foreign countries, where they are going to get their labor for almost nothing, and you exempt these international corporations from paying taxes to the American Government. Do you call that honest to the hundred millions of American people? Oh, gentlemen, it stinks! [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.] Then, when you further propose under the bill to eliminate from taxation by taking the excess-profit tax off these great corporate enterprises of the Republic, who is going to pay it? You know that you ultimately intend to shift that onto the backs and into the stomachs of the poor people of the United States. [Applause on the Democratic side.] You know by this measure you are adding to the burdens of the plain people. The gentleman from Iowa pretends that the increase of $500 in amount of exempt incomes is relieving that class from all taxes. He knows all of that class and all the farmers and laboring people were taxed tenfold when the tariff bill passed this House by Republican votes a few weeks ago. You put in the tariff bill the instrumentality by which every poor man and every poor woman in the United States is bound to pay tribute to the powerful and rich corporations of this Republic. You know when you make a statement that the American people accepted the pledges you made them last fall that you cut off their trousers at the knees in the tariff bill, but in this tax bill you are taking their breeches. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.] Then you say the bill is in behalf of the poor people, the people in moderate circumstances, and against the interests of the great fortune holders of the Republic. The bill stops the surtax on big incomes. Can the gentleman from Iowa believe his own words? He said the reason that they took off the surtaxes was that these fellows who are bringing in the powerful incomes are putting their money into tax-free securities, and he wants to exempt them from paying taxes to the Federal Government to keep them from putting their money into county, State, and municipal bonds. Who can believe such sophistry as that?

I know it is not pleasant to tax anyone. I am sorry that it is necessary for the American Government to reach out with its strong arm to tax heavily even the rich, but this great debt which the Government owes must be paid. These bonds that the Government has issued must be redeemed and the interest must be paid. I believe the American Government ought to pay every dollar of these bonds at their face value. I do not believe when we called on the people from patriotic motives to invest their little savings, and some even borrowed the money to do it, in running the bonds down to 85 cents on the dollar and making the poor fellow take 85 cents. The Government ought to stand behind the citizen so that he does not lose 15 cents on the dollar invested with the Government. Here under this bill you are proposing that the man who holds in a small way the credit of this Government shall take the burden of paying these taxes. You are proposing that iniquity under this scheme that you call a bill for taxation. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. COLLIER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to know how the division of time stands.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan has used 236 minutes and the gentleman from Texas has used 157 minutes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HAWLEY].

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, after a few preliminary remarks it is my intention to comment on the administrative features of the bill, to show you how they affect the taxpayer in relieving him from the burdens of taxation, how they simplify the return, and prevent evasions in the collection of taxes. After that, if I have the time, I expect to comment briefly on the excess profit and surtax provisions of the bill.

In 1914 we with the rest of the world were going about our ordinary businesses not contemplating the disruption of normal conditions soon to occur. With the outbreak of the war and our entrance into it our industries were gradually diverted from their usual channels. Billions of dollars were used for the destructive purposes of war, and so destroyed. At the end of the war we found ourselves burdened with a great debt and the greater burden of disorganized industry, with business men uncertain as to what they should do, with what confidence they could proceed, and where the necessary capital for reorganization of the industry could be obtained. Some legislation has been enacted by Congress for the purpose of relieving the situation, but in the long run the business of the country must grow upon the profits and the development of business. No safe and sound rule other than that can be found.

The Republican members of the Committee on Ways and Means considered the question from this angle: What can we do and what ought we to do to again get industry back to the same condition, with the same outlook, that it had in 1914? The conditions of industry have been made much harder. There has been an increase in the wage schedules which will tend to be permanent. Greater burdens have been placed upon industry.

The Ways and Means Committee, when it began to study this question, asked first of all this, What is the least possible amount that the Government can get along with for the years 1922, 1923, and for subsequent years? There had been submitted to us an estimate for more than four and one-half billions of dollars as required for the ordinary expenditures of the Government. We said that no such sum can be expended, that the people of the country can not stand it, that it is a sum too large to be provided for the annual expenditures of the Government in any event, and we asked the spending departments to make reestimates of their expenditures. When those were reported to us we were still dissatisfied, and we held conferences with various officials of the Government and insisted that we were not willing to provide for the expenditures of the Government a dollar more than was needed after exercising the most rigid economy; and we also said that the best way to reduce expenditures is to reduce the income out of which expenditures can be made. We called in the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. MADDEN], a man of great ability and efficiency, and conferred with him on these matters, and we have his absolute and unqualified support. We intend in the next few years to see to it that the expenditures of the Government are made only for the most necessary and essential purposes. Our bill as originally prepared released some $644,000,000 for industry for the year 1922, but under the amendment of the caucus it will release $400,000,000 only, but the amount will be increased for subsequent years. By releasing this money from Government expenditures we allow it to go into industry for the consumption of raw materials, for the creation of necessary commodities, for the payment of wages and salaries, for the payment of dividends on stocks and interest on bonds issued by corporations and in the hands of the millions of our people. By making this arrangement, taking off the legislative brake, then from the usual sources money can be collected from investors in small and large amounts which will enable industry to refinance itself and also provide for new enterprises.

We went in good faith into the preparation of this bill, understanding that the budget system, adopted by the country, was to be a measure of real efficiency. We took it for granted that this system if properly developed and used will reduce the expenditures of the Government.

I have been a Member of the House now for nearly 15 years. The spending departments of the Government are not the economic branches of the Government. The executive in all its branches is not economical and never has been. Another body, which I shall not name, is not an economical body in that it actually makes reductions of expenditures. The body that actually insists upon reductions, that accomplishes relief for the American people, is the House of Representatives of the United States.

Having then the new budget system, having the cooperation of the Appropriations Committee, we undertook this program of economy and secured an agreement from the spending departments that they would reduce their expenditures by very nearly $900,000,000. [Applause.]

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I do not want to break into the line of the gentleman's argument, but I notice in the report a statement that the bill was framed with the idea that among other reductions was one of something like $350,000,000 in the various departments for the fiscal year 1922. I have been waiting with a great deal of interest ever since this debate began to have some gentleman from the Ways and Means Committee, representing those who favor the bill, tell the House just how these reductions are to be put into effect, and where they are coming from. The gentleman has stated the sum, but there is no explanation as to how these economies are to be effected.

Mr. HAWLEY. I have not those figures in detail here. I have the last letter of the Secretary of the Treasury, which I shall insert in the Record. The figures have been printed in the press from time to time. For instance, the War Department proposed to expend $575,000,000 originally, and they have agreed that they can get along with $400,000,000. We have a saving of $100,000,000 in the Navy Department, and the Agricultural Department will reduce its expenditures by $25,000,000. In the Shipping Board there will be a reduction of $100,000,000. These are only a few of the items.

AUGUST 10, 1921.

HON. JOSEPH W. FORDNEY,

Chairman Committee on Ways and Means,

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: On the basis of the understanding reached at our conference yesterday with the President, I am now able to submit figures as to reductions in the estimated expenditures of the Government for the fiscal year 1922, and in that connection present herewith new estimates as to the revenue needs of the Government for the fiscal year, with recommendations as to the reduction and revision of taxation.

1. Reduction in ordinary expenditures: The administration, in cooperation with the Committee on Ways and Means, has determined to reduce the ordinary expenditures of the Government for the fiscal year 1922 by at least $350,000,000 below the revised estimates presented by the Treasury on August 4. It is understood that this saving will be distributed, according to the best estimates now available, substantially as follows:

	Last revised estimate.	New estimate.	Net reduction.
War Department.....	$450,000,000	$400,000,000	$50,000,000
Navy Department.....	487,225,000	387,225,000	100,000,000
Shipping Board.....	200,000,000	100,000,000	100,000,000
Department of Agriculture.....	123,000,000	98,000,000	25,000,000
Railroads.....	545,000,000	495,000,000	50,000,000
Miscellaneous.....			25,000,000
Total reduction.....			$350,000,000

To accomplish this reduction it will be necessary for the administration, with the assistance of the Director of the Bureau of the Budget, to put forth its utmost efforts to insure economy in every Government activity, and for Congress on its part to give the most whole-hearted cooperation, not only by the avoidance of new expenditure but also by the limitation or repeal of various outstanding balances and authorizations. The reduction which is estimated in the railroad payments assumes that about $50,000,000 of the expenditure heretofore estimated to fall within the fiscal year 1922 will either prove unnecessary as settlements progress or be deferred to the fiscal year 1923.

2. Reduction in public debt expenditures: It is understood that the Treasury will provide for two items of estimated public debt expenditure for the fiscal year 1922 out of other public debt receipts during the year, as follows:

Net redemptions of war savings securities.....	$100,000,000
Retirement of Pittman Act certificates.....	70,000,000
Total.....	170,000,000

This will mean a reduction of $170,000,000 below the previously estimated net public debt expenditure for the year. It is understood that the sinking fund requirements of the Victory Liberty loan act, amounting to $265,754,865 for the year, will be observed, and the miscellaneous debt reductions required to be made out of receipts specially earmarked for the purpose will not be disturbed.

3. Total reduction in expenditure: The aggregate reduction in expenditure for the fiscal year, on the basis above established, will be $520,000,000, leaving an estimated total expenditure of about $4,034,000,000.

4. Receipts from sources other than internal revenue: It is understood that the administration will make every effort, with the cooperation of Congress and the assistance of the Director of the Bureau of the Budget, to increase realization on salvageable property remaining from the war, particularly in the War Department, the Navy Department, and the Shipping Board. It is hoped that with increased receipts from salvage and a new tariff law effective by December 31, 1921, the total receipts from sources other than internal revenue during the fiscal year 1922 will be as follows:

Customs.....	$370,000,000
Salvage (including sales of surplus war supplies).....	200,000,000
Other miscellaneous revenue.....	287,643,000
Total.....	$857,643,000

5. Revision of taxation: On the basis of the estimated reductions in expenditure to be made during the current fiscal year, the administration recommends that the internal tax laws be revised so as to produce a total of $3,000,000,000 of internal revenue for the calendar year 1922, as follows:

Normal income tax.....	$470,000,000
Income surtaxes.....	380,000,000
Ten per cent corporation income tax.....	445,000,000
Additional 2½ per cent corporation income tax (as partial substitute for excess-profits tax).....	111,250,000
Back collections of income and profits taxes.....	300,000,000
Miscellaneous internal revenue.....	1,293,750,000
Total.....	3,000,000,000

Specifically this revision would involve (1) the repeal of the excess-profits tax effective January 1, 1921, with a 2½ per cent flat tax on corporation incomes as a partial substitute; (2) the repeal of the higher surtax brackets to a maximum of 32 per cent, effective January 1, 1921, and a maximum of 25 per cent effective January 1, 1922; (3) the reduction of the transportation tax by one-half, effective January 1, 1922, and its repeal, effective January 1, 1923; (4) the repeal or modification of certain miscellaneous taxes imposed under section 630 (with a substitute tax on carbonated waters, etc.) and under section 904 of the revenue act of 1918; and (5) sufficient readjustments in miscellaneous taxes to assure aggregate internal revenue for the calendar year of $3,000,000,000. In connection with these readjustments, if the suggested additional flat tax on the net income of corporations is to be fixed at 2½ per cent, it will be necessary to make up the resulting loss in revenue by means of the miscellaneous internal taxes, in part through the substitute tax on carbonated waters and in part through increases in existing stamp taxes. On the other hand, if the flat additional tax is to be fixed at 5 per cent, it might be possible in that connection to regard the last 2½ per cent as a substitute for the capital-stock tax and repeal the capital-stock tax, relying on the tax on carbonated waters and other readjustments in miscellaneous taxes to provide the necessary revenue.

The additional revenue necessary for the fiscal year 1922 will be made up, it is estimated, by the overlapping of receipts collected under existing law and to some extent by collections of back taxes.

The suggested revision automatically provides for further reductions in taxation for the calendar year 1923 through (1) the complete repeal of the transportation tax, effective January 1, 1923; (2) the reduction of the surtaxes to a maximum of 25 per cent, effective January 1, 1922; and at the same time there is to be anticipated a falling off in collections of back taxes in the calendar year 1923.

6. Additional authority for the Secretary of the Treasury: In order to carry out this program and provide further for the financing of the short-dated debt the Secretary of the Treasury should have enlarged authority for the issue and retirement of notes under section 18 of the second Liberty bond act, as amended, with provision for a total of $7,500,000,000 at any one time outstanding. The existing authority is for $7,000,000,000, and about $3,850,000,000 of Victory notes and $311,000,000 of Treasury notes are already outstanding thereunder. The additional authority is necessary in order to carry out the program for dealing with the short-dated debt outlined in my letter to you of April 30, 1921. I attach for your convenience a draft of amendment appropriate for this purpose.

I can not too strongly emphasize that the program agreed upon at yesterday's conference and outlined in this letter depends upon the reductions in expenditure which the administration expects to accomplish, and that the anticipated savings can be effected only by the most consistent and determined efforts to cut expenditure. The estimates of receipts, on the other hand, represent the utmost expected to accrue during the year, particularly in view of the uncertainties resulting from the depression in business and the shrinkage in incomes and profits.

Cordially, yours,

A. W. MELLON, Secretary.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Those figures are set forth in the report in round numbers, but there is no statement as to just how those economies are to be effected. The gentleman speaks of $25,000,000 to be saved in the Agricultural Department. Just where is that coming from? Is it coming from the good-road fund, is it coming out of the sums which have been appropriated and expended for the expansion of agriculture, or is it coming out of some other fund in the Department of Agriculture?

Mr. HAWLEY. It will be apportioned throughout the department, as I understand it, where there can be a saving without reducing the efficiency of the department.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Our total appropriations for the Department of Agriculture are something less than $40,000,000, and I am wondering where you are going to get the $25,000,000 reduction for this year.

Mr. HAWLEY. There will be a reduction in all expenditures where such reductions will not affect the proper discharge of the functions of the department.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Then, as I understand, all the information which the Committee on Ways and Means has had in the preparation of this bill with reference to these reductions is the statements of the heads of these departments that they propose to apportion it and in some way make reductions?

Mr. HAWLEY. It is more than that. We have not those figures all worked out in detail, as they will come in the estimate of appropriations and the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury. And it was not necessary that we have. Who knows better than the heads of the spending departments the economies they can effect? They gave to the revision of estimates careful attention. The statement was made to us that the heads of the various departments and others who are interested in the spending departments have gone over the matter thoroughly, and we understand they know practically where they are going to make the reductions.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. And the Ways and Means Committee told them they were not going to get any more?

Mr. COCKRAN. Regardless of the requirements? Will the gentleman allow me a question? I just want to ask the gentleman from Iowa if the Committee on Ways and Means made the declaration that they would reduce these appropriations regardless of the requirements of the departments? The gentleman does not answer. Perhaps it is just as well not to press that. I do not want to make the gentleman uncomfortable.

Mr. HAWLEY. I can answer the gentleman.

Mr. COCKRAN. If the gentleman will answer.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I did not hear the gentleman from New York.

Mr. HAWLEY. It is not the intention to cripple any Government function in its necessary expenditure, but we do believe that at present we can reduce, and should, expenditures to those things that are absolutely essential.

Mr. COCKRAN. Well, I want to ask either gentleman from Verona—and either one can answer this question. Was the feasibility of these reductions—and when I say feasible I mean compatible with efficiency of Government—decided by the committee or decided by the officers of the Treasury Department?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. All of us with the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations went over the matter.

Mr. COCKRAN. Then, why does not the gentleman state it to the House? The gentleman admits the House is the body to finally decide.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The House has the power of reducing expenditures—

Mr. COCKRAN. How would it know? Will not the gentleman tell the House when, how, and where this House is to reduce expenditures, for this is the body that must do it?

Mr. HAWLEY. I can not yield for a speech. I will say to the gentleman that in general we will tell the House how expenditures will be reduced, first, in the separate appropriations—

Mr. COCKRAN. The gentleman will not tell us now.

Mr. HAWLEY. How can I tell the gentleman the contents of appropriations bills that are yet to be submitted? We are cooperating with the Committee on Appropriations, which intends to carry through the program of economy.

Mr. COCKRAN. That is it, the gentleman has answered fully, and I thank him very much.

Mr. HAWLEY. The bill proposes to accomplish several things: (1) Decrease the burden of taxation on persons and on industry; (2) to make such changes in the administrative provisions as will simplify the law, effect a greater economy in collections, and obviate inequalities in the levy of taxes; (3) to meet the general demand for a simplification of the return; (4) to prevent evasions in the payment of taxes. These were the four primary purposes of the bill. It is not, gentlemen, as you will notice, a general bill rewriting the existing law. Since the other purposes depend upon the proposed reduction of taxation primarily, I will comment, first, upon the provisions affecting such reduction which may be more conveniently presented in tabular form.

While the above table indicates a net loss in revenue receipts of $790,330,000, only a portion of this loss will be reflected in revenue collections for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922.

Inasmuch as the repeal of the excess-profits tax and reduction of surtax rates on individual incomes do not become effective until the calendar year of 1922, $406,250,000 of the contemplated loss of revenue will not be reflected in revenue collections prior to the calendar year of 1923.

With the time at my disposal I will not have the time to read these tables I have prepared, but with the consent of the committee I shall include them in my remarks. The committee first endeavored to obtain as detailed and accurate an estimate as possible of the expenditures of the Government for the fiscal years ending in 1922 and 1923. As I have already said, the first estimates were unsatisfactory. The second estimates were unsatisfactory. The third estimates conformed to the estimates made by the chairman of the Appropriations Committee and the majority leader of the House and to our own figures. We think they show very nearly the correct amounts that can be raised and expended by the Government with profit to the country for the years 1922, 1923, and for subsequent years.

FOR THE RELIEF OF THE TAXPAYERS.

The debate so far has centered around a few of the provisions of the bill, which contains many meritorious features, to some of which I now desire to call attention. The limit of time will permit comment upon the more important matters in each. The relief for the people in the items of taxation is accomplished in many other paragraphs. I will only briefly state them. They have already been explained at considerable length by preceding speakers.

The deduction for married persons and heads of families is increased for those whose net incomes do not exceed $5,000 from $2,000 to $2,500 and the exemption for children is raised from $200 to $400 each. This affects a great proportion of the people of the United States.

The elimination of a tax on freight, passenger, and Pullman tickets and express affects practically every section of the country, and is a relief to nearly every citizen. Some question was raised the other day as to why the tax was removed on express and not on the parcel post. The reason for that is this, that the express rate applies to carload lots as well as to smaller shipments. In the shipment of perishable commodities like fruit immense quantities are sent by express. The tax on parcel post applies to a very limited amount of articles or shipments that would be directly in competition with the express, and the express tax was a heavy tax on commodities which could but ill afford to bear the tax. The money lost to the Treasury by a repeal of the excess-profits tax is replaced in part by the increase of the corporation tax from 10 per cent to 12½ per cent.

Young America was relieved of the tax on sporting goods. The tax on clothing in section 904 was repealed. The taxes on the so-called luxuries, on proprietary medicines, on beverages, on toilet preparations, and so forth, is changed from a retail tax to a manufacturer's, producer's, or importer's tax. Now, if the gentlemen will take their bills I will call attention, so far as time permits, to some of the provisions of the bill.

In section 202 (d) provision is made for the exchange of property, where no gain or loss is recognized. Under the present law this has caused the Treasury a very great deal of difficulty. Two men exchange a farm, one practically as valuable as the other. Men have exchanged stocks and bonds in order to consolidate their holdings of a particular kind or kinds of securities in which there was no gain or loss recognized. The amendment liberalizes the law in the interest of the taxpayer and provides explicit rules for determining whether any gain or loss has resulted. It also relieves such transactions from delay, simplifies the tax return, and promotes such exchanges of property.

Mr. SINNOTT. Does this provision apply to an exchange of lands within the exterior limit of forest reserves, public land for private land?

Mr. HAWLEY. If such exchanges are authorized by law, then this provision would govern in determining whether gain or loss had occurred.

In section 204 (b) provision is made for the spreading of loss of any taxpayer over two succeeding years under proper restrictions. Many taxpayers have great losses in one year, and if they are not allowed to spread such losses over the two succeeding years it will be very burdensome to them. The recent flood at Pueblo, Colo., destroyed considerable sections of the business section. Taxpayers who suffered the loss of a great portion of their property had already made incomes which they will have to return. This amendment will adjust their taxes so that they can pay them and continue in business.

In section 206 new definitions are provided for capital gain and capital loss, and there is definitely fixed the amount of capital gain to be taxed in the case of any transaction involving the sale of capital assets. For instance, a farmer sells for $75,000 a farm that cost him $50,000. Under the present law the surtaxes are so high that many transactions are prevented from consummation, to the detriment of the development of the community. The owner feels it will be better for him to retain his property than to sell it and pay the very high rate of tax. Now, we propose that such transaction shall not pay a tax in excess of 12½ per cent of the amount of the gain in transactions where the net income and capital gain together exceed $29,000 or more. If the net income and capital gain together are less than $29,000 the taxpayer will pay in the appropriate brackets, and the rate will be lower.

Mr. STAFFORD. I find on page 12 the stated tax of 15 per cent. Where is the provision for 12½ per cent?

Mr. HAWLEY. It has been reduced to 12½ per cent by reason of other provisions of the bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. That is to be a committee amendment?

Mr. HAWLEY. That is to be a committee amendment.

In section 213 provision is made for the deduction of traveling expenses of persons traveling on business. This will affect the commercial travelers of the country, and especially those who are traveling on a commission basis. Heretofore they have not been allowed this deduction, while those traveling on a salary have. This is a measure of justice and will also encourage the men who wish to enter business for themselves.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes.

Mr. FESS. The gentleman has gone over section 211. That exemption No. 9, page 15, "amounts received as compensation, family allotments and allowances," and so on—is a very valuable item. Did the committee consider including in this item the item of exemption of pensions from other wars?

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes. That will be offered as a committee amendment.

Section 214 modifies the rule now in force as to bad debts, which requires that they be charged off in toto or not at all, by allowing them to be charged off in proportion to their collectibility as found by the commissioner. Heretofore if a man had what he thought was a bad debt of $1,000 the commissioner could either allow him to charge that off, if it was proven that it was absolutely a bad debt, or, if he could not prove it was a bad debt in toto, he could not charge any of it off. Now we propose to allow him, if the commissioner says he can realize $500 out of it, to allow him to charge off only $500. This will enable many business men to close accounts which are now being held open by reason of their contention that the debts are bad and can not be collected in whole, while the commissioner contends they are not wholly bad.

Section 217 provides that where property has been destroyed, requisitioned, or condemned and the taxpayer is recompensed for such property and immediately proceeds to invest the moneys received in other similar property—that is, replaces the property destroyed or taken—he shall not be esteemed to have made a gain by the transaction. If he uses the money paid to him for it in the building of another property of that same kind—for instance, a vessel, a house, or whatever may have been taken or destroyed—he shall not be counted to have made a gain or a loss; that is, where property is taken or destroyed and replaced with the moneys received there shall be no gain or loss recognized.

Section 248 is amended so that corporations may make either separate or consolidated returns; but having once chosen to make a separate return or a corporate return they can not change that without the consent of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. Heretofore corporations were inclined to change from the corporate form to the separate form if one or the other favored them in the reduction of the amount of taxes they would have to pay. But under this provision, after they have elected once, they can not change that election except by consent of the commissioner.

Section 251 is liberalized in the interest of the taxpayer in the penalty provision. You will notice that most of these amendments are liberalizations of the law in behalf of the taxpayers, relieving them of unnecessary burdens, making plain what the law means, leaving no doubt as to its intent, so that it would not be a matter of construction or regulation, but a matter of law, that anyone who reads it can understand what is intended.

Section 252 limits the time in which the commissioner can reexamine the returns and reassess taxes on any taxpayer. Heretofore it has been five years. We propose to make the limit three years hereafter, except that the five-year period is retained for past years, back to 1917. This will compel the Government to close out its account with every taxpayer. A great many business transactions are suspended and are not consummated for the reason that the person intending to buy says, "What liabilities are there on this property?" And, among others, there is stated to be a certain amount of tax in dispute. Men do not like to buy property especially when the amount of tax in dispute is large. Many very important transactions have been lost, and this will open up the way to their settlement.

Section 255 provides for a credit or refund to the taxpayer for excess taxes paid in previous years where the commissioner decreased the invested capital of the taxpayer and such taxpayer failed to take adequate deductions in the previous years.

Section 404 provides the time in which the executor of an estate may be discharged from personal liability for additional taxes that may be later assessed. Heretofore the time has been unlimited. The bill reports a period of one year. I think it will be reduced probably to a period of six months, so that executors can close up estates and allot to the beneficiaries of the estates the amounts due to them and the executors be relieved from any further personal liability.

Section 901 provides a limitation of 15 months for the assessment of additional capital stock, except in case of a false return.

Section 1001 provides that the commissioner and the taxpayer may make an agreement as to the amount of taxes due, which will be conclusive and binding upon all parties, and which may not be set aside by any court of the United States except in cases of malfeasance or fraud or misrepresentation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oregon has expired.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, may I have 15 minutes more?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I yield to the gentleman 15 minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oregon is recognized for 15 minutes more.

Mr. HAWLEY. This provision of the law has been urged by every Secretary of the Treasury in recent years. Very many times the amount in dispute is considerable, and the questions in doubt are so evenly balanced between the Government and the taxpayer that it is very difficult to say without a long and expensive suit how much ought to be paid. The taxpayer will in nearly every instance be willing to pay more than he thinks he ought to pay if he can get his property relieved of the burden of the unpaid tax that is upon it. The Government is many years behind with the collection of the revenues under the income taxes.

These are provisions for simplifying the returns, making the situation more favorable to the taxpayer and affording opportunity of early settlement, which will enable the Government to close out these accounts with the taxpayers, getting the money into the Treasury and getting immense quantities of what are now known as back taxes.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. How much is involved in litigation on the income tax?

Mr. HAWLEY. I do not know exactly how much is involved in litigation, but a billion dollars is yet to be collected, in round figures.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. A great many cases are now pending, are they not?

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes; there are a great many disputes pending, both in the courts and in the department.

Section 1002 will enable the Treasury to make regulations that are not retroactive, unless such regulation is occasioned or required by a court of competent jurisdiction. Under the present law if the Treasury Department makes a regulation it must apply to all similar cases heretofore dealt with. This provision in the pending bill enables the Secretary of the Treasury to make a new regulation without reopening all the cases that have been previously considered and settled and make it unnecessary to reopen thousands of settled cases.

Section 1010 is to relieve the taxpayer and simplify the return by the segregation of exemptions in the case of Liberty bonds. That has already been discussed at some length, and I will not refer to it further except to say that it removes one of the most confusing and difficult schedules in the tax return.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there in connection with that for a short question?

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes.

Mr. LONDON. Is it not because of that that the Government has been enabled to discover how much money has been invested in tax-free bonds? By answers to those questions the Government now is enabled to find out how much money is invested in tax-free bonds, is it not?

Mr. HAWLEY. We asked the officials of the Treasury about this elimination. They said that the information they obtained was interesting but of no particular value in the tax law.

Mr. LONDON. It is valuable to that extent, that we know how much money has been invested. Otherwise we would never be in possession of that knowledge.

Mr. HAWLEY. We must know, if the gentleman will permit, how much money has been invested by the outstanding tax-free bonds that are out of the hands of the original owners of the issues.

Mr. LONDON. This gives the extent of the distribution and the number of holders of the bonds.

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes; but the gentleman must take this into consideration: He might report this year the ownership of $100,000 of tax-free bonds, and a month after the report was in he might find opportunity to sell them at an advantage, and by the time the Treasury examined the return the information would be of no value. Such transfers in large amounts are continually being effected.

Mr. LONDON. Except that it would be valuable in giving the aggregate.

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes; at the time; but it might be of no value to the Government at a later date, and would be an untrustworthy basis for any statistical use.

The Government has been subjected to a great deal of criticism for the existing law. In section 1003 we propose no taxpayer shall be subject to unnecessary examinations and investigations, and that only one inspection of a taxpayer's books and accounts shall be made for each taxable year, unless the taxpayer requests otherwise, or unless the commissioner notifies the taxpayer in writing that an additional inspection is necessary. We had instances before us where the books of a corporation or an individual had been examined four or five times, with four or five different assessments of taxation. There ought to be one levy of tax, one determination of it. It ought to be settled once for all when a man pays his tax, unless there should be good cause for a reexamination.

Section 1003 is one of the most important for the relief of the taxpayer. I quote it in full:

No taxpayer shall be subjected to unnecessary examinations or investigations, and only one inspection of a taxpayer's books of account shall be made for each taxable year, unless the taxpayer requests otherwise, or unless the commissioner, after investigation, notifies the taxpayer in writing that an additional inspection is necessary.

Mr. CONNELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes.

Mr. CONNELL. There should not be another examination unless the first examination was wrong, and in that case the taxpayer should be notified in writing, should he not?

Mr. HAWLEY. The gentleman is right, and we so provide. Of course the commissioner would not cause a frivolous examination to be made or an examination to be made on a frivolous ground. I have recited these provisions briefly because the time will not permit more comment on each provision. But these provisions for the relief of the taxpayer, the provisions for the simplification of the return, are involved in those already recited.

SIMPLIFICATION OF THE FORM OF THE RETURN.

There is a great deal of complaint made of the tax return itself. It was framed in a Democratic Treasury. I desire to say this about it, that there is not a line in that return that is not required by some provision of the law, and the Treasury Department is not to blame for the return. It is to be commended for the return. All the items in that return are required by some provision in the law, and if they had left any of them out then the taxpayers could have said, "You did not ask me about this, and I made no report about it, because evidently you did not want any information about it."

Now, the only way to simplify the return is to straighten out the difficulties and inconsistencies in the law and to provide for the relief of the taxpayer, and then to eliminate all unnecessary requirements. The amendments we propose will greatly simplify the return. The repeal of the excess-profits tax will eliminate one of the most vexatious of questions—that of invested capital and the provisions that provide for its ascertainment.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAWLEY. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Is it not also a fact that when this law was passed it was new to our legislation, and that experience has given us a great deal of knowledge that we did not have at that time?

Mr. HAWLEY. Section 203, in the simplification of the return, determines the vexed question relative to the price or value of property as of March 1, 1913, in conformity with the decision of the Supreme Court in the case of the Merchants Loan & Trust Co. against Smietenka, decided March 28, 1921. I had intended to comment somewhat at length upon that. It is a very important feature in the bill. The Supreme Court required us to go back to the cost of the property prior to 1913 in certain instances. The rule of the law is made clear now as to what constitute gains and losses in the sale of property under this decision of the Supreme Court, and everyone interested in economic law will do well to study this decision of the Supreme Court and find what the final decision of the court is in the definition of gain in the sale of property. The court states the rules in the following language:

Income may be defined as a gain derived from capital, from labor, or from both combined, provided it be understood to include profit gained through the sale or conversion of capital assets.

Section 203 also provides for the exchange of property for property of comparable value without reckoning gain or loss.

Section 210 simplifies the return by repealing the provision of the present law which requires every taxpayer to make a return of his tax-free securities and the interest received thereon.

Other simplifications have been effected; and in addition we provide in the bill a board consisting of three of the tax-paying public and three heads in the Treasury, to be a standing board to serve without pay to study both the return and the law, so that at any time when good and valid cause is found for changing the form of the return it can be modified; or if they find that the law can be amended in the interest of simplification they can report that to Congress. We believe that a much simpler form can be framed that will enable the taxpayer to prepare his return without doubt or difficulty.

TO PREVENT ERASURES.

In the administration of the law many instances were found where advantage was taken of its provisions to evade or to attempt to evade taxation. Section 203 modifies the existing law as to gifts or bequests so as to prevent an evasion of the tax by the gift of property, for instance, to a man's wife, who might sell the property at a profit without payment of tax on the net gain realized. If the man had sold the property at a profit he would have had to account for the gain. This is to provide that if property is given in this way to secure the evasion of the tax the tax shall nevertheless be imposed.

Section 214 prevents wash sales. For instance, a short time—a day or so—before the return was made a broker would sell a million dollars worth of stock and report a loss of $100,000 or some other sum. The day after the return was filed he would buy back his stock—that is, in other words, he would claim a loss of $100,000—and in order to prevent such wash sales we inserted the provision in section 214.

Section 219 provides that the holder of a life or terminable interest acquired by gift, bequest, devise, or inheritance shall not be reduced if the property is sold at a loss—that is, if I am receiving a $5,000 income from a trust estate and the trustee sells out the estate and takes a loss of $3,000, my income can not be held to be reduced for the purposes of taxation by the amount of the loss. I am not to be allowed that $3,000 loss. I must pay taxes on my $5,000 income. The trust estate will be allowed to claim the $3,000 loss in its accounts. This was a source of frequent attempts at evasion.

Section 220 prevents the evasion of the tax on dividends on stock. Dividends on stocks of foreign corporations sent to this country are not taxable if that foreign corporation pays a tax in this country, and many of the foreign corporations, having wise counsel, found that if they bought a $100 railroad bond, the interest on which was taxable even to the amount of $1, they could send thousands and hundreds of thousands of dollars in dividends into this country tax free because they paid $1 tax in this country. We have put into the law a provision which will prevent a patent evasion of the law in that form.

Section 226 is to prevent the formation of corporations for the purpose of preventing the imposition of the surtax upon their stockholders or members. Such corporations were formed in the endeavor to evade the law. We provide legislation by which that will be prevented in the future.

Section 228 is to prevent an abuse of the permission to deduct taxes paid in foreign countries.

Section 248 permits a corporation to make separate or consolidated returns; but having chosen one form, having made a choice at one time, they must adhere thereto unless permitted otherwise by the commissioner.

Section 249 is to authorize the commissioner to consolidate the returns of a parent corporation with those of subsidiary corporations, and particularly with those of foreign subsidiaries. In an attempt to evade taxation they would make separate returns and divide up the income and keep out of the high brackets or transfer the greater proportion to foreign subsidiaries; but now by consolidating the return, giving authority to do that when the circumstances warrant, we can prevent an evasion of the tax.

REPEAL OF SURTAXES AND THE EXCESS-PROFITS TAX.

In the short time yet at my disposal I can only make a brief statement upon the repeal of the excess-profits tax and of the surtaxes.

Outside of the agricultural population the greater proportion of the people depend for their livelihood upon employment provided by others. Many others are dependent wholly or in part upon dividends on stocks and interest on bonds of corporations, and the number of persons of small means who own a few shares or bonds is very large.

Business enterprise, either in the individual or corporate form, furnishes millions with employment, and when business is stagnant large numbers are unemployed. There are now some 5,000,000 of our people out of work. The success of business enterprises is of vital interest to all our people, and any action that promotes trade and industry is of primary importance to all. Business needs for its reconstruction hundreds of millions of dollars. While Congress may enact legislation to furnish credit, it has a better and more legitimate means at hand and that is by reducing the taxes, to leave in the hands of enterprise the moneys not necessary for the economical administration of the Government. We have therefore provided that when this bill is in full effect taxes will be reduced by some $900,000,000.

The excess-profits tax is not a scientific tax. The standard of invested capital is an arbitrary basis, opening wide opportunities for overvaluation and causing similar corporations to pay widely different amounts on the same earnings.

The chart of the gentleman from Arkansas was based upon an assumption, the chief error in the deductions from which is that large corporations made a high percentage in income and smaller corporations made lower percentages. A study of the actual returns as tabulated in the reports of Treasury officials shows that the assumption is wrong. An examination of the table on page 41 of the hearings on the revenue act of 1918 and other tables shows that the smaller corporations entered the high brackets in much greater numbers than the larger—that is, the repeal of this tax will especially benefit the smaller organizations. But aside from this, the chief argument is the urgent necessity for the reconstruction of industry, that labor may be provided with wages, markets with necessary commodities, and our people be able to purchase and use the products of farm and factory. It might be inferred from some of the arguments against the repeal that the earnings of corporations inured to the benefit of the few. They pay up to 75 per cent of such earnings for labor and services; they distribute large sums to investors, who pay, according to their circumstances, income taxes; they are important factors in the welfare of the public generally. If any do harm, the remedy is to regulate them and not injure all corporations, good or bad, as a class.

In 1918 the excess-profits tax earned about $1,250,000,000; in 1921 it will earn about $445,000,000 and less in 1920. It is not a tax adapted to peace conditions. I regret that I do not have time to develop the argument, or to refer to the surtax, but in the revision and extension of my remarks, which I will presently ask, I will so do.

I believe this bill will materially aid in the rehabilitation of our industrial and economic life, so opening the door to the employment of millions, the market for our varied products, and will inaugurate a new era of prosperity. [Applause.]

By unanimous consent Mr. HAWLEY was given leave to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. COLLIER. I yield one hour to the gentleman from New York [Mr. COCKRAN]. [Applause.]

Mr. COCKRAN. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to this bill because the purposes for which it is framed are vicious, because the result it must produce will be disastrous, and because the means adopted to force its enactment are ridiculous and pernicious.

The procedure under which we are considering this measure shows on the part of its authors remarkable prudence of a certain kind—the kind generally attributed to the ostrich which is said to hide its head in the sand under the belief that it is then completely screened from observation and secure from pursuit. The committee by this rule effectively preventing any amendments except such as are offered by the Ways and Means Committee evidently believes it has afforded Members an excuse for supporting this bill notwithstanding certain provisions which can not be defended before any intelligent American constituency, whereas it merely allows them to cover their foolish heads, leaving exposed a much larger surface to invite vigorous applications of leather propelled by indignant muscles. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

The gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HAWLEY] who has just taken his seat has—quite unconsciously, I think—thrown a flood of light upon the degree of abasement to which this body has been reduced by the Committee on Rules and by its own slavish submission to that extraordinary body. He told us the exact conditions under which this bill has been framed. And in the light of that revelation I think it entirely safe to say that never before in the history of civilized society has a scheme of taxation—much less of taxation on such stupendous scale—been proposed to a representative body under conditions so extraordinary, so preposterous, that were it not for the momentous issues involved we would be constrained to consider this measure an extravagance of comic opera rather than a serious proposal of legislation.

It is now disclosed to us that the responsible officers of the Treasury reported to the Ways and Means Committee, after careful consideration, the wants of the Government for the coming year to be $4,550,000,000, whereupon they were sent back and told that they must reduce the amount of those estimates. The gentleman from Oregon did not tell us how the reductions were to be effected, nor do I think the committee cared much about methods. It seems to have been concerned only in reducing the estimates. No inquiry was made as to the feasibility of running the Government for a lesser amount. The committee with an eye single to the next election and the promises made by Republican platforms and politicians before the last election simply resolved that it would not raise so large a revenue, no matter what the public necessities might actually require.

Well, the Treasury folk came back with lower estimates, but only to be told that the reduction was not sufficient. They returned again with these figures now before us which, it is claimed, afford some shadow of justification for cutting off $700,000,000 of revenue from what the Secretary had declared necessary to anything like an efficient administration of the Government. And this it has undertaken to do without giving the House one scintilla of information as to the method by which these reductions are to be effected. In fact, I think I can say, without presuming very much, that the gentlemen of the Ways and Means Committee do not know themselves.

Is this exaggeration? Among all the members of that committee, the fullest embodiment of its wisdom is surely the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN], who has entertained us to-day with such varied animadversions on the behavior of the minority. I would like to ask him if he can answer now the question that was put by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HAWLEY] asking how these reductions were to be accomplished; what activities of the Government would be affected by them? The gentleman from Oregon was silent then, and silent he remains. The gentleman from Iowa I see moving uneasily in his seat as though possessed of some knowledge struggling for expression, and so I welcome him to his feet. [Laughter.]

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Has the gentleman read the report?

Mr. COCKRAN. I have read it most carefully.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I am sorry the gentleman has not got the information he wants, because it is right there.

Mr. COCKRAN. If the gentleman will read me one line of information—

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Nobody could convince the gentleman from New York.

Mr. COCKRAN. The gentleman might try. I do not ask for conviction; I only ask for a contribution, however slight, to my knowledge. [Laughter.]

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman said he could not get it from the report.

Mr. COCKRAN. I did, and I say now I can not get it from the gentleman.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. That is not my fault.

Mr. COCKRAN. It is not the fault of the gentleman, because he does not possess it. [Laughter.] Nor does any other member of the committee. Now, the limit of the gentleman's information might be matter of little public interest under ordinary conditions, but it is of tremendous significance to the people of the country for the light it throws on the methods of procedure imposed on this House by the Committee on Rules.

By whom, according to the Constitution, should the wisdom or the necessity of these reductions be decided? By this House. And yet we are actually allowed to know as much about it as the gentleman from Iowa, and that is to describe a state of complete innocence wholly unaffected by the slightest information. [Laughter.]

Mr. Chairman, to state that is to state something so astounding that it would have been deemed totally unthinkable by a Member of the House 20 years ago. The decline in consequence of this body has been so rapid of late that we are now reduced to about the same level as the Electoral College. And how could it be otherwise? What possible weight or value could be attached to any discussion or action of ours concerning this measure when not one of us is allowed to propose an amendment or even to understand the grounds on which the reductions it proposes are based. Discussion of a revenue bill under these conditions is about as intelligible, about as comprehensible, about as defensible, as if some enterprising gentleman should undertake to discuss after a general election the merits of presidential candidates with a view to affecting the vote of the Electoral College.

Action by the electors is now a mere formality required by the Constitution to make legally effective the vote of the people, which in choosing them has already decided the election and the choice of a President. Yet the Electoral College, as the framers of the Constitution planned it, was to be the most independent body in our whole political system. In the convention at Philadelphia more time was devoted to establishment of safeguards which it was hoped would make the choice of a President the untrammelled, uninfluenced act of the Electoral College than to any other feature of our political system. In spite of every precaution the functions of the college have shrunk to a mere formality, because its members were incapable of defending its independence. And the same fate seems to be impending over this body, if it has not already overtaken us. There is now but one real legislative chamber in this country. A mere formality remains to be observed by us. Before the real legislative body can take jurisdiction of a revenue measure this House must adopt the clause "Be it enacted."

Everything else that we may do here is disregarded by the other body as mere surplusage. And surplusage it should be considered. For it is not the product of the House, but of a few Members. And it is not the fruit of any information acquired by the committee on the subject with which it deals. The committee that reported it and the whole House are admittedly in profound ignorance of every matter that they are required by the Constitution to decide in framing a revenue bill. How could any one of our enactments carry weight with anybody when the authors of this bill, challenged to give a reason for their extraordinary course in disregarding the judgment of responsible Treasury officers as to the revenue necessary to maintain the Government of the country, can not tell us in what particulars administration of the departments will be affected by the reductions they urge us to vote?

Mr. Chairman, I shall not burden the House at this time with further discussion of the ridiculous condition to which we are reduced. I will return to it later for the purpose of asking Members on both sides to unite in an effort to restore the dignity and credit of representative government in this country.

Judging from the vicious system under which we are forced to consider this bill, the stupidities and depravities embraced in it are almost incredible. [Laughter on the Democratic side.] The stupidities are so many and so varied that even to enumerate them would exhaust all the time at my command. I will confine myself to pointing out its depravities and the baleful results they must inevitably produce.

There is one provision that embraces every depravity which could possibly discredit and condemn a measure submitted to a legislative assembly in a democratic community. I refer to its open, undisguised establishment of a discrimination in the taxes to be levied on the citizens of this Republic. You gentlemen of the Republican Party have been levying discriminating taxes for a long time, but hitherto they were disguised under the pretense that they would benefit the people whom they despoiled. Under the system of plunder by protective tariffs deference was paid at least to the forms of our Government and the essential principles that underlie it. Here both forms and principles are disregarded cynically and openly.

I do not think any gentleman on the Republican side of the House will pretend that all citizens of the country, under the system of remitting surtaxes on the largest incomes proposed in this bill, will be subject to equal taxation. I shall not undertake to discuss the merits or demerits of high income taxes. Far more important than the rate of any tax is the capital necessity that it be equal. I do not care what the plea in justification may be. I say without any hesitation or reserve that unequal taxation under any circumstances whatever is impossible in a democracy. When it is established, democratic institutions are ipso facto abolished. No stronger proof of this could possibly be afforded than the argument by which it is sought to justify these proposals.

We are told that certain holders of property are too powerful to be brought under the law imposing a progressive or graduated income tax unless special exemptions are made in their favor. Am I exaggerating here, gentlemen on the other side? Your silence concedes that this statement of your position is absolutely correct. Now, what is the true significance of that argument and of the statement on which it rests? I think it will be conceded on all sides that under no form of government can anyone within its jurisdiction be permitted to deny its power or successfully resist its authority and at the same time remain its subject. There can not be in any political system a force greater than the Government. The greatest force must always be the Government. These possessors of great wealth who can not be made to bear taxation that they do not like are to-day on your own showing stronger than the Government. They therefore are the Government of the United States, and you gentlemen on the Republican side are but the instruments through which they are exercising their powers. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

This I admit is a strong statement—a very strong statement. Let us see how far it is justified.

Here is the table [indicating], prepared by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. OLDFIELD], more eloquent than any speech that could be delivered by human lips or conceived by human mind. It shows that under this proposed law a remission of $20 is made to the man with an income of $70,000 a year, and a remission of $604,720 is made to the person with an income of $2,000,000. How is that extraordinary proposal defended? You say it is because you can not help it. Are you trying to help it? Has it proved impossible to make these collections in the past? If the Government had actually failed to make them, the beneficiaries of the scheme now before us would not be here forcing you to unmask yourselves before the American people. [Applause on the Democratic side.] These taxes have been collected. There is no doubt about that. But there is little doubt that the Government will not be allowed to continue collecting them. Why? Because these men have placed your party under obligations during the election which you are now called upon to redeem. Ah, your masters have cracked the whip over your heads, and they have told you, their instruments, that you must now carry out the purposes for which they financed your election. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Chairman, this table is striking, but what it suggests is more striking still. It shows that between the man who has an income of $70,000 a year and the man who has an income of $2,000,000 or $20,000,000 there is no difference in the rate of taxation; but there is a difference, a tremendous difference, a crushing difference between the rate paid by a man with an income of five or six thousand dollars a year and the rate paid by a man with an income of $70,000 a year. Is that equal taxation? You do not pretend that it is. You acknowledge that it is unequal and to justify that inequality you declare yourselves impotent to enforce the law against a small section of the community whose power to make you impotent (at least the origin and source of that sinister power) is disclosed by the published list of campaign contributions. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Chairman, one effect of this discrimination between the rates prescribed by this bill for the very rich and the rates it imposes on possessors of moderate means is to disclose strikingly the length of the distance this country under Republican ascendancy has already traveled along the path which leads away from democratic government and straight to class government. You are establishing now a precedent that one set of men, who are the very richest, can boldly come before the country and declare they must be exempt from any taxation they do not like; that only the taxes they are willing to pay can be imposed on them; that Congress may tax them with their permission, but it can not tax them according to what it may deem necessary for the safety of the Nation. Taxation on that burdensome scale must be imposed on others less favored by fortune. That is your position by your own statement. And it shows that the old political system under which all citizens controlled the Government in equal measure is displaced by a new order, which is here—under our eyes—exercising for the benefit of its members the powers of Government, control of which it has succeeded in acquiring.

I hold in my hand a book to which the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. OLDFIELD] made allusion to-day in his very striking speech—Dynastic America. It shows that practically the whole industrial system of this country to-day is in the hands of 200 families. The author points out that those persons who now control every important source of employment in this land did not establish themselves the fortunes they possess. They inherited them. Ownership of these fortunes being hereditary, we have in the light of this bill established among us feudalism on the ruins of democracy. And we have reached this condition of feudalism exactly as it was reached in Europe more than a thousand years ago. So true it is that there is nothing new in vice nor in the fruits of vice.

I am sure that to my friend from Ohio, Mr. LONGWORTH, who is an accomplished historian as well as a very able politician, I am saying nothing new when I remind him that after the old civilization fell before the blows of barbaric invaders its lands and treasures were divided among the conquerors according to the prowess shown in battle. The lands allotted to each one reverted back at his death to the tribe or the chief, when they were once more subject to distribution as a reward for effective service in the field. Gradually there grew up a system of preferring for the succession to the last possessor his eldest. And finally toward the close of the ninth century this custom of regarding the eldest son as the legitimate successor to the possessions of his father was recognized and confirmed as a right by the King. And thus feudalism became established.

The feudal baron or lord owned everything produced by his vassal. As lords of the soil or "landlords," they exercised supreme authority over all its inhabitants. The authority of the King was nominally great. It was actually negligible. The men who controlled the means of subsistence were then, as they are now, the actual rulers, transmitting their authority from father to son. That system is precisely the one to which the proposal of taxation actually pending shows we have come. With this bill in operation we will have feudalism—financial feudalism, industrial feudalism—in full operation all around us.

As the lands of the feudal baron were obtained originally by conquest and pillage, so the domination of our industrial system by its present rulers was established through kindred methods. Our first "captains of industry" did not rise to control of industrial enterprises by superior skill in production. With the exception of Rockefeller in the oil corporation and Havemeyer in the sugar corporation, I do not know of a single industry that was organized into a trust or monopoly by any person who had been connected with its commercial development. Control of them was acquired by financiers, promoters, speculative adventurers, who used them to exploit securities issued in enormous volume without any regard to actual or honest values, robbing the people and the stockholders with a cheerful but rigid impartiality. [Laughter and applause.]

These original depredators have now practically all gone on the long journey from which none returns. The enormous fortunes they acquired have passed to their families. This list here shows there are 200 of them. Now, these families tell us that they must be treated as a separate class, and that audacious claim you have confirmed by extending to them a peculiar but merciful taxation. It has actually come to pass in these United States that a man with an income of $2,000,000 is to be relieved from $604,000 of the sum he must now contribute to the support of the Government, but the man with an income of $60,000 or less will still be compelled to give up every penny that the law now exacts from him. The country in which such a proposal can be made—much less adopted—has ceased to be a democracy.

Enactment of this measure is the formal proclamation of a revolution in our conditions, political and economic, which has been in progress for a generation. As King Charles the Bald, when he confirmed the right of the eldest son to succeed to his father's lands, gave recognition to a condition already in existence and by that recognition formally established the feudal system, so you by this measure are formally recognizing and proclaiming the feudal system in industrial America which has been in process of development for several years, first, through laws which allowed certain persons to use and abuse for their own enrichment the power of this Government to levy taxes under a protective tariff, and which now manifests at once its existence and its power when it forces you to discriminate between them and all others in the method of levying internal taxes. [Applause on the Democratic side.] And so we find history—the dreary history of democracy strangled in the house of its friends—repeating itself in this land of ours and through the agency of this body which was established to defend and maintain democratic government.

It may be that these views of mine are not shared by some on this floor. But there is one conclusion to which I think all—on this side at least—will agree. The moment gentlemen begin to legislate on the assumption that any power in this country is stronger than the Government, then—I will not say they are deliberately foresworn, but I do insist they have forgotten the A B C of their duties to the American people and to this Constitution. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Chairman, enactment of this measure with these objectionable provisions will involve more than betrayal of the Constitution; more—much more—than subversion of democratic government. It will endanger the whole structure of our social order, imperiling seriously if not fatally the security of property. Discriminations in favor of the very rich at the expense of the less fortunate are certain to provoke deep popular resentment. And this resentment is very likely to find expression in impositions vastly more burdensome than these discriminations in their favor can possibly be advantageous to the beneficiaries of this legislation.

So much for the political depravity of this measure. Let us now consider its financial depravity, which I venture to say is equally deep and even more portentous.

The report of the Committee on Ways and Means embraces a statement by the Secretary of the Treasury showing the revenues which will be necessary for support of the Government during the coming year. Now, Mr. Mellon either is fit for his place or he is not.

Mr. WARD of North Carolina. I suppose that is so.

Mr. COCKRAN. I do not think gentlemen will dispute that. We will start with that postulate. His capital duty is to keep accurate account of the country's revenues and expenditures. In discharge of that duty he came before the Committee on Ways and Means, a body charged with the framing of revenue legislation for our consideration—God save the mark—for our consideration—I am using the language of the Constitution; I wish I could say I am using the language warranted by actual experience [laughter]—came before the committee and informed it that the necessities of this Government will require a revenue of $4,550,000,000.

Obviously if the estimates he furnished on a matter of such momentous importance be unreliable his complete unfitness for the great office he holds is undeniable. He is still Secretary of the Treasury, and therefore we must assume that in submitting these estimates he was expressing the deliberate judgment of this administration.

Mr. Mellon explained that he had made allowance for every reduction of which he could be certain, while refusing to accept as actual reductions paper promises of reductions, none of which in the experience of mankind has ever yet been realized. There never was a department, I think, in any government—certainly none in this Government of ours—that failed to expend all the money that it could get. [Laughter and applause.]

Now, after the Secretary of the Treasury told the committee in this formal report or statement that after having carefully examined every expense and pruned away everything that could possibly be spared he had reached the conclusion that it will require $4,500,000,000 to run the Government, we have before us here a bill providing for a revenue $750,000,000 less than the amount declared by Mr. Mellon to be the minimum required to meet the national necessities.

It is true that the committee claims new estimates were submitted—not by Mr. Mellon but by other Treasury officials—and these later estimates are said to justify their action.

It does not appear that anyone ever inquired what particular governmental activities would be affected by these reductions. And in the absence of all information on that subject how can we determine whether it is safe to make them? But this is precisely what you are required to determine under your oath of office. To determine all matters of taxation—the extent of it—whether the safety of the Government permits it to be decreased or requires it to be increased—is the task and duty especially assigned to you by the Constitution. You can not delegate that task to the Senate, nor to any of the executive departments, nor to all of them combined. You can not shift it to anybody. You must perform it yourselves, or you are fore-sworn, perjured, disloyal to your oaths and duties. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Now, conceive what we are asked to do—what, under the rule of procedure adopted before this debate began, we are forced to do.

We have here several estimates of national expenditures, differing radically from each other. The first, Mr. Mellon tells us, is the result of the most painstaking scrutiny and rigid pruning. Of the manner in which the others were reached we have no information whatever. The aspect of this situation, which is without parallel or precedent in the whole range of human experience, is that we are required to decide whether the stupendous sum of $750,000,000 can be cut from the careful estimates of the Secretary without running serious risk of imperiling the efficiency, if not the security, of the Government; and on this subject of transcendent importance not one of us has been afforded the slightest information. Even though there had been no differences in the estimates, it would still have been our duty to ascertain for ourselves the reasonableness and accuracy of them. But when estimates are in conflict that duty becomes the most pressing and imperative that can possibly devolve on us.

Suppose the first estimate should prove to be correct and it should turn out that these sums which we now refuse to raise are absolutely necessary for support of the Government. What then? Gentlemen opposite seem to contemplate calmly—almost gaily—the necessity of curing a deficit by an issue of bonds. They appear to be without the slightest realization of the disastrous consequences such a course must entail. I warn them now that in deliberately risking, if not forcing, a deficit at this time these gentlemen composing the majority are playing with fire—with fire that may develop into the most destructive conflagration in the history of mankind.

I see before me a gentleman whose knowledge of finance, I think, is second to none in this country. He not only understands it in the abstract, by study, but he has gained extensive familiarity with it in actual operation.

I ask Senator BURTON if he believes that an issue of bonds, amounting, say, to a billion dollars could be floated to-day at less than a 6 per cent rate of interest?

Mr. BURTON. I will say that it would depend somewhat on the time.

Mr. COCKRAN. I am speaking of this time.

Mr. BURTON. One has been issued for less.

Mr. COCKRAN. The last was at 5½ per cent.

Mr. BURTON. The money market is toward a lowering of the rates of interest, and there is every indication that that condition will continue.

Mr. COCKRAN. On the conditions existing to-day (without the confession of insufficient revenue which the issue of an additional billion would involve) the gentleman will not stand up here and pledge his great reputation to the statement that such a loan could be floated if it bore less than 6 per cent interest? I doubt very seriously whether such a loan could be floated even at 6 per cent. In view of the fact that, besides being an addition to the volume of our debt, the issue of such a loan would be a confession of failure to raise sufficient revenue, if it could be floated under such conditions even at 7 per cent, I think it would be an operation entitled to rank among the very greatest achievements in the history of finance.

Mr. MILLS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCKRAN. With pleasure.

Mr. MILLS. I would like to know where the gentleman gets his figures for that deficit of $1,000,000,000 a year for the year 1922?

Mr. COCKRAN. I get it from Mr. Mellon.

Mr. MILLS. Is the gentleman using Mr. Mellon's original estimate of some $4,500,000,000?

Mr. COCKRAN. I am, indeed.

Mr. MILLS. Is the gentleman also using the estimate of the Ways and Means Committee as to the revenue needed for 1922?

Mr. COCKRAN. Was the gentleman present when I asked questions about how its conclusions as to the probable expenditures of the Government were reached by the authors of this bill?

Mr. MILLS. I do not think I was.

Mr. COCKRAN. If the gentleman had assisted more closely at the proceedings of this body, he would have learned that the Committee on Ways and Means has no information itself, and therefore none to give us on that most important subject. And the House was plunged in that state of ignorance by the Committee on Rules when, using unnecessarily and unmercifully the party whip [applause on the Democratic side], it compelled adoption of the rule under which not one of us is able to express an opinion on any section of this bill, and which for that reason made your speech yesterday (one of the best of this session) absolutely fruitless and valueless.

Mr. MILLS. I will ask the gentleman whether it is a fact that the Ways and Means Committee has presented to the House an estimate of the revenue yield amounting to an excess of $4,300,000,000. Is not that so?

Mr. COCKRAN. Why, no. It has given no estimate based on any facts that have been disclosed to us.

Mr. MILLS. I would ask the gentleman—

Mr. COCKRAN. I certainly have never seen one. I think the gentleman is suffering from absence.

Mr. MILLS. I refer the gentleman to the report of the Ways and Means Committee.

Mr. COCKRAN. The report is the very one on which I have been asking members of the Ways and Means Committee to give me light.

I should make it understood here that I will yield to any gentleman on the other side who wishes to question me, provided the time occupied in answering him is not taken out of the time assigned to me. Two minutes have already been spent in this colloquy. Will the gentleman from Iowa assure me as much additional time as I may occupy in answering the questions of gentlemen on his side?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. COCKRAN. As much time as may be consumed by these interruptions. Do I get it?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. COCKRAN. Now, will the gentleman from New York [Mr. MILLS] point to any statement based on facts, not to some conclusion that is worthless, in the Ways and Means Committee report?

Mr. MILLS. I will. I refer the gentleman to page 4 of the report of the Ways and Means Committee as to the estimated income for the fiscal year.

Mr. COCKRAN. On what is it estimated?

Mr. MILLS. It is estimated, first, on the estimate of the Treasury Department—which is the best estimate you can get—based on existing revenue laws, less the estimate of the Treasury Department of losses to be sustained by amendment to the law. And the gentleman would find that the Treasury Department estimates of revenue for the fiscal year 1922 were $4,427,643,000, or only some seventy-odd millions less than the original estimate of expenditure of the Secretary of the Treasury on August 6 of this year. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. COCKRAN. The gentleman is giving us estimates based on other estimates and these on still other estimates. I have taken the Secretary's statement of expenses and revenue, and on the difference between that and the sum which the bill proposes to raise I am basing this discussion. You admit here a loss of $377,790,000 in this very report from which you read.

Mr. MILLS. The fiscal year 1922.

Mr. COCKRAN. I am speaking now of the next fiscal year.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. May I say to the gentleman from New York [Mr. COCKRAN] that in the statement referred to by his colleague [Mr. MILLS], containing a total revenue of $4,423,000,000, it includes estimated revenue for 1922 of $3,376,000,000, and the estimated revenue under the present law is $3,570,000,000. So that if his figures are correct upon which that total is based, he is going to reduce but $200,000,000 instead of $700,000,000.

Mr. DUNBAR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCKRAN. I will yield, bearing in mind that the time occupied in answering this gentleman is not to be deducted from the time allotted to me. I now have spent four minutes answering one set of questions from the other side of the Chamber.

Mr. DUNBAR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCKRAN. On the same condition.

Mr. DUNBAR. Secretary Mellon's report on August 3 for expenditure, made before the Ways and Means Committee, was $4,554,000,000. There have been reductions expected since then.

Mr. COCKRAN. Where and how? That is what we want to know.

Mr. DUNBAR. That is stated in the report.

Mr. COCKRAN. There is not a word showing the particular activities of the Government which will be affected by these reductions.

Mr. DUNBAR. Will the gentleman permit me to tell him?

Mr. COCKRAN. Certainly. That is the very information I am trying to get.

Mr. DUNBAR. The estimate made by Mr. Mellon is $4,554,000,000. There have been savings which have been accomplished or which will be effected.

Mr. COCKRAN. By whom?

Mr. DUNBAR. By Congress.

Mr. COCKRAN. Congress is not suffered to know anything about what it is doing or asked to do in this respect.

Mr. DUNBAR. I will tell you where: The War Department, $50,000,000; the Navy Department, $100,000,000; the Shipping Board, $100,000,000; the Department of Agriculture $25,000,000; the railroads, $50,000,000; miscellaneous, $25,000,000.

Mr. COCKRAN. That "miscellaneous" is good. Tell us what they are. [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

Mr. DUNBAR. I have not analyzed them.

Mr. COCKRAN. You never will.

Mr. DUNBAR. You asked me where the estimates were. I am giving them to you. What I know about the efficiency of Republican administration leads me to know that—

Mr. COCKRAN. There it is, "the efficiency of the Republican administration" is to solve all our difficulties—

Mr. DUNBAR. Will the gentleman let me continue?

Mr. COCKRAN. Yes; certainly.

Mr. DUNBAR. That brings our expenditures down to $4,204,000,000.

Mr. COCKRAN. How do you know that these estimates are correct?

Mr. DUNBAR. An estimate is an estimate. [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

Mr. COCKRAN. Exactly. Just that and nothing more.

Mr. DUNBAR. How does the gentleman know that any statement he makes is anything other than an estimate? [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. COCKRAN. I have some knowledge of the operation of my consciousness, and I am inquiring about estimates, not making any. But you are undertaking to enlighten us on something that you can not possibly know anything about—somebody else's estimates.

Mr. DUNBAR. These estimates are made of the reductions that are to be made, and when it is stated they will be made we have the right to believe that they will be made, and the Republican Party always carries out its promises. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. COCKRAN. Let the gentleman go on. This is most interesting. Go ahead. Do not let anybody interrupt you. Go on. [Laughter.]

Mr. DUNBAR. Our receipts for this year will be $4,200,000,000.

Mr. COCKRAN. You don't say! [Laughter.]

Mr. DUNBAR. And I will say further that in the estimate of expenditures provision is made and estimates are made of a reduction of our national debt of $550,000,000. Now, what right have you to dispute and deny these figures unless you can prove that they are not true? [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. COCKRAN. Mr. Chairman, I am basing my argument on Mr. Mellon's statement, the author of these estimates, that they represent the minimum of the Government's requirements.

Mr. DUNBAR. I gave you Mr. Mellon's estimate.

Mr. COCKRAN. We have it here—$4,500,000,000—and you are appropriating $750,000,000 less.

Mr. REAVIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCKRAN. Let me answer one gentleman at a time. You say that these estimates, which contradict other estimates, about which Congress knows nothing, should be considered sufficient basis for action by use, who are sworn to act on our own knowledge and on our own knowledge alone. You tell us that reductions in the expenses of government are to be made by certain departments and because they are to be made, therefore, you assume they are made. And in my judgment it is absurd—preposterous, vicious in the last degree—to say that we can justify ourselves in taking action on this matter of supreme importance involving the safety of our whole financial system on such vague speculations and conflicting statements.

Mr. DUNBAR. They are to be made.

Mr. COCKRAN. And therefore, being yet to be made, they are made. [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman has no right to interrupt the gentleman from New York without permission.

Mr. COCKRAN. Oh, pray, do not interfere with him. I have obtained 10 minutes additional time by reason of these interruptions. I am very much obliged for them.

There is one eminent authority that the gentleman now interrogating me seems to be quoting and paralleling. I do not know whether the gentleman ever saw the opera "The Mikado."

Mr. DUNBAR. How does the gentleman know I never saw it?

Mr. COCKRAN. I asked if you had not.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman has no right to interrupt.

Mr. COCKRAN. No; no. Please let him go on. The gentleman will remember then that Koko, who had been appointed lord high executioner, having been ordered by the Mikado to execute some one, reported in much detail the execution of a certain wandering minstrel whom, instead of actually killing, he had induced to leave the neighborhood but who subsequently turned out to be the heir apparent. It having then become necessary to confess that there had been no execution at all, Koko explained his action to the sovereign by saying, "You see, when your Majesty commands a thing to be done it is as good as done, and if it is as good as done it's done; and if it's done, why not say so?" [Laughter.] The gentleman tells us that the reductions will be made, and if they are to be made they are made, therefore why not legislate accordingly. [Laughter.]

Mr. REAVIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCKRAN. I yield now to the gentleman from Nebraska but under the same conditions as those made previously with the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN].

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I have answered questions out of my own time. Can not the gentleman give way?

Mr. COCKRAN. I can not give away one minute of the time allotted to me by my associates for the purpose of helping place our attitude before the country. Will the gentleman from Iowa accept the terms?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. REAVIS. You accept the estimate of the Secretary of the Treasury?

Mr. COCKRAN. It is the only thing before us.

Mr. REAVIS. I want to ask a question. The statement is made—

Mr. COCKRAN. By whom?

Mr. REAVIS. By the heads of these departments charged with the responsibility of their functions; men who are intimately acquainted with the activities and the expenditures that are to be made have made the statement that they will effect the economies stated in the report. Why do you choose to believe as absolutely correct the statement of the Secretary of the Treasury, who is not at the head of those departments, and still refuse to accept the statement of those who are responsible for their activities?

Mr. COCKRAN. Because if the matter is a subject of dispute between two sets of officers, and we have no accurate information of our own, it is a crime in my judgment to legislate in a way that involves a possibility of producing a deficit. [Applause in the Democratic side.]

Mr. REAVIS. And the estimate of the Secretary of the Treasury was sent to the committee, based on the statement of the heads of the departments that they would effect these economies. Why do you refuse to accept the statement of the departments?

Mr. COCKRAN. I do not accept or reject either statement. I complain of the fact that we have no information on which to decide intelligently between these conflicting estimates. As the gentleman describes it himself, the Secretary of the Treasury is in contradiction to officers of the Treasury, and the complaint I make is that we are proceeding here upon the say so, the estimate, the guess of some officers, which is in conflict with the estimate or the guess of others, to take action which may have consequences that will be irreparable, while the Constitution requires that we inquire for ourselves into every circumstance on which these varying estimates are based and then act upon our own judgment, enlightened by the facts.

Mr. REAVIS. If we wanted to determine a probable expenditure within a department, to whom would we apply for the facts?

Mr. COCKRAN. We would apply to the proper officers, and then judge for ourselves—

Mr. REAVIS. The proper officer would be the head of the department, and the report is based upon the statements of the heads of the departments.

Mr. COCKRAN. And if the head of the department made two contradictory statements, we should reject them both and seek other avenues of information. [Applause.]

Mr. REAVIS. The only statement upon which the gentleman relies is the statement of the man who has made contradictory statements.

Mr. COCKRAN. My complaint is that we have no statement on which anybody can rely, and that without a single statement on which anybody can rely you are reducing these taxes and taking the risk of a deficit which if it occurs must be met by an issue of bonds. And that, I fear, will work the catastrophe which I was about to describe when I was interrupted by the enlightening questions of the gentleman who evidently took his cue from Koko in the Mikado. [Applause and laughter.]

Mr. OLIVER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCKRAN. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. OLIVER. Accepting the statements of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. REAVIS] as the basis of the estimate, I would like the gentleman from Nebraska to answer whether the proper officer of the Navy, who is the chief of operations, has indicated to anyone that there can be a saving of $100,000,000 in the Navy? On the other hand, he has stated to members of the conference committee recently that there would be a deficit rather than a saving, and I ask whether or not that officer has in any way indicated that there will be a saving of $100,000,000.

Mr. REAVIS. If the gentleman is asking me, he has not stated to me one way or the other.

Mr. COCKRAN. Now, Mr. Chairman, I return to the proposition from which I was diverted by these interruptions. An issue of bonds at this time to supply a deficiency in the revenues necessary to maintain the Government will work havoc unspeakable in our industrial life. I have said—I repeat it, and it is confirmed by every one of these interruptions—there is no evidence before the House on which anybody could rely that these estimates of national expenses which the Secretary of the Treasury says are based on the expenses of the year before—not on mere guesses—can safely be disregarded, and that being so I charge it would be nothing short of a crime—a crime of grave proportions—to refuse the revenues which the Treasury asks upon an assumption of economies which have not been made, and which many dispute can be made.

Suppose it should turn out that the estimates of the Secretary were correct and a deficit is the result of disregarding them? What will be the consequence? Clearly there must be an issue of bonds. If we are driven to that course, with bonds already outstanding bearing 5½ per cent interest and enjoying tax exemption selling just at par, a new issue made necessary by insufficient revenues to meet the expenses of the Government would be impossible to market except at a much higher rate of interest. And what will be the effect of that? Now, I appeal to my friend from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] to cast aside for a moment these shackles of party loyalty which sometimes hamper his intellectual processes and to give us the benefit of those clear-minded opinions which have been reflected in his published works upon economics, by telling us what will be the effect.

I do not think the gentleman will dispute that it must depreciate gravely the value of bonds bearing a lesser interest—that is to say, of all outstanding national obligations. And what must be the effect of that? A vast mass of these Government bonds are pledged to secure loans extended to persons engaged in various industrial operations. With a decline in their value there will be a decline in the credits based on them, and that of itself will create a panic graver than any this country has ever seen—a panic beside which the panics of 1873 and 1893, each of which lasted four or five years, will be as a gentle zephyr compared to a tropical cyclone. Each of these panics was caused by comparatively slight disturbances in the machinery of exchange, and it lasted through some five years of ever-deepening misery and distress. Yet here you are basing all these estimates of the amount of revenue to be yielded by this bill on the idea that this, the gravest industrial disturbance the world has ever seen, will be overcome—at least that recovery from it will begin—during the next year. This whole legislation is based concededly on the expectation of better times next year.

I venture to warn you now that entirely independent of this bill—no matter what laws you may enact—with trade everywhere depressed—with imports declining, at the alarming rate shown by reports of the Government, and certain to decline further under operation of the new tariff framed avowedly to restrict them—conditions are approaching which will be harder, more desperate, than any this country has ever seen. Not a condition of panic but a cataclysm of destruction will be the dreadful result if on top of our present difficulties we should be forced to go out into the market and try to borrow a billion dollars, which we could only obtain—if we could obtain them at all—at rates so high that the value of all our outstanding securities would be greatly reduced, with a resultant injury to our credit which at this time is incalculable.

Mr. Chairman, I do not want to dwell on difficulties which are often aggravated by discussion or description of them. I have spoken what I believe to be the truth. I have uttered the warning which a sense of duty impels me to give. Now the responsibility is with the majority, where the people have lodged the power of legislation.

Mr. Chairman, how much time have I remaining? I had an hour and ten minutes altogether.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has 25 minutes remaining.

Mr. COCKRAN. Mr. Chairman, there is one feature of the provision reducing the highest surtaxes which I have not yet mentioned and to which I ask attention now. You remember it has been defended chiefly on the ground that the Government can not collect these very high surtaxes because owners of large incomes will avoid them by diverting their capital to tax-exempt securities. The value which this argument deserves is one of the things that has been shown very clearly by the course of this debate, restricted though its scope has been by the Committee on Rules.

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY], who spoke here with a degree of candor that is entirely creditable to him, bemoaned the existence of some fifteen or eighteen billions of tax-exempt securities, denouncing them as a serious menace to the financial stability of the country by reason of the safe asylum they afforded vast masses of capital eager to escape taxation. I think the whole House agrees that tax-exempt securities in great numbers are in themselves a public menace. Certainly we on this side believe that there should not be in this whole country any property or element of value exempt from taxation. Neither man nor thing should be exempt from contributing to the support of the Government that protects them.

And yet in this very bill you are proposing to increase the number of tax-exempt securities indefinitely. Under this measure American money can be invested abroad to any amount and earn for its owners returns, profits, or incomes aggregating millions and hundreds of millions every year, all of which will be exempt from taxation; that is to say, you give money, capital employed in England, France, Russia, anywhere throughout the world, an advantage which you refuse to give it here. You penalize the employment of capital at home and at the same time you increase indefinitely the number of tax-exempt securities, to the existence of which you attribute the incapacity of the Government to compel owners of great wealth to contribute their just share to its support. Was ever pretense so shallow advanced to afford justification for surrender so abject to the demands of a small and arrogant but, as these proposals show, all-powerful class?

Mr. LONDON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCKRAN. Yes.

Mr. LONDON. I want to know if we would not have to maintain an extensive Navy to protect these investments abroad?

Mr. COCKRAN. Oh, the question of disarmament is entirely too extensive to discuss here.

Mr. Chairman, how is the House to regain possession of its constitutional powers and employ them to deliver our country from the class domination which this measure confirms by the discriminatory system of taxation which it establishes and from the peril of financial disaster which its failure to provide sufficient revenue for support of the Government invites? It can be done in one way. You can defeat the previous question. That would compel the managers or leaders who have taken us into their keeping to rearrange the procedure and give the majority of the House, as well as the minority, an opportunity to perfect the bill by proper amendments and at the same time to obtain the full information, on which alone they can discharge their sworn duty.

Mr. Chairman, conceive for a moment our actual situation. We are stumbling along in the dark to performances of the most important task which ever was imposed on the House of Representatives, and we are denied opportunity even to express an opinion by a separate vote on any one of the various proposals submitted by us or access to information by which such a vote could be enlightened.

Members on both sides have been alike the victims of this preposterous tyranny which has robbed the House of all consequence, respect, or right to respect.

I appeal especially to the young men of the majority to strike down the domination of the Committee on Rules, by which you are reduced to a position in our political system as contemptible as members of the Electoral College. When the Constitution gave you power over the purse, it gave you every power. The condition you are in is your own fault. Speeches have been delivered in the course of this debate which embodied suggestions that certainly deserved discussion, if not adoption. The gentleman from New York [Mr. MILLS] made a speech yesterday conveying an original suggestion for applying to actual government a philosophic idea which would have well repaid discussion extending over one or even three days. It was of special value in these days, because it indicated a possible new and abundant source of revenue, when the whole puzzle of civilization is where to find additional revenue. He might as well have whistled it to a comic tune from the front steps of this building. In the Senate such a suggestion would have been received with the interest and considered with the attention it deserves. But it did not and could not under the rules receive any consideration whatever by this House, although it is intrusted by the Constitution with control of the purse, and therefore not merely with the right to originate all appropriations and revenue bills, but with the task of finding the sources from which these appropriations and revenues are to be drawn.

It is exceedingly doubtful if a single member of the Committee on Rules understood or is capable of understanding the subject broached by the gentleman from New York. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN], with that ever present smile like the light nailed to the mast of a ship at sea, interrupted him to remark that he was 50 years ahead of the House. Why was he 50 years ahead of the House? Only because the House is not allowed to consider any proposal or suggestion by a Member. Had we been allowed to consider that proposal it might not have been adopted. I would probably have voted against it. But, even if rejected, discussion of it would undoubtedly have produced conclusions of substantial value to us and to the country. The House is always wiser than any of its Members; but its wisdom is the aggregate wisdom of all its Members when they are allowed entire freedom of speech. When a legislative body is gagged by a small fraction as we are gagged, the wisdom of that small fraction will always be the measure of the House's wisdom. Here a proposal appealing to the highest intelligence of the House is stifled by intelligence which is certainly not its highest. Surely it is a condition little less than appalling to find the abilities of the House—and they are shining—stifled by its stupidities.

Again I appeal to gentlemen on the other side, and ask them to free themselves and the House from this baleful, hateful, debasing domination which robs the office they hold of all dignity.

Mr. Chairman, this appeal is not addressed to the personal interest of Members, to their discretion, or their favor. It is an appeal to their duty, to their oaths, to their consciences as officers of a great Government.

Consider, sir, for one moment the essential character of our office. What is the main function of a representative body? First, and above all, to fix the amount of money that will be contributed for the support of the Government, to appropriate those moneys among the different departments, and to decide the sources from which these supplies are to be drawn.

Representative bodies were not established originally for legislation but for the purpose of providing moneys by taxation for support of the Crown; that is to say, of the government. The power to legislate grew out of the power to levy taxes. The early Parliaments consisted of the owners of property—in those days the landowners or landlords—the lords spiritual and temporal as they were termed assembled to consider and decide what assistance they would give the King in his military enterprises.

With the growth of cities and boroughs, through the development of industry, caused mainly by the crusades and the necessity for furnishing supplies and means of transportation to those great bodies of men, a very considerable volume of wealth was created by men who were not among the lords of the soil. To make its owners contribute to the King's support became a matter of great urgency in times of conflict. It was an English King who first hit upon the plan of summoning the boroughs to send representatives to Parliament. Why? Not to take part in legislation but solely to give the King subsidies, as they were then called. Besides the lords of the soil there were also men who, for individual military service, had been given grants of land, called knights' fees, not sufficient, however, to entitle them to seats among the peers. These holders of knights' fees were also summoned to meet in their different counties or shires and elect representatives to Parliament for the purpose of granting subsidies to the King.

All these elected representatives met with the other orders and voted the supplies, after which they were sent away, the lords, spiritual and temporal, remaining in session to do the business of the realm. The proclamation of Edward I dismissing the burgesses and knights of the shire—as these representatives of counties have always been called—from attendance on Parliament after they had voted supplies is still extant.

Gradually these county representatives and representatives of the boroughs came to make common cause in remonstrating to the King against wrongs committed by his officers and to unite in demanding redress of these grievances as a condition of granting appropriations. This gave rise to a system of procedure under which the King when Parliament assembled appointed commissioners to receive petitions addressed to him by representatives from different parts of his realm. The English King was ruler then over larger territories in France than in England. And so in the first records of Parliament we find that commissioners were appointed for Guienne, Aquitaine, Anjou, and other French territories, for English counties, the various ridings of Yorkshire, for Wales, for Scotland, and for Ireland, to receive the petitions of the commons. When the King was informed by petition that his officers had committed acts which were charged to be in violation of the ancient law of England, if he acknowledged the justice of the charge he said, "Le roi le veut"—the King wills it. And this was a promise that the offense would not be repeated, which was in effect a statute forbidding it. If the King denied that the act was unlawful, he said, "Le roi s'en avisera"—the King will consider it. And this was equivalent to rejection of that particular proposal of legislation. In the course of time the "Knights of the Shires" and the representatives of the boroughs and guilds demanded that they be allowed to meet separately from the Lords. Their demand was conceded, and thus was formally established the House of Commons.

They met for the first time as a separate body in the Abbot's House at Westminster. Anyone who has been in the chamber of the British House of Commons can see that to this day it is modeled upon a monastic refectory, which was its original meeting place. The House of Commons of England grew steadily in consequence till it became the whole legislative power. It became not merely the depository of all power in England but the most important legislative body in the world entirely through the jealous vigilance with which its members always guarded and asserted their right to control the public purse. And it was undoubtedly the intention of the framers of our Constitution to give this body all the power and importance of the House of Commons when they gave us power over the purse. But we have suffered that control to be taken from us, or, rather, we have thrown it away, and for that reason we have sunk as low as the House of Commons has risen in importance. How far we have fallen from that place of dignity the framers of the Constitution intended for us will be apparent from a resolution calling attention to a gross disregard of our privileges and rights by the Executive and the Senate on a very recent occasion, which I shall offer before we adjourn to-day.

Only a few weeks ago the President of the United States entered the Senate Chamber and addressed to it a communication respecting a bill then pending before it which directly affected expenditure of the public revenue. He did not even take the trouble to send for us. Yet under the Constitution he has no right to address one body of Congress to the exclusion of the other on a legislative matter. He may consult the Senate on matters affecting Executive functions, but on matters of legislation he can only address Congress, and Congress, theoretically, at least, consists of the Senate and the House of Representatives.

We have long been the object of silent contempt; now we are treated with open contempt. You gentlemen, after all, are somewhat concerned in the dignity of this House. Will you support this resolution which I shall place in the basket? It is a privileged resolution and therefore is one on which you will be required to vote. That necessity can not be evaded; it must be faced. I hope your vote upon it will show more independence and be more for the dignity of the House than the one cast a few days ago which is now driving you to consider this bill in a manner the Constitution forbids. Mr. Chairman, here is the resolution which I propose to offer:

Whereas on the 12th day of July in the present year of our Lord, 1921, the Hon. Warren G. Harding, President of the United States, appeared before the Senate, having then before it for consideration an unfinished business Senate bill 506, to provide adequate compensation for veterans of the World War, and "standing at the Vice President's desk" then and there addressed to it verbally a communication which appears in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of that day as part of the regular proceedings of the Senate; and

Whereas the Constitution of the United States, which empowers the President to address recommendations respecting legislation to Congress, does not authorize him to address such communications to either House of Congress to the exclusion of the other; and

Whereas such exclusion of this House from the right conferred upon it by the Constitution to share in all communications which the President may address to Congress respecting legislation is an invasion of its privileges which, if unrebuked, is likely to be frequently repeated, to the grave impairment of the position assigned to it by the Constitution in the political system of the country: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That a special committee of nine Members be appointed by the Speaker to consider what measures should be taken to vindicate the rights and privileges which have been violated and invaded by this action of the President in addressing a communication respecting legislation to the Senate and not to the Congress, as required by the Constitution; and be it further

Resolved, That said committee report its conclusions to this House, together with recommendations for such action thereon as in its judgment will be effective to prevent recurrence of such unwarrantable, illegal, and unconstitutional violation of its rights, invasion of its privileges, and injury to its dignity.

Mr. Chairman, I venture to hope that this resolution will be adopted. I venture to hope that the Speaker will rise to the necessity, the opportunity, that is before him and that under his leadership we may all unite in taking such action that never again will this House be openly flaunted by the Executive and one branch of Congress or denied the rights bestowed on us by the Constitution.

Mr. Chairman, the speakership has occupied many times in the course of history positions of great difficulty, but of these difficulties in the past it made opportunities by which it became the great pillar and bulwark of parliamentary institutions. Under the ancient formula the King charged the Commons to go "and choose a stout man from among your number to speak for you and present your petitions." And the speaker had need to be a stout man in those days, for when he presented the claims of the Commons he often took serious personal risk. Old Peter Wentworth was thrown into prison by Queen Elizabeth for presenting a remonstrance of the Commons against granting monopolies by royal warrant; but the Commons stood by him, and even that despotic princess was compelled to liberate him. When the whole existence of Parliament trembled in the balance, when the power and privileges of the Commons were in process of vigorous assertion against encroachments by the Crown, an arbitrary King, Charles the First, invaded the house to arrest with his own hand Hampton, Pym, and three other members who were the most conspicuous of its leaders and champions. Not being able to discern them, he turned to the speaker and ordered him to point them out or declare where they were, but that officer, who Macaulay said up to then had been known as a man unusually timid and weak of purpose, got down on his knees and said:

May it please your Majesty, I have neither eyes to see nor tongue to speak in this house but as the house is pleased to direct me, whose servant I am.

The courage on that day—January 4, I think it was, 1642—of William Lenthall saved the existence and established the power of the House of Commons, and raised him to a high place in the temple of fame.

I hope this House will rise to the vindication of its dignity and the assertion of its powers and that Members on both sides will unite in commissioning the present Speaker, for whom I have the most profound respect, to face the forces which have disregarded our rights with the declaration that he is the mouth of the House to declare its privileges, that he is the eyes of the House to discover any attempt to invade them; and by appointment of a committee strong enough to make that declaration effective establish not merely the dignity of this body but the integrity of our Constitution.

That Constitution has sought to make us what we ought to be. Let us make ourselves what we were intended to be, the dominant element of this constitutional system, the voice through which the opinions of the American people will always find full and complete expression, the shield of their liberties, the champion of their rights, the chief means through which justice, equality, and boundless prosperity will be made their permanent possessions throughout all the years that are to come. [Great applause.]

Mr. Chairman, before I yield back the remainder of my time, which I believe is four minutes, I shall—obeying the rules of the House—deposit in the basket as though I were doing something surreptitious, this resolution, which is intended to assert its dignity and maintain its power. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman yields back three minutes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I yield 45 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH]. [Applause.]

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, my eloquent friend from New York [Mr. COCKRAN] did me the honor to say that he regarded me as an able historian. For such a compliment from the very accomplished scholar from New York I feel deeply grateful, and I confess that I never enjoyed listening more to a historical dissertation than I did to the speech of my friend from New York. May I say, however, and I say it with the greatest respect and admiration for my friend, that it occurs to me that his speech might more properly have been made on the floor of the House of Commons than in the American Congress [applause on the Republican side], for they in England are more interested in hearing about kings and mikados and lords, temporal and spiritual, than we are here in Washington. [Applause on the Republican side.] Now, let me say to my friend from New York and to the House that it is not because of this rule under which we are operating that it is utterly futile to discuss the merits of this bill in an attempt to swing to our support Members of that side. It is not the rule that prevents that. It is the new system under which you are operating, this system which became evident at the time when the tariff bill was before the House, that no man on that side dared to say a word of what ought to be done with regard to a tariff or revenue bill until a telegram had come from Scotland Neck, N. C. [Applause on the Republican side.] And it is true of this bill, that not one of you had made a remark for or against any definite policy until you received a telegram from Scotland Neck, N. C. Under the new form of the administration of your party organization a telegram has taken the place of the Burleson victoria. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.] Now, there is one evident thing that evolves itself out of the eloquent speech of my friend from New York, one definite and positive statement that stands out before all others in his speech, and that is that we are not justified in founding taxation or revenue legislation upon the estimates of the Treasury Department.

If that were true, the Congress could not legislate either in the way of appropriations or raising revenue, because from time immemorial revenue bills and appropriation bills have been based upon estimates. That side when in control of the affairs of this House during the war could not have brought in any of the great revenue bills necessary to pay our expenses, because every one of them was based on estimates from the Treasury, and, furthermore—and the gentleman from New York would have realized it had he been a member of the Ways and Means Committee at that time—that every one of them was based upon figures furnished by exactly the same men who furnish them to-day. And I will ask the gentleman from Mississippi or any other Democratic member of the Ways and Means Committee if he distrusts the figures and estimates made by Mr. McCoy?

Mr. COLLIER. I do not distrust Mr. McCoy's figures; I believe he is one of the most reliable actuaries we can find; but we did not know anything about the figures.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The figures upon which this revenue bill is based are Mr. McCoy's.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I have not the time to yield.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The gentleman asked a question and I would like to answer it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. COLLIER. I will say this: It is true we got our estimates from the department, but when we got them from the department we got estimates that the committee knew something about and the membership of the House knew something about, and we did not get estimates from the Secretary of the Treasury one day that were held up for several weeks and a different estimate coming in with the Democrats not knowing of them by reason of being barred from the committee, and the committee estimate is the one we are relying upon. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. LONGWORTH. But the gentleman knows that the figures upon which this last estimate has been based are the figures furnished by Mr. McCoy, and every Democratic Member—

Mr. COLLIER. The gentleman does not know.

Mr. LONGWORTH (continuing). On the Ways and Means Committee from the beginning—and I sat with them in these last revenue bills after the war was on—every figure upon which we acted was furnished by exactly the same department of which he is the head, and on which we are now acting.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. If the gentleman will permit, there is only one difference, and that is that we have taken more pains to verify the estimates on the part of the committee than before.

Mr. LONGWORTH. That is undoubtedly true.

Mr. COLLIER. I will yield two minutes to the gentleman if he will permit me to answer a statement that he has charged me with, that I know where those figures came from. How could I know or how could any other minority member know when you only invited us before the committee when the hearings were on the important matter of whether we should reduce the tax on cough drops and candy? But when the officials of the Treasury Department came in, with the exception of two parts of days when the Secretary was there, the minority was barred from the committee. And I do not know where your figures come from, speaking for myself.

Mr. LONGWORTH. In reply to the gentleman from Mississippi, the "gentleman from Ohio" admits he took a long chance when he imputed knowledge to him.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] and his colleagues have been complaining, they have been shedding tears, almost, about the fact that they were not invited to cooperate in the formation of this bill.

I repeat the question I asked this morning of the leader of the Democracy. When in our history, when in the history of this country in the formation of any tariff or revenue bill, was the minority invited to cooperate with the majority? The gentleman from Tennessee was not sure of his facts, because he said that the minority had been invited to cooperate with the majority during the formation of the revenue bills of 1916 and 1917. And I read, and I am going to read again in a moment, the minority report of the committee on the 1917 bill. The fact is, gentlemen, that during the eight years from 1911 to 1919, when the Democratic Party was in control of the affairs of this House, up to the time that we had actually gone into the war, never were the Republican members of the Ways and Means Committee invited to join with the Democrats. And it ill becomes the Democracy now, four years after the war is over, to complain that we are partisan or have not treated them fairly.

I read from the report of the minority, signed by every member of the minority of the Ways and Means Committee, dated January 13, 1917, mind you—at a time when every sensible man knew that our entry into the war was a matter of weeks, if not days, even then, for the purposes of making partisan capital out of their revenue bills, they refused to permit the minority to cooperate with them. Here is the report. I will read a part of it:

The minority members of the Committee on Ways and Means agree with the report of the majority members that the United States Treasury is in a depleted condition and that provision must be made for the raising of additional revenue to meet the current appropriations by Congress.

Minority members, however, condemn the method now provided as the method of providing revenue now proposed, as an unwarranted and burdensome tax upon industry, which if enacted into law will be reflected upon the labor employed and will add to the price of commodities and the rapidly increasing cost of living.

The latter sentence applied to the excess-profits tax, which was invented by the Democracy at that period. The closing sentence of that report was as follows:

The minority members of the Ways and Means Committee, having no opportunity to formally confer with the majority in the matter of raising revenue to meet the Treasury deficiencies, decline to accept responsibility for the bill which the majority has submitted to the House.

And the Democrats are complaining now, four years after the war is over, that we have not treated them fairly. As a matter of fact, even if we had desired to show them the courtesy of asking their cooperation in the framing of this great revenue bill, they themselves from the beginning made it impossible. From the beginning they have boastfully announced that they proposed to put every stumblingblock they could invent in the way of the passage of this bill or any revenue bill that was made by the Republican Party. The result of having enjoyed their cooperation would simply have been to delay indefinitely the bringing in of this bill at a time when the country is groaning under the burdens of taxation due to the wasteful extravagance and shiftless administration of the affairs of this Nation in the last administration. [Applause on the Republican side.] The Republican members of the Ways and Means Committee, together with the Republican membership of this House, assembled in conference, are responsible for this bill, and we accept the responsibility and accept it cheerfully.

No party which ever came into power in this or any other country inherited the heritage of debt from their opponents so colossal and appalling.

At the time of the last Republican convention it seemed impossible that a real reduction of taxation could be made so early as this, and so there was no absolute definite promise in our platform as to reduction.

But since that time, by reason of the policy of rigid economy enforced in this Congress and by the administration, we have proved it possible not only to equalize burdens but actually to reduce taxes to the extent of $900,000,000, and that without proposing any new form of taxation to put upon the shoulders of the American people. [Applause on the Republican side.]

It is true that for the first year all of that reduction will not be apparent. The second year will show more than $600,000,000 net reduction. For myself I am perfectly frank to say that I very much regret that the total amount of reduction should not have been made to apply immediately. I believe that a mistake was made in deciding in conference to make the repeal of the excess-profits taxes and of the high surtaxes effective as of the 1st of next January instead of the 1st of last January. But it was the will of the majority of my party, and I acquiesced. But these two forms of taxation, to my mind, are the greatest of all shackles to business and industrial enterprise that now exist, and I wish they might have been gotten rid of at once. However, the assurance that they will both be repealed next year will undoubtedly do a great deal to restore a more healthy condition of business and industry in this country.

The business of this country to-day is sick. Large numbers of men are out of employment. Capital is in hiding. This is due in some degree, no doubt, to the inevitable reaction after the most disastrous and devastating war of all the centuries. But it is also due in great degree to a tax burden insupportable in time of peace. Of all taxes the excess-profits tax is the most burdensome not only on the American producer but on the American consumer. I do not assert that the tax necessarily is always passed on as such, but in a rising market such as we had during the war and some time after this tax was undoubtedly passed and multiplied in the passing.

For myself, I supported the excess-profits tax during the war because it produced an enormous revenue, something like a billion and a quarter of dollars. But I opposed it before the war and I oppose it now. It, together with the cost-plus contract system, was more responsible for the high increase in the cost of living than anything else in my opinion. I believe, and I said so at that time, that instead of the excess-profits tax we ought to have had a war-profits tax. We ought to have taken 80 per cent, or perhaps more, of all the difference that men made between before the war and during the war, and if we had done that we would never have needed the cost-plus system. It would not have made much difference whether men made large profits or not, because they would have been compelled to put 80 per cent back into the Treasury of the United States, and it would not have resulted in a steadily increasing cost of everything that the American people had to buy.

This excess-profits tax, as I said, first appeared in the revenue law of 1917. It took at that time quite a mild form. It was a tax of 8 per cent on excess earnings above 8 per cent based on the invested capital of corporations and partnerships. At that time the Republican Party went on record solidly against it, and we are now proposing to repeal it; and if I may be pardoned—

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I am going to read now what I said at the time as to what I believed would be the effect of the excess-profits tax. Will the gentleman permit me to read before answering his question?

In opposing the amendment to strike out the excess-profits tax, which received the affirmative vote of every Republican in the House and the opposing vote of every Democrat, I said this:

You propose as a means of raising a revenue of some $225,000,000 a tax unique in the history of this country, a tax never before heard of either in time of peace or in time of war. You propose a tax upon business, a tax upon the business of the country, big and little, and particularly little; a tax based not upon magnitude of operation, but upon economy of operation; a tax to be imposed simply and solely upon efficiency of production. You propose a tax which would be borne in the main not by men of large capital but men of small capital. You propose to tax American citizens who by intelligent, progressive, and economical management of their resources have done a prosperous business and to let those of larger capital, but whose methods have been wasteful, extravagant, and unprogressive, go free.

The result of this new policy, conceived apparently in praise of shiftlessness, wastefulness, and extravagance, will be to punish thrift, economy, and progress.

This new taxation scheme is the last and strongest link in the chain that the Democratic Party have been forging to shackle American business at home and abroad. The tax they propose is a direct tax on success, on success not necessarily great or distinguished but upon plain, ordinarily moderate success, success that distinguishes efficiency from shiftlessness and thrift from wastefulness.

Mr. YATES. Will the gentleman give us the date?

Mr. LONGWORTH. That was January 13, 1917. Something more than a year afterwards the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. McAdoo, said this of the working of the excess-profits tax in his letter to the Ways and Means Committee June 5, 1918:

The distinction between the war-profits tax and the excess-profits tax is not a matter of form but of substance. By a war-profits tax we mean a tax upon profits in excess of those realized before the war. By an excess-profits tax we mean a tax upon profits in excess of a given return upon capital. The theory of a war-profits tax is to tax profits due to the war. The theory of an excess-profits tax is to tax profits over and above a given return of capital. A war-profits tax finds its sanction in the conviction of all patriotic men, of whatever economic or political school, that no one should profit largely by the war. The excess-profits tax must rest upon the wholly indefensible notion that it is a function of taxation to bring all profits down to one level with relation to the amount of capital invested and to deprive industry, foresight, and sagacity of their fruits. The excess-profits tax exempts capital and burdens brains, ability, and energy. The excess-profits tax falls less heavily upon big business than small business; because big business is generally overcapitalized and small business is often undercapitalized.

The war-profits tax would tax all war profits at one high rate; the excess-profits tax does, and for safety must, tax all excess profits at lower and graduated rates. Any graduated tax upon corporations is indefensible in theory, for corporations are only aggregations of individuals, and by such a tax the numerous small stockholders of a great corporation may be taxed at a higher rate than the very wealthy large stockholders of a relatively smaller corporation. The object of a graduated tax should be to make taxes fall upon the rich, who are best able to pay them. The graduated excess-profits tax disregards this and often produces the reverse result.

It seems that the experience of the Treasury Department in the administration of that tax substantially justified what I had said the year before.

May I say to my friend from Kansas that my advocacy of the repeal of both the excess-profit tax and the higher surtaxes is not for the purpose of benefiting wealth, as such, but to bring the money into the Treasury that is now absent and to benefit particularly small business. Our experience of the excess-profit tax has been this: In the very beginning many of the larger corporations were heavily caught by it because it was based on invested capital, and they had not had the opportunity in the beginning to pad up their invested capital so as to relieve their profits from the imposition of the very highest of the surtaxes; but they soon found out how to do it, and from then on the big corporations—the highly organized corporations of great capital—have made themselves practically exempt from the excess-profits tax. But that has been impossible for the small corporations of $50,000 or $100,000 capital, close corporations officered by a few men who give their entire time practically to the business of their concerns. They can not pad their capital. They can not have issues of securities and transfers of securities. They are the ones who have been paying the excess-profits tax. And, moreover, as I say, I do not assert that in every case the excess-profit tax has been passed on. In the beginning it could not be passed at all; but in the rising market that came along, when men found that they could get what they charged, they began to figure in their prices the excess-profits tax, sometimes double and triple what their actual excess-profits tax was going to be; and that was characteristic of the return for 1919-20 and up to this year.

Another method that was found of avoiding it was in the tremendous increase in advertising, because by making large expenditures for advertising corporations could help themselves at the same time and spend enough out of their income to bring their return on invested capital below the higher rates of the surtax. It has been avoided, it has been dodged, and year after year it will be dodged all the more—and quite legitimately—so that instead of raising a billion and a quarter of dollars it is estimated that for this calendar year it will raise only $450,000,000.

One of the worst features of it is with regard to the difficulty of figuring invested capital both from the standpoint of the taxpayer and of the Treasury. It is to the last degree complicated and annoying. No other country has ever, so far as I know, imposed a tax based on returns from invested capital. All the excess-profit taxes upon which France and England and Germany and other countries relied for raising their war revenues were taxes based not upon return on invested capital but upon the actual difference in the return before the war and during the war.

Mr. LINEBERGER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I yield to my friend.

Mr. LINEBERGER. Is it not a fact that not only was the prophecy of the gentleman from Ohio, made in 1917, afterwards confirmed by the experience of Mr. McAdoo, the Democratic Secretary of the Treasury, but that it was also confirmed afterwards by Mr. Wilson, the Democratic President? And as late as 1920, in the Democratic platform, did they not practically go on record for a repeal of the excess-profits tax?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Absolutely; and I am about to read a quotation from that.

Mr. LINEBERGER. And it was not a party matter at all until this bill came up, was it?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Not at all. May I first read—I think it will be enlightening to my friends, particularly on the other side—the views of a very distinguished Democrat on this subject?—I think you will concede that the gentleman whose words I am about to read has not been regarded generally as a conservative type of Democrat, but rather as one perhaps very radical, who yields an immense power to punish people who vote against progressive ideas.

I read from the New York American an editorial of September 24, 1919, signed by William R. Hearst. I think this will be interesting to gentlemen, those progressive (?) Democrats, those new Democrats, who act on telegrams and repudiated the sound advice of their party leaders throughout the last campaign.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Yes.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Does the gentleman say that William R. Hearst is a Democrat?

Mr. LONGWORTH. He is a Democrat. Does the gentleman deny it?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I know he supported the President of the United States in the last election.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The gentleman knows that, does he?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes; he supported him in his newspapers and the gentleman from Ohio knows it.

Mr. LONGWORTH. No; I think he supported the gentleman's friend, Mr. Cox. May I add that your candidate for the Presidency in the last campaign went considerably further in his tax program than any Member on this side of the House, because he recommended the repeal of the excess-profits tax and practically all of the income taxes, and to substitute a turnover-sales tax, and he advocates it now. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Let me read this very philosophical, and I think peculiarly well-written article, with which I agree absolutely:

There are certain taxes which fall not only with peculiar injustice but with peculiar injury upon individuals and business enterprises.

Excess-profit taxes were defensible during the war because any kind of tax was in a sense defensible even to the point of confiscation, the interests of the Nation being wholly superior to the interests of any individual or industry. But now that the war is over and the crying need for funds at any cost, even at the sacrifice of business progress, is ended, there should be more intelligent judgment and discrimination in the imposition of taxes.

The most harmful taxes—that is, those most harmful to industry, to the development of new enterprises and the wider employment of labor—should be removed, and taxation steadily reduced until it again reaches the plane of legitimate governmental necessity.

The excess-profits tax had the special excuse for existence during the war period that it was supposed to fall, and did to a certain extent fall, upon those industries which made peculiar profits out of the war. Now that the war is over and no industries can be making such profits that reason for the excess-profits tax is removed. The excess-profits tax now falls with notable injustice upon new enterprises, the very kind of enterprises that it should be the purpose of the Government to encourage, not only for the development of industry but for the additional employment of labor.

Such a form of unjust taxation is a burden upon a new enterprise, indeed, a blight upon a new enterprise, and there is no excuse for maintaining it, no reason for retaining it.

Mr. O'CONNOR rose.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Does the gentleman from Louisiana subscribe to that article?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Does the gentleman from Ohio subscribe to it?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Absolutely; I always agree with a Democrat if he is right.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. And he agrees with a Republican when he is right?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Yes; and that is the reason I more often agree with the Republicans than with the Democrats. Now, let me read this contribution from the ablest financier connected with the last Democratic administration. I do not know whether any of you gentlemen are prepared to controvert my description of him, but I refer to Secretary of the Treasury, CARTER GLASS, who in his report to Congress of December, 1919, said:

The Treasury's objections to the excess-profits tax even as a war expedient (in contradistinction to a war-profits tax) have been repeatedly voiced to the committees of the Congress. Still more objectionable is the operation of the excess-profits tax in peace times. It encourages wasteful expenditure, puts a premium on overcapitalization and a penalty on brains, energy, and enterprise, discourages new ventures, and confirms old ventures in their monopolies. In many instances it acts as a consumption tax, is added to the cost of production upon which profits are figured in determining prices, and has been, and will so long as it is maintained on the statute books, continue to be a material factor in the increased cost of living.

Does the gentleman from Louisiana agree with CARTER GLASS?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I only rose to ask the gentleman a question, and when the gentleman answers my question I will endeavor to answer the question that he proposed to me a moment ago and which was answered by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES]. What did this tax yield in the year when Mr. McAdoo wrote the letter which the gentleman has read?

Mr. LONGWORTH. That was in 1919, and I think it yielded $700,000,000, or about that. It ran up as high as $1,200,000,000 and has fallen down to $450,000,000.

Mr. O'CONNOR. The gentleman asked me if I subscribed to the policy laid down by Mr. Hearst in regard to the excess-profits tax. If that was a good tax for the purpose of paying the war debt during the war, it is a good tax now, and will remain a good tax until the war debt, or a large part of it, is paid.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The gentleman believes in retaining all of the war taxes.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I would continue the excess-profits tax and the higher surtaxes until the expenses of the war are paid off. If the principle was good during the war as a method of financing the war debt it is good now, and I challenge the gentleman to contradict me successfully upon the principle I urge.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I dare anybody to run for office in an election in Ohio advocating the continuance of the war taxes. I am in favor of cutting out all war taxes of every description.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. Does the gentleman think a man could successfully run for Congress anywhere where there is any real sentiment demanding the continuation of war taxes?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Not where the right of suffrage is not greatly curtailed. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I yield.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. If the gentleman believes that, why did not he repeal the war taxes instead of repealing the surtax and the excess-profits tax?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Because the excess-profits tax and the surtaxes were the most obnoxious taxes of any in the bill and are purely war taxes.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. You have left in all the other war taxes—the tax on medicines of the poor people, on moving pictures—

Mr. LONGWORTH. Oh, we are not talking about that; we are talking about the big things, not the picayune things.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes; the gentleman and his party look only at the millionaires—the big things.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Now, I am going to talk about a big thing and about a big man. It is remarkable how suddenly those men who were criticizing only the other day some gentlemen on this side of the House for making what they called slighting remarks about former President Wilson have actually repudiated everything that he stood for during and since the war regarding the revenues. They have forgotten the messages of three great Secretaries of the Treasury; they act only upon telegrams. [Laughter.] What does this mean, if it means anything? And I ask the attention of some gentlemen who used to be supporters of President Wilson, who used to think that he spoke the Democratic doctrine, when they say now that they want to keep up all of the war taxes forever and forever. President Wilson, on December 2, 1919, said in this House:

The Congress might well consider whether the higher rates of income and profits taxes can in peace time be effectively productive of revenue, and whether they may not, on the contrary, be destructive of business activity and productive of waste and inefficiency.

I see the gentleman from Louisiana does not approve this sentiment.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Oh, my attention was just momentarily distracted. I am paying profound attention to the gentleman.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The gentleman disagrees with President Wilson, but I want to read this, because whether he disagrees with it or not it comes from a man of high standing with regard to the difference between peace taxes and war taxes. To continue what the President said:

There is a point at which in peace times high rates of income and profits taxes discourage energy, remove the incentive to new enterprise, encourage extravagant expenditures, and produce industrial stagnation with consequent unemployment and other attendant evils.

It will be seen how far the Democracy as at present organized has gotten away from their leaders in the last administration. To my mind it is lamentable, it is pathetic, to see the doctrines of this great man, whom formerly they worshiped, set at naught and trampled under foot merely because of a telegram from Scotland Neck, N. C. [Laughter.]

Mr. COLLIER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Yes.

Mr. COLLIER. The gentleman has been reading the position of former President Wilson.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Yes.

Mr. COLLIER. Can he read anywhere anything where a Democrat laid down the doctrine—President Wilson or any other Democrat—which says that the way to reduce these war taxes is to take the taxes off the wealth of about 2,000 people in this country and put those taxes onto the hundred million of other people in the country. Can the gentleman find anything like that?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I fear that the gentleman was so absorbed in discussion that he did not hear my reading of what President Wilson said, but he said precisely that thing.

Mr. COLLIER. I did not hear that.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The gentleman did not?

Mr. COLLIER. I certainly did not hear the gentleman or anyone else ever read that President Wilson advocated the taking of the taxes off the wealth of the country and the putting of them on the backs of the poor people of the country.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Oh, nobody has ever advocated that.

Mr. COLLIER. That is what this bill does.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Oh, the gentleman dreams that. He has not read the bill.

Mr. COLLIER. There may be some dreaming done here, but there is going to be an awakening some day because of this bill.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The gentleman has not read the bill or thought about it, because all he thought necessary was to read the telegram. [Laughter.]

Mr. COLLIER. I admit that we had very little opportunity to discuss the bill.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I shall submit to any unprejudiced mind, if such there be on that side of the House for the moment, on this taxation proposition, what President Wilson said, and ask whether it does not specifically recommend the lowering of the higher taxes on incomes and the doing away with the excess-profits tax. Let me repeat what I have just said:

The Congress might well consider whether the higher rates of income and profits taxes—

Note this, gentlemen, because this is a matter of great historical significance; it is from a great state paper on the subject of taxation:

The Congress might well consider whether the higher rates of income and profits taxes can in peace time be effectively productive of revenue, and whether they may not, on the contrary, be destructive of business activity and productive of waste and inefficiency. There is a point at which in peace times high rates of income and profits taxes discourage energy, remove the incentive to new enterprise, encourage extravagant expenditures, and produce industrial stagnation, with consequent unemployment and other attendant evils.

Mr. COLLIER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONGWORTH. The gentleman from Mississippi construes that to mean that we shall continue the war taxes.

Mr. COLLIER. The gentleman from Mississippi does not do anything of the sort, if the gentleman from Ohio will be kind enough to yield.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Of course, the trouble is that the gentleman and his party have given no consideration to this question. They have forgotten the teachings of their former master, and now—

Mr. COLLIER. The gentleman from Ohio knows that when it was advocated that the higher surtaxes be reduced sometime in the future it meant that when that reduction was made it would be made at a time when the expenses of the country permitted a reduction all along the line, and I declare again that you can not find where any Democratic President said that the high taxes on one class should be relieved and the others left as they were.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Why, of course. That is what I have been saying all along. The gentleman from Mississippi and his colleagues are opposed to any reduction of the tax burden at this time. They are perfectly consistent about it.

They say we can not afford to do it, and we ought not to do it, and the gentleman from Louisiana says we ought to continue all the war taxes until every bond is paid off.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I did not say all the war taxes.

Mr. COLLIER. Will the gentleman permit one interruption and I will agree not to ask any more. Will the gentleman permit one other interruption?

Mr. LONGWORTH. If that is a promise, I will.

Mr. COLLIER. I want to say this, gentlemen. The gentleman says we do not want any reduction. If you reduce the surtax just one-half from $66,000, just one-half from what you have made, you can get away from all these nuisance taxes which are so noxious to the American people. That is what the Democrats want to do; that is one of the things we want to do and will do in about two years.

Mr. LONGWORTH. That is one of the little things that was telegraphed you to do, but the main things you were telegraphed about and have got to do is to vote against any increase of the surtax, any decrease of the excess-profits tax, and any increase of the corporation tax. Here are your instructions from Mr. KITCHIN, and I will read them to you. Oh, yes, my friend from North Carolina may be a sick man, most unfortunately, but he certainly can whip your crowd into line.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the gentleman just permit—

Mr. LONGWORTH. Let me read what Mr. KITCHIN's views are first, and then you will have what the views of all on that side are. [Applause on the Republican side.]

(Confidential.)

SCOTLAND NECK, N. C., August 16, 1921.

HON. FINIS J. GARRETT,
Acting Minority Leader, House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.:

I suggest—

He uses only the word "suggest," but we all know what he means—

I suggest that you see RAYBURN and have caucus called so that Democrats may line up, if possible, against the tax program of the Republicans, especially against the repeal of the excess-profits tax and substituting a flat 15 per cent tax on all corporations and against the reduction of the surtaxes on big incomes as proposed.

And a little further on he says:

I am thoroughly convinced that if the Democrats join with the Republicans in repealing the excess-profits tax and substituting the 15 per cent corporation tax and on reducing the high surtaxes on incomes of the millionaires and multimillionaires, thus vindicating and justifying the Republican program, it will prove to be a most fatal mistake, both for the Democratic Party and every individual Democratic Member voting for it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LONGWORTH. May I have 15 additional minutes?

Mr. FORDNEY. I yield 15 minutes additional to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. LONGWORTH. So that is the program. Now, all the rest of this picaresque business about medicinal preparations and taxes on Coca-Cola, in which so many gentlemen on that side profess interest, are matters of no moment in discussing this matter, either from the question of revenue or policy. Those are the three major propositions upon which they have received their orders.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I will.

Mr. MONDELL. Does the gentleman understand that the gentleman from Mississippi has not read the dispatch from Scotland Neck? He does not seem to agree to the proposition just read.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Well, I think he misread it; he has not been reading these matters very carefully lately.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The gentleman wants—

Mr. O'CONNOR. I am thoroughly in accord with Mr. KITCHIN's program.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Why, the gentleman did not have to tell us that; we knew that.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I thought the gentleman had some doubt about it.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Now, I am not so much complaining about the repudiation of their former leaders by the Democracy in this House, the former President and three great Secretaries of the Treasury, as I am complaining about their flat repudiation of the platform on which every one of them ran in the last campaign. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the gentleman yield for just a moment?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I will.

Mr. O'CONNOR. The gentleman has been very good-natured. Inasmuch as I have asked him a question in reference to the excess-profits tax, I desire to make it clear that I would repeal or abolish all war taxes, except the excess-profits tax and the higher surtaxes, which I think ought to continue, at least until a part of the great war debt is extinguished or paid.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The gentleman does not want to have the higher surtaxes continued?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Oh, yes; those taxes—

Mr. LONGWORTH. I mean on incomes.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I would relieve the poor and the near poor as much as possible from the burdens of governmental support. I would make the men who come into the world equipped for the acquisition of money pay for the privilege that the Government and nature gives them. That method of taxation would equalize in a measure the inequalities of birth and intellect and good fortune.

Mr. LONGWORTH. This repudiation may be based on their view of expediency. But to repudiate deliberately the platform upon which every one of you sought the suffrages of your constituents is quite another thing.

You state in your platform:

The continuance in force in peace times—

That must worry my friend from Louisiana [Mr. O'CONNOR], because this bill and the Democratic platform both make a distinction between war tax and peace tax, and he makes no such distinction.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I can not yield.

The continuance in force in peace times of taxes devised under pressure of imperative necessity to produce a revenue for war purposes is indefensible and can only result in lasting injury to the people.

We advocate tax reform and a searching revision of the war revenue act to fit peace conditions, so that the wealth of the Nation may not be withdrawn from productive enterprise and diverted to wasteful or nonproductive expenditure. We demand prompt action by the next Congress for a complete survey of existing taxes and their modification and simplification with a view to securing greater equity and justice in tax burden and improvement in administration.

There could not be a more accurate description of this bill or a higher compliment of the foresight of the then Democrats who wrote this platform than the bill we are now considering. [Applause on the Republican side.] But you tear up the platform and substitute the message from Scotland Neck! [Laughter.] We are advocating a repeal of the higher surtaxes, and, I repeat it, not to relieve wealth from taxation, but to make more wealth subject to taxation. I observe that the great historian laughs at that.

Mr. COCKRAN. If that was in a history, it would make it a joke.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Does anyone deny that the immense industrial depression from which we are suffering to-day is due to the lack of capital? There can be no real business revival unless we have more capital, and for this we must rely mainly on the accumulations of investors that the high taxes of the last three years have either largely confiscated or driven out of sight. Men who were active producers have become non-producers. There is a certain point where income taxes defeat themselves where revenue is concerned. That is precisely what President Wilson says. Men who would cheerfully give up two-thirds of their income in time of war will not do so in time of peace, and there is no way to compel them to do it. Every sort of means is employed, and in most cases I believe entirely legitimately, to avoid payment of the high surtaxes. Of course, the great outstanding refuge is in nontaxable State, county, or municipal bonds. The amount of such issues has increased enormously in the past two years. For the purposes of revenue, the development of the country and the employment of labor, capital so invested is as effectively absent as if it did not exist.

Gentlemen on the Democratic side of the House have talked about the tremendous amount of money we were going to sacrifice for the benefit of these people with the higher incomes. The total amount of revenue that we are expected to derive this year from all the incomes over $66,000 is $90,000,000 only. Two or three years ago it would have been five or six or seven times that much perhaps, but to-day the capital from which those incomes were produced has gone into hiding. It is not productive and does not give employment to labor, and does not produce anything that is of good to the country. It is simply lying idle and is exempt totally from taxation. And I repeat that the effect of the reduction of these high surtaxes to a point where men are willing in times of peace to pay them will be to immensely increase the revenues of the Treasury and to bring employment to labor and to restore business and industry.

Mr. BARBOUR. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Yes.

Mr. BARBOUR. Instead of stopping at $66,000, would it not have been possible to have sort of averaged the thing all the way down the line and given everybody the benefit below the $66,000?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I would be the first one to advocate some program of that sort when the revenue is going to permit it. Now it is impossible. To carry a decrease through all the brackets would have caused a loss of revenue that would be appalling.

Mr. BARBOUR. Would it not have averaged so that the amount of loss would have been the same?

Mr. LONGWORTH. No other country in the history of the world has ever maintained in times of peace an income tax as high as 25 per cent. It is utterly impossible, and the history of the world shows it, that in time of peace where there is opportunity to shift investment or to give away property and to dodge legitimately some way or other, that taxes of more than 25 per cent can be collected. It is perfectly absurd to suppose that a man will pay 75 per cent on his income when he can put his property where he escapes taxation. President Wilson recognized that in his message. Secretary Glass recognized it, Secretary Houston recognized it, and Secretary McAdoo recognized it.

Of all the large number of major tax reductions, that of the surtaxes on incomes alone can be said to be in any sense a tax on wealth as such. The relief to the general public by the repeal in the tax on freight will be more than $130,000,000 a year, half again as much as the relief afforded to the payers of the high surtaxes, and will affect millions of people. The relief to the traveling public afforded by the repeal of the tax on passenger fares will amount substantially to the same sum as that afforded to payers of the higher surtaxes and will apply to millions of people. All together the repeal of the transportation taxes will reduce the burden on the American people more than $260,000,000, and yet apparently the Democracy proposes to vote against a bill which confers these benefits.

Mr. COLLIER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Yes.

Mr. COLLIER. I wish to commend the committee for removing the tax on transportation, but I want to ask the gentleman this question: You say that will save $130,000,000?

Mr. LONGWORTH. On freight alone.

Mr. COLLIER. Yes; $130,000,000 on freight. I just wanted to ask the gentleman if he does not think the greater part of that saving will be taken up in the increase over the Payne rate of the tax on structural steel in another bill that was put in a short time ago?

Mr. LONGWORTH. The gentleman knows his question is absurd, and I am not going to answer it.

Now, let us take another tax change in the interest of the plain people, whom the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLLIER] so vociferously but mistakenly assumes to represent. An increase in the exemption to all heads of families of $2,000 to $2,500 will directly affect over 3,000,000, and it will relieve them of a burden of over $40,000,000. The additional exemption of dependents from $200 to $400 each will relieve them to the extent of $30,000,000, and will affect I do not know how many families in this country.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Certainly.

Mr. BARBOUR. I have been trying to find out for my own information—and I believe other gentlemen are interested—why the committee stopped at $5,000 in granting this exemption of $2,500. If you are going to exempt one man, why not exempt another? Why make a distinction?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman give me 10 minutes more? I will try to finish.

Mr. FORDNEY. I yield to the gentleman 10 minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio is recognized for 10 minutes more.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Of course, our desire to benefit the taxpayer was absolutely limited by the amount of revenue we could afford to lose. We have to consider a great revenue measure not from the point of view of the popularity of what we do so much as the essential justice of what we do, and we ought to discard this demagoguery that we have heard preached here so much to-day. A vote against this bill simply means a vote to definitely postpone the beneficent results that will accrue to the smaller income taxpayers of this country in regard to their exemption both as to the amount and with regard to their dependents.

Of all the irritating taxes in the present law, that upon the sale of soda water and ice cream sold at counters probably stands first. Its repeal is going to save the public something like $30,000,000, and it is going to affect almost every schoolboy and schoolgirl in this land. And yet the Democratic Party is going to vote to make that impossible.

There is another item in this bill, a small one perhaps, that has been referred to only incidentally, I believe, but which is, to my mind, of great importance. One of the most serious situations in the country to-day is the lack of small homes, and the main reason for it is the difficulty of getting the capital necessary for their building. In my part of the country and very prevalently throughout the country the smaller homes, the homes costing from $1,500 to $4,000, are built through the cooperation of building associations. Owing to the great increase in the attractiveness of tax-exempt securities, money has been withdrawn from investment in building associations and has gone where it did not have to pay taxes, and the consequence has been that instead of the capital applicable to home building increasing, it has been decreasing.

This bill carries this provision: We make the first $500 of income received from capital invested in the stock of building associations exempt from any tax at all. We put it on the same basis to the extent of $500 as all other nontaxable investments. There is no question now but that the stock in a building association amounting to $10,000 will be a reasonably attractive investment and will result in a great increase of capital available for the building of small homes throughout the country. This is a small thing on paper, perhaps, but I believe it is a big thing in the interest of the plain people of this country, and Democrats propose to vote against it.

For some reason or other, which has always been a mystery to me, the Democratic Party in its wisdom in the last revenue bill put a tax of 10 per cent on sporting goods, so that a boy who wants to buy a baseball bat or a pair of roller skates pays twice the tax that the purchaser of jewelry or electric pianos pays.

What the philosophy of such a proposition as that is I can not imagine, and yet it has occurred to Democratic Members to tax the schoolboy and the schoolgirl who wants to buy anything to play with, to exercise with, twice what they tax the man or woman who buys automobiles and diamonds. We have reduced these taxes 50 per cent.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? I want to ask the gentleman if he voted for that bill.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Did the gentleman vote for that bill?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Of course the gentleman from Ohio, when the war revenue bills were here, voted for them, in order to carry on the war, but he voted against this Democratic tax in the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Why did the gentleman vote for it and then come in here and ask us to explain why we voted for it?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Of course, the gentleman is opposed to lifting the taxes except upon Coca-Cola and things like that. Of course, if the gentleman believes in taxing baseball bats twice as much as diamond rings, he is entitled to his opinion.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I do not believe in taxing them at all. Why do not you repeal that tax?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Of course, the gentleman is going to vote against any reduction.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I am in favor of absolutely repealing it.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I know; but the gentleman is going to vote against reducing it.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Why do not you repeal it?

Mr. LONGWORTH. The gentleman says he is in favor of repealing it, but he is going to vote against reducing it.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes; because you are going to leave 5 cents on every baseball bat and every baseball that the boys of this country buy in times of peace.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Yes; and the gentleman is going to vote against reducing it.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Will the gentleman give us a chance to vote on it separately? I will promise to vote to cut it out.

Mr. LONGWORTH. We shall see—perhaps.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The gentleman's record will show that he voted against reducing it.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Will the gentleman give the House a chance to vote on it separately?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Does the gentleman think I control the opportunity to vote?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The gentleman is a member of the Ways and Means Committee, and his vote is very influential. Is he in favor of giving the House a chance?

Mr. LONGWORTH. The gentleman flatters me. I will use great influence to do it.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. You will?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Yes.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. We will see how much influence the gentleman has.

Mr. LONGWORTH. But the gentleman, of course, will vote against reducing it.

Another very important thing we propose to do is to lead the taxpayer as far as possible out of the maze of difficulties thrown around him by the present taxation system for which that side of the House is responsible. Gentlemen who have attacked this bill have said that the new administrative provisions were written in for the benefit of the rich taxpayer exclusively. It only proves their utter ignorance of these provisions, because a large number of them are written in for the precise purpose of preventing evasion of legitimate taxes by wealthy people. The administrative features of this bill are the result of accumulated experience in carrying out the details of the most complicated law ever placed upon the statute books. They will serve immensely to simplify the collection of the revenue not only from the standpoint of the Treasury but of the taxpayer. They would be well worthy of enactment alone, even if no changes were made in the general policy of taxation.

The passage of this bill means a gross reduction of taxes to the extent of nearly $900,000,000 to the American people. It is a long step toward the restoration of industrial prosperity. As such we support it, and gladly accept all responsibility for its enactment. [Applause.]

Mr. COLLIER. I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. GRIFFIN].

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield for a moment? I understand the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] expects to run continuously until perhaps 10 o'clock?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. Or even later if the Members are disposed to stay?

Mr. FORDNEY. Until an opportunity is given to Members who wish to speak. There are a number of gentlemen on this side who wish to speak, and therefore I think we had better run without recess.

Mr. COLLIER. I think so. I have a number of requests. Instead of making it an arbitrary adjournment at 10 o'clock, if the House wants to continue even later it will be very agreeable to us.

Mr. FORDNEY. And see if we can finish.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes. I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. GRIFFIN].

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Chairman, it is rather amusing to hear the gentlemen on the other side quote last year's Democratic platform with approval. They may well do so, for there was not much difference between the two platforms, or, for that matter, between the two parties, in devotion to the law of expediency. The fact is that both parties needed money to run the last campaign. Both thought it wise to sound a very soft key in framing their platform. There was not much difference in the tone, only the Republicans struck first, and received the indorsement of the profiteers before the gentle little peep of the Democratic managers was heard.

GRAFT KNOWS NO PARTY.

I am, therefore, not very much disturbed when I have the folly of the last campaign flung in my face. That is only the tribute of vice to virtue. The repeal of the excess-profits tax is arrant folly, whether or not it is indorsed by men calling themselves Republicans or Democrats. Graft knows no party. It is natural to expect reactionary views from the party which has nurtured the special interests for 50 years; but they come with ill grace from Democracy, whose proper place should be close to the hearts of the people. There was no hope for a Democratic victory last fall and there never can be hope for any party that takes its political economy from financial adventurers.

"SHIFTY METHODS."

I was amazed at almost the first statement in the majority report. It says that in framing the tax "the committee has sought out new methods of reducing rather than shifting tax burdens."

This statement is prompted by the prodding of a guilty conscience. They know that they have shifted the burdens, and they know that they will be indicted by the American people for their guilt. But, aside from that, their plea of "not guilty" shows utter misapprehension of the problem which confronts them. The object of this legislation is to raise revenue. To accomplish that they should not have balked at the prospect of increasing a tax here or there. The consumer is always willing to pay the piper and will never murmur. What he objects to is the unjust discrimination in favor of the rich and against the poor.

The great common people of the land who have been harassed and annoyed by inequitable and burdensome taxes expect that the burden will be lifted from their backs and shifted about in such manner that every class will be compelled to bear a share of taxation proportionate to its means. Shifting a tax is not an economic crime. On the contrary, it becomes a duty when taxes bear inequitably.

But how has the committee met the problem?

It has lifted the burdens from the backs of the profiteers—the men who have been making excess profits—and left the void unprovided for, so that, eventually, they will have to be distributed upon the backs of men of small income and upon the consumers.

This table is printed in the majority report, I presume, because it is considered as furnishing a strong recommendation of the pending bill. Let us see. First, you will note, it shows that the pending bill will deprive the Government of tax receipts aggregating $968,000,000. On the other hand, the taxes substituted in the place of those remitted will bring in $177,750,000. In other words, the Government suffers a net loss in taxation of $790,330,000.

A FALLACY EXPOSED.

With these figures as their basis, the proponents of the bill make the boast that the burdens of taxation are lessened to the tremendous extent of $790,330,000, or about $7 for every man, woman, and child in the country. And the appeal is then made to the heads of families by saying that every family of five is relieved from taxation to the extent of $35 per annum.

Wonderful, if true, my friends. But look at the figures again, if you please. From whom do you take off this great burden? You take off $450,000,000 from the makers of excess profits and another $90,000,000 from those who have been paying surtaxes on incomes in excess of $66,000 per annum. Poor fellows! It was a shame to have taxed them so long. The man who can make $66,000 per annum on his investments is certainly in dire straits and needs immediate relief. But do not humbug the people by pretending that when you are relieving the profiteers and plutocrats of $540,000,000 per annum in taxation you are putting $35 per annum in the pocket of every head of a family in the United States.

A DEFICIT INSTEAD OF A GAIN.

The taxes of which you are relieving the profiteer and plutocrat will admittedly create a deficit in the national income.

How is this deficit to be raised? Obviously, if the makers of excess profits and the recipients of big incomes are excused, the burden must fall all the heavier on the average citizen. If not to-day, then to-morrow. Why fool yourselves and humbug the people by pretending that reductions in the expenses of government are going to make up the deficit. The national income is reduced $790,330,000 and the manner of running the Nation's affairs within the sum to be raised by this bill is left to chance or future makeshifts.

NO EXCUSE FOR REPEAL OF EXCESS-PROFITS TAX.

There is no excuse for this deficit except the desire to get rid of the excess-profits tax. This is the keynote of the entire bill.

The propagandists who started the campaign for their abolition two years ago have invented many objections.

What are excess profits? Excess profits are simply profits in excess of a reasonable return on capital invested. Why should any honest man be dismayed at the proposition that no one should make unreasonable returns upon capital invested? We saw the wisdom of imposing a tax on excess profits during the war, while the profiteers were wallowing in ill-gotten gains exacted from the mothers, the wives, and the children of our soldiers who were sacrificing their all for their country. The purpose of the excess-profits tax was simply to exact from the profiteers a fair proportion of the profits which they mulcted out of the American people.

But the moment that the war ceased a propaganda was inaugurated to repeal the excess-profits tax. Let me say this to the profiteers: It is easy enough to get rid of the excess-profits tax. All you need do is to stop making excess profits. When you do that the occasion for the tax will cease automatically.

OBJECTIONS TO THE EXCESS-PROFITS TAX.

There are valid objections to the excess-profits tax, but not sufficient to warrant its repeal. It is aimed at the profiteer, and unless profiteering is deemed a blessing that purpose of curbing the unconscionable should be kept in mind. There was an opportunity for statesmanship, for real scientific tax revision. Instead of trying to correct the manifest defects we behold an abject surrender, on the part of this Congress, to wealth and influence and the average tax-paying citizen is forgotten.

First of all, a distinction should have been made between income derived from actual service and income derived from capital. For there is a manifest difference in the status of the man who has, perhaps, inherited a hundred thousand dollars and without doing a tap of work draws an income out of it of $10,000 a year, and the man who earns $10,000 a year by his brains and industry, and who has no capital except his brains and industry. The salaried man is in a different category in the very nature of things and he should not be penalized by heavy taxation. He adds to the world's wealth by actual work. The other lets his money work for him while he dawdles away in idleness.

The present inequitable distinction between partnerships and corporations should be corrected. The term "capital invested" should be given the meaning that was in the mind of Congress when the present revenue bill was passed. Capital invested means the monetary value of the property employed in carrying on the business, and the tax should be computed upon that amount and not upon watered capital.

If that were done, there would be no premium put on overcapitalization and much of the comfort that some of the gentlemen on the other side take from CARTER GLASS's report of December, 1919, would be considerably abated. It would also take considerably from the force of Mr. McDoo's argument in his letter to the Ways and Means Committee, June 5, 1918, when he said:

The excess-profits tax falls less heavily upon big business than small business, because big business is generally overcapitalized and small business is often undercapitalized.

THE REMEDY.

The remedy, therefore, is not to repeal the excess-profits tax, but to stop overcapitalization. Stop the issuance of stock dividends and compel corporations to distribute their earnings to their stockholders instead of manipulating them to avoid taxation. The evil of allowing this practice to continue is well illustrated in the following table, which shows 90 corporations which have issued stock dividends of over 100 per cent, on which, of course, taxation was avoided under the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in March, 1920:

I have taken upon my shoulders the thankless, but I hope not useless, task of analyzing the propagandists' objections to the excess-profits tax.

I. THAT THE EXCESS-PROFITS TAX PYRAMIDS THE COST TO THE CONSUMER.

This propaganda has been devised with ingenious sophistry. The people are told that the excess-profits tax pyramids the cost to the consumer. The plausibility of this assertion is that it is offered as a conclusion instead of as a premise. If one says that costs are pyramided to the consumer, he states an obvious fact, but it is not true to say that the pyramiding is the consequence of the tax. Just the reverse is the truth—the tax is the result of the pyramiding. It is because of the pyramiding—in other words, the profiteering—that the tax is imposed. The manufacturer or tradesman who does not pyramid or profiteer does not have to pay the excess-profits tax. The moment he stops profiteering his burden in the way of an excess-profits tax ceases.

Remember, too, that the pyramiding began a long time before the excess-profits tax was imposed. The profiteering began before we entered the war. The price level of commodities worth $1 in 1914 had risen to $1.61 in March, 1917, and in October, 1917, when we passed the excess-profits tax law, it had risen to $1.81. Not even the reduction of the excess-profits tax sufficed to satisfy the profiteers' greed, for although the reduction was made in 1919, nevertheless in April, 1920, the price level had climbed to $2.66.

II. THAT THE EXCESS-PROFITS TAX IS UNPRODUCTIVE.

The next objection we hear against the excess-profits tax is that it is unproductive. Well, that is simple. If it is unproductive it will cease to function. But what are the facts? The table printed on page 3 of the majority report estimates that the effect of the repeal of the excess-profits tax will be to deprive the Government of taxes to the extent of $450,000,000. Is that a revenue income to be sneezed at? According to the latest figures of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, the yield from internal-revenue taxation last year was $812,000,000 less than in the year before. Of that sum $731,000,000 is believed to be due to loss in income, excess-profits taxes, and in surtaxes. Evidently there is a progression downward. That is a good sign; but it is also an argument against the repeal of the tax, for when profiteering ceases the occasion for the tax will automatically disappear. That point has, obviously, not yet been reached, because, according to Commissioner Blair's report, the income and excess-profits taxes represented 70 per cent of the total collections. Last year the yield from the excess-profits tax was approximately $720,000,000. Next year they figure it will be $450,000,000.

This great addition to the national income, derived from the excess-profits tax, it is now proposed by this bill to abandon and throw to the winds. It may be a very negligible quantity in the opinion of the majority; but the great body of the American people from whose pockets the additional revenue will be drawn to make up its loss are likely to have a different opinion.

III. THAT THE EXCESS-PROFITS TAX IS EXPENSIVE TO COLLECT.

The third objection to the excess-profits tax is that it is expensive to collect. Let us see whether it is or not. The collection of revenue taxes in this country has always been more economical than the collection of customs duties. I have prepared a table, which I will insert in the RECORD, showing the income from internal revenue and customs receipts since 1914. In 1914 the cost of collecting the internal revenue was 1.46 per cent. The cost of collecting the customs receipts was 3.35 per cent. In 1920 the cost of collecting internal revenue was 0.54 per cent, practically half a cent on the dollar. The cost of collecting the customs duties was 3.9 per cent.

In the second revenue district, embracing within it the city of New York, we collected $1,135,453,216.52. And do you know the cost of collecting that in the second district? It was just three-fifths of a mill per dollar.

Cost of collecting internal revenue and customs receipts, 1914 to 1920.

[See p. 790, Annual Report Secretary of the Treasury, 1920.]

Year ending June 30—	Internal revenue.
	Receipts.	Expenses of collecting.	Per cent.
1914.....	$380,041,007.30	$5,542,353.55	1.46
1915.....	415,669,646.00	6,236,048.55	1.50
1916.....	512,702,028.78	6,259,047.67	1.22
1917.....	809,386,207.73	6,974,140.11	.86
1918.....	3,695,043,484.81	12,003,214.07	.32
1919.....	3,840,230,994.85	20,149,911.83	.52
1920.....	5,399,149,245.06	29,432,643.50	.54

Year ending June 30—	Customs receipts.
	Receipts.	Expenses of collecting.	Per cent.
1914.....	$292,320,014.51	$9,804,771.72	3.35
1915.....	209,788,672.21	9,268,403.58	4.42
1916.....	213,185,845.63	9,074,471.95	4.26
1917.....	225,962,393.38	9,850,189.63	4.36
1918.....	182,758,988.71	9,836,325.53	5.38
1919.....	183,428,624.78	10,020,851.28	5.46
1920.....	323,536,559.25	10,023,315.74	3.09

So that instead of the internal-revenue taxes being more expensive to collect they are actually collected at one-sixth of the cost of the collection of the customs duties. As the revenue collection machinery became more effective the cost dropped from 1.46 per cent in 1914 to 0.52 of 1 per cent in 1919. In other words, it costs only about a half cent to collect a dollar of internal revenue while it costs over 3 cents to collect a dollar of customs duties.

IV. THAT THE EXCESS-PROFITS TAX IS SHIFTED OVER UPON THE CONSUMER.

Another objection that we hear is that the excess-profits tax is shifted over upon the consumer. That is plain sophistry. There is no shifting process whatever. The excess profits are extorted from the consumer in the beginning. If the profiteer has to give up a portion of his ill-gotten gains to the Government by way of taxation, of course he can play the baby act and claim that the consumer pays the tax; but the consumer also pays the excess profits. And please note that the profiteer does not pay the tax until he has exacted enough to pay the tax and very much more. Why should the profiteer complain when he is compelled to disgorge? His plea is like that of the highwayman who when compelled to give up his booty cries out, "This is coming out of the pockets of the toiler, the widow and the orphan whom I robbed like a gentleman. Have pity on them, kind sir." And in a sense he is right, even as the profiteer is right when he pleads that the tax he is compelled to pay out of his ill-gotten gains comes out of the pockets of the consumer. So it does, but he can stop it by ceasing to exact excess profits. Let him be content with reasonable profits and he need not worry about the tax. He should not be permitted to extort excess profits at all. The Government in collecting the tax is, to a certain degree, sharing in his guilt. It should confiscate all of his unconscionable profits as it does property stolen by the highwayman. But there is one consolation the excess-profits maker has. He need not make them. The moment he ceases profiteering, that moment the tax ceases to function. The fifth objection is:

V. THAT CAPITAL IS DIVERTED FROM INDUSTRIAL CHANNELS AND IS INVESTED IN TAX-EXEMPT SECURITIES.

The answer to that is, first, that the class of investment that seeks exempt securities is not to be found in industrial speculation. That is evidenced by the fact that there was enough capital engaged in industry and making excess profits to such an extent last year as to yield the Government excess-profits taxes of $720,000,000. Why did not that money seek tax-exempt securities? Evidently it was in business, doing business on the old plan, piling up excess profits. And on those profits a tax was paid to this Government of $720,000,000. Evidently it paid these investors to use their capital to pile up excess profits rather than to invest it in tax-exempt securities.

Obviously, the objection is false on its face. Its mere statement gives the answer. Take, for instance, a million-dollar corporation which gouges out of the consumers an income of 50 per cent upon its invested capital, namely, $500,000. Under the present law it pays a tax of $178,860, leaving it a net profit of $321,140. That, it will be noted, is 32 per cent on the capital invested. What tax-exempt security does anyone know of that gives as generous an income as that? Does anyone know of a tax-exempt security that pays 32 per cent on the capital invested? No; my friends, you must plead a better excuse than that. Under the present bill you propose to reduce the excess-profits taxes on such a corporation to $75,000. In other words, you will let them keep $425,000 out of the half million of income, or 42 per cent of the capital invested. Does anyone know of any tax-exempt security that pays 42 per cent on the capital invested? I think not.

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRIFFIN. Yes.

Mr. TINCHER. There were a few companies that paid rather substantial excess-profits taxes in 1919 which are now in the hands of receivers, or were in 1920, by reason of losing not only contemplated profit but their entire capital. Does the gentleman think that an excess-profits tax is conducive to the resumption of that line of work by other companies? There was no provision in the tax law to reimburse these companies that lost their capital by way of investment.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I think the probability is that they robbed one another; that the directors were at each other's throat. No profitable business ever goes into the hands of a receiver unless there is fraud somewhere.

The next objection is:

VI. THAT THE EXCESS-PROFITS TAX DISCRIMINATES AGAINST THE CORPORATION WITH SMALL INVESTED CAPITAL.

This is only a reiteration of the propaganda that has been industrially circulated for years, and this is my answer: Instead of the excess-profits tax injuring the small corporation, the reverse is true. It helps the small corporation by curbing the profits of the large corporation. That was the idea underlying its first application. You will recall that when the Government during the war started fixing the price of copper and other metals it set a price high enough to encourage the least profitable mines to increase their production. That price of course would necessarily yield the easily worked mines a great advantage in profit. The excess-profits tax was therefore worked out to offset this advantage. It may tax heavily the corporation with small capital but big profits, but it can not hurt the small corporation with small profits.

In fact, the chief complaint against this measure before us is that while decreasing the tax on the large corporation it increases the tax on the small corporation beyond all reason. If gentlemen here have part 5 of the hearings, I direct their attention to the diagram on page 443.

Note how as the profiteering increases the tax diminishes. Finally, when it gouges an income of 33½ per cent it will only be required to pay a tax of $500,000 instead of $1,028,593.33. Lastly, when it has its hand fully into the game and can rob like a brigand of old, deriving an income of 50 per cent upon its capital, or $5,000,000 per annum, it will pay a tax of $750,000 instead of $1,795,260. In other words, it is to be presented by this Republican Congress with a donation out of the pockets of the consumers of $1,045,260 as a slight token of esteem; as an evidence of admiration for its adherence to the lofty principles which actuated the broad-minded brigands of history. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. COLLIER. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOODRUFF] such time as he may desire.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan is recognized for one hour.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Chairman, it is with some temerity that I take the floor at this time, for I find myself entirely out of harmony with the majority of the House, as represented by the Ways and Means Committee, and its proposal to repeal the excess-profits tax and reduce to 32 per cent the tax on the larger individual incomes.

I am a Republican, Mr. Chairman, and I believe in the principles which have been enunciated in the different platforms adopted by our national conventions. Under Republican administrations the country has developed in a way that has caused the whole world to stand aghast at the progress we have made. Under Republican leadership and under the operation of a protective tariff our industries have been put upon their feet and have been allowed to develop until we have become one of the foremost, if not the foremost, industrial nations in the world. That the laboring man has reaped some measure of benefit from the protective tariff is evidenced by the fact that during the years since the theory of a protective tariff has been put into practice he has been able to live in some degree of comfort and, at the same time, lay something by for a "rainy day," while the laboring man of other countries has been paid barely enough to supply himself with the actual necessities of life. The policy of a protective tariff and the benefits derived therefrom have proved the case and the verdict has been rendered by the American people.

This is and must continue to be a Government of parties, and the men and women affiliated with the parties must of necessity be partisan. They must, as a usual thing, be content to follow the leadership of their party. But, Mr. Chairman, when this leadership seeks to direct one's footsteps along pathways which seem to lead in directions other than those which will end in common justice to all men, paths which will inevitably lead to the shifting of the burden of taxation to the shoulders of those least able to bear this burden, then, Mr. Chairman, comes the time when one must, if he would continue to live at peace with his conscience, differ openly, freely, frankly with such leadership.

There is no man who more willingly follows the leadership of his party than do I—there is no man who follows the leadership of his party more gladly than I—when it is at all possible to do so. When I am in doubt as to the proper course to pursue, when the arguments for and against a given proposition seem to me equally forceful, I gladly give my leaders the benefit of the doubt, and follow their leadership. But, Mr. Chairman, when they cause to be introduced in the House, and ask me to help pass, a bill such as is under discussion at this time, I must decline to give them my support.

When I sat in this Chamber on the 12th of April this year and listened to our President, when he said in that great message:

The country does not expect and will not approve a shifting of the burdens—

I believed that then and there the great Republican Party was committed to carry out that pledge to the letter. I was sure this Congress under his leadership would present to the country a revenue measure which would so distribute the burden of taxation as to merit the approval of every fair-thinking man. I believed these taxes would be so apportioned that every man should pay according to his ability to pay, for it is upon this basis all taxes should be assessed. And, Mr. Chairman, when I first heard that it was the intention of the Ways and Means Committee to report a bill to the House which would raise the proportion of the tax to be collected from the farmer and out of the living wage and the pay envelope from 24.6 per cent to 50 per cent, I could not believe it possible. And yet we have the proof of it in the bill before the House to-day.

This bill repeals the excess-profits tax, which applies only to corporations, and raises the flat corporation tax 2½ per cent. That this proposed action is inimical to the interests of the smaller corporations and those business institutions satisfied to realize a reasonable return upon their investment, I propose to clearly show by the following letter and table prepared by Mr. Howard Clinton Beck, certified public accountant, of Baltimore, Washington, and Detroit. A study of this table will show indisputably that this proposed law will, to an unjustified extent, relieve the larger and more prosperous corporations from taxation, and in a like measure add to the burdens of those corporations less able to pay. This is a condition which in all equity should not exist, for, in addition to its inherent unfairness, it tends to concentrate the wealth of the country in the hands of a favored few and thereby increases their economic control of the Nation.

BALTIMORE, August 17, 1921.

HON. ROY O. WOODRUFF,

House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. WOODRUFF: Herewith you will find a copy of my corporation income tax exhibit as the committee has reported the bill, namely, 12½ per cent normal tax, with $2,000 exemption and no excess-profits tax.

When I reached Baltimore this morning I found that my assistants had already started a typewritten copy, so decided to finish it that way rather than to send you one of the original printed copies revised. I trust that this few hours delay will not inconvenience you.

MR. FREAR and MR. OLDFIELD, of the Committee on Ways and Means, have also requested similar copies, which I am sending by this mail.

Very truly,

HOWARD C. BECK.

EFFECT OF THE REPEAL OF THE EXCESS-PROFITS TAX.

The new revenue bill reported by the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives contains a provision for the repeal of the present excess-profits tax on corporations and an increase in the normal tax from 10 to 12½ per cent.

The effect of this proposed law on those corporations whose invested capital is from $5,000 to $10,000,000, and who are earning from 5 per cent to 50 per cent thereon, is shown in the following exhibit. Those corporations whose capital and income are in the block between the heavy black lines will pay more tax under the proposed law, while those to the right and below the second black line will pay less tax.

Just what the smaller or less prosperous corporations, large or small, will think of this proposed legislation when they learn what it will do to them is stated very clearly in the following letter, which I have just received.

DETROIT, MICH., August 16, 1921.

Hon. ROY O. WOODRUFF,

Representative, Washington, D. C.

OUR DEAR SIR: Having noticed in a newspaper yesterday that you are interesting yourself in protecting the "little fellow" in the revision of the tax law, we quote herewith letters that we recently sent to our local Congressman, State Senators, and Hon. JOSEPH W. FORDNEY:

"As tax revision is in the air we are respectfully asking you to give thought and consideration to the 'little fellow,' with the hope that you will use your influence in that direction.

"Our feeling is that small corporations do not make profits on their capital invested beyond a very moderate amount, and also that officers as a rule receive very modest salaries.

"Many large corporations pay exceedingly large salaries to the officers and besides make a large percentage upon capital invested.

"For the protection of small corporations we deem it inadvisable to eliminate the credit of $3,000 in 'Schedule C—Excess-profits credit.' Also the $2,000 exemption, 'Item 9, Schedule D—Computation of taxes.' We have no objection, however, to excess-profits tax and surtax, and we 'little fellows' would like to make enough to be able to participate with the big fellows in paying such forms of tax. Hence we dislike to see the tax of 10 per cent, 'Item 11, Schedule D,' increased. These relate to reports for corporations, 1920, page 1, of return.

"Also we believe that there should be exemptions for taxes on individuals."

We hope for the day when taxes can be reduced, but we feel that the Republican Party has got to maintain a good name to be borne out through action. Consequently, efforts should be in justice as much as possible to all classes of people, and we feel that the "high-ups" should stand the brunt.

Here in Michigan our legislature has slapped a tax upon corporations and the question arises in our minds that, although taxes have to be raised, even if money is often unwisely spent: Why should corporations, large and small, be assessed when many individuals, either alone or in partnership, in business escape?

The writer and many other staunch Republicans, being proud of the party's achievements, fully desire to have the G. O. P. continue in office, but we feel that the continuance will be only as long as the party will serve the people in a just manner, as the people are watching for results.

With our esteem, and thanking you for any effort you may use not for mere individuals but for the good of the country at large, we are,

Yours, very truly,

THE JOHN JOHNSON CO.,
P. M. COLVILLE,
Secretary and Treasurer.

After studying the effect of the repeal of the excess-profits tax upon the smaller and the less prosperous corporations it is well that one be given the opportunity of glancing over the following table:

I invite the especial attention of those men in the country who have incomes ranging from $5,000 to $70,000 per year to this table. I call attention to the fact that while men with incomes ranging from $70,000 per year to $5,000,000 or more have had their taxes very materially reduced nothing has been done toward reducing the burden of those whose incomes are not so large. The injustice done these people is very graphically illustrated by simply comparing the reduction given the man having an income of $70,000 when he pays his taxes with that given the man having an income of $5,000,000 when he pays his, remembering all the while that those having incomes ranging from $5,000 to $70,000 receive no reduction in their taxes whatsoever.

The excess-profits tax law was passed by Congress when the United States entered the war, and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] is correct when he states it is a war measure. It was put into effect to help pay the expenses of war. The present surtaxes on incomes were put into effect for precisely the same reason.

The country approved that action, notwithstanding the statement of the proponents of this proposed repeal. That the Democratic Party received the rebuke it did in the last election was not due to their responsibility for placing this law upon the books.

It was in spite of it. It was due entirely to their advocacy of an unsound foreign policy and to a demonstration of waste, extravagance, and inefficiency such as the world has seldom seen. These are the things which caused the repudiation of the Democratic Party and nothing else.

As I have just stated, when this law was enacted approximately $1,300,000,000 was needed to run the Government for that year, and yet to-day, when the estimated current expenses for the year are more than $4,000,000,000, the leadership of this House proposes to repeal the law and lose to the Treasury through this repeal and the reduction of the surtaxes on individual incomes an estimated $540,000,000.

I could understand and give a reluctant approval to this bill, perhaps, if the expenses of the war had been paid. This law was and is a war measure, created to help pay for the war. The fact that the war is over signifies nothing, for it has yet to be paid for. The bills have been created but have not been paid. The only ones who have paid their obligations in full are those American boys who in France or elsewhere gave their lives as a result of the war, or who are to-day so badly injured or so ill that they will never again know a comfortable day.

They have paid and have paid in full. The rest of us have only promised to pay.

The indebtedness resulting from the war is, in round numbers, $24,000,000,000. In this figure is included the sums owed us by our former allies, which is nearly $10,000,000,000. It is certain that some of this latter amount will not be paid, and it is by no means certain that any of it will be paid, for to date none of them have even been able to meet the interest charges. So it is safer to assume that the American people must meet this entire obligation and proceed accordingly.

There is an interest charge of nearly $1,000,000,000 annually that must be met before anything can be applied to the principal. This in itself constitutes a sum which, a few years preceding the war, was sufficient to pay the entire cost of government for two whole years. It is necessary, and vitally so, that this interest shall be met and that a substantial payment be made upon the principal each year. It is only in this way a reduction can be made in this enormous yearly interest charge. To accomplish this it is imperative that this House refuse to yield to the demand of its leadership and vote to retain these laws upon the statute books. If this is done, it is clear it will not be necessary to refund all of the obligations coming due within the next year, which is the declared intention if this bill should pass.

The thing that every Member of this House should keep clearly in mind is that we have a tremendous burden of debt which must be paid. We can put off the day of payment for a time, but we can not do so indefinitely. To do this would be to invite our economic destruction.

The chairman of the committee and others have stated that everybody who has appeared before the committee has "yelled" to have his taxes reduced. Unquestionably those who are to receive such enormous benefits from the repeal of the excess-profits tax and the reduction of the surtaxes on individual incomes were ably represented before the committee. But how about the 90,000,000 of American people whose incomes are below the income-tax level and who will not be relieved by the passage of this bill? How about these 90,000,000 who will have to shoulder the burdens the other 15,000,000 are now unloading upon them. They were represented before the committee by the farm organizations, yes, but apparently these representatives were not able to reach the ears of the committee to the same good effect as were the representatives of the more fortunate millions of the country.

The argument is made that the business man does not pay the excess-profits tax; that this is passed on to the consumer; that the manufacturer secures his profits just as surely under the law as he would were it not upon the statute books, and that as soon as this law is repealed he will be satisfied with a reasonable profit and the consumer relieved of the burden he now bears.

At the same time the proponents of this proposed repeal state that as soon as "business" is relieved of this burden everything will begin to move, men will be employed, the wheels will turn, and everybody will be immediately placed upon a prosperous basis.

Now, if this latter is true, and all that business asks or wants is an opportunity to do business upon a basis that will assure it a fair return upon its investment, why is it the wheels have not begun to turn long ago? Under the present law the profits of corporations are exempt from taxation to the amount of $3,000. In addition to this they are allowed a profit of 8 per cent upon their invested capital; and this is also exempt from taxation. The excess-profits tax is applied only to profits in excess of those I have just mentioned, and for the next 20 per cent of the earned profits of the corporation, after the above exemptions have been eliminated, but 20 per cent is taken by the Government, or $1 out of every $5. When the profits of the corporation have exceeded the 8 per cent exemption and the 20 per cent just mentioned then the Government takes for its share $2 out of every $5, but only out of such profits as exceed the 8 per cent and the 20 per cent just enumerated, allowing the corporation in the one case to keep for itself out of its excess profits $4 out of every $5 and in the other $3 out of every $5. Surely this is not an exorbitant price to pay for the privilege of doing business in a country where such profits are possible.

No corporation comes under the provisions of the present law and pays no excess-profits tax unless its profits exceed 8 per cent.

No man can be more concerned about the welfare and legitimate success of our business institutions than am I. But, Mr. Chairman, money is not grown upon bushes, although profiteers of this country must have been led to believe differently by the way money rolled into their pockets during and following the war, and when profits are exorbitant and beyond the bounds of reason it is clear the people have been compelled to pay for the goods they bought, or the service they have received, sums in excess of that which they should have been compelled to pay.

Before the war 8 per cent return upon an investment was considered a mighty fair investment, and if it was fair then—if it was attractive then, as it was—why is it that it is not so considered to-day? And why is it the claim is made that this tax is a detriment to the transaction of business? The law specifically exempts from taxation profits of all corporations up to the amounts I have heretofore stated, and if these corporations were satisfied to do business on the basis which was satisfactory to the investing public before the war they can, if they have the power they are credited with having, start the wheels of industry with the full knowledge that this law can not, by the wildest stretch of the imagination, curtail their activities in any way, because, Mr. Chairman, if they make no excess profits they pay no excess-profits tax, and can not be injured by the retention of this law upon the statute books.

If the claims of the proponents of the repeal of this law are true, immediately upon the repeal of the law the wheels of industry will begin to hum. If we are to believe this statement we must also believe the masters of industry and commerce have the power to start the wheels of industry at their convenience.

And the wheels have not been started, Mr. Chairman, so, if the above be true, is it not fair to assume that big business is not satisfied with the profits which would accrue to it while this law is in force, but rather is determined to force, through the power it wields in our economic life, the bringing about of conditions which will allow it to continue the making of enormous profits and enable these great business organizations at the same time to retain them all?

What I have said and what I shall say in regard to this particular phase of this subject applies not to the business institution which has been conducted upon a fair basis, which, through conditions of competition or an honest desire to render service to the public, has been conducted in such a way as to give this service, while at the same time retaining to itself an honest profit upon the capital invested. My remarks can not apply to them for the reason that the provisions of the excess-profits tax law can not penalize them to any great extent. If they have an excess-profits tax to pay it must of necessity be of so small a sum that the paying of the same can not in any way jeopardize the investment they have made. But, Mr. Chairman, my remarks are directed to those business institutions which, through the workings of a monopoly or a "gentleman's agreement," are placed in a position where they can and do exact from a long-suffering public the last red cent the traffic will bear. It is to these I address my remarks.

That the claims of the proponents of this bill that excess profits are passed on to the consumer and that it is the latter who pays the bill are utterly without foundation I propose to show by reading a part of a statement made to the Ways and Means Committee by Prof. David Friday, of the University of Michigan, during the early part of the year, and I will add that Prof. Friday is one of the foremost authorities on economics in the country to-day. A little study of the figures he submits will give even the members of the committee a slightly clearer conception of the facts. I quote as follows:

EFFECT OF EXCESS-PROFITS TAX ON THE RISING PRICE LEVEL.

To one acquainted with the course of prices, profits, and taxes there are disturbing facts which do not harmonize easily, to say the least, with this glib theory which finds in the excess-profits tax the chief cause of the rising price level. The price level did not wait for the advent of the excess-profits tax in America. It started its ascent in July, 1915, and continued it blithely until in March, 1917, the month previous to our entrance into the war, it stood at 160 per cent of the 1913 level. It continued its rise until July, 1917; at that time it stood at 185. No excess-profits tax law had yet been passed. The first law was passed in October, 1917, but no material rise in price occurred for some months thereafter.

Under the first excess profits tax law the combined corporations of the United States paid 15.27 per cent of their reported net income in excess-profits tax. After doing so they had remaining net income equal to 210 per cent of the highest amount which they had earned in any prewar year.

For the year 1918 excess-profits rates were increased to the point where they absorbed approximately 25 per cent of the profits of that year. In 1919 the rates were materially reduced. As against $2,400,000,000 of taxes in 1918, they yielded only one-half that amount in 1919. Prices in 1918 averaged 197 as against 175 in 1917 and 160 the month previous to our entering the war. Despite the reduction of the tax in 1919 prices stood at 238 in December of that year.

What we have then is a rise of 60 per cent in the price level before any excess-profits tax was either levied or discussed, and a further rise of 27 points before the tax was passed. Then a comparatively slight rise in prices during the period of our highest excess-profits taxes, and a renewed and rapid rise when the amount of the tax was cut in half.

If one were satirically inclined, he might affect to look with apprehension upon a further reduction in the excess-profits tax. This brief review of the course of prices and of taxes certainly casts serious doubt upon the assertion that "the effect of excess-profits taxes on business enterprises, and on the high cost of living, is so evident as to require little explanation."

Nor does a study of the course of profits lend any support to the statement that "for every $6 or $7 taken from the consumer, ostensibly for excess-profits tax, only $1 ever reaches the United States Treasury." It would follow from this that profits had increased not merely by the amount of the tax but that they had far outrun the amount collected from the Government. But this is not what the statistics of profits disclose. They show profits as follows before deducting taxes:

1913	$4,339,551,000
1914	3,940,000,000
1915	5,310,000,000
1916	8,768,000,000
1917	10,730,000,000
1918	9,500,000,000
1919	8,500,000,000

The figures for the years 1918 and 1919 are based upon estimates so carefully made that the final published figures will be but slightly different. After paying excess-profits taxes the amount of net income remaining from 1917 to 1919 was as follows:

1917	$9,100,000,000
1919	7,300,000,000

It is not true, therefore, that profits have increased since the imposition of the excess-profits tax. Nineteen hundred and seventeen was the high-water mark of profits, and the tax was not imposed until the year had almost closed. After paying taxes the profits of 1918 and 1919 are far less than they were in 1916.

It is evident from the foregoing that the claim that the excess-profits tax is passed on to the consumer is without foundation and that this tax is paid out of the profits instead. This undoubtedly accounts for the tremendous campaign of propaganda with which the country has been flooded for months, propaganda which had for its purpose the preparation of an unsuspecting public for this shifting of the tax burden.

One of the many so-called "reasons" given as an excuse for the repeal of the excess profits tax law is that the burden on business is so great that money is being driven out of the regular channels of investment and is seeking refuge in tax-exempt securities; that as soon as this law is repealed this money will be taken out of these securities and once more invested in industrials and other lines. I would like to ask the advocates of this theory just where the money is coming from with which to buy these securities? Who is to furnish the money with which to replace the money now invested in these securities? It takes money, real money, to purchase these securities from the present holders, and if it is available for this purpose it is available to go into the lines into which the money would go which it is to replace.

I maintain that the principle of taxing property is correct. It is the theory upon which taxation is based the world over. In this country we have something over $16,000,000,000 tied up in tax-exempt securities. Some authorities place the figure as high as $30,000,000,000.

Money invested in Government, State, county, or municipal bonds is just as surely capital as is that invested in any other kind of a security and should at all times be subject to taxation. When a man invests his money in a security that can not be taxed he removes just that amount from the taxable resources of the country and thereby increases the burden of taxation for all the others. The policy of issuing tax-exempt securities is a most vicious one and Congress should take the necessary steps to put an end to it.

AMERICAN PROFITEERS.

During and since the war we have witnessed an orgy of profiteering in this country that will be the shame of the Nation for generations to come. The profiteers, under the provisions of the excess profits law and the surtax provisions, have been compelled to divide these profits with the Federal Treasury. Some of their ill-gotten gains have gone into the Treasury of the United States to help pay the running expenses of the Government, thereby lessening, by precisely the sums they paid, the amount of money raised by the other Federal taxes, which very largely fall upon the less fortunate people of the country.

There has always been an objection by big business to the imposition of the excess-profits tax and the surtaxes on individual incomes. They opposed these laws when the laws were passed. If the Congress had listened to them at that time as attentively as it would seem to be listening now, these laws would not have been placed upon the statute books, and $9,396,645,809.04, the amount received from the excess-profits tax since the inception of the law, would have been lost to the Treasury.

Does anyone argue that had this law not been placed upon the statute books these profits would have been less than they were? Does anyone believe these profiteers would have been less greedy than they proved themselves to be? And does anyone contend that, given the same opportunity in the future, these selfsame individuals would be less quick to avail themselves of the opportunity of gouging enormous profits from a helpless public?

I believe human nature does not change so quickly, Mr. Chairman, and given the opportunity to make enormous profits, and keep them all, the American profiteer will respond as promptly to the impulse of his greed as he did when he was compelled to divide some of his profits with the Treasury of the United States.

The chairman of the Ways and Means Committee and other gentlemen favoring this bill announce with great impressiveness that this law reduces the tax burden $7 per capita for the entire population, and would have you believe that each individual in the United States would be relieved of the tax burden to this amount. This is ridiculous upon the face of it, as I have shown. We may be able to meet the Government expenses, under the provisions of this bill, but I doubt it. And if we do not, Mr. Chairman, or when the time comes to liquidate our enormous war debt, will the gentlemen who are so ardent in their admiration of the supposed virtues of this bill rise in their place in this House and demand that the law, which is now in effect, be placed back upon the statute books, or will they write into the law new consumption taxes and thereby still further place the burden upon the poorer people of the country?

The profiteers of the Nation realize just as clearly as we that if this bill is passed they, for all time, will be free to continue their nefarious practice without a check of any kind upon them. A law drawn to punish these commercial highbinders has been declared unconstitutional by the Supreme Court of the United States, so they are relieved of fear from that direction. If this measure which is now before us is passed they will be in a position to do as they please, for we can not reach them through the courts, nor can we reach them through the process of taxation.

Mr. Chairman, I believe this bill to be a most vicious one. I believe it to be a bill which thrusts upon the shoulders of the farmers, the laboring man, and the people in moderate circumstances, a burden greater than they can bear. It fastens upon them the burden of paying the greater portion of the enormous war debt, while it relieves the ones who can afford to pay.

Our party platform did not commit us to the repeal of these specific provisions of the law. Our President did commit us to a definite line of action at the opening of this session when he stated in this Chamber "the country does not expect and will not approve a shifting of burdens," and it is upon this commitment I shall stand.

Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of some of the provisions of this bill. I am in favor of the abolition of the so-called nuisance taxes, and I would like to vote for those provisions. I would also like to vote for the repeal of the transportation taxes, but I would much rather vote for a substantial reduction in the transportation rates. It is the rates which have been increased more than 100 per cent, in many instances, that creates the burden upon the consuming and manufacturing public, and not the 3 per cent tax on the freight rate. But I can not vote for the provisions of the bill of which I approve without voting also for those provisions which I know will result in the shifting of the burden of taxation to those least able to carry this burden. I would like to vote for the additional exemption on individual incomes and the additional exemption on account of dependent children. I would like to vote for some of the other provisions of the bill, but I can not do so, Mr. Chairman, because the House yesterday passed a gag rule, which I voted against, which precludes the possibility of amending this bill in any way without the approval of the committee.

If this bill is not amended to eliminate the repeal of the excess-profits tax and to eliminate the reduction of the maximum surtaxes to 32 per cent, and thereby make the larger and more prosperous corporations and the more wealthy people of the country bear their fair share of this burden of taxation, I shall vote against the bill. It is only by so doing that I can hope to square my vote with my conscience and with the welfare of the people whom I have the honor to represent.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. ACKERMAN].

Mr. ACKERMAN. Mr. Chairman, to my mind the Republican members of the Committee on Ways and Means are to be heartily congratulated upon the care and thoroughness they have taken in the preparation of the revenue measure we have now under consideration. Taxation even in lessened form is at no time an agreeable subject to contemplate and to be compelled to ask our countrymen to willingly submit to a program which is expected to raise annually nearly four times what the entire debt of the country was prior to our entering the war in 1917 is not a joyous proceeding. However, the 22,000,000 of Liberty-bond holders upon whom almost the entire payments will fall realize that the aftermath of war exacts a toll in the beginning corresponding to the magnitude of the colossal undertaking which closed with the signing of the armistice in November, 1918.

For the purpose of obtaining a proper perspective we turn back the pages of history and review what has taken place since 1850 and succeeding years as tabulated by the Census Bureau, and we have the following figures of the condition of the country:

When the population was 23,000,000 in 1850 the wealth was $7,000,000,000, or $300 per individual.

When the population was 31,000,000 in 1860 the wealth was $16,000,000,000, or $516 per individual.

When the population was 38,000,000 in 1870 the wealth was $24,000,000,000, or $630 per individual.

When the population was 50,000,000 in 1880 the wealth was $43,000,000,000, or $860 per individual.

When the population was 62,000,000 in 1890 the wealth was $65,000,000,000, or $1,050 per individual.

When the population was 76,000,000 in 1900 the wealth was $88,000,000,000, or $1,160 per individual.

When the population was 81,000,000 in 1904 the wealth was $107,000,000,000, or $1,320 per individual.

When the population was 95,000,000 in 1912 the wealth was $187,000,000,000, or $1,990 per individual.

When the population of 1921 of 108,087,000 is considered, the probable wealth of the country, making allowances for the deflation of from forty to fifty billions from the price peak of last year, must approximate $400,000,000,000. Let us see if we can not justify this conclusion:

The increase in population since the census of 1910 is 13,087,000, and at the average wealth of individuals of $1,990, as ascertained by the census of that date, equals $26,043,913,000. That item added to the $187,000,000,000 previously existing makes a total of $213,000,000,000. As evidenced by the latest census bulletins of 1921, farm values have risen from $38,000,000,000 in 1912 to $77,000,000,000 in 1921, an increase of over 100 per cent. The value of the farms in 1912 was a little over 19 per cent of the value of all properties. Using that as a basis, the entire wealth of the country would figure out $385,000,000,000. The income of the country in 1912 was $33,800,000,000, according to the statistician of the National City Bank in New York, and in 1920 it was $73,400,000,000. For years the average income of the country has been at the rate of 18 per cent on the estimated valuation. For more than a year past a prominent metropolitan journal—Commerce and Finance—in New York City has held to the estimate of $500,000,000,000 in its weekly statistics published for the information of its readers as to the wealth of America. Despite the deflation of from forty to fifty billions caused by the buyers' strike, yet with the gold pouring into the country by the tens of millions each week the estimate of $400,000,000,000 can not be far astray at the present time.

Senator SMOOR, according to the New York Times, in 1919 estimated the entire wealth of the world to be $960,000,000,000. Granting that as a premise, we have, therefore, 41 per cent of the world's wealth, based upon the above calculations. Our national debt being $25,000,000,000, it is less than 7 per cent of our joint possessions, for every citizen is a stockholder in the Government. If we exclude the $10,000,000,000 due from our allies, our debt is about 3½ per cent of what a generous Providence has placed in our hands and for which we are stewards. The question naturally arises, How should the funds be provided for the maintenance of so vast a property while distributing the burden so that those who are in the minor scales of attainment shall be encouraged to obtain the major heights of opportunity by sharing a lesser burden while in the process of accretion, and those who have patriotically paid the almost confiscatory though necessary war rates of taxation, not longer to be vexed into devising ways, legitimate though they may be, of escaping payment, but of encouraging them to be of further service to their fellow man by investing their incomes in productive enterprises? If such a result can be reached, will not the many have the opportunity of adding to their possessions instead of drawing on and depleting their storehouse of what has hitherto been laid up by habits of thrift in the past?

This thought seems to have been uppermost in the minds of the Ways and Means majority, and an examination of the figures will show that 50 per cent more consideration has been given to those on the lower rungs of the ladder than to those farther up. To those who are still called upon to bear huge burdens let us not be too captious because of what the war imposed upon us. We have faced about. Crescendo will be replaced by diminuendo from now on. Did we not with the help of the Almighty help win the war? If we had lost it, we know what a price we would have been made to pay. Therefore while setting our feet, as has been done, in the right direction of lessened expenditures and decreased taxes to the extent of nearly $800,000,000, let us have a faith, a vision, and confidence in the future. There is much encouragement to the small business man in the bill, because of the provisions that losses may be deducted until liquidated, through a series of years, and of the tribunal for the final settlement of disputed items. Vexatious taxes have been eliminated and remedial measures for the collection of the remainder promised.

What the country wants to know is, What are the conditions it has to meet? It is now informed of the views of the House, and the sooner we can complete that program the sooner will employment increase. Uncertainty, when business is considered, acts like a poison gas. It resembles a fog in which we grope for light. Remove the uncertainty and business must forge ahead.

The United States of America has never gone backward and if we maintain our faith in the motto stamped on our coins, "In God we trust," I am confident we will make further progress. Let us consider our blessings, far and beyond those vouchsafed to many. Let us courageously face the future and the opportunities of the present, let us buckle up our courage with a firm resolve, for this is the zero hour to "go over the top," and the sooner that idea permeates the body politic the sooner will there be increased activity, producing increased revenue, which in turn will permit of lessened taxation later on. What we need is to think in terms suited to our greatness. The committee's majority has made the path more easily to be traversed and our thanks are due to it for the expedition exhibited in framing and reporting the measure. [Applause.]

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order. How much time did the gentleman have?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood the gentleman from Massachusetts to yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. BLANTON. I did not understand; I thought he was recognized for an indefinite time.

Mr. ACKERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the Record.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has that privilege under the rule adopted. The gentleman yields back nine minutes.

Mr. COLLIER. Mr. Chairman, I yield one and a half minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I just wanted to say that we are maintaining our usual record here on bills of this importance. On this little bill that involves $3,000,000,000 or $4,000,000,000 we are now discussing it with 14 Congressmen present; only 14 Congressmen out of 435. That is the kind of representation that our good Republican friends are giving the country.

Mr. TINCHER. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. BLANTON. I will not yield unless the gentleman claims there are more than 14 present, because the gentleman may get all the time that he wants.

Mr. TINCHER. I have not had any time.

Mr. BLANTON. I do not want the gentleman to intersperse any facetious remarks in my speech. I want to say that this is not the kind of representation that ought to be given by Democrats or Republicans. You would get better bills passed, better tariff bills and better revenue bills, if the Members would stay on this floor and find out what they are voting on. We are keeping up the usual record of having about 15 Members here. If the gentleman from Kansas wants to ask whether there are now 15 Members present, I will yield, because one more has come in, and by actual count there are now exactly 15 Members present, including the distinguished Speaker, who is honoring us with his presence here.

Mr. TINCHER. Will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. I can not yield now, because my time is up.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield one hour to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. COPLEY].

Mr. COPLEY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, in this country of ours, where everyone pays taxes in some form or other, and almost everyone who pays taxes votes for the men who make the laws that place the burden of taxation upon their shoulders, it is absolutely necessary that such tax laws as we enact should meet the approval of the majority of this country, or, perhaps speaking more correctly, that they should be as little obnoxious as possible to a majority of the people of this country. And this tax bill, prepared and presented by the Republican members of the Ways and Means Committee and directed toward its passage by the Republican membership of this House, is our answer to the challenge of the gentlemen who have discussed this question from the other side of the aisle yesterday and to-day. It has not taken 10 years' service in Congress for me to see that there are two principles of economics that are not taught in any university in this country or are not included in any textbook. The first is that any tax is just that is levied against the other fellow and the second is that any unjust tax may become just if its burdens can be passed on to some one else. The need of this Government for money in a hurry-up manner is the real reason for the present chaotic condition of the tax laws of this country. I am not going to abuse anyone for those laws. I voted for them, and I voted for them because I believed at the time they were absolutely necessary for the welfare not only of the people of this country but for the welfare of the civilization of the world, and I would have stood most anything in the line of taxation. But not to recognize their ill effect now would be a very great mistake on my part.

The excess-profits tax probably stands in the way of our getting back to normal more than any other law on the statute books of this country. It was responsible for four of the greatest evils under which the people of this country have labored; and whereas, as has been well said this afternoon, the effect is very much minimized in a falling market, yet the effect will be felt the moment we find a stable condition, and it will prevent our again rising to a period of prosperity. The first of these four evils is that it lends itself to the first of those two principles to which I refer—it can be passed on to some one else. Every commodity goes through from three to ten hands. The excess-profits tax, pyramided in each one of these processes, becomes staggering to contemplate when it finally finds a resting place in the hands of the ultimate consumer. It is responsible for the high cost of living, and I think I can easily demonstrate that to you by a simple process of arithmetic. For instance, I think we will all agree that no man can do any business in a good year for less than 10 per cent profit. Nineteen hundred and fourteen was a bad year; 1920 and 1921 are bad years; 1922 may be worse. Perhaps we will have two or three bad years. And anyone in business must make more money than he can earn from interest when the other fellow does the work and does the worrying, and consequently 10 per cent is the least possible earning under which good business conditions can be maintained in good years. I am going to mention only one of these processes for illustration—the retail trade—and bear in mind, when I use this I am not singling out the retail trade because it has been the only offender, but because it is the one with which most of us come in closest contact.

Now, to make 10 per cent under the tax law of 1918, the merchant would have been compelled to make 13 per cent before his excess-profits tax and the corporate income tax were taken out. And if he decided he wanted to make 12 per cent instead, it would have been necessary for him to mark his goods at such a figure that they would net him 17.4 per cent. The first excess profit tax law, of 1917, was passed on October 3 of that year, and it was made retroactive to the 1st of January, but the payment was mercifully put forward to the following year, and the arrangement was made that it might be paid in four equal installments. Every prudent business man provides use for his money as fast as he has it in sight. And the consequence was that most of the men had spent their money for that year, either in the form of luxuries or in the form of extending their business, or the form of investments, none of them liquid, and in order to get the money to pay that tax the following year it was absolutely necessary for the merchant to raise his prices in order that he might have money sufficient with which to pay the tax, which he could not have foreseen and which was made retroactive to the 1st of January, or nearly 10½ months prior to the time when the law went into effect.

Then came the law of 1918. Why, it was not introduced until late in August of that year. It did not pass the House until October and did not become a law until the 24th of February, 1919, and yet was made retroactive. This was an enormous increase in taxes. It could not have been foreseen. The merchants had set aside—had they been prudent—enough to pay the tax of 1917 during 1918. Here was a doubling of taxes, and there was but one way to provide for that, and that was to raise the prices, and we have the anomalous condition in this country of prices having been raised after the armistice was signed and after we were out of the war. And so the business men of this country found it was the only way by which they could easily raise the money necessary to provide for the unforeseen tax that was made retroactive for 14 months. Now, supposing that these merchants felt that in the uncertain condition not only of taxation and of business, but not knowing when another tax might be passed and not knowing whether or not it, too, would be retroactive, they had better make 16 per cent.

It would have been necessary for him to mark his goods at such a figure as would net him 25 per cent before the tax was taken off, and yet if he was a mild profiteer and said he wanted 20 per cent, it would require a profit of 59 per cent in order to net him 20 per cent. If, on the other hand, he was a real profiteer and desired 100 per cent, it would require between 525 and 550 per cent profit before the taxes were taken off.

Now, I think the people of this country will agree, at any rate the Members of Congress ought to agree, that there is another axiom in business in the matter of fixing prices in this country, and that is that the great department stores in the great cities make the prices. Although their overhead is so enormous, yet per unit of business it is so much less than that of the smaller stores that prior to the outbreak of this war in Europe they were pressing very heavily upon the small merchants all over this country. The Members of Congress ought to easily understand that.

For the first seven years that I was here that basket into which the gentleman from New York [Mr. COCKRAN] so dramatically dropped a bill this afternoon was filled with bills proposing to tax department stores in every conceivable kind of form; proposing to exclude their catalogues from the mails, to exclude their letters from the mails. Why? Because all over this country they were bearing very heavily upon the small merchants. But since the excess-profits tax has been a law I think you gentlemen will agree with me there have not been many of such bills placed in the basket.

Now, the small merchant finds himself in the position of the meek, who have the promise of the Scriptures that they shall inherit the earth; and the small merchant, taking advantage of his opportunity, has been able to more than hold his own from that time to the present. Of course, each business is allowed an exemption of $3,000, but in the case of the large stores that exemption was negligible.

I doubt if John Wanamaker could lock or unlock his doors for $3,000 per year, and I am perfectly willing to guarantee that he can not sweep out his place for ten times that amount. That tax, gentlemen, did not mean much to him, but to the small merchant it did amount to a great deal. He had the opportunity to raise his prices as the big merchant was compelled to do or hold prices down, and put the big store practically out of business. In that contest in the mind of the small merchant human nature won, and he raised his prices as well.

I am perfectly willing to say to you that four-fifths of all the merchants in this country never averaged in profits more than $3,000 a year prior to the outbreak of this war. They were allowed that for exemption, and they were allowed by interpretation to give these comfortable salaries to themselves as managers and their wives as helpers and bookkeepers, and their daughters and other members of their family, and generally to escape taxation altogether. And so, although the price of living was enormously increased, this Government did not collect, through the operation of the excess-profits law, more than about 25 per cent of the actual excess profits, and the actual increase of living turned on the working out of the excess-profits tax law.

The second of these evils under which we are suffering is that the excess-profits tax law destroys initiative in this country.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COPLEY. Certainly.

Mr. BLANTON. Which one of us eight or nine men is the gentleman trying to convince?

Mr. COPLEY. The fact of the matter is, I am trying to get this out of my system. [Laughter.] I think perhaps the gentleman from Texas can appreciate that better than any man in this House.

Mr. BLANTON. Would the gentleman like to have an audience? The occupants of the press gallery have gone and the visitors' gallery is empty. I can get the gentleman an audience if he wants one.

Mr. COPLEY. I have the best audience of all—the Official Reporter.

Mr. BLANTON. But they get tired sometimes.

Mr. COPLEY. He may get tired before I get through with my speech, but with a relay or two I hope he will get through. [Laughter.]

It means destruction of initiative. A young man can not afford to go into business under this excess-profits tax. It is true he is allowed 8 per cent exemption. As a matter of fact a young man of integrity and industry and ability can not possibly borrow money at less than 8 per cent; but even so, the interest that he pays on that money is allowed only as a cost of doing business, and it is not allowed in his capital account, and he will pay under the present law almost exactly 50 per cent of any profits he might make, and this destroys not only initiative in this country, but the opportunity for bright, able, industrious, and courageous young men who have heretofore made this country what it is. Why, it is the industry and the courage and determination of that kind of men which took this country, scarcely 300 years ago, a wilderness, and made out of it the industrial marvel of the world. To-day the humblest workman in this country is better fed on better and more wholesome food and better prepared, and so are his family, and he is better clothed and better shod and better housed, and his children are better schooled, and he and his family have the benefits of better sanitation, and on the average their lives are longer and happier than the bluest-blooded men who surrounded the throne of George III when this country was born as a Nation. Now we are losing them, because the young men have not the opportunity or the incentive that they formerly enjoyed.

The third of these great evils is that the excess-profits tax has done more to rivet monopoly on this country than any other law that was ever written on the statute books of this country. A merchant under the operation of this law could count his losses as well as his gains, and consequently if he owned a store and was exceedingly prosperous he would start another and perhaps lose money while he was getting it on its feet, and every man of business knows it is difficult to establish a new business without a loss.

As soon as it was in a stable financial condition he could start another and another, and more chain stores have been started and more chain store companies have been brought forth under this excess-profits tax law than ever before in the entire history of this country combined.

Now, the same thing is true of every other line of business just as it is with the retail merchant. It has done more to rivet monopoly on this country than any other law that has ever been on the statute books.

Again, we come to the fourth, and that which to my mind is the greatest evil that has befallen this country since the Pilgrim Fathers landed at Plymouth Rock. I refer to the great orgy of extravagance that has beset the people of this country, and all because of the excess-profits tax law. If a man under the law of 1918 were making over 20 per cent he would be compelled to pay 82.6 cents out of every dollar to the United States Government as a tax, and consequently any excuse that he could possibly find that would allow him to spend that in some form or other in which he benefited, either in his pleasure or some other way, was eagerly seized upon. I personally know more than 50 men living west of the Allegheny Mountains who made anywhere from 1 to 10 trips a year to New York, not because they needed to do so but because out of every dollar which they spent on the trip only 17.4 cents was their own money. The rest was the money of the United States. Instead of writing, telegraphing, or telephoning they would jump on the train and go down to New York. They had a dollar's worth of fun for this 17.4 cents. They filled the hotels; they filled the sleeping cars; they spent money like drunken sailors. On one occasion when I was making a trip from here to Chicago on my way home I found six other men in the smoking room of the Pullman, and they were marveling because the hotels and trains were so crowded. I gave them this explanation, and five of those six men admitted to me that that was exactly why they were on the trip.

The next morning I asked one of these men who he was and what his business was, and he told me that he lived in a western State and that his business was to get concessions at fairs in the West and Northwest to sell pop corn and candy, and he wanted to buy a couple of pop-corn machines; so he put his wife on the train with himself and went down to New York to investigate the pop-corn machines. The cost of the trip to him and his wife was more than the cost of the two pop-corn machines that he bought. That is ridiculous, but nevertheless it is true. And that sort of extravagance percolated through every grade of society, and no longer did the people of this country buy intelligently. No longer did they ask what the price of anything was. No longer did they ask themselves whether or not they could afford to buy it or whether it was wise. They made but one statement—"Give me the best."

Mr. STEVENSON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. COPLEY. I am very glad to do so.

Mr. STEVENSON. The gentleman does not contend that that condition prevails now?

Mr. COPLEY. It does not; but, as I said in the beginning of my remarks, just the moment we start up again in industry in this country you are again going to have that same condition, if this excess profit law now on the statute books is retained, because then there will be excess profits to pay. Of course, they are not being earned at this time.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. COPLEY. I shall be very glad to yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman will also note that the people generally have profited by the situation he mentions, because he will find that in the last three years there have been more large donations to churches and schools than have ever been made before.

Mr. COPLEY. The gentleman is anticipating my speech, because he is not correct so far as I have gone, and I will tell him why—because the Treasury Department has not allowed an exemption for corporate giving.

Mr. BLANTON. But I was speaking of individual giving.

Mr. COPLEY. I am coming to that in a moment. This has had to do with the excess-profits tax alone.

Mr. BLANTON. I have been following the gentleman all through his speech.

Mr. COPLEY. This has to do with the excess profits alone up to the present time.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield, if I do not interrupt him?

Mr. COPLEY. I am very glad to yield to the gentleman from Wyoming.

Mr. MONDELL. Has the gentleman studied the effect of the excess-profits tax on business of a speculative and venturesome nature like mining and oil development and all that sort of thing?

Mr. COPLEY. Certainly. I was going to discuss that as a general objection. I have been giving you these four specific objections. Any one of them is sufficient. Now, as a general objection in business, no man can start a new business, no man would dare attempt a hazardous business if he is to lose a lot of money in starting it, unless, as I said in analyzing the second objection, if he loses a lot of money in starting it the losses can be charged against some other business which he has organized.

Unless he can do that it might take him a hundred years to make a fair business profit, even when he got it on a profitable basis. So that because he could not credit his losses in the beginning to the earnings that he was going to have in the future, no man dared start an ordinary business, and I will challenge him to show me any man who has started one, unless it had something to do with the war. No man dared start an ordinary business, to say nothing of a hazardous business. It resulted, as the gentleman well knows, in shortening the gold supply of this country. The oil supply of this country will show its effects inside of the next year or so.

The natural-gas supply will also show it. Why? All the wild-catters had to quit, although the tax law did make a special arrangement for oil and natural gas. Now, I would like to discuss for a moment the effect of removing these surtaxes on the higher brackets of individual incomes. Excess-profits taxes and surtaxes in the high brackets both are covered by the mantle of sound political doctrine in the world taxes on the ability to pay. This Government was organized for the purpose of guaranteeing to every man his life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. Life and liberty are equally dear, life particularly to all men and liberty to all self-respecting persons. The pursuit of happiness may be very much modified by the enjoyment of an income and may be very much enhanced by the enjoyment of a large income. And yet these two taxes, when carried to an extreme, entirely defeat the purpose for which they were laid. I have shown what the excess-profits taxes have done to the people of this country. The income tax in higher brackets has added its share. It has made money so high in this country that the average industry could not get it at any reasonable price. Under the present graduated income tax—and I have no apology to offer, for I voted for it, too, as I thought it was necessary—but we find in times of peace that under the highest brackets the man instead of having 8 per cent on an 8 per cent investment would have less than 2½ per cent, and consequently he will not buy that investment. He buys tax-exempt securities, and then as a result all the great industries of this country, the railroads, the telephones, all the utilities, gas and electric light, and things we all need, find it impossible to raise money except at such ruinous rates of interest that they are compelled to raise their rates and thereby add to the high cost of living to the people of the country.

I wish there was some way in which we could tax these incomes. I have been very much interested, and I am violating no confidence when I say that the members of the Ways and Means Committee, the Republican membership, have been very much interested, in this so-called spending tax. I have no question whatever but what the people of this country, through the Treasury Department and through the Ways and Means Committee and Finance Committee of the Senate, will give this proposition adequate study within the next two months. I will add that, notwithstanding the authority of the eloquent gentleman from New York, it is going to take more than two or three days to work out a proposition as novel as that; in the meanwhile this bill is a step in the right direction.

Mr. COLLIER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COPLEY. I will gladly yield.

Mr. COLLIER. The gentleman is referring by the pending tax to the proposition of the gentleman from New York [Mr. MILLS]?

Mr. COPLEY. Yes; I said the eloquent gentleman from New York [Mr. COCKRAN] without any disparagement to the other gentleman from New York [Mr. MILLS].

Mr. COLLIER. But the gentleman is referring to the proposition advocated by Mr. MILLS?

Mr. COPLEY. Yes. As I say, I violate no confidence by saying that it impressed itself on the Ways and Means Committee, but there was no time to work it out. In the meanwhile we brought in this tax bill, and if it does not work as well as we hope it will we will probably substitute something else, and if the so-called Mills bill promises as well as many think it may we are very likely to substitute that. And, after all, I would like to say that perhaps that is the only way that you can tax the rich people of this country without having them shoulder it onto some one else.

Under the present law you destroy industry when you tax the higher and larger incomes in the high brackets. I will say to my good friends on both sides of this aisle that I do not believe that the reduction of the income tax in the high brackets is going to be followed by the benefits which the present Secretary of the Treasury and all three of his predecessors have indicated is their opinion.

I do not believe it is going to be followed by any benefits comparable whatever to the opinions that they have expressed, but I do think that within a very few months from now we will have a way to tax not the largest income of this country, possibly, because they are usually accumulated by thrift and not by spendthrifts, but by taxing large incomes generally through the medium of a spending tax. The principle is correct. We may find some bug under the chip, as we did in the excess-profits tax and the income tax, but it is worth while to study and study very carefully. Meanwhile the bill under discussion is a decided improvement, and that is a step in the right direction.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COPLEY. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman realizes that every family in the United States must have medicine.

Mr. COPLEY. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. And that it is harder for a poor man's family to get it than a rich man's.

Mr. COPLEY. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Medicine for some poor families is quite an item. Why does the gentleman tax medicine?

Mr. COPLEY. Oh, I shall ask the gentleman to let me make this speech in my own way, and then he can talk to me about his own speech. I have not come to the medicine part of it yet. The gentleman's mind moves very fast and is ahead of mine all of the time.

Mr. LONGWORTH. May I suggest to the gentleman that his party brought in and he voted for a bill that taxed medicine twice as high as this bill does.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, I was not here then.

Mr. LONGWORTH. We have reduced the tax on medicine.

Mr. BLANTON. Why did you not take it off absolutely if you want to help the poor people of the United States?

Mr. COPLEY. Mr. Chairman, let me say to the gentleman before I finish what I have to say about the spending tax, that it is a tax put upon spending, upon extravagance, and of necessity puts a premium upon thrift. I want to register at this moment the statement that the entire civilization of the world is based solely upon thrift, and that without thrift the civilization of the world would go to pieces in a very short time. This spending tax, based as it is on the proposition of exempting some of the necessary expenses of life, moderately, then increasing the rate as the expenditure goes up, may offer a solution of the one problem that has troubled most of the great economists of the world, and that is how we may get the money without defeating the object you have in mind.

Mr. BOX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COPLEY. Yes.

Mr. BOX. I am much interested in what the gentleman says about the spending tax, and I have read the hearings in which Mr. MILLS appeared in advocacy of the tax. As I remember it, he stated as an objection to the present tax the fact that wholesale perjury was being committed to avoid the payment of the tax. Does the gentleman recall that testimony?

Mr. COPLEY. I should not like to pass any judgment upon that. If my memory is correct, it is in the hearings.

Mr. BOX. Does the gentleman think that can be avoided if men are disposed to swear out from under the obligation of citizenship?

Mr. COPLEY. If the Department of Justice is properly administered, and I am not throwing any bricks at any man, it can stop this wholesale perjury, and the gentleman knows it as well as I do. Any man with an income subject to tax does not want to go to jail. Put a few of them in jail and that would put an end to the matter. I submit that to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

Mr. BLANTON. There are over a billion dollars of taxes unpaid owing to the Government.

Mr. COPLEY. And I will tell you why. It is because, like any new enterprise of such gigantic proportions as that involved in the investigation of millions of accounts, no Treasury Department could possibly have assimilated it within the period of time that it has been in operation, but when we once get firmly established, when we find what the gentleman's income is and what mine is and all the rest of them, it is going to be a much simpler matter to administer from that time on.

Mr. BLANTON. But it is admitted that the men will not pay the taxes and they are not forcing payment of them.

Mr. COPLEY. That does not make it any more difficult, because they do not do it. I am not discussing the motives as to why it is not done, but I am answering my friend here that if wholesale perjury has been committed, it is the fault of the Department of Justice that they have not put men in jail.

Mr. BOX. Does the gentleman think the Government ought to back up in its efforts to collect of the men owing it because of their perjury?

Mr. COPLEY. I do not; and I shall again register with the gentleman what I said a moment ago. No man who has an income sufficient to lay himself liable to an income tax wants to go to jail, and if you put a few of them in jail it would be a wholesome lesson, and you would not have so much perjury in the future. I think that is the answer to it. While I am on the subject of thrift, I would just like to call attention to one thing. The distinguished chairman of the committee mentioned this yesterday in his remarks. He said that the wealth of this country in 1910 was estimated at $187,000,000,000, which is about $1,900 per person, if it was all divided up equally, and only about $35 of that in cash.

That included all of the real estate, improved and unimproved, the value of all lands on which buildings are erected, and on which they are not, and the value of all the farm lands of the country. None of the value of this land is the result of man's work, except some inconsequential percentage where reclamation has brought some land into value, and yet counting all of that as the wealth of this country, had it all been divided up in 1910 it would have amounted to less than $1,900 per person. Deducting the value of the lands, city lots, not including the buildings, for they are the result of man's work, the entire wealth of the country in 1910 per capita would have been less than $1,500, and this is the significant thing that I desire to call to the attention not only of the Congress but of the people of the country.

White men have been on this continent for over 300 years, and that means that they have saved less than $5 per person for every year the white man has been here. That seems ridiculous, and yet they doubled that wealth almost in the 10 years between 1900 and 1910. If you will go back to the first census of wealth in this country, the accumulation amounted to less than $1.25 per person per year that the white man had been on this continent, a ridiculously small amount, and yet it is a greater accumulation in 300 years in this country than is shown in England in the entire eight or nine hundred years which she can claim as a civilized nation, and even greater than France with 900 to 1,000 years of civilization. The point I make is that we can not afford to jockey very much with the thrift of the people of this country or the thrift of the people of the world. That is the only thing which stands between civilization and annihilation of civilization.

We ought to give every opportunity to the people of this country not only to create but all encouragement we possibly can to save in order that we may increase the margin between civilization and the annihilation of civilization.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me just for the purpose of asking the gentleman from Wyoming a question?

Mr. COPLEY. I will.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to ask the gentleman from Wyoming when we may expect the antibeer bill to come back from conference to the House?

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman knows probably as much as I do about the condition of the conference.

Mr. BLANTON. It is subject to be called up at any time?

Mr. MONDELL. I do not understand the conferees have agreed.

Mr. BLANTON. I understand they have.

Mr. MONDELL. Well, the report has not been presented.

Mr. BLANTON. May I ask the gentleman from Wyoming whether he will permit that conference to be reported to the House before this bill has been acted upon?

Mr. MONDELL. It has not been my thought that we would take up any other business until this bill has been voted on.

Mr. BLANTON. Until the bill passes Saturday afternoon at 3 o'clock. The antiebeer bill has been shoved aside and probably will not be passed—

Mr. COPLEY. Do not shove my argument aside. Wait until I have finished.

Mr. MONDELL. We are going to conclude our business before we recess.

Mr. BLANTON. If that is the program, I think we ought to have a quorum here.

Mr. COPLEY. I will have finished in three or four minutes.

Mr. BLANTON. I will wait for the gentleman. I withdraw it for the present, but if the majority leader is going to side-track the antiebeer bill conference until after this bill is passed and have debate with just a handful of men here, I think we ought to keep a quorum.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman can make the point of no quorum if he wants to do so, but no one is side-tracking anything. No report has been made by the conferees on the antiebeer bill, and the gentleman knows that perfectly well.

Mr. BLANTON. It could be brought up at any time.

Mr. COPLEY. Mr. Chairman, I would like to finish this.

Mr. BLANTON. The conference report is in order at any time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois did not yield to anybody.

Mr. COPLEY. I will yield to anyone if it has to do with this particular question. Now, we must encourage thrift in this country all we possibly can. I do not know that this can be definitely proven, but I think it can, Dr. Fess. The University of Pennsylvania and Yale University have had a lot of archaeologists in the valley of the Mesopotamia and they have found cities that perished six or seven thousand years before the birth of Christ. They had a type of civilization, perhaps, just as great as ours in this country 60 or 70 years ago. They had international mails. They were entirely snuffed out, and again in recent years we see Greece and Rome entirely snuffed out, and when you see the small margin of safety in the wealth that has been accumulated by the people of this country, the most marvelous accumulation the world has ever known, when you see the small margin that stands between us and annihilation, I am led irresistibly to the conclusion that when peoples have gone back on the one sane process of accumulating wealth, they are absolutely doomed to destruction. Now, I am not a pessimist—

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. COPLEY. I shall be very glad to do so.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I am very much interested in the gentleman's discussion. What is that one sane way of accumulating wealth?

Mr. COPLEY. Work, produce, and save a little of what you produce.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. COPLEY. I will be very glad to yield.

Mr. FESS. I think the gentleman has made a very unusually strong statement all through his address, and I have listened to it with great pleasure. It strikes me, the emphasis he has placed, that capital has to have an opportunity of investing in order that enterprise can be productive in the employment of labor.

Mr. COPLEY. Yes; and I want to add to that because I am coming to that point, the greatest industrial corporation in the world, the United States Steel Corporation. I study its annual report carefully. I never had a dollar in my life invested in it, but it is the most illuminating document that comes to my attention. Last year the average number of employees was 267,000. Excluding all administrative officers and sales agents, the average wage paid was $6.96 to each one of those 267,000 employees, men and women; and yet add the salary of the administrative officers and the commissions paid to the sales agents, dividing them all by the total number of employees, and they would get a little less than 4 cents a day in addition, and I want to say to any man in this room, if he thinks an organization of trained men under the great leadership of Judge Gary is not worth 4 cents a day to the wages of the workers, I think he had better have his head repaired. There is something wrong with it. I will take up the returns on capital which I am just coming to. If every dollar of profit of the United States Steel Corporation for last year—1920—was divided up among its workmen and not one cent paid to the owner or possessor of the capital, it would have made a difference of less than $2.22, or less than one-third of the returns to labor was earned by the United States Steel Corporation for capital. Further, that was an abnormal year, better than the average year for capital.

The average return to owners of the United States Steel Corporation since it has been organized has been $1.10 per day for each man and woman employed by it. That is one of the most efficiently administered corporations in the world. The estimates I get from the experts of the Treasury Department state that the return on capital would amount to 87 or 88 cents a day for the working man and woman in this country, if divided equally between all workmen and if capital received not one cent.

Mr. FESS. And your chief concern in not penalizing this industry to the point of inability to employ labor is not the value to capital but the value to the labor of the country?

Mr. COPLEY. Absolutely.

Mr. FESS. That is the thing that our friends across the aisle do not seem to appreciate.

Mr. COPLEY. Do not put sand in the gears; I was getting along pretty well with them before the gentleman got in here. I hope to convert a few of them, and I will say that the best of them are here now. [Laughter.]

Gentlemen, this excess profits tax law, which the committee first decided to take off as of January 1, 1921, when it came before the Republican membership of the House they decided to take off on January 1, 1922. I myself personally think it is an advantage to the people of this country. Those who will pay it have already provided for that in their profits, and we will just be giving it to them. Now, then, the corporate income tax, which was intended by the Republican members of the committee to be added beginning the 1st of January, 1921, by direction of the Republican membership of the House is going to be added on January 1, 1922. Again, I think that is an advantage. The real fact is this, as was made clear by my colleague from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH]: In the falling market that we have had the past year the excess-profits tax has not borne very heavily on the people of this country, and we can exact and take it without doing any harm to anyone at the present time for the rest of this year. And the corporate income tax, which has been increased 2½ per cent, will be added on the 1st of January next year, and we will have no more of the evil effects of retroactive taxation to which I have referred.

I am not a pessimist, but I do not think we are going to start up all business the next six months by any manner of means. I have read carefully the history of my country, and I will say to you that after the Revolutionary War, from 1785 to 1791, we had times worse than we have to-day. Nobody worked and everybody hated everyone else.

Mr. FESS. And we had continental money that was not worth anything.

Mr. COPLEY. And they drank whisky worse than they do now.

We had a period of prosperity right after that which excited the envy of England and France. We were in a war with France actually, but we did not declare war. She sank our warships and we sank hers wherever we met. Later on the war was switched to England, and we had an actual war with her, and when it was over, in 1815, again we had a period worse than we have to-day. It lasted for five or six years. Then that was followed almost immediately by such a period of prosperity that at the time I went to school in my elementary history it was referred to as the "era of good feeling" in this country.

I have seen in my own life the period from 1893 to 1897. I went through it and I know what it was; after we were all settled and started right again we had a period of prosperity, we had another era of good feeling in this country for 12 or 15 years. And I have no alarm but what we are going to follow exactly that same cycle now. The proper thing for us to do is to establish ourselves on a firm and sane basis, and then we can begin to work. Whereas I am not satisfied with this law in all of its particulars, and while I do not think many men in this House are, we must legislate by parties, and I have got to give up something I want because some other fellow has got to have some part of what he wants, and whereas I do not think it is a perfect law from my standpoint, and perhaps no other man on this side thinks it is perfect from his standpoint, yet we all of us agree, and I think every man on the Democratic side agrees, that it is a step forward and in the right direction.

Now, gentlemen, there is only one sound basis in this country, in this world, and that is to follow the mandates of the Almighty when the curse of Cain was placed on the head of man. He decreed that he should live by the sweat of his brow alone. Now, if I might presume, I would just add that which I am sure was intended to go with it, that we not only work, but that we produce and save a little of what we produce, and we will get back in due course of time to prewar prosperity, contentment, and happiness. [Applause.]

Mr. COLLIER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. O'CONNOR].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Louisiana is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, years ago down in old New Orleans I heard a celebrated civilian say that he was convinced that men equally honest, sincere, and conscientious would always differ on political and legal questions and subjects. If there ever existed any man who ought to be cocksure about anything in this world, the distinguished jurist, patriot, and philosopher that I referred to was that man. His profound knowledge of human nature and of the law that runs through all things, his long and splendid service to State and to the people among whom he was born and reared and in whose hearts and affections he was impregnably intrenched, made him for us a Nestor whose simple pronouncements were stored up as proverbs of wisdom and benevolence. I shall never forget our patriarch. I shall never forget his great language. I concede to others what I wish granted unto myself, the sincerity of my convictions and the right to decently express my judgment upon matters affecting the welfare of my countrymen. No man possesses the infallible touchstone of truth. Men equally intellectual and honest will arrive at opposite conclusions from a given state of facts, though uninfluenced by any other desire or motive than to ascertain and pronounce the truth. This apparent intellectual antagonism is the result of the difficulty of determining what is truth, for on account of constantly shifting standards of morality, the needs of society and the policies to be adopted in hopes of effectuating the common good, it is utterly impossible to lay down for all of the people any doctrine or theory and get them to all agree that it is a truth.

True, indeed, is that what is apparently gospel to-day may be generally denounced to-morrow as a fallacy or heresy. Was it not Pilate who asked the Nazarene, "What is truth?" and walked away as if there were no answer to his query. Influenced by the above considerations, I have approached the discussions on this important measure. I do not believe that a man is necessarily a slave of the rich merely because he champions a system of taxation that would relieve wealth of what he may deem shackles, but which his opponent thinks is a menace to the happiness of the masses and a danger to the Republic. I do not believe a man is a demagogue because he believes that those who were born with a spirit to acquire wealth and who have it should support the Government which protects and defends them and their acquisitions. Somewhere between the two extremes may be found a common ground on which the conservative element of our people may stand and determine the question until a changed condition requires an alteration in the plan adopted. I believe that it was Macaulay who years ago said that if the law of gravitation were involved with a political or financial consideration there would be those among us who would rise to controvert the theory of the operation of that law.

For two days distinguished Republicans have with signal ability attempted to demonstrate that the proposed bill is the acme of legislative and financial skill. Talented advocates of the measure have urged that it means a tremendous reduction in taxation; that it will enforce a reduction in governmental expenditures by cutting appropriations to the bone and limiting unnecessary activities that are said to be the bane and curse of business. Republican leaders declare the bill to be the last word in congressional wisdom, and that its merits will prove themselves in the immediate future. Able Democratic leaders and spokesmen assail the measure fiercely as being defective in scientific arrangement and purposely devised to fool the people with the idea of a fiscal reform until the next congressional election, after which a bond issue will be inevitable to cover the certain deficit that will result from the failure of the bill to provide the necessary revenue to operate the Government.

On its face the measure is a rich man's bill. In its operation it will relieve the rich and powerful of the payment of hundreds of millions of taxes annually, taxes that the Government undeniably needs to pay the interest on the war debt and provide a sinking fund to ultimately pay the debt itself. It will, to the extent that it relieves the rich, oppress the poor and their kinsmen, the moderate in circumstances. I do not believe that it will strike the people of the country as a solemn declaration of wisdom. I do not think it will bring to them glad tidings of a great joy; but, on the contrary, will carry to them a message of grief and despair. Recent reports show that the cost of living has gone up 2 per cent in the last month in 14 of the principal cities of the United States, and in answer to a demand from the United States Senate the Commissioner of Labor stated that there were at present out of employment 5,750,000 persons, which means that there are 20,000,000 of your countrymen and countrywomen who are looking into the night of gloom and misery at this very moment. Again, it is only recently that the Senate recommitted a bill which was intended to give to the soldier boys of this country an adjusted compensation, on the ground largely that it would be utterly impossible at this time to meet the sums required to do anything like justice to our heroic legion that swept across the Atlantic Ocean behind the flag of our land. Just at the time that life is giving gloom and disaster and trial to the masses of our countrymen and when it should be the obligation of the Government to hold out hope to the weary and oppressed, a measure is brought in which means that the rich and powerful are to be relieved of what should be deemed a sacred obligation, the privilege of supporting the magnificent country which has given them an opportunity to become opulent, great, and strong, unmindful of the cry of the millions and millions that know not what the morrow may bring forth. [Applause.]

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman spoke of sidetracking the soldier bonus bill. I wanted to ask him if he does not remember the pledges that were made on the hustings before election last year as to what would be done with respect to the obligation that is due to the soldiers concerning the bonus?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I do not know whether pledges were made or not. I know it is due them and that they ought to be given the adjusted compensation that they seek.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. No; I have only eight minutes. You will excuse me. I hate to refuse.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman is quite excusable in the short time he has.

Mr. O'CONNOR. No substantial relief is given to those who have to pay income taxes except to those fortunate persons whose incomes are over $66,000 a year, and some of which run into millions of dollars per annum. And just when there is a cry on the part of business from ocean to ocean to adjust or lower the wages and earnings of the toilers to something like prewar standards the Republican Party tells the country that capital and wealth shall have no longer a restriction in the way of an excess-profits tax to prevent gold from securing without let or hindrance all that the traffic will bear, all that it can wring from the people by outrageous and unconscionable profits. The price of labor is to be forced by economic law and the power of organized wealth to a minimum, but gold is to be given by legislative edict a free rein to plunder the people at one of the most unhappy and unfortunate periods in our history. The only corporations that have to pay an excess-profits tax are those that make excess profits even upon a watered and fraudulent capitalization. Instead of the corporations being forced to forego their outrageous exactions and profits the road is paved for them and the chariot on which they will drive through the hearts of the men and women who have given their sons as a holocaust to their country's needs.

No corporation that makes but a reasonable profit has to pay an excess-profits tax. I have no hostility to wealth; but I do realize that the civilized world is suffering from the terrible tribute that is exacted from flesh and blood by corporations that are forced to earn dividends on billions of dollars of capital for which no service to God or humanity was ever rendered, upon billions of dollars of capital that are a fraud and a robbery of the living and of those that have still to come out of the ground and play their part in the grand drama of life. For these monster organizations instead of being compelled to earn a fair profit upon a legitimate and honest capitalization have full sway to extort from the people of the United States a vast portion of the wealth of each year to pay interest and dividends upon that which, I repeat, never had a real existence and which never represented anything on earth except the privilege to plunder the American people. It is these corporations dishonestly and unfairly capitalized that hold the people of to-day in bondage and will keep future generations in financial vassalage. If it were not for the unfair methods of big business the railroads of this country could operate upon less than half the present rates. Not only are the railroad companies themselves unfairly capitalized but everything used and purchased for construction and equipment comes from companies that are overcapitalized. The supreme importance of railroad rates may be understood by never losing sight of the fact that the present civilization is founded, bottomed, and dependent for its continuance upon the transportation of the country and the world.

I wish that I could see the virtue in this bill that its proponents say it does possess. True it is that the measure carries some good features, and I would be glad to vote for them if I were accorded an opportunity to do so. But the Republican rule precludes such judgment. You must under that rule take the good with the bad or the bad with the good. It is the same rule by which adroit and sagacious and crafty men have accomplished their purpose in all the ages. It is a sugar-coated pill.

To use an expression coined out of the vitalism of necessity and the genius of our language to furnish phrases that reach the understanding of the masses: This bill means a biscuit for the people and the whole bakery for their masters. Yes; masters, my countrymen, for this measure is a recognition of our masters, and it is an expression of their oppressive and tyrannical will. How long will the Republic last? How near is the industrial and commercial empire to this generation? Are the millions soon to become nothing more than hewers of wood and drawers of water in the land of their birth, vassals and serfs of an industrial system the most of which is a superstructure of financial legerdemain craft, cunning, water, and robbery? Are we to sink under a system that will make for riots and fellahens? Must labor be restrained and interdicted even while big business is hoisting the pirate flag and preparing to loot the world without even the necessity of paying tribute to the Government that tolerates their exactions and cruelties?

To relieve big business and its allies in the shape of gigantic corporations of any embarrassment that might result from padding accounts, overcapitalization, and every species of sculdugery that ingenuity can devise to defeat the payment of the tax a mighty propaganda was put in motion months ago to repeal the excess profits and higher surtax. The press, always powerful, lent its aid, and with this tremendous influence to support them the propagandists have won the biggest prize in the history of the world, five hundred and forty millions per annum. The wages of labor, in the interest of the business of the country, must be stabilized, which means that in order to bring about the so-called readjustment there must be a lowering of the scale. So it is whispered in the temples of the strong. Economic law inexorably make in times of readjustment for a reduction in the wage of man, it is declared, while rapacity is freed from even the embarrassment of perpetuating a record that might evidence its culpability and guilt.

Let me quote from one of the best papers ever written on the subject of this tax. An analysis of the statistics contained in the detailed report as to corporation incomes and income and excess-profits taxes in the report of the commissioner for the calendar years 1917 and 1918—the 1918 report being the first and only one containing the details of corporate income and income and excess-profits taxes arranged in classes according to the amount of profits each made—show that 180 corporations made annually from $5,000,000 up to $300,000,000 and over. The Steel Corporation made over $500,000,000 net profits in 1918 and had a net income of $2,554,000,000, and, while paying only $203,000,000 income tax, paid $848,000,000 excess-profits taxes, while the over 300,000 corporations making from nothing up to $100,000 net income yearly paid only $285,000,000 excess-profits taxes. One thousand and twenty-six corporations, with a net income of $4,253,000,000—more than one-half of the total corporate income of all the 317,559 corporations—while paying only $333,000,000 income tax, paid $1,422,000,000 of excess-profits tax; that is, paid over one-half, or nearly two-thirds, of the entire excess-profits tax, and $344,000,000 excess-profits tax more than the remaining 316,500 other corporations. At a glance one will see that the proposed proposition is one to relieve a few hundred of the biggest profiteering corporations in the United States, and not, as Mellon says, "to unclog business." It also shows the small amount of income tax paid in proportion to the excess-profits tax paid.

It further shows the conscienceless and exorbitant profits on invested capital; they made from 20 to over 50 per cent on the capital invested. Of course, the excess-profits tax will not be as much hereafter as in 1917, 1918, and 1919, but the proportion between these big, rapacious, profiteering corporations and the balance of the corporations will remain the same, and, in fact, will be more in favor of the big corporations, for the reason that these corporations have a monopoly and can at will fix and keep up their prices. The only possible check against their avarice and greed is an excess-profits tax. The 9,634 corporations making $250,000 yearly profits and over paid in excess-profits taxes $2,217,000,000, over five times as much as they paid in income taxes and about seven-eighths of the entire excess-profits taxes. The repeal of the excess-profits tax will relieve these few corporations of hundreds of millions of taxes wrung from the people by conscienceless profiteering, but will not relieve the more than 300,000 other and smaller corporations, as some would seem to think. One will see at once that the more than 300,000 other corporations will derive but little benefit from the excess-profits tax repeal, and the Government will be deprived of hundreds of millions of dollars, not four hundred and fifty million or less, estimated by the guessers at the Treasury Department, but much more than $600,000,000 annually, which the Government will sorely need. According to the returns as detailed in the reports of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue since January 1, 1916, up to and including the present commissioner's report of July 12, 1921, the corporations in the United States made net profits from January 1, 1916, to January 1, 1921, in round numbers $50,000,000,000—to be exact, $47,000,000,000.

After deducting all the taxes they paid since January 1, 1916—income, excess-profits tax, and other war taxes—they have a clear profit left of $38,000,000,000, more than four-fifths of which was made by less than 10,000 corporations and more than half of which was made by 1,026 of the big profiteering corporations, which includes the Steel Trust, the Bethlehem Steel Co., the Du Pont companies, the various Standard Oil companies, the Coal Combine, the Wool Trust, the meat packers, etc. Let us bear in mind always that these same corporations were filling their coffers with these fabulous billions for the profit of their stockholders while our brave boys in France were spilling their blood for the protection and defense of their country. Remember, too, that not a large stockholder or officer or director of one of these rapacious corporations ever faced a German gun, braved a danger, took a risk, made a sacrifice, or endured any suffering during the entire war, but remained at home in safety, 3,000 miles from the danger line, and made the war and its resulting stress of their Government and the people an opportunity to plunder and profiteer upon both to the extent of these fabulous billions while our boys in France were being killed and their eyes being shot out and their legs and arms being shot off.

And yet we are blandly informed by its Republican champions that this is a scientific taxing scheme and that it will work wonders in the way of affording business interests the relief from taxation that is strangling their best efforts to bring about normalcy. We are smugly assured that as a consequence of this measure which will so considerably reduce the revenue and which has apparently caused Secretary Mellon some anxiety, that the Government will be forced to make the reduction in appropriations promised in order to avoid what would be confessedly a public calamity, a bond issue, and that economy in the public affairs and the expenditure of public funds will have a beneficial effect upon the attitude of the masses and engender a spirit of economy which will be of untold advantage to the Nation. What a confession these words from Republican statesmen imply. Why has not that economy by which we are to save in reduced appropriations $350,000,000 been put into effect heretofore? There can be but one plea to this indictment—guilty of extravagance upon an almost unheard-of scale. And if the excess-profits tax be the iniquity, from the business standpoint that resorts to questionable methods to evade it, and the shackling influence that your propagandists say it has, if it be the old man of the sea around the neck of capital as thundered from the citadels and fortresses of wealth, the great newspapers of the country, why do you not make the repeal effective for the year 1922, instead of making it effective for 1922? If it be in the interest of the national welfare that you repeal the higher surtaxes in order that money should go into lucrative enterprises instead of into tax-exempt securities (as if there were no investment in those securities prior to the passage of the act complained of), why did you not put it into effect for this calendar year instead of making it effective for the year of 1922? Why the delay? I hold that the taxes should be continued until a part of the vast sum the Government owes as a result of the World War is paid.

You say that I am in error in this regard. I do not differ with you nor from you in principle, but only in degree, for you want it to go into effect next year and I want it to go into effect a little later. You Republicans voted for it as a war measure, not to be used as a machine gun to shoot and kill the foe but to raise money to pay the huge expenses of the war, and yet to-day, when our indebtedness is as great if not greater than when you voted for these measures, you decry them as a fiscal policy and as a method of raising the funds to extinguish the debt. Gentlemen, I can not follow your logic, if there be logic in your position. Your proposed bill is faulty for another reason, so clearly and felicitously expressed by the editor of the Washington Herald that I take the liberty of placing in these remarks the editorial referred to:

ELEVEN COLUMNS OF AMENDMENTS.

The one extreme fault of the new revenue bill, as the Herald sees it, is the fact that it is not a bill for a new law but a series of amendments of 20,000 words in the total. To make the law one law these two will have to be read, studied, and construed together. Instead of simplifying, this will greatly complicate the law as a whole and make its construction more the work of a "Philadelphia lawyer" and impossible to the average business man.

Why the committee chose this method rather than rewriting and making one complete act is beyond any but congressional ken. It should not be made more necessary than before to hire a lawyer to find what the tax is, even by a man of moderate income. It should not be made necessary to read the two laws together when they could be easily combined in one. Reference to sections, subdivisions of sections, and the fact of amendment, which are all mystifying, would not appear, and only the one document would have to be consulted.

The amendments as offered by the committee were published by the New York Times and fill 11 columns of small type set solid. To place these amendments into the present law will make an old-fashioned New England patchwork quilt. In its form as amendments the bill will create a temper among taxpayers not favorable to the congressional majority. The mere convolutions created will arouse hostility and profanity. All of this can be avoided by merely rewriting the law as a whole, really simplifying it as promised and not making it vastly more complex, as is now proposed.

Let me make a few observations with respect to some remarks made by men who have the reputation of being among the most gifted of America's sons—able, intellectual, forceful, and philosophical, but with whose philosophical dissertations I do not agree. We are sagely and solemnly informed that if we do not repeal the excess-profits tax and the higher surtaxes that the business talent of the country will go on a strike, place their money in tax-exempt securities which all told amount to $16,000,000,000, lock up the billions and billions that are still left, and that under the sad conditions that would exist without a repeal there would be no one to take the great places made vacant by the withdrawals of the great captains. Extraordinary! Why is it that this has not happened during the last several years? What a lack of knowledge this implies on the part of the speech makers and statesmen who make such pronouncements as to the laws that control and direct the actions of human beings in going through this scheme of things called life. Some are born to spend and some are born to save is an aphorism based on the law that flows from anatomical construction and the mental attitude that results from such construction. A money-maker can no more resist the "temptation" to make money than he can resist any other law of his existence. Men will always follow and heed the law of their lives. Homer sung his immortal Iliad to gratify his desire for song, practically begging his way from door to door in his blindness and poverty and wretchedness. All of the glories of our literature were offered almost as a free contribution to the world of letters by men who ate their bread in tears and sorrow without so much as a thought of the financial reward that should have followed. The masterpieces of art, of sculpture, and painting were not inspired by a financial inducement. The artists would have expressed their soul's longing if they had to pay for such expression instead of securing a reward for their efforts. All of the great discoveries of science came to us as a result of the joy found in the pursuit of knowledge, and the wonderful pleasure that follows a visit to the skies is the only reward asked for by the astronomer.

A great money-maker is just so because he was born with a genius for the game that has cost so much to the human race. Barter under our civilization being no longer possible, the medium of exchange has come in and with its jugglery has brought and wrought woe unto the world. It is its fluctuations and the inability of Europe, Asia, and Africa to buy our goods and not the excess profits and higher surtaxes that are at the bottom of our troubles to-day. I do not mean, my friends, that merely because a man is endowed, let us say, with the instinct of money-making that he ought to be taxed to death; but I do say that he ought to pay for the joy of securing by way of his talents in some cases more than 10,000 of his country men and women. I repeat, I am not antagonistic to respectable wealth, but I refuse to cringe when near criminal and rascally money crack the whip. I have a respect for earned riches, just as I have respect for honest toil. I believe in protecting the public and private wealth of this land. But each and every citizen ought to pay in accordance with his ability to pay. This bill violates that principle and I shall vote against it. I am sorry that I am not permitted to give my assent and record my vote in favor of those virtuous provisions that the bill does carry. But the Rules Committee has decreed otherwise, and I must vote for the bill practically as it was reported and will be amended by the Ways and Means Committee or vote against it. I shall do the latter unhesitatingly, as the bill, in my judgment, is fraught with the greatest peril for the American people.

I thank the members of the committee, Republican and Democratic, for the courtesy shown me throughout this address. I find fault with the work of the Republican and not the Republican himself, as he is my countryman with a different viewpoint, but blood of my blood and bone of my bone, and is just as honestly, sincerely, and patriotically endeavoring to promote the general welfare and secure the common good.

Mr. TAGUE. Mr. Chairman, may I ask how the time stands?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas has consumed 4 hours and 24½ minutes; the gentleman from Michigan has used 6 hours and 56 minutes.

Mr. TAGUE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. STEVENSON].

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, to-day the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] discussed the situation from the business man's standpoint, from the standpoint of making your income and your outlay balance. He said that the Republican members of the Ways and Means Committee, in conjunction with the executive department, had arranged it so that the income and the outlay would balance; that that was the ideal situation. I grant you that it is the ideal situation. Now, if that be the case, I want to know about the proposed $500,000,000 additional bonds provided for in this bill, and I asked the gentleman from Massachusetts and he said that he would come to it later. He may have come to it later, but if he did it was at some time when I was not paying attention to his remarks. I asked the gentleman if they had so arranged it that they were going to make the income and the outlay balance why this provision in section 1009 for the increase of the bonded indebtedness or time indebtedness of the Government of $500,000,000 was put in, and the gentleman said that he would come to it later. It is a good deal later and I have not heard from him yet.

I think it was done deliberately, because they know that they have prepared a bill that will not bring in within $500,000,000 enough to pay the expenses of the Government as they propose to administer it, and they propose to sell time certificates with which to pay the running expenses. [Applause on the Democratic side.] They propose to take off $406,000,000 of income and excess-profits tax and sell bonds to make it up. These people, instead of getting a tax receipt, as I do, will get a 5½ per cent Government bond for their $406,000,000.

Let us see what the amendment is:

SEC. 1009. Subdivision (a) of section 18 of the second Liberty bond act, as amended, is amended by striking out the words and figures "for the purposes of this act, and to meet public expenditures authorized by law, not exceeding in the aggregate $7,000,000,000," and inserting in lieu thereof the words and figures "for the purposes of this act, to provide for the purchase or redemption of any notes issued hereunder, and to meet public expenditures authorized by law, not exceeding in the aggregate $7,500,000,000 at any one time outstanding."

I know that they will say that this is to purchase the notes already outstanding. But wait.

The notes already outstanding under limitation of law can not exceed $7,000,000,000, and they propose to add $500,000,000 more for the purpose of paying the expenditures authorized by law; and we have the proposition that this committee does not purpose to balance accounts but to increase further the permanent debt of the United States for the purpose of paying the running expenses of the Government.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEVENSON. I beg to be excused. I do not want to be discourteous, but I want to make a speech that will be connected. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] also said practically, and he said in so many words, that on the question of the excess-profits tax the platforms of the Democratic and the Republican Parties last year were the same, and they are the same, and neither one of them pledges anybody to repeal the excess-profits tax. There is not a word said about that, and that statement which has gone through here unchallenged apparently is entirely incorrect. But he is correct in that the Democratic and Republican planks on the revision of taxation are practically and absolutely the same in sense and meaning. I have heard from various impassioned orators here who appealed to the "mandate of November" last that everything that the Democrats proposed to do had been repudiated absolutely. If the Democratic platform stood then for the repeal of the excess-profits tax and the Republican Party stood for the same thing, and the Democratic platform was repudiated, then the Republican platform was also repudiated, and there is nothing on which to stand for the repeal of the excess-profits tax.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. MILLS] yesterday entertained us with a statement that the dearth of capital for the farmers for which we seek is the result of the excess-profits tax. He made a brilliant speech in establishing the fact that it was the excess-profits tax which was running capital into tax-free bonds, and therefore getting it away from where it was taxable. Then he came on and said that the fact that we were asking that farm loan bonds be provided for by this Government indicated that there was no capital for that kind of investment, that it had been run away by the excess-profits tax and the high surtaxes. The gentleman certainly overlooked the fact that the farm loan bonds are tax-free bonds, and if his theory is correct, instead of going around with all sorts of legislation and endeavoring to get an investment of this capital in those bonds, they would be rushing for them, because they would be running away from the excess-profits tax to buy a tax-free farm loan bond. That is about as logical as all of these arguments about the excess-profits tax.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Copley] this evening went on to state that the people were radical in their expenditures, lavish in their expenditures when the excess-profits tax was staring them in the face, because they wanted to consume the profits so that they would not have to pay them to the Government. Everyone was extravagant for a while, but I want to call attention to one of the beneficent results of the excess-profits tax. In my district there are probably 20,000 people engaged in working in the cotton mills, and they are splendid citizens of the Anglo-Saxon race, patriotic citizens who sent their boys without the draft into the Army, and one company made up from a mill in my district got 2 congressional medals that were awarded out of 76. What was the result of the excess-profits tax down there? I admit that the corporations spent a good deal of their money as a result of that in improvements, and I will tell you the result.

There is not a mill village in my district to-day that has not got new, splendidly equipped cottages for their workmen, with electric lights, sewage system, and every convenience, and why? Because the mills made a great deal of money and they realized that what they did not spend in improvements they would have to pay a large percentage of to the Government, and they went to work and equipped and built those splendid villages, and those people have better houses than nine-tenths of the working people of the United States, all because of the excess-profits tax. The money did not run to tax-free securities, but it ran into improvements for the benefit of the working people of the country, who make the wealth and on whose backs the burden of this country is laid. I can prove that by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Fess] who spoke to me not long ago about what he saw while passing through that country, seeing the splendid houses of the mill villages.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. MILLS] also took the position that it was the proper thing to lay a tax on expenditures. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN], the ranking member of the Committee on Ways and Means, approved of the proposition but said that the gentleman from New York was just a little ahead of his time. We hear a good deal about aggravating taxes and nuisance taxes. Put into effect the proposition to tax according to what a man spends and graduate it according as he spends it, and the United States Government will have to have an auditor behind every man in the country who has any money to spend. How would you ever carry it out? By the way, speaking of the gentleman from New York, I wonder how he would think a man like the late Russell Sage was bearing his part of governmental expenses when he was drawing his millions and living on $60 a month or thereabouts, and all of that exempt under the plan of Mr. MILLS? Is that the kind of a tax that the gentleman from New York got from, I suppose, his relative, John Stuart Mill of some 50 or 75 years ago? I understand very well why he is in favor of this bill. It is because it cuts down the income taxes, it cuts down the big corporate income taxes, it cuts down enormously where he is interested.

I just looked in the Congressional Directory to see what the gentleman has to say about himself. He is only 37 years of age and is a Napoleon of finance. He says that he is a director of the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railroad. There is a man living in New York who is the director of a railroad which does not come east of Chicago. He is a director of the Lackawanna Steel Co., of the Mergenthaler Linotype Co., of the Shredded Wheat Biscuit Co., of the Crex Carpet Co., and a trustee of the New York Trust Co., and was elected to the Sixty-seventh Congress. I can understand very well why he is in favor of this bill, and why he is in favor of putting the burden of this Government on what people spend. You take a man who is 37 years of age who has reached that zenith in the financial world where he can be a director of all those corporations, and he must certainly have a great deal more money coming in than he spends. He wants to pay a tax only on what he spends and salt down that which he does not spend and let the other fellow who has to spend all he makes to support his family pay the tax on everything that he makes, and the distinguished ranking member of the Committee on Ways and Means from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] advocates the same principle, but says that it is a little too early. The gentleman will not live to see that enacted into law, and if they get the idea out in Iowa that they are going to have an auditor after every farmer to see what he spends, the gentleman will never live, politically, to see very much more legislation enacted in this country.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Copley] this afternoon said that business was in a chaotic condition because the taxing system was adopted in a hurry during the war, and as a result business got in a chaotic condition. But business never got into that condition until the fall of 1920, two years after the armistice was signed. When did the Republican Party have an opportunity to revise the tax laws of this country? They were called together on May 19, 1919, and were requested to revise all the tax laws of this country and place them on a more logical and equitable basis. Did they do it? They stayed in session from May 19, 1919, until March 4, 1921, with the exception of a few months, with a clear majority in both Houses, with the President asking them to revise the taxing system, and they did not even introduce a bill for the purpose of making one solitary honest effort to do anything. Then they come in here and complain of the chaotic condition that began in the fall of 1920 resulting from the legislation which they had had an opportunity since May 19, 1919, to revise, and did not even introduce a bill or make a motion looking thereto. Well, why are they revising it now? Why, they are revising it because of their contract with the moneyed people. To the great corporations last year they said if they would put them across they would revise it and revise it so as to lift the burden from the people who had large incomes, from the people who are profiteering in this country, and so they are carrying out their promise. There is one thing about moneyed people—I have dealt with them a good deal—and that is that wherever they put up a dollar they are going to have security for it, and they know what security they take, and if you renege on your contract, if you back down on your proposition, they are going to foreclose their mortgage, and "the devil is to pay" if you do not do like they tell you to do. Now, another gentleman [Mr. Copley] says that there is one thing to the credit of the excess-profits tax now, and I want to emphasize it.

What did he tell you? He tells you that the excess-profits tax has operated to put the country merchant on an equality with the great department stores and the mail-order houses of the cities; that if it has not done anything else, it deserves to be retained on the taxes of this Nation for the purpose of preventing the return to the system whereby the people of the rural communities are induced to buy inferior goods frequently from mail-order houses, and the merchant who is paying the taxes in the towns and helping to build up the country is starving because of a lack of custom which has been induced to go away by their remarkable promises and their poor performances. Now, from a Republican standpoint, that is one thing it has done. I am glad to find it out. I know a good many others are. Now, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] says that the big corporations—that is, above $100,000—got busy right away, when the law was passed. They knew how to pad their accounts; they knew how to pad their capital stock and get ready to get around and absorb their excess profits. He made that statement to-day; but he said the fellows from $10,000 to $100,000 were unable to do that. That is what he said, and that was the argument for the taking off of the excess-profits tax. Well, now, let us see where that will land us. Because we have a lot of malefactors of great wealth—as Mr. Roosevelt said years ago, and it is one of the best definitions I have heard—because we have a lot of malefactors of great wealth, who will not obey the law and deliberately go to work to avoid the law, therefore we will repeal the law. Is that the way the gentleman from Ohio believes in the enforcement of law in this country? [Applause on the Democratic side.] They called a man who evaded war service a slacker, and imprisoned him. This bill confers a favor on the financial slacker and gives him consideration above the patriotic law-abiding citizens who honestly returned their profits and paid their taxes. The hounded "slacker" Bergdoll has been exiled and imprisoned. The financial slacker is being rewarded by being relieved of a financial burden of $406,000,000 annually. Mr. LONGWORTH says they are slackers, and he knows them, and would not misrepresent them.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. TAGUE. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Box]. [Applause.]

Mr. BOX. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I incorporate as a part of my remarks the statement made by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. STEVENSON], with reference to the political and business connections of the gentleman from New York [Mr. OGDEN L. MILLS]. I take it from the Congressional Directory, which is usually made up from data furnished by the Members.

Ogden L. Mills, Republican, of New York County, * * * A. B. Harvard, 1904, and LL. B. Harvard Law School, 1907; * * * has been treasurer of the Republican county committee of New York County since 1911; elected to the New York State senate in 1914; reelected to the senate in 1916. * * * was delegate to the Republican national convention in 1912, 1916, and 1920; was chairman of the advisory committee on policies and platform of the Republican national committee; has been for several years past president of the New York State Tax Association; is chairman of the committee on executive budget of the National Tax Association and a member of the Harvard University committee on economic research; * * * is a director of the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway system, the Lackawanna Steel Co., Mergenthaler Linotype Co., Shredded Wheat Co., Crex Carpet Co., a trustee of the New York Trust Co., and a member of the State and city bar associations; was elected to the Sixty-seventh Congress, November 2, 1920. * * *

I quote the following extract from the remarks made yesterday by the latter gentleman. In speaking of incomes large enough to be taxable and the failure of the Government to collect from them what was due it, he said:

They increased, but the Government ceased to get them for the purpose of taxation.

Further on in his remarks he said:

The people felt that it was too high, that it was unjust. They made false statements. Public sentiment supported the evasion, and the tax could not be collected.

Where and among whom did public sentiment support the tax dodging of the rich? What portion of the American public supported perjury to avoid the obligations of citizenship? Who releases these men from the rules that bind honest men in order that wealth may play the slacker?

In the same connection I quote that part of his statement, carefully and deliberately made before the Ways and Means Committee, appearing on pages 23 and 24 of their hearings of July 26, 1921, as follows:

In my own State the personal property tax was a joke. When men were required to list their property they simply perjured themselves. They thought nothing of that, because everybody was doing it and nobody considered it wrong.

Yes, sir; they did that because the rates were so high that they felt that they were justified in evading it. * * * He is beating the income tax to-day. He is beating it through the so-called system of losses, which is a very difficult thing to stop, or when he can not show a loss he is beating it by giving the security or profit to his wife, and she sells it and makes the profit. I know there is a bill before you that is supposed to meet that situation; but when you close that door he will open another. Therefore you can not say that your present tax is being collected, and that is a sufficient answer to what you say in regard to the advantage to the rich man. * * *

* * * Let me call your attention to this fact: That from 1916 to 1919 the money in circulation was doubled and bank deposits were doubled. There is not the slightest manner of doubt that those large incomes were doubled, and yet we find that three years after 1916, when the maximum rate had been applied, they were actually reporting less taxable income than in 1916. In 1919 they were only just beginning to learn how to get from under the income taxes.

What of the gentleman's statement that public sentiment "supported" this perjury? I state without argument that any sentiment which supports perjury to hide slacker wealth is basely depraved. That holy thing named "patriotism" has a feeble and smothered voice in men and communities or groups of men whose sentiment supports perjury for such purposes.

I refuse to believe that so depraved a sentiment predominates in any American Commonwealth. Under this view I can accept the gentleman's statements only on the theory that his many official Republican Party connections and activities and his numerous intimate relations with Wall Street, railroad, and corporation magnates have corrupted the air he breathes and blurred the sky he sees. But his statements must be accepted as a correct interpretation of the standards of the groups from whose ideals he judges the standards of his people.

His statement of facts and practices and of depraved sentiment must be restricted to the group he knows best by one who refuses to believe that all of America or all of his own great Commonwealth has been debauched by greed. On his statement, thus restricted, I base the following suggestions:

This bill proposes to relieve the men who have done these things, in large part at least, because they have done them. In their report stating their reasons for presenting this bill the Republican majority of the Ways and Means Committee says, on page 6:

* * * For the year 1916 net income amounting to $992,972,985 was included in the returns of taxpayers having net income over $800,000 a year.

This aggregate fell to $731,372,153 for the year 1917 and to $392,247,329 for the year 1918. There is little reason to believe that the actual income of the richer taxpayers of the country had fallen in that interval. * * *

This bill proposes not merely to favor the rich, but the guilty rich, the criminal rich.

When great wealth evades, by solemn oath falsely made, its share of the taxes it is swearing the burden onto the moderately prosperous and poor.

What must be the view of the boy who went from home into hard service and danger, did his duty, and was mutilated, or of the family of one who had his life blotted out in the service of the Nation, and while he was performing hard service and facing danger and death, men of the class whose sentiment the gentleman expresses were swearing out from under the obligations to sustain that boy and his Government while he was at the front, to sustain him or his dependent ones thereafter and to pay the just obligations incurred in the hour of peril?

Though he has fought our battles and braved death, he must now pay more than his share of the obligations of the Government because men who were profiteering on him and his friends at home have avoided their obligation and he must now, in his moderate circumstances or poverty, bear it for them, as this bill provides.

This illustrates a deplorable standard of citizenship in certain circles, the circles whose sentiments the gentleman expresses. To the extent that it is true, it is a sad affair. The gentleman having these extensive and high political connections and numerous intimate business associations, who now asks for the "relief" of these perjurers, can not be prejudiced against them. There is no reason why he should misstate the facts against them. He is pleading especially for them. Such a standard of citizenship, such a state of "public sentiment" in any great group carries the mind back to the days of class privilege, backward some 300 years, to the time not far removed from the Dark Ages, when one who interpreting corrupt Europe as he saw it then, and with the Dark Ages as a not distant background, said of it:

Through tatter'd clothes small vices do appear;
Robes and furr'd gowns hide all. Plate sin with gold,
And the strong lance of justice hurtless breaks;
Arm it in rags, a pigmy's straw doth pierce it.

The gentleman's intimate, political, and business acquaintance are closely connected with the statement he makes, the crime he outlines, the apology he makes for it, and his advocacy of this bill. The same close association between the same elements run through the bill itself. The same apology is made one of the reasons for the passage of the law by the majority members of the Ways and Means Committee in the words quoted above and in many of the speeches made by the advocates of this measure before this House.

If the criminal rich are creating in American society and Government the condition which the gentleman himself describes, so much akin to the corrupt class-ridden, enslaved life of the Europe of 300 years ago, as described by the "great master," then those of us who prize manhood, who want to preserve the future of our country for our children had best be on our guard, and instead of acknowledging the domination of criminal, slacker wealth, should, like brave men, assert the dignity, sovereignty, and power of the Nation, first, by saying that nothing is above it; next, by saying that certainly crime has no power to dominate it; and further, by saying and showing that the people who have endured hardship and the men who have borne hard service shall not have their burden increased in order to favor the men who have committed unpatriotic, base crime.

There is among sound-minded people no sympathy for the man who played the slacker, much less committed perjury to protect his body from hardship, mutilation, and death when the public peril demanded the sacrifice. Their scorn and vengeance should blast the men who perjured their souls to hide their slacker wealth from the service of their country when its needs and laws called for it for use in the protection of all. [Applause.]

Mr. TAGUE. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman of Alabama [Mr. STEAGALL].

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, the debates on this bill have been so able and learned that I do not speak with any thought that I can add much of value to the discussion, but I have some very deep convictions on the principle involved in this legislation. I have been taught all of my life that the burdens of government should rest most heavily upon those best able to bear them, and I contend that when we may prudently have a reduction of taxes the benefits of such reduction should fall impartially and fairly among all classes of people.

Mr. Chairman, as I grow older I have an increased respect for property rights. I want to see this Government preserved in all of its integrity, with its guaranties to the protection of life and property and the pursuit of happiness. I want to protect those who come after us as well as all now living in the right to work out their salvation and to accumulate something for themselves and their families. I would have this right preserved for all time in a just Government of free and equal opportunities among men.

Just here let me say, Mr. Chairman, that if I were called upon to point out the chief danger that confronts property rights in this country I would point to the unfairness and injustice practiced by the holders of great wealth, and, worst of all, that they dare place their advocates in the great Congress of the American people. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The right to accumulate and hold property is essential to progress. Property rights and human rights are so closely related that it is not easy always to separate them. Both have proper places in the scheme of government. I have no prejudice against men of great wealth, though sometimes I pity them. I guess if I had time to devote to money-making I would like to leave some share of wealth for my children; but above all I wish my boy, whose success and happiness I value far above my own, to know enough of the hardships and struggles of life to develop the strength of real character and to link his sympathies to the masses of mankind. The best way to preserve property rights is to administer the Government so fairly and impartially that no fair-minded man may have cause to question the equality of all men and all classes before the law. [Applause.]

How do the provisions of the bill before us square with these principles? The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH], who has just addressed us, says the bill effects a saving of between $700,000,000 and $800,000,000 in taxes to the people, but when the gentleman was called on to tell to whom the saving goes he got busy looking in another direction and did not answer.

That is the question which is going to be asked from one end of this country to the other, and it will have to be answered. Why, I read even in a Washington newspaper yesterday morning enough on the front page to arouse the opposition of any average man to every Member of Congress supporting this bill. The article began with big headlines about tax reduction carried in the bill, but the very first item set down was $450,000,000 to the few profiteers who pay excess-profits taxes. Right below this item was the amount saved to the heads of families in this land, those who are rearing and educating the children to whom we expect to hand down our liberties, in whose keeping we are to place the Nation's flag and intrust the destiny of our institution, and the saving to them was only $40,000,000. [Applause.]

The farmers of the country, according to the report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, pay income taxes in excess of any other class of individuals. This class of our population has suffered to the extent of billions and billions on account of the slump in prices during the past 12 months. Staple farm products are lower in purchasing power than they were for the four-year period preceding the war. Under present disturbed conditions and oppressive and prohibitive railroad rates upon the necessities of life, no man can foresee the end of the struggle through which they are passing. But the farmers of the country are denied any substantial benefits from this legislation. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The records of the Internal Revenue Bureau show that corporations of the United States have made net profits amounting to $47,000,000,000 during the past five years. After paying taxes of all sorts there is left net profits of $38,000,000,000. Four-fifths of this amount was made by less than 10,000 corporations, and more than $19,000,000,000 was made by about 1,000 corporations—such as the Steel Trust, Du Pont companies, Standard Oil, Bethlehem Steel, and others. These corporations, numbering only about 10,000 out of a total of 317,000 in the United States, are paying more than half of our excess-profits taxes. So it will be seen these big corporations that took advantage of the Nation while its life was jeopardized by war and profited and plundered to the extent of billions and billions, are the chief beneficiaries of a tax bill which gentlemen have the effrontery to declare is a measure affording the people relief from war taxes. [Applause.]

The repeal of the excess-profits tax and putting in its place a flat 12½ per cent corporation tax will result in shifting something like $500,000,000 of taxes from a few big profiteering corporations to the large number of smaller ones of smaller earnings. It will increase at least 50 per cent on 250,000 corporations making only a small per cent on invested capital and reduce in like amount the taxes on the 10,000 big corporations, some of which make 50 per cent and more. To make clear what I have in mind, here are the tables made by a recognized expert and not questioned as to accuracy:

Effect of the repeal of the excess-profits tax.

The new revenue bill reported by the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives contains a provision for the repeal of the present excess-profits tax on corporations and an increase in the normal tax from 10 to 12½ per cent. The effect of this proposed law on those corporations whose invested capital is from $5,000 to $10,000,000, and who are earning from 5 per cent to 50 per cent thereon, is shown in the following exhibit. Those corporations whose capital and income are in the block between the heavy black lines will pay more tax under the proposed law, while those to the right and below the second black line will pay less tax.

The tables show that corporations making 8 and 10 per cent on invested capital are to have their taxes increased 50 per cent, and those making 20, 30, 40, and 50 per cent are to have a decrease of 50 per cent or more.

The same principle which governs in repealing the excess-profits tax, and thereby shifting the burdens from the big corporations to the little corporations, applies to the provisions of the bill which reduces the income taxes on those whose income exceeds $66,000 a year.

Here are the figures prepared by an expert, and not disputed:

Over 5,126,000 get no reduction except by reason of the little additional exemption of $500 to married persons and heads of families. The records in the office of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue show that 5,126,000 returns for 1919 averaged $3,500 yearly; that 18,000 who made returns of incomes of $50,000 or more in the same year averaged $142,000; 254 who made returns of $500,000 or more averaged $1,740,000, and 65 who made returns of a million or more averaged $2,350,000. The bill before us gives decreases in taxes to the 18,000 with enormous incomes, but gives no reduction to the 5,126,000 whose average income was only $3,500.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] says he is dealing with "big things and big men." There was more of frankness in his statement than he probably intended. In this connection I ask why it is we are collecting only about $100,000,000 from inheritances. Why are we not as wise as France and Great Britain? A fair increase in our rates on inheritances, such as is levied in Great Britain, would yield from $750,000,000 to $1,000,000,000. What young man worthy of the protection and opportunity offered by such a Government as ours, when its credit is impaired, would not be willing to pay his Government a portion of these millions falling into his hands by operation of law and without effort on his part? Here is a chance to deal with "big things" in a way to protect the Public Treasury, and at the same time curtail the evils that lie in the concentration of immense wealth.

A fair example of the viewpoint and purpose of the framers of the bill is found in the provision relieving the express companies of about $17,000,000 but retaining the tax on parcel post, which is the farmer's express.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] in thinking of "big things and big men" forgets that the first draft of this bill retained the transportation tax along with all of the petty consumption taxes; a tax of $10 on all automobiles—following the principle running throughout the bill by making a farmer with his Ford pay the same tax as a millionaire in his Packard. Then it was proposed to place a 2-cent tax on checks regardless of amount, and to raise first-class postage to 3 cents.

Of course, the bill has been improved since then. In fact, every time there is the least opportunity to consider it, some improvement is made. Nobody has ever dealt with it since it left the hands of those who originally inspired it without reducing the outrages which it contains. Those who framed the bill attempted to make the repeal of the excess-profits tax and higher income surtaxes retroactive to January 1, 1921, thereby robbing the Treasury of the taxes due for that period and turning them over to the profiteers who according to their contention had already passed them along to the public. The argument offered in support of these provisions of the bill is that these taxes restrict the employment of capital in business activities, but in face of this argument it was deliberately planned to make the law effective since January 1 of the present year, when no one dreams that the bill can pass until near the end of the year. What excuse could any fair-minded man find to continue the petty annoying war taxes paid by the poor in a bill deliberately designed to shield millionaires and multimillionaires in shirking the duty they owe their Government? The affrontery of such a contention is only equaled by the selfishness of the men who inspired it. [Applause.]

The bill on its face contradicts the boasts and pretenses of big reductions in taxation. On page 82 specific authority is conferred upon the Secretary of the Treasury to float additional securities to the extent of half a billion. This reveals what is really intended. I regard that provision as one of the most dangerous in the bill, because I am not simple enough to believe that it would have been included unless it is contemplated that the authority shall be used. I do not know of anything more unpatriotic, more unwise, or more dangerous than would be an attempt to run the Government on credit at this time. To float a half billion of securities would in all probability necessitate a further increase in interest rates to be paid by the Government and further depreciation of Government bonds—most of which are now scattered throughout the country—and force their sale at further sacrifice. It would further restrict the supply of credit and bring additional suffering among the small bankers, merchants, and farmers throughout the country.

I have heard so much about preparedness that I almost hate the word. But I do want to see the country prepared for defense in case of any possible conflict. I do not mean by this that every producer in the country should be put in uniform and made an officer in the Army, but I should like to see the credit of the Government restored, its debts paid, and its securities marketable at par. Any war that may come in future will be a war of resources. Nothing could be more dangerous to the safety of the country in case of conflict with a foreign power than an enormous bonded debt with constant impairment of credit. Ought we not as a matter of national safety and security pay off the Nation's debt and keep ourselves in position to marshal resources unequaled by any other nation on earth?

Mr. Chairman, when war was declared Congress passed a conscription act through which to raise an Army to fight the war. I thought it was a mistake; I think so yet. I think it was a mistake to turn over all of the man power and all the resources of this Government to the Army officers. When they got charge a swarm of profiteers gathered in Washington hunting contracts, fastening unfair bargains on the Government, and robbing the people while our boys were dying on the fields of France. It is idle to charge that these men were Democrats. The Army officers have never wanted to surrender the power placed in their hands during the war, and the Republicans in this House have been their staunchest defenders in their efforts to maintain that power. Every time there has been a reduction in the Army or Navy appropriations, or in the size of the Army or Navy, Democrats in this House have forced it.

After all that could be done by those of us who were trying to break the hold of the Army officers and relieve the people from the burdens and extravagance brought on by the War and Navy Departments, the present Secretary of the Treasury says that we are to spend for the present fiscal year more than $1,000,000,000 on the Military Establishment of the country, and in the face of these statements you have the face to talk about economy and reduction of taxation!

The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] indulges in unkindly criticism of President Wilson and the peace conference at Paris. I did not think President Wilson should have gone to Paris, and I said so then. But at that time the eyes of every nation on earth were fixed upon him. He was the outstanding, dominating figure of the world. Not a man on your side of the aisle dared to open his mouth in criticism. I do not know of a more serious indictment ever brought against your party than your admission that you failed to function even as an opposition party. Heaven alone knows what will become of the country if you have complete control of it very long. [Applause.]

When we entered the war we committed ourselves to the policy of conscription to raise an Army, and we determined to tax the wealth of the country in financing the war. The gentleman says the war is over. I deny it. The fighting is over. Our boys have done their part, and they did it nobly. They have finished the job we gave them. They wrote a glorious page in the records of this Republic which will be read through succeeding centuries. If one of those boys had complained against those to whom he owed obedience, he would have been court-martialed. If he had run away from the duties imposed upon him, he would have been tried for desertion and shot. The financial burdens of the war have not been discharged. Pay day is at hand. I will not say that all the millionaires and multimillionaires may be so classed, but every profiteer who is now seeking to shirk his duty to the Government should be branded as a selfish, cowardly deserter. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

It would be an everlasting shame, a stigma upon every man responsible for it in any position, high or low, to allow these men to take advantage of war to accumulate billions while our boys were facing German shells and gases and thousands of them dying to vindicate the sovereignty of our Government, and then be allowed to pocket their billions, leaving the boys who fought the war to stagger under a bonded debt the rest of their lives.

The American people are not going to stand for it, gentlemen. What are you saying to the boys who fought the war in answer to the appeal for assistance to tide them over the distressed period following the conflict? Your answer is that the Government must economize. But you are spending a billion a year on the Army and Navy—half of it unwisely and unnecessarily. And you are granting relief of over half a billion a year to those who made their billions during the war and much of it by reason of the war.

I agree with the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] that one of the great mistakes of the Wilson administration was taking over the railroads. But it was not a party matter; it was done because it was thought necessary to the successful conduct of the war. The Wilson administration took over the roads and operated them during the stress and excitement of war, and, of course, it proved expensive. A Republican Congress in time of peace deliberately restored the roads to the control of the owners, but continued Government liability. Under the guaranty in the bill which a Republican Congress passed the Government lost in a period of six months nearly $1,000,000,000, to say nothing of the increased charges imposed by the roads during that time under the provision of the same bill, amounting to nearly $1,000,000,000.

The Government took over the railroads to assist in the conduct of the war and upon the insistence of the owners. When they were returned to private control the owners asked Congress to guarantee prosperous earnings until the period of readjustment should be passed. The Republican Congress unhesitatingly wrote the law just as the owners of the roads demanded, and the Government has been paying the bill.

Now we are confronted with a proposition to hand the railroads a half billion more and take chances on getting back the money. How can you look a brave boy in the face with your answer in the light of these facts? Nothing for the brave boys who risked their lives on the fields of France—all for reducing the taxes of the rich and paying the railroads their loss! [Applause on the Democratic side.]

As I listened to gentlemen on the Democratic side in this debate, it occurred to me they were unfair in one respect. In going over the items of the bill and setting forth the figures they omitted one item which the rich have been paying. The gentlemen have not given credit for the enormous campaign funds contributed to Republicans last year, both in the primaries and in the general election; and, of course, they are going to be called on to make larger contributions next year! [Applause.]

Mr. FORDNEY. It was fully awarded on the 2d day of November last.

Mr. STEAGALL. Let me say to the gentlemen that all contributions to Republicans were not made for the November election. It happened that there was an investigating committee of the Senate in operation during the primaries last year, and when the Republican convention met it was found that every candidate for the Republican nomination for President, who had been seriously considered up to that time, was caught in such connection with campaign corruption funds that the exigencies of politics required the nomination of a new man!

Mr. CHANDLER of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I regret that I have not time to yield now. If you will get me more time, I shall be glad to yield to you.

Mr. CHANDLER of Oklahoma. Did you vote to take the railroads over? I did not; did you?

Mr. STEAGALL. I will say this to the gentleman: The Democratic administration, forgetting party affiliation during the war, and coming in contact with Republican influences, made a great many mistakes, and some of its followers are not so much to blame as others. [Laughter.]

I was about to say, you take my friend over there from Kansas [Mr. TINCHE], when he gets out among the farmers of his district—

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for one question?

Mr. STEAGALL. Yes.

Mr. STEVENSON. I desire to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that there was no vote on taking over the railroads. They were taken over in 1916 without a vote, and this Congress ratified the action of the President.

Mr. FORDNEY. I beg the gentleman's pardon. The gentleman is in error. That was done in 1917.

Mr. STEAGALL. I am willing to take my share of the blunder that was made. I am not going to turn around at this late day and cowardly accuse the others for what all of us did.

I started out to talk of my friend from Kansas [Mr. TINCHE] when he goes out campaigning among the farmers, and they begin to get full information about this legislation—the little light that has dawned since your caucus concerning soft drinks is not a circumstance to what people are going to find out later on—I can see my friend from Kansas when some smart fellow gets him on the stump and tackles him about his vote on this bill.

Mr. CHANDLER of Oklahoma. I am not from Kansas.

Mr. STEAGALL. I did not refer to you. I know where you are from. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is not recognized.

Mr. STEAGALL. I know where the gentleman is from, and I know how he voted on the tariff bill! I am talking about the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TINCHE] when he gets to talking to the farmers of his State on this bill, and they begin to draw the figures on him, and the gentleman is unable to run away from them, as has been attempted here to-day, what will be his defense? The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] furnishes the answer. He says, why "the Democratic platform indorsed the provisions of this bill!" Some farmer will reply: "To hades with the Democratic platform. I voted against it."

Then the gentleman from Kansas will say, "President Wilson indorsed it." Then the farmer will reply: "My God, are you not the man who was cussing Wilson all over this country in the last campaign; didn't we elect you to Congress because we were opposed to him?" But the gentleman from Ohio has another witness ready—a witness that will pass in any court. He introduced William Randolph Hearst, and, of course, that will be sufficient! [Laughter.]

Oh, gentlemen, you will need better excuses than were suggested by the gentleman from Ohio!

They say this legislation was indorsed in the Democratic platform. I deny it. It was not in the Democratic platform. It was not in the Republican platform. It was not in any platform, and it will never be in any platform adopted by any great party in this country. You would no more have made known to the American people in your platform that you intended to do what this bill does than a burglar upon entering a house would wake up its occupants before he tried to get away with his loot. [Laughter.]

You know I have really been sorry for some of you gentlemen yesterday and to-day. I looked over at you when the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] was hurling his shells over on you in his masterly speech yesterday afternoon, and I was really anxious about you. This morning you came in looking as if there was a little more hope of life. But when "Billy" Oldfield got after you with his unanswerable array of figures you sank down again as if you had stood all you could, and when the gentleman from New York [Mr. COCKRAN] was speaking it looked as though some of you would not survive!

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] seems to rejoice at the absence of the gentleman from Scotland Neck, and well he may. If CLAUDE KITCHIN had been here you could never have survived the operation without an anæsthetic. [Laughter and applause.] In this connection I desire to read a telegram:

SCOTLAND NECK, N. C., 3.40 p. m. August 11, 1921.

C. H. ENGLAND, Washington, D. C.:

Wife just got your telegram. I am a little tired; just have finished my minority report. Have never felt better in my life, and am now ready to take a good rest. I wrote on statistics too hard. Ought to have Price to help. But it is over now. Tell those who read the report of my relapse to read my report on the revenue bill and see if it sounds like that of a relapsed invalid. Will send report to Oldfield to-night.

CLAUDE KITCHIN.

[Applause on the Democratic side.]

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] refers sarcastically to the telegram from Scotland Neck to the Democratic caucus. You had a lot of trouble as it was when your caucus was held, but if you will call a caucus and read the unanswerable argument in the message from the great Democrat of Scotland Neck and repeal your rule and unshackle the Members of this House so they may vote under their oaths of office and their responsibility to their constituents, the members of your own party will strip the bill of more of its outrages and amend it until its authors would not recognize it. [Laughter.]

I congratulate you upon the changes already made in the original draft of the bill. Every hour the discussion lasts in this House witnesses demand from various quarters for other changes. Every one that has been made has improved it. In fact, there is no danger of the suggestion of any amendment that would not be helpful. But you gentlemen who are supporting this bill are a long way removed now from those who will be most desirous of changing it when they find out all that is in it. You will never know the complaint that exists until you get back home among the plain people of this country. The truth is you gentlemen who are voting for this bill ought to call off all plans for a recess. The work and worry that awaits you when you get home to explain this bill will make the strain of the summer's labors here seem like a vacation. [Laughter.] If this bill ever becomes a law you who vote for it are going to be kept busy explaining from now until next election. But most of you will be relieved after that. In the next campaign you are going to have to talk about things that the people are familiar with. In the last campaign you talked about the thing you thought the American people know least about. That is always the Republican method of campaigning. You never dare go before the people a second time on the same definite issue.

Why, we all remember how your party fought when the Democrats, back in the nineties, began the fight to enact an income tax law to tax the idle wealth of this country. During the Civil War an income tax was levied to raise funds with which to support the Union Armies, but soon after the war the Republican Party repealed the law. In its stead they adopted the method of levying taxes, not according to the amount of property owned by the taxpayer nor the ability of the taxpayer to meet the burden, but according to what the taxpayer consumed. You levied the taxes upon the head of the family, not in proportion to his wealth but according to how many children he had to be supplied with the necessities of life. When the Democratic Party began the fight to restore the income tax you opposed taxing incomes of any sort or size. You denounced us as anarchists. You said we were trying to destroy property rights and strike down the Constitution. So if you had had your way during the recent war we should have witnessed the spectacle of this Nation entering the home and taking the son from his mother's arms and sending him across the sea to fight the battles of a Government that dared not levy a dollar of taxes on the incomes of our millionaires and multimillionaires with which to support our armies on the firing line. [Applause.]

You appealed then, as you did last year, to the fears of the people. But since that fight was won and injustice and absurdity of your position established you search always for a new issue on which to attempt to mislead the people. You have never dared fight any battle on an issue upon which the people were educated or upon which contests had ever been waged before. Last year you seized upon a question of international law to find a new issue—an issue that even the most intensive advocate of popular sovereignty among those who framed our Government never dreamed should be settled by popular vote.

I warn you now that the next contest is going to be fought out in normal times and along normal lines. The League of Nations will not be the issue. You are going to have to face the plain people of America and give account of the deeds done in this Congress and the outrages perpetrated against them. Their vengeance will be as overwhelming as it is deserved. You will not be permitted to make the appeals made in the last campaign. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. TAGUE. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. JEFFERS].

Mr. JEFFERS of Alabama. Mr. Chairman and Members of the House, it had not been my purpose to offer the gentlemen of this House any thoughts of mine during these deliberations on such important measures as the tariff, which we have already had before us, or the tax which we now have before us. I thought perhaps it might be wiser for a new man in this body to serve a little longer probational period. But, gentlemen, as I have listened to what has been said on both sides of this House it has occurred to me that it was my duty to say something before you in an effort to bring to your minds a thought which it appears to me has escaped you thus far entirely. You have been talking in terms of money. One of the speakers on yesterday said he was talking about big money and big men; and he was, and that seems to me to be the only class that the Republican speakers have appeared to talk about or to kotow to in their speeches on this bill.

Now, my friends, I want to call your attention to a fact which some of you evidently do not realize thoroughly. I do not charge you with being unpatriotic citizens, but some of you evidently do not seem to realize that the farmers of this Nation and the middle class of the people of this Nation gave, in the bodies of their sons, by far the largest quota of men who stood before the German guns, protecting with their bodies the scoundrelly profiteers whom this bill especially relieves. [Applause.] I say to you that 200,000 farmers gave more in personal income tax returns than any other one class of people, and they furnished, in the bodies of their boys, some of whom are now back on their farms trying to make a living, the largest quota of the men who, as I say, stood between German bullets and the worthless hides of these profiteers. And now, while you are protecting these profiteers with this made-to-order alleged revenue bill, you are forgetting the farmers whose sons protected the rascally scoundrels who were grafting on the people of this country and on this Government during the very time while those boys were in the trenches. [Applause.] I want to tell you, my friends, that the boys who lie to-night enfolded in the flowered bosom of mother earth in France left to us as citizens of this country a legacy to fulfill, and if we are true to our God and to our country we will fulfill the legacy they left to us. My idea of it is embodied in a poem written by Edwin Markham, which I will repeat, in the hope that this legacy left to us by these boys will reach your minds and hearts:

They sleep; they took the chance
In Italy, in Belgium, in France.
For us they gave their youth to its last breath;
For us they plunged on into the gulf of death.

With high, heroic heart
They did their valiant part.
They gave the grace and glory of their youth
To lie in heaps uncouth.
They turned from these bright skies
To lie with dust and silence in their eyes.

Yet they have wages we know not of—
Wages of honor and immortal love.
For they went down only to live again
In the eternal memory of men—
To be warm pulse beats in the greatening soul
That drives the blind world onward to her goal.
They are not dead; life's flag is never furled;
They pass from world to world.
Their bodies sleep, but in some nobler land
Their spirits march under a new command.
New joys await them there
In hero heavens, wrapt in immortal air.

Rejoice for them, rejoice;
They made the nobler choice.
How shall we honor their deed,
How speak our praise of their immortal breed?
Only by living nobly, as they died,
Tolling for truth denied.
Loyal to something bigger than we are—
Something that swings the spirit to a star.

Ah, my friends, I tell you that in these few lines is embodied the legacy and the duty left to us, that we should—

Live nobly as they died,
Tolling for truth denied,
Loyal to something bigger than we are—
Something that swings the spirit to a star.

And I charge every man who votes for this infamous alleged revenue bill with this reduction in these surtaxes on these profit hogs, I charge every man that votes for it with that reduction in it, with not following after the real truth, but with following after a false principle and a policy that is false to all the traditions of this country which we love and the country for which those matchless American boys were willing to toil fearlessly over the rugged path of duty even though that path led straight to the door of death itself, where they paid the supreme price with a brave smile upon their lips and a word of cheer to their beloved "buddies," who were left behind to "carry on" for God and country and for the protection of the flag and the homes of our country.

If we are to fulfill our obligations to the memory of those boys, we must be fair to the whole people and not to favor any certain class. To the Republicans I will say that it was your duty, as the majority in power, to frame a bill that would be fair to all and not made to order for the special protection of a certain class. Do not forget that you have in this bill made provision to tax the poor man's medicine; do not forget that in this bill you have made provision for a tax on carpets, trunks, valises, lights and fixtures, umbrellas, and things of that sort that the average man must buy. You are levying a jewelry tax, hitting jewelers and all who purchase any sort of jewelry or ornaments. At the same time you have with one fell swoop cut off millions of dollars of taxes which should come out of profits of these multimillionaires who made these millions out of the very lifeblood of the youth of this land, and who now should be forced to contribute heavily to this Government in the form of taxes.

Is it noble that we now relieve the very rich man and the money-soaked war profiteer while no material relief is offered for the farmer or average merchant or the great mass of the public?

Would it not be fair to continue to assess these people who are rolling in wealth until the burden caused by war expenditures, which were, of course, unavoidable, is relieved? Upon their purses now this burden really should fall most heavily.

The secret of it all is this: The money masters of this country contributed very, very heavily to the campaign funds of the Republican Party last year. Having furnished the money then, they are now demanding their pay. You have heard the voice of your masters, and you are delivering the goods, without regard or concern for the great mass of the general public of this country, and that, of course, includes the farmers.

If you follow the legacy left to you by the boys who could not come back from "over there," you will make these millionaires pay what is due to this Government. In the name and for the sake of the men that crossed the seas and stood in the trenches, and who fought magnificently for you and for me, who now lie under the countless rows of little white crosses on the fields of France, if you prove true to the legacy left to us by them you have got to make these profiteers pay, and if you do not you will be deliberately forsaking truth, so often denied, and following after the false, as it appears to my mind to-day. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. TAGUE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY].

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, history is repeating itself. In one of the first attempts at discussion of the political issues of the day that I ever made in my life I discussed the old war tariff and war income tax of the sixties. In the closing years of the great War between the States the party then in power in order to secure revenue enacted two laws: An income tax law and a very high tariff law. When that war came on we had a low tariff and all parties were well satisfied with it. It had practically ceased to be an issue in campaigns, but when the great necessity arose for revenue to prosecute the war, the party in power naturally looked around for some way to raise revenue and they passed the income-tax law and a very high tariff tax. The authors of those laws, though Republican, apologized for each of them, saying that they were war measures but that when the war was over they would be repealed.

The war was fought and won by the northern side, and after the war was over the representatives of great wealth, those affected by the income tax, came to the Republican Party, the party then in power, and said: "You passed an income-tax law and justified it as a war measure, and now the war is over we ask you to repeal it." And the Republican Party did repeal it because they were asked to do it by the great wealth of the country, the special interests. But when the poor man whose back bore the burden of the increased tariff came to the same party in power and said: "When you raised the tariff taxes you apologized and said it was a war measure; the war is over, now reduce taxation," they said nay, nay, and from that day to this the party then in power has advocated a high and ever higher tariff and increased the burden of the masses. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Gentlemen, that history is repeating itself to-day. When the Democratic Party passed the tax law now in force the great war that drained our resources in money, even more than the war between the States, was on and the party in power had to resort to every possible means in order to raise revenue to support and push the war. Let me say in passing that history will record that no people on the face of the earth ever made such efforts and accomplished such wonders in financing in such a short length of time. We raised $30,000,000,000 and more than $30,000,000,000 by taxes and loans to our people to prosecute the war; to finance ourselves, and help finance our allies. We sent over 4,000,000 of men across the water in a time that would seem unbelievable, and the historian will record our country's achievement—it matters not under what party—as the greatest achievement in the annals of time of any nation on the face of the earth. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

What else? Ah, we passed certain tax measures as war measures, and when you were making your race in 1918 and seeking to control both Houses you said that you were more loyal to the policies of the administration than even the Democrats were. You came into power by your avowed and boasted support of these very measures. Last year the presidential election came on. You changed your tone and blamed the Democratic administration for all the burdens and hardships of those taxes. You ignored the fact that you had been in control of the law-making branch of the Government for two years and said that when you were put in power in the White House and both Houses of Congress you would relieve the people of the war taxes. Now, what do you do? History is repeating itself; you are relieving the great wealth of the country and you are relieving it by shifting the burden to the smaller wealth of the country. That is what you are doing. Let me tell you people that you take the highest tax brackets and reduce them and let the lower ones remain unchanged or raise them.

Let me explain that as it applies to corporations and individuals. If a $50,000 corporation earns only 5 per cent on its capital, you increase its tax from $50 to $62.50. If a $10,000,000 corporation earns 25 per cent, as a great many of them have done and will do, you decrease its taxes. Such a corporation would earn $2,500,000. Under present law it is taxed $645,260. Under this bill it is taxed $312,250, a decrease of $395,010. Under this bill the taxes of about 1,000 huge corporations, which are required to pay an excess-profits tax only on net earnings above 10 per cent, will have remitted to them over a half billion of dollars of taxes, and that $500,000,000 of taxes is made up from the increased taxes of smaller corporations, earning smaller dividends, and from other taxes on the unprivileged man. And yet we were told by the Republican President that his party was not going to shift the burdens of taxation.

But this evening I heard on the Republican side a sneer at Mr. KITCHIN because of his telegram from Scotland Neck. I am going to read you a part of that telegram now. It will be in the RECORD, but let me read to you a part of it:

According to the returns as detailed in the reports of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, since January 1, 1916, and up to and including the commissioner's report of July 12, 1921, the corporations of the United States made net profits from January 1, 1916, to January

1, 1921, in round numbers, of $50,000,000,000; to be exact, $47,000,000,000. After deducting all the taxes they paid since January 1, 1916, income, excess-profits, and other war taxes, they have a clear profit left of $38,000,000,000, more than four-fifths of which was made by less than 10,000 corporations, and more than half of which was made by 1,026 of the big profiteering corporations, which includes the Steel Trust, the packers, the Bethlehem Steel Co., etc.

I want to tell you that you can sneer at that Scotland Neck telegram as much as you please, but the whole telegram speaks in live terms of what the policy expressed by this bill means. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Do you know that that means that 1,026 of these great profiteering corporations earned from 1916 to 1921, after the payment of all taxes, more than nineteen billions of dollars, which is enough to pay the war debt of this United States. These are the people that this bill sets out specially to relieve.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARDY of Texas. I have not the time. Why, 10,000 of these big corporations made a net income, after paying all taxes, in five years, more than enough to pay the debt that this country incurred, including what it loaned to our allies, and if to-night we had in the Treasury the net profits of these 1,026 biggest corporations alone, we would have enough to wipe out the debt of the Nation. [Applause.] Yet when you draw a bill for the relief of the people, you relieve them of more than three-fourths of their excess-profits tax which they would have paid if this bill is not passed.

I want to ask some of you people from the great farming regions of the West, interested alike with the farming population of the South, what you think about this. I would like to see that telegram posted in every hamlet and village of your home State. I would like to see it on the walls of all your schools. I would like to have your children learn it by heart, because it is true and it means something. Are we here to serve 1,026 corporations by relieving them? Yes; history is repeating itself. We are going to relieve the people, and when we come to the work we find that we are working to relieve the great, fatted bond owners and corporations of the country. The Steel Trust made a profit of over a billion dollars, as I remember it, in one year, after paying excess-profits tax on an income running to 50 per cent of its invested capital, and you say that you are afraid that you will discourage such industries by tax burdens, and therefore that you relieve them from the excess-profits tax. Oh, you know what I mean. You, my Republican labor friend from Wisconsin. Are you in favor of it? Do you like it? No, you don't; and if you could get out from under the whip and spur of your party lash you would not vote for it.

There are not 10 per cent of the Members here from the great agricultural belt of this country, West, South, or Middle West, or even in the back regions of New York State, who do not know that this bill is in the interest of great bloated capital and against the interest of the multitude of the people. Vote for it if you want to. It is as good ammunition as we can have in the next campaign, but I hate to see the same old story which from age to age, from generation to generation, has repeated itself, so that every generation finds special pets of governmental policies and favoritism winding their way up to the top of the mountain, while the great multitude must sink into the level of the plains below.

I do not care what the purpose was in the heart or mind of the framer of the pending bill, but these two tables show that its effect is to relieve the biggest corporations and place heavier burdens on the smaller ones; to relieve the larger individual income-tax payers and leave the burdens on the smaller ones, just the same as they are now. The revenue necessities of the Government are not affected by the manner in which, or source from which, taxes are raised. Whatever is remitted in favor of one class of taxpayers must be shifted to some other shoulders. This bill raises the taxes on some 300,000 small corporations, or corporations making small earnings, all the way from $12.50 to $20,000 each, and lowers the taxes on some 10,000 larger and greedier corporations making exorbitant earnings from $60 to $1,170,510 each. This is shown by the first table, taken in connection with official statistics, as to the number and capital of all the corporations in the United States. It must be borne in mind that there are a number of corporations having more than $10,000,000 capital and paying larger taxes than those shown in this table. These, of course, will be relieved or benefited still more. It is contended that the present excess-profits tax is unjust and oppressive, but I submit to the average man that when the law permits a corporation to earn a net profit of 10 per cent before imposing an excess-profits tax, and when the higher excess-profits tax is shown to apply only where earnings run from 20 to 50 per cent, it does not lie in the mouth of any such corporation to complain. I may be deemed socialistic, communistic, or bolshevistic; but I frankly say I have no sympathy with such complaint.

The second table shows the reduction of taxes on incomes of individuals. Individuals having a net income of less than $70,000 get no reduction. The little men with incomes of $5,000 to $25,000 continue to pay the highest war tax. These get no relief, no lessening of their burdens. Relief from tax, lowering of tax, is reserved for the very wealthy alone. This bill is not different in kind or character from the two other so-called reconstruction measures of the Republican Party. This will make the third such measure when it is passed. The first was the Esch-Cummins railroad bill. Under it the Government has paid and will pay the roads over a billion dollars to guarantee that their earnings from March 1, 1920, to September 1, 1920, after they were turned back to private owners, should be equal to what they were at the period of their highest earnings before they were taken over by the Government, notwithstanding the fact that they had broken down under private operation and had to be taken over when they were taken over by the Government to avoid an utter failure of transportation during the war. And under it the roads were practically given authority, which they at once availed themselves of, to raise their rates sky-high, and State legislatures are petitioning Congress to restrain them in some way. What burdens these high rates have placed on the people God only knows. While every product of the labor of the common people has fallen from 100 to 500 per cent, the railroad charges are from 50 to 75 per cent higher than in war times by the kind benevolence of the Esch-Cummins law.

The second great constructive law is their tariff bill, passed by the House but hanging up in the Senate. It may succeed, as it is intended, in keeping out all importations of any goods that might compete with our manufacturing and other monopolists. If it does, the high prices paid by the farmer and wage earner to these monopolists will be a plenty.

The pending bill is the third great measure. I ought to add that they have had under advisement a claim of the railroad owners for $500,000,000 damages for alleged inefficiency of labor since they took back their roads, and that a bill is pending to take 10-year notes of the roads for the sums expended by the Government in betterments and permanent improvements amounting to about $750,000,000, and then somehow cause bonds to be issued on these notes, and $500,000,000 of cash to be raised for the roads somehow on these bonds. Whether this will in the end amount to a gift of the $750,000,000 and of the $500,000,000 time alone will tell.

All sorts of excuses are given for these measures of special benevolence. They profess to be reducing taxes on great wealth to keep that wealth from retiring from industry and hiding itself from the tax gatherer in tax-exempt bonds. They forget that the big corporations they favor earned over $25,000,000,000 in the five years from January, 1916, to January, 1921, and that there are only about $16,000,000,000 of tax-exempt securities, most of which is already owned by the very wealthy individuals and corporations. Their other excuses are as flimsy and as false as this, but for many months a propaganda never equalled has been carried on so that a large part of the public believe to-day that the excess-profits tax is the only thing that stands in the way of a return to prosperity and happiness. If I thought that was true or even partly true, I would vote to repeal the excess-profits tax, even though the vote cost me my right arm. But I know it is not true, not even in part true.

The dallying and delay of the Republican Party in dealing with vital and pressing issues is the greatest hindrance to our recovery. Even wrong treatment is better than delay, because it removes uncertainty and gives opportunity for adjustment.

A strong people can stand anything better than stupid failure or refusal to decide vital questions. President Wilson knew this. When the Republicans won the House and Senate in 1918 he knew that any legislation necessary for the healing of the wounds of the war, for the reconstruction of our industrial life, must be passed by a Republican House and Senate. And he called them to meet on May 19, 1919, and urged them to frame and pass the laws necessary. Two years and three months have passed since then and no law of general and prime importance save the Esch-Cummins law has yet been passed. Even the tariff and this law will probably not pass before December or January.

The Republican Party ever since they came into power have played politics, and the big interests, who know what party serves them best, have backed them to the last dollar. In the day of readjustment and reconstruction they wanted the Republican Party in power. They have had their will. The Democrats have not delayed or obstructed or attempted to delay or obstruct legislation. For one I would gladly see this administration a glorious success. I care not what party gives it, I want wise and righteous government. This is no time for petty partisanship. The world is even sicker than it was during the war. Famine and hunger stalk over a great part of the world. Disorder, unrest, idleness, and poverty reign over half the world. Our own country suffers with the rest. The winter is coming, and the coal barons hold the very lives of the poor in great cities at their mercy and the mercy of the railroads. The greed and glutting of wealth is entrenched in power. International commerce is dead; all trade and business is sick. How long. How long, O Lord, before something can be done to heal a sick world?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. In what I have said I spoke of some tables which would show what relief this bill would give and to whom. I present these tables. One shows the effect of the bill on corporations with capital running from $5,000 to $10,000,000 and earning from 5 to 50 per cent on capital invested. The second table shows the effect of the bill on individual incomes ranging from $70,000 to $5,000,000. Incomes for individuals below $70,000 are not given. The taxes on them remain as at present. They are not big enough to be relieved to any extent whatever or to enlist the solicitude of the framers of this bill. Here are the tables:

Effect of the repeal of the excess-profits tax.

The new revenue bill reported by the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives contains a provision for the repeal of the present excess-profits tax on corporations and an increase in the normal tax from 10 to 12½ per cent.

The effect of this proposed law on those corporations whose invested capital is from $5,000 to $10,000,000, and who are earning from 5 per cent to 50 per cent thereon, is shown in the following exhibit. Those corporations whose capital and income are in the block between the heavy black lines will pay more tax under the proposed law, while those to the right and below the second black line will pay less tax.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield now to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MICHAELSON].

Mr. MICHAELSON. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I entertain objections to the pending bill because it seems to be built on the theory that the way to restore prosperity and happiness to our countrymen is to lift the tax burden from the comparatively few excessively rich and the parasite class generally and shift it to the backs of the producing masses, who are less able to pay.

Abraham Lincoln said, "You can not fool all the people all the time." I have been back among my constituents, men and women of moderate means, and I believe I know what they are thinking. While I do not pretend to superior powers of divination, I believe I understand the thoughts of the producing classes of our people in the Mississippi Valley and the adjacent States—the thoughts of the farmer, the laborer, the home owner, the salaried man, and the modest manufacturer.

I do not believe we are fooling them in any particular by the assertion that the pending measure is going to reduce taxes for everybody. It is not. The main beneficiaries of this bill are the very rich—the class which could and should practice a little of the patriotism and unselfishness they were so loud in proclaiming when the sons of the poor and the middle class were dying in French trenches; at a time, also, when the very rich were adding untold millions to their swollen fortunes in unjustifiable war profits.

Many of those to whom this measure extends a protecting hand may be found to-day in European spas, neither toiling nor spinning, but spending like drunken sailors, and in scandalous carryings-on, the unearned and unmerited millions that came out of the pockets of American toilers and American farmers.

We are fooling no one. My fear is that the Republican Party, which could remain in power indefinitely, is short-lived unless we here in Congress keep in mind constantly all the people, preferably the unfortunate, and not merely the special-privilege class that has already fattened too long off of Government wet-nursing. In their disgust and anger people are apt to vote the Democratic party back into power. That would be jumping from the frying pan into the fire. But that is the way of our people. They vote out the unfaithful without stopping to consider whether the next régime will be any better.

So I say, I am thoroughly convinced that a revulsion of sentiment is sweeping the Middle West, based on the growing feeling that the party now in power is not measuring up to its traditions but is becoming the abject servant of the predatory and special-privilege class. One reason for this is the refusal to adjust the compensation of the overseas veterans and their belief that at the same time we are voting millions of the taxpayers' money to the holders of watered railroad securities. Out in the stock-raising and grain belt of the Middle West I am convinced the feeling is growing that the Government to-day is more completely under the domination of the Wall Street interests than ever before.

One specific objection to the pending measure is the proposed repeal of the excess-profits tax. The committee estimates that this repeal will reduce the revenue by at least $450,000,000 annually. True, the insurrection has temporarily defeated the abominable plan to make this repeal retroactive as of January, 1921. But there are rumblings on the other side of the rotunda. We are informed that the Senate will insist on this provision. It may yet go in.

United States Senator CAPPER has given it as his opinion on the floor of the Senate that excess profits, above a reasonable return, which were pocketed by the favored class during the war, totaled more than $8,000,000,000. W. Jett Lauck, the noted economist and statistician, testifying before a committee of Congress, has estimated that excess war profits retained by the exploiting class totaled around $14,000,000,000. It is this special-privilege group which we now propose to relieve from taxation.

The theory upon which this proposal is based is that the swollen-fortune class is now injuring business by investing their enormous incomes in tax-exempt securities and in taking advantage of the Supreme Court's decision exempting stock dividends; but that if we will be gracious enough to remit their taxes they will come out of their tax-exempt bombproof dagouts and condescend to invest a part of their millions in business enterprises. I pause to observe that the small home owner, the toilers in the fields, and the middle class generally are unable to take advantage of tax-exempt securities and stock dividends or to hire eminent lawyers to tell them how to evade taxation.

I also inquire as to the claimed 100 per cent patriotism of those special-privilege forces who denounced as traitors to this country those who insisted at the time that the Government should promptly conscript excessive wealth, as well as fighting men, for the World War.

With 5,000,000 idle men in this country to-day, many of them overseas veterans, walking the streets hungry and without a place to sleep, the Congress now proposes to surrender to the excess-profit exploiters, to remit one-half billion dollars of their taxes because they threaten to put their piles of gold in tax-exempt securities if we do not bend the knee to them. This is shameful. This is not the spirit of the forefathers. It is not the true voice of the Republican Party which, under Abraham Lincoln, struck the shackles from human slaves. Human enslavement by the entrenched money power of the Nation is little less reprehensible.

Where do you propose to make up the loss of this half billion surrender to the already favored class? The committee estimates, among other offsets, that it can add $10,000,000 by a tax on soft drinks, $12,000,000 on cereal beverages, $2,000,000 on soda water, and $12,000,000 on still drinks. Who will pay this? Mr. Morgan and Mr. Rockefeller and the Astors and the Goulds and the Vanderbilts? I have traveled a good bit since I saw the light of day, but I never observed these 300 per cent patrioteers lined up at a soda fountain counter. No; they will not pay it. If you want to see the people who will pay it take a little journey through the great west side of Chicago or the congested districts of any of our large cities. The class whom you propose to favor with tax exemptions of half a billion dollars do not refresh themselves at soda fountains. They do not have to. They have all the beverages they require in their own cellars—and it is not soda water. It is the poor and the children you propose to tax to make up the exemptions you would extend to great wealth.

It has been stated on the floors of Congress that more than 34,000 millionaires were made in this country by the World War. It is this class you propose to favor, because they are not patriotic enough to share with all the people even their proportionate burden of the World War costs.

At the same time we propose to refund the billions of principal and accrued interest owing this Nation by the European militarists. And on that record you are going back to the common people to ask their approval in the coming elections. In my opinion if that record is made up many of you who go back will stay there. You will not return here.

I raise the same objection to the proposed repeal of the high surtaxes, and for the same reasons I have advanced against the repeal of the excess-profits tax. I will submit an amendment not only retaining the higher surtaxes up to net incomes of $1,000,000 but providing that on incomes exceeding $1,000,000 the surtax on all in excess of $1,000,000 shall be 100 per cent.

I hold that in this age, under present world conditions, while millions are dying of starvation throughout the world and unbearable taxes for the poor and the middle classes threaten to overturn the very ideals on which this Government is founded—that at such a time as this no individual should be permitted by this Government to retain any part of a net income in excess of $1,000,000. Secretary of the Treasury Mellon has reported that there were 63 such persons in 1919.

I now come to the exemption which I believe is morally justifiable. It is a further exemption for those at the bottom. I shall propose an amendment exempting from all income taxation net personal incomes up to and including $5,000, this exemption to apply equally to men and women without regard to whether they are married or single. We have amended the Constitution of the United States to extend equal ballot rights to women. Equal taxation rights, equal property rights, should follow. If women are the equals of men at the ballot box when the representatives of the people are chosen, then they are, by every rule of right and justice, entitled to full equality in all activities of the human family. For that reason I make no distinction as between male and female, single or wedded.

If the Republican majority in this Congress will exempt from income taxation incomes up to $5,000, and not only maintain but increase the tax on swollen fortunes, even to the extent of conscription in extreme cases, the Republican Party, in my opinion, will restore itself to the confidence and affection of an overwhelming majority of true Americans and will be retained in power, as it would deserve to be, so long as it legislates for all the people and not a small group of shameless profiteers and international exploiters.

Any other course, in my judgment, would be fatal, and probably would mean the dissolution and certain death of the once beneficent instrument of representative government perfected under Abraham Lincoln.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Fess] 20 minutes.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, last April, when we were not so pressed for time, I discussed rather fully the taxation question. At that time I pointed out what I regarded as the fundamental requirements to be met both by legislation and by the process of economic law. I am not inclined to rehash the argument that was offered at that time, neither am I inclined to repeat the arguments that have been offered by Members of the House in the serious discussion at the present time of this most important matter—too important to be treated as many have treated it on the Democratic side of the House. I want to call attention to the seriousness of the problem as I see it, and leave the responsibility for refusing to meet it to those who want to assume that responsibility. The Government is costing us about six times what it cost us in 1914. This charge upon the Treasury is a condition that we face and which can not be met by either vituperation or mere irresponsible statements. It is unnecessary for us to state why that staggering burden is now upon us. The big thing with us is how can we meet it. It can not be done by demagogic harangue such as we have been served by the Democratic Members here. The program of the Congress has been to reduce the cost of government saddled upon us in the recent orgy of wild expenditures wherever it can be done. We have outlined the plan, and when the detailed statements of the items of reduction are mentioned as proposed in this bill, we are met by the opposition with statements that the reduction will not be made. This opposition thus far displays its purpose to prevent the reduction so far as it can go. Whether it be made or not, the real point of discussion now before us is, What shall we do with this war tax which still exists on our statute books?

This administration has already taken the most significant and far-reaching steps to accomplish the reduction of taxation, and in opposition, I regret to say, of our Democratic friends, which meets us at every point, as in the budget, the peace resolution, the reorganization program, and now we have it on the tax question. It is our duty to meet the question of extravagance in spite of this opposition, and we will meet it wherever it can be done. The crying need of the country is to resume a normal state of production that consumption may be possible. Our chief duty therefore is to reduce the high cost of production, which is still largely on a war basis. We are told by the producer that he still must pay war taxes, war transportation, war rents, war interest, and so forth. One of the items of that cost, if not the chief item, and with which the Government has to do and should be chiefly concerned, is taxation. I want now to warn the country that we can talk until we are blind about the elements in the cost of production and the necessity of its reduction. The Government itself can not make any reduction, except as we can cut out on items of Government expenditure, on the one hand, which is the only way to bring about a reduction in taxation, because the cost of Government is the measure of taxation. That is what we are here to do. First, we must cut to the very bone every appropriation which is made. Under the Director of the Budget that process is now going on. Second, we must reorganize governmental activities to eliminate waste by duplication. That is rapidly proceeding under a congressional commission, which will soon be ready to report. Third, we must avoid any new legislation that involves any great expenditure of money which can be avoided. Valuable legislation is suspended which were it not for the necessities of the Treasury would at once be enacted. Our particular business has been in the reduction of the cost of the Government. It is now to reduce the taxation as far as our ability to cut the cost will permit us to do it.

As I see it, the supreme thing in this reduction of the burden of taxes is, first, to free the capital of the country that has been driven by confiscatory taxation under the cover of tax exemption into unproductive channels so that it can be induced to go into productive industry. I am charged by those who do not agree with me politically when I thus speak with speaking in the interest of capital and of the capitalists instead of speaking in the interest of the people, but they should remember that capital makes possible the employment of people and their consumptive power. Of course, no one here fails to observe the deep concern of our Democratic friends over the necessity to make political capital. The cry of relieving the rich at the expense of the poor is familiar to everyone. It is a Democratic objection to every effort to build up American enterprise through the investment of capital in those industries that employ American labor. It too frequently displays its animus in an attempt to array the less fortunate against the more fortunate. Carried to its logical conclusion we would have bolsheviki Russia at our own doors. No good can ever come from setting the masses against the classes.

The interest of each is that of the other. The employer depends upon the employee, and vice versa. The producer depends upon the consumer.

There is no such thing as consumptive power unless capital can invest in productive industry, and you can talk until you are blind that in your protests you are speaking in the interest of the people when you punish capital for investing. What on earth will people do if there is no employment that gives them the ability to consume the product of the American farmer? Employment depends upon the freedom of capital to invest. Deny that freedom by confiscatory taxation and there is no employment of labor.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. FESS. I do not want to be discourteous, but I should like to pursue my thought. And when I speak of the freedom of capital to invest in productive industry I have no interest in the capitalist as a class. I do not think, so far as I know, there is a man in the seventh Ohio district who will be affected specifically by the reduction of these high surtaxes. I may be mistaken, and there might be some in the district. If so, I do not know him as such, and no one has appealed to me on his behalf. I am not speaking for him if he is in the district, or elsewhere, to relieve him of paying high taxes. My interest is in the employment of this capital that is not free to invest in productive industry, which is the source of the employment of labor, but which, on the other hand, is driven into channels which do not employ labor steadily.

I am speaking for this investment in order to augment the consumptive power by the payment of wages to labor and the creation of a market to the farmer in the district which I represent, in the State in which I live, and in the Nation of which we have the honor to be citizens. It is these interests for which I speak primarily, and not for the man whom you say I am protecting as a capitalist. That is why I urge the adoption of this tax measure.

Now, gentlemen of the committee, if I were to put my vote to repeal the excess-profits tax and to reduce the surtax—which seems to be the objective of our Democratic friends—if I would put it upon the basis that it is asked to be done by distinguished representative American citizens, why look at the argument from higher sources of authority that we would have, argument that would be conclusive. It has been asked specifically by President Wilson in a special message to Congress; it has been asked by Secretary of the Treasury CARTER GLASS, whose statement of the reasons for the repeal was powerful and cogent. There is not a Member of the House on either side of the aisle who served with him in the House and who closely observed his attitude toward measures who would not give due respect to the opinion of CARTER GLASS. As a Republican, I followed him in the adoption of the Federal reserve system, even though he brought it before the House as a party measure. I respect his ability. He usually rises above mere party advantage in legislation. Secretary Houston, his successor, took the same position in the demand for the repeal of these laws. When I say that I put it upon the best of authority on either side of the aisle—Democratic authority of the Wilson administration and now Republican authority of the present administration—I have splendid support from the Democratic authority and I have splendid support from Republican authority.

The distinguished Democrat, candidate for the Presidency in the last election, who is my neighbor and whom you recognize now as your leader, stated publicly that those two things must be done. We have placed in this bill the repeal of the excess-profits tax and the lowering of the high surtax. This position was taken by him both before and during the campaign. The Democrats attempted to make it an issue between parties, and Members here all recall how they criticized Republicans because we did not act at once upon the demand for repeal. The Democrats were right then, but now, when we proceed to do what we were then criticized for not doing, unitedly they repudiate all their leaders, eat their own words, and declare the repeal the "most vicious of all legislation."

While the wording in both national platforms of the two parties did not specifically use the language used in this bill, everybody understood that both the Democratic and Republican national platforms stood for the repeal of the two war taxes, namely, the excess-profits tax and a reduction of the surtax. Their demand could not be better worded than the plank in the San Francisco platform. [Applause on the Republican side.] So much for Democratic and Republican authority for these reductions. But I do not put it upon that basis. I do not put it upon the basis, either, of a war tax enacted to win the war, and by its very wording was to last only to the end of the war. Neither do I put it on the basis that it is going to be particularly favorable to this class or that class, to this section or that section. It is not that basis upon which I put it. I put the repeal of the excess-profits tax upon the basis that it is the most unscientific and uneconomic tax that has ever been put upon the statute books of the Nation.

This tax, legitimate in time of war, can not be defended as a sound theory in time of peace.

It penalizes thrift, industry, economy, and frugality and favors indolence, extravagance, and industrial stupidity.

It violates every principle of economic production, and thereby weakens the consuming power of a community.

It discourages the expansion of established businesses and prevents the opening of new enterprises.

No man nor group of men will ever enter upon any hazardous business in which there is to be a loss for some time upon the assurance that in time the enterprise will insure profit enough not only to pay up all losses but to profit in the long run. This assurance is forbidden by the excess-profits tax.

Had such a law been on the statute books of the country as a permanent system of taxation, we would not now have our wonderful standing before the world.

The testimony before the Finance Committee of the Senate was all to the effect that this item was included in the cost items in the market. The manufacturer put it on the wholesaler, who paid it once. He in turn put it on the jobber, who paid it twice. He in turn put it on the retailer, who paid it three times; and he put it upon the consuming public, who paid it all the time. This tax lies close to the bottom of much of the high level of cost of living. It is not to be tolerated as a permanent system of taxation.

The table shown here by the gentleman from Arkansas was all hypothetical. It showed what would be paid if a corporation made so much profit. But the difficulty is that the corporation will not only not make the profit but it will not care to risk continuance. Hundreds of sales which would be made were this tax eliminated are not made simply because the owner can not afford to sell at such a penalty. This is especially true in real estate transactions.

What the table should show is the comparison of what the corporations would pay as shown in the chart, and what they really did pay as shown by the Treasury figures.

That chart is upon the same basis of the assurance given of yore—"if the heavens fall we will all catch larks."

The fact is the excess-profits tax will repeal itself if we do not do it by law with the consequence of further disaster to business.

I voted against it in 1916, before we were in the war. I voted for it as an uneconomical proposition in 1917, when we were in war. I wonder whether our Democratic friends know that on the 17th of May, 1919, the Republicans met in caucus in this room and decided that while it was the privilege of individual Members to resist a proposition submitted by the President, we as a party would not resist any measure that President Wilson would put on the basis of winning the war. [Applause on the Republican side.] That was the caucus action, and I think it was the proper thing to do.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. It would have been a suicidal thing to do otherwise.

Mr. FESS. And friends of ours criticized us on the basis that we had gone too far.

Mr. STEVENSON. I think the gentleman got the date wrong. The gentleman said May, 1919; it was May, 1918.

Mr. FESS. I thank the gentleman. It was in 1917, soon after we had entered the war.

Mr. STEAGALL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. Yes; I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. STEAGALL. You also said on every stump in the campaign of 1918 you were more loyal to the President than we were and would stand by him, and said it was an insult to say you would not do it, before you got here, and you said you would have been insulted again if—

Mr. FESS. The Republicans were in the minority in that Congress, yet they cast more numerical votes than your party did, which was in the majority. That is why I said it, and that is why I now repeat it, to refresh the country.

Mr. CARTER. Will the gentleman from Ohio permit me just a moment?

Mr. FESS. I do not want this to get into a party discussion.

Mr. CARTER. I am not going to precipitate a party discussion.

Mr. FESS. I will yield to my friend from Oklahoma.

Mr. CARTER. I just wanted to say, if the gentleman will remember, the Democrats never were in the majority during the war Congress.

Mr. FESS. Oh, yes; they were. They organized the House in the election of Champ Clark as Speaker.

Mr. CARTER. I mean from 1918 on.

Mr. FESS. Yes; and you were in the control of Congress before, prior to the Sixty-sixth Congress.

Mr. CARTER. Well, we were not in the majority; we organized the House by having some independent votes.

Mr. FESS. I want my friend to understand his party was in the majority in this House until March 4, 1919, when the Democrats were displaced by the Republicans at the election on the 5th day of November prior to November 11, 1918, when the war ended by the armistice. Does the gentleman remember that?

Mr. CARTER. The gentleman is mistaken about that.

Mr. FESS. No; I am not mistaken. Never until this good hour have I heard any man deny that the Democrats did not control the Sixty-fifth Congress.

Mr. CARTER. We were not in the majority.

Mr. FESS. I am right. If you were not in the majority, how could you have the Speaker, the chairmen of all the committees, the supreme control of the machinery of the House?

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. I do not want to be discourteous, but my friends are deflecting me. You are trying to compel me to make a political speech, and I do not want to do it. I am anxious to confine myself to a serious discussion of the bill before us.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. My impression is that the gentleman is wrong when he said that more Republicans voted for the Democratic administration than Democrats.

Mr. FESS. The "gentleman from Ohio" is not in error. I made this statement, that on eight of the major war measures the Republicans, in the minority, cast more votes numerically than the Democrats. I made that statement as a matter of fact, easily verified, if anyone cares to do so.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. I am sure the gentleman is wrong.

Mr. FESS. I made that statement for the press, giving the measures, the dates of passage, and the number of votes, Democrat and Republican, which statement was published everywhere and verified by the figures.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. That is not right, because I hunted up the Record.

Mr. FESS. I can not yield further. It was not until the Democratic leadership saw that Republicans would take control of all war legislation in support of the Government did they finally line up behind the Government.

I was trying to say when this colloquy came up that my concern in the repeal of these war-tax features is not because they were simply war measures. We would have a duty to repeal them on that basis; that is, war legislation should not continue in peace times. But I do not put it on any of those bases.

My concern about the repeal of these two features of the present tax bill is to give freedom to the business of the country to employ the labor of the country in industry without taking the risks incident to business and the additional penalty of confiscation of 80 per cent of profits over a profit of 8 per cent. The consumptive power of a nation which supplies the home market of our producers depends most largely upon productive industries. When you have consumptive power you have the ability to sell the products, whether of the factory or the farm, which is the basis of American prosperity. I am therefore speaking on this issue for the integrity of American business to employ American labor steadily and at a wage that will insure the maintenance of our standard of living, which insures general prosperity of all our people.

Now, I want to know what is going to be the fate of any country which will not take the steps, if possible, to start the industries of the country. I do not want to overlook any legislation that will relieve 5,000,000 people now out of employment, walking the streets, wanting to work, and no work to do. My colleagues, I seriously believe that the biggest concern in America to-day is to know how to start and keep going the labor-employing industries in America. We all want to see the way open to invest every dollar of the country's capital in the industries to employ its labor at a steady wage and at a good scale of pay. That is the biggest thing in the American world to-day. It can not be done by denouncing capital and hog tying it by confiscatory laws. It can be done by giving it a chance for profitable investment. It can not be done by Democratic policies, in attempting to array the employee against the employer, the masses against the classes, as illustrated in this debate. It will be assisted by Republican efforts to give relief, as proposed in this bill.

In order to get the money freed from the incubus of the penalizing law that makes it impossible for capital to go into a productive industry, but in sheer defense compels it to seek refuge in unproductive investment, we also propose to reduce the higher surtaxes.

Now, it is no use for me to talk about these great incomes going into nontaxable investment. I discussed that fully last April here when this matter had not yet come up as a bill for discussion. I made the statement then that we had before the war only $3,000,000,000 tax-exempt securities. Now we have the enormous amount of $16,000,000,000. At least $5,000,000,000 of this increase has occurred in the last three years. Every Member here knows that this staggering increase is taken up by big capital. From both sides of the aisle many Members have said that the reduction of the surtax rate is not the remedy, but say these Members we should forbid the tax-exempt issue rather than to reduce the surtaxes. Now, everybody knows, or should know, I think—and I do not want to be exaggerative or superlative in my adjectives—that you can not by Federal action forbid the issuance of tax-free bonds in the State of Ohio or in Indiana or in Tennessee, or any other State of the Union. You may possibly forbid tax-free bonds in the city of Washington, which is Federally governed. But you can not do it in any other city like Baltimore, Boston, or New York, or any municipality. And when Members urge that we ought to tax these securities anyway, even though they are made free of tax by the States, that we should tax them by the Government, it is enough to say you can not do that under our system of government.

I think every lawyer here will concede that McCullough vs. Maryland made it final when John Marshall said that taxation carries the power to destroy; therefore the State can not tax a Federal security and, vice versa, the Federal Government can not tax the State security. There is no such thing as the Federal Government taxing a State obligation without the consent of the State, and there is no such thing as our forbidding a State to issue its securities. These securities exist without permission of the Federal Government. They remain tax free because the Government has no power to tax them. And this is all useless talk about our prohibiting the States issuing and the cities issuing $16,000,000,000 of tax-free securities, simply because we have no authority without a constitutional amendment to do it. If we submit it as an amendment to the Federal Constitution, if the House here and the Senate will join in recommending it as an amendment by two-thirds vote, it would have to go to the States and be ratified by three-fourths of them to become effective. I ask my friend from Pennsylvania, who sits before me, would your State vote to take away from itself the power to issue tax-exempt securities? I do not think it would do it. I do not think Ohio would. Therefore I think it is folly to talk at this hour against the reduction of the surtax on the basis that it is not the proper procedure, but that we ought to forbid their issuing these tax-free securities.

Now, my friend, the eloquent young Member from the fourth Alabama district, has made a moving appeal here, in speaking about the wickedness of the men who will not put their money in taxable industries but hide it away in tax-free securities. No informed man will doubt that the vast amount of money which has taken up this $16,000,000,000 tax-exempt bonds is supplied by the holders of big incomes which seek this refuge from confiscatory taxation, but which, on the other hand, would enter productive investment if the penalty for success was not applied by war-tax demands. A comparison of the Treasury figures of 1920 and 1921 with 1918 and 1919 shows a remarkable diminution of the number of big income taxpayers in the later years. That means they have entered the tax-exempt market.

Now, members of the committee, there is no use in damning a business man for seeking protection in tax-exempt investment when the Government takes 73 per cent of his income if invested in tax-bearing industry. He refuses to take a chance to invest in productive industry that will be taxed at such rates and invests in tax-exempt securities where no risk is involved. There is no use of condemning him. If it were in time of war, we would all condemn it as unpatriotic, but it is not unpatriotic for a man to defend himself from confiscatory taxation in peace time, and you will get nowhere by simply damning him for doing what every man would do. [Applause.]

I want you to note these facts as a matter of computation in arithmetic. You take the State of New York, which has a form of taxation on its own bonds and then allows a tax-free security ranging at 6 per cent, say.

Here is a computation. If a man in New York has $20,000 and wants to invest it, he has the choice of investing it in this tax-free security at 5½ per cent. I take the tax-free security at 5½ per cent, because that is the rate in the last issue of the short-term certificate of three years. The investor can choose to invest it in this 5½ per cent security or invest it in productive industry, subject to the present taxation laws. If he invests it in the 5½ tax-free security, his income or profit from his investment is definite; he gets 5½ per cent income. If he invests it in productive industry upon which he pays the present tax, he would have to make 7.01 per cent profit to realize the 5½ per cent after the tax is paid. If his investment is $50,000, he would have to make a profit of 8.71 per cent. If his investment is $100,000, he would have to make 14.02 per cent profit. If his investment is $200,000, he would have to make 17.42 per cent. If it is $500,000, he would have to make 22.11 per cent in order to realize his 5½ per cent after all tax is paid. If an investor wishes to invest $1,000,000 so as to realize 5½ per cent assured if invested in tax-free bonds, he would have to make 23.96 per cent profit.

Now, if a man with, say, $500,000 income has his choice to invest it in productive industry where labor is employed in a going concern, or in tax-exempt securities, where capital does not steadily employ labor, his choice would be determined by results. He could invest it in a 5½ per cent tax-free security and realize $28,750 profit on his investment. But if he invests it in a productive industry under the present tax laws he would have to make 22.11 per cent, or $110,500, to realize the $28,750 after all the taxes were paid. No one can doubt what a sane business man would do. He will not take the risk, for he will not make 22.11 per cent, or $110,500, to begin with. He will take the safe course and put it where he is safe, but, unfortunately, where the Government gets no tax; and he does precisely what any sane man would do, and it is perfectly silly to stand here and argue that he ought to invest it in productive industry and denounce him as unpatriotic because he takes the safe course. The tax is so high that it operates like prohibitive tariffs, by cutting off revenue.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a brief question?

Mr. FESS. No; I regret I can not yield.

My concern is to discourage the investment of the millions of money in tax-free securities upon which we collect no taxes, or at least to remove the compelling force which drives it to do so, and to divert them into the productive industries, every one of which will employ labor of the country, and then you have opened the way to prosperity, which in the end will increase the revenue. [Applause on the Republican side.]

That is precisely the trouble with these war taxes, and there will be no better times until we can find a way for capital to employ the labor of America that is now out of employment. [Applause on the Republican side.]

This bill goes a step further to relieve the burden. The committee fully realize the handicap of the country by the high cost of transportation. The rail problem is closely identified with the prosperity of the country. Rates of transportation are too high, yet there is no chance to reduce them so long as the operating expense is on the present high level. The roads are making an effort to reduce this high cost level. They have already reduced the employee force 400,000 and have inaugurated other economies which promise better service at less expense to the public. This is managerial rather than governmental. But Congress can reduce the cost of transportation by a repeal of the transportation tax, which is a saving to the public of about $300,000,000 annually. This bill proposes in the main to reduce taxes to the enormous amount of $700,000,000, or more than the total cost of all expenses of the Government in 1912—a decisive achievement in economy.

The assaults of our Democratic friends are not sincere. Their statements are without foundation. They daily proclaim we have taken the tax off the rich and placed it on the poor; that we have exempted the rich and burdened the poor. Of course, no one believes such statements, not even the authors. They are made in the baldest manner without a scintilla of fact to support them. The repeal of the excess-profits tax is primarily in the interest of the public. They injure the small corporation more than the large, as shown by the Treasury figures submitted by Chairman FORDNEY.

The lowering of the surtax is not primarily to relieve the rich, but to invite the development of industry, the basis of our prosperity, without which we will be nationally prostrated. Surtaxes are still maintained from 8 per cent to 32 per cent, graduated up to $66,000 income. No income above it escapes that tax, as the Democrats would have the public believe. The present law graduated the surtax up to 65 per cent as the maximum. This bill graduates it up to 32 per cent. Between 32 and 65 per cent the figures show a very small amount of revenue in 1920 as compared with 1918 and 1919, which shows that it has reached the height where the law defeats its purpose.

The statement that the bill removes the tax from the large and places it on the small incomes is equally untrue. The corporation income tax is a flat tax of 12½ per cent, applied to every corporation under this bill precisely as the 10 per cent corporation income tax applies under the present law.

The material relief in the bill is found in the exemption from income tax of $2,500 raised from $2,000 and applied to incomes not above $5,000. In this class of taxpayers we have the largest number. The bill is not complete, but it is a vast improvement over the present system. It also clarifies and simplifies the system so as to avoid interminable disputes. It recognizes fundamental principles of tax reform. It seeks productivity and equity. It has the virtue of certainty of taxation, economic administration, and convenience of taxpaying, all of which are violated by the present system. We earnestly desire to start the wheels of industry, to remove unemployment in our centers, to insure efficient production, and to fully utilize our elements of national prosperity, all of which await a rational liquidation of war conditions, in which this legislation is an important step. Republicans will be courageous enough to take hold of the problem, and do it in the face of this demagogic opposition, knowing that this opposition will resist on every hand our efforts to clean up the horrible mess of the last eight years.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. RAMSEYER].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. COLLIER. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to take this out of the time of the gentleman from Iowa, but I would like to ask the chairman how the time stands, with the gentleman's permission?

Mr. RAMSEYER. If it is not taken out of my time, I have no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] has consumed 7 hours and 22 minutes. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] has consumed 5 hours and 32 minutes. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. RAMSEYER] is recognized for 10 minutes.

PRESIDENT HARDING'S IDEAL OF WAR FINANCE.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Mr. Chairman, on May 14, 1917, when the first war revenue bill was under consideration on the floor of this House, I made a somewhat extended speech on the "Conscription of wealth." I repeat here a few sentences from that speech:

If we need soldiers, we go where the men are and conscript them. If we need money, we should pursue the same course—go where the dollars are and conscript them.

The men who will fight this war must come from those now living, so the funds to finance this war should be taken from the wealth now in existence. Property should be forced to sacrifice as well as men.

The property we will use and need in this war must come from our citizens. We can not get it from any other country. We can take that property and pay for it by taxation, or we can place the greater part of the financial burden, by bonds, on those who are not here to speak for themselves. The former course is the manly and patriotic course; the latter appeals to me as unmanly and cowardly.

The men who framed the war revenue bill of 1917 did not see fit to enact into law my views of what was right and just under the circumstances. Whether they failed to comprehend the principles then advocated or feared the Caesars of finance I shall not now undertake to say. A very able and distinguished leader has within the last six months announced to the world that the principles which a few sought to apply to the last war, as outlined in my speech, should be applied in case of a future war. That leader is none other than President Harding. In his inaugural address, referring to future wars, the President had the following to say about the proper and just way to finance war:

I can vision the ideal republic, where every man and woman is called under the flag for assignment to duty for whatever service, military or civil, the individual is best fitted; where we may call to universal service every plant, agency, or facility, all in the sublime sacrifice for country, and not one penny of war profit shall inure to the benefit of private individual, corporation, or combination, but all above the normal shall flow into the defense chest of the Nation. There is something inherently wrong, something out of accord with the ideals of representative democracy, when one portion of our citizenship turns its activities to private gain amid defensive war, while another is fighting, sacrificing, or dying for national preservation.

Then we should have little or no disorganization of our economic, industrial, and commercial systems at home, no staggering war debts, no swollen fortunes to flout the sacrifices of our soldiers, no excuse for sedition, no pitiable slackerism, no outrage of treason. Envy and jealousy would have no soil for their menacing development, and revolution would be without the passion which engenders.

Because Congress failed to enact into law for the last war the principles advocated by President Harding for a future war, we have now just what President Harding in his speech said should be avoided under his "ideal republic." We have "disorganization of our economic, industrial, and commercial systems at home"; we have "staggering war debts"; we have "swollen fortunes to flout the sacrifices of our soldiers"; and we have or have had, whether there be excuse for it or not, "sedition," "slackerism," and "treason."

The principles advocated by the President in his inaugural address are fundamental. The evils which followed the improper and reckless financing of the war must be rectified as soon as possible. The staggering war debt must be paid and revenues raised to meet the enlarged running expenses of the Government. The problems immediately before us are to devise equitable and just means to meet the expenditures of the Government and to pay off the national debt. It is now too late to regret that the President's ideal for future war was not placed into practical effect for the conduct of the last war. Let us hope, if unfortunately we should get into war again, that the President's ideal for the conduct of the next war will have more supporters than the advocates of the same ideal had during the last war.

IDEAL OF PEACE FINANCE.

There is, I hope, to be a long period of peace between the last war and the next war. The sooner we forget the blunders of the last war and settle down to tackle the peace-time problems in a sane, just, and sensible way the better it will be for us and for those who come after us. We need to raise some money—according to the Treasury Department, $4,500,000,000, which amount was reduced $500,000,000 one night last week. Frankly I think the Treasury's original estimate more accurate than the estimate we have before us now. How shall we raise the amount needed? It is evident that "The country does not expect and will not approve a shifting of burdens."

Income and profits taxes should not be so high as to stifle enterprise or discourage initiative. Laws should be so framed as to encourage men to invest their money, to accumulate property, and to amass wealth. The more property owners we have the happier will be our people and the safer will be the Nation. You make it possible for every family by industry to acquire a home, and there will be no end to the life of this Republic. This happy condition can not be brought about on the theory "that the poor should pay the taxes and the rich accumulate more money."

In passing I want to say one word about the inheritance tax or estate tax. I introduced a bill to more than double the present estate tax. I appeared before the Ways and Means Committee and had a courteous hearing. What happened to my bill I do not know. I am unable to find any trace of it in the bill now before the House. For those of you who are interested in the subject, I refer you to my statement in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of August 16. I placed that statement in the RECORD principally to inform Members of the House what countries like Great Britain and France were realizing from their estate tax laws, and bring before you and the country anew the arguments of Theodore Roosevelt and Andrew Carnegie on that subject. Taking into consideration that the national wealth of the United States is from three to five times greater than the national wealth of Great Britain, if we would impose the same rates on estates as they do in Great Britain, we would collect each year from $600,000,000 to $1,000,000,000. The arguments for such a tax are self-evident.

The Ways and Means Committee, which refused or neglected to report out my bill, is not going to offer any arguments against it. Their attitude is, "Let sleeping dogs lie." They know that an amendment to increase the estate tax would pass this House by an overwhelming vote, therefore they neither speak nor act. Furthermore, that committee will not act until it is forced to do so by a tidal wave of public opinion. Just as sure as I had White House support within four years after I advocated the conscription of wealth for war purposes, just so sure will I have White House support within the next four years for increased taxes on estates. If you gentlemen on the Ways and Means Committee desire to popularize this bill and make it more equitable, you will offer amendments, or permit the offering of amendments, to increase the tax on estates.

PAYMENT OF THE NATIONAL DEBT.

Mr. Chairman, there is another matter I desire to discuss, and that is relative to making the necessary provisions for the payment of the national debt by the generation that made it. There is a quiet but forceful movement—or, rather, conspiracy—on foot to refund our national debt into long-time securities running all the way from 50 to 100 years. This movement is backed by the men who would rather draw interest from the Government on tax-free securities than to contribute their just share to the payment of the national debt.

What I want to call your attention to now is this: I have prepared a concise statement on the law and the position of the Republican Party as announced in our last party platform upon the payment of the national debt. We hear it stated frequently here from Members on the floor of the House, and we see it in the public press, that the national debt is not to be paid off by this generation and that when our children will be great-grandfathers and great-grandmothers that debt will still be unpaid. I have looked up the law touching the payment of the national debt and read that carefully, and then I turned to the Republican platform adopted in 1920, together with the annotations upon that platform. I have prepared a concise statement along that line that I want to read to you, and if I misstate either the law or the Republican policy as declared in its platform I invite any gentleman present to rise and correct me.

I now call your attention to existing law on the payment of the national debt. The older Members here know, and the younger Members should know, that under existing law if honestly administered, and not repealed or nullified, the people of this country will be entirely relieved from the war debt in 25 years, provided foreign nations pay their interest regularly and ultimately the principal.

The way the law works is this: Our bonded indebtedness is in round numbers $20,000,000,000, and our floating indebtedness, in round numbers, is $3,000,000,000. Section 6 (a) of the Victory Liberty bond act of March 3, 1919, provides for a cumulative sinking fund to apply on the payment of the bonded indebtedness less what the foreign Governments owe us. The total bonded indebtedness of $20,000,000,000 less the $10,000,000,000 owed by the foreign Governments leaves the $10,000,000,000 covered by the sinking fund provided for in the act of March 3, 1919, and which according to the Government actuary estimate will be retired in 25 years. To pay the sum of $10,000,000,000 loaned to foreign Governments, section 3 of the first Liberty bond act of April 24, 1917, and section 3 of the second Liberty bond act of September 24, 1917, contain provisions for the application of repayments of loans to foreign Governments to the retirement of outstanding Liberty bonds. That is, the sinking fund plus the repayment by foreign Governments will retire the entire bonded indebtedness.

The policy of the Government as written in the acts referred to is just and wise and should be carried out to the letter. The men who fought under the flag during the war have discharged their obligations to the country. The wealth of the Nation must bravely face its obligations by discharging the debts created in carrying on the late war. [Applause.]

But, my goodness, cry those who advocate the saddling of the national debt on generations yet unborn. We taxed our people heavily during the war while other nations financed themselves much less by taxes and more by borrowing. That is true. That is why we are solvent and other nations are "busted"; and the more they depended on bonds and the less on taxes, the more "busted" they are. The more bravely a nation faces its war obligations and the sooner it discharges them, the sooner will that nation return to normalcy and prosperity.

THE REPUBLICAN PLATFORM ON PAYMENT OF NATIONAL DEBT.

Republicans who advocate refunding the national debt into long-time securities are heedless of the party pledges to the voters during the last campaign. The Republicans in their national platform in regard to the floating indebtedness made this declaration:

The next Republican administration will inherit from its Democratic predecessor a floating indebtedness of over $3,000,000,000, the prompt liquidation of which is demanded by sound financial considerations.

I call your attention to the words "prompt liquidation." The sense in which "liquidation" is used in this party declaration can have no other meaning except that of "payment." Sound financial considerations dictate that the floating indebtedness should be paid off by 1923.

Let me read you another party pledge in the Republican platform of 1920:

Moreover, the whole fiscal policy of the Government must be deeply influenced by the necessity of meeting obligations in excess of $5,000,000,000, which mature in 1923.

I read this from the Republican Campaign Textbook of 1920, on page 141. The annotator of the platform—who the gentleman was I do not know, but evidently one who was chosen by the party leaders to give the voters the proper interpretation of the platform—has this to say:

To the largest possible extent these obligations should be finally paid and not refunded at maturity. The refunding of a debt of $5,000,000,000 in time of peace, without the stimulus of war patriotism and without the help of the gigantic organization which placed and distributed the Liberty loans, is at best a difficult and might prove an impossible undertaking.

Gentlemen on the floor of this House speak of refunding both the floating indebtedness and the indebtedness which matures in 1923. By whose authority do they speak? They do not speak by the authority of the Republican Party platform of 1920, and they do not stand on that platform. They openly and willfully repudiate the pledges made by the Republican Party to the voters of the country. The annotator of the Republican platform on page 141 of the Textbook further states:

The best preparation for the grave task which will confront the Treasury in 1923 is a preceding record of debt extinguishment, ample provision for a sinking fund, and the assurance of current receipts sufficient to meet current expenditures.

Right here let me tell you that I am frankly of the opinion that the bill reported by the Ways and Means Committee will not do that.

Mr. GERNERD. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. RAMSEYER. Certainly.

Mr. GERNERD. Does not the gentleman realize that the present administration is taking care of the sinking fund under that very provision?

Mr. RAMSEYER. I have referred to the sinking fund.

Mr. GERNERD. I would almost infer that the Republican Party, according to the gentleman's statement, was not carrying that out.

Mr. RAMSEYER. No; I am not charging that the Republican Party is recreant. The gentleman misunderstood me entirely. I am simply answering statements that have been made on the floor of the House, from which statements one would infer that the Republican Party had declared against the retirement of the public debt.

Mr. GERNERD. According to Secretary Mellon's statement I find that there is a sinking fund already provided of $245,000,000.

Mr. RAMSEYER. That sinking fund will take care of the $10,000,000,000 I referred to a few moments ago, and, according to the actuary's statement, will retire that $10,000,000,000 in 25 years; but what the Republican platform is speaking about here is the $3,000,000,000 of floating indebtedness and the $5,000,000,000 of Victory bond indebtedness which becomes due in 1923, and which the annotator says should have "a preceding record of debt extinguishment and ample provision for a sinking fund" for this particular part that the annotator was speaking of, to wit, the floating indebtedness and the indebtedness which comes due in 1923. I am not finding fault with the Republican platform or what the annotator says about it. I stand squarely on that; but I do find fault with the remarks of gentlemen who are in conflict with the Republican platform and the annotations which were authoritatively made on that platform.

The Secretary of the Treasury, with all the advice of skilled experts, estimated on April 30 last that the expenditures for this fiscal year would be over $4,500,000,000. He stuck by these figures against protests by Members of this House until a few days ago, when he reduced his estimates over night by over $500,000,000. The Secretary in his letter to Chairman FORNEY, April 30, 1921, spoke of reducing the short-dated debt by nearly a billion dollars within the next two years. That, of course, would be in addition to the reduction of the bonded debt for which a sinking fund has been provided. I usually have a high regard for the figures emanating from the Treasury Department, but the revised figures of that department as disclosed in the statement of August 10 are in my opinion not based on reliable data, and the recommendation to reduce the expenditures by reducing the public-debt expenditure by $170,000,000 is wholly indefensible. It is an undertaking to shift the debt, which we created and which we ought to pay and which the Republican platform pledged the country we would pay, onto the backs of our children who are not old enough to comprehend and to protest.

I am in sympathy with every effort of the administration and of Congress to reduce the national expenditures, but I wish to impress upon you with all candor and with all the force at my command that it is wiser to collect a little more than the Treasury will need than to collect a little less. To make inadequate provision for the payment of the national debt according to the policy that Congress enacted into law and according to the pledge that we Republicans made to the country last year is simply a concession to those individuals and interests who want to put off the payment of the national debt for 50 or 100 years.

Since my service in Congress I have compared and studied estimates of expenditures and actual expenditures made by both Treasury officials and Members of Congress. I have already stated that I usually have a high regard for Treasury estimates. I have the highest regard for Members of Congress, but I realize that in making estimates Members of Congress are actuated by somewhat different impulses than are Treasury officials, and there is always danger that Members of Congress get their facts and hopes on estimates of public expenditures somewhat mixed.

To illustrate my point, last June a year ago Members of this House estimated the expenditures for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, to be $4,373,395,279.07. The amount actually expended was $5,605,024,861. The amount actually spent by this Government during that fiscal year, 1921, is 25 per cent more than was estimated by the distinguished Members of this House during June, 1920. Unless the estimates for this fiscal year are based on more accurate data than the estimates of a little over a year ago, and if this bill is not amended in the Senate, our Treasury Department will be on the rocks before June 30, 1922.

Since my service in Congress the estimates of expenditures have never come anywhere near the actual expenditures of a year later. Yes; I know you will say that it is the overhang of the war that makes this uncertainty. For a number of years I have taken considerable interest in reading the annual financial statement of the British secretary of the exchequer. Comparing the British exchequer estimates of expenditures a year ago with the actual expenditures a year later, I find the difference between estimates and actual expenditures is just 1.5 per cent.

I hope with our new budget system that in the future we can come nearer making the estimates and actual expenditures tally. Surely, if in Great Britain their treasury and parliamentary experts can, with all the uncertainties incident to the aftermath of the war, make their estimates a year in advance of the expenditures come within 1.5 per cent of the actual expenditures, it occurs to me that the Treasury and parliamentary experts of our Government can come nearer making the estimates hit the mark of actual expenditures than they have in the past.

Wisdom dictates that we budget for a surplus at the end of this fiscal year rather than a deficit in the Public Treasury. I hope that the bill before us will do this before it becomes a law. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I offer for printing in the RECORD as a part of my remarks a letter from the Treasury Department, dated August 10, 1921, section 3 of the first Liberty bond act, approved April 24, 1917, section 3 of the second Liberty bond act, approved September 24, 1917, and section 6(a) of the Victory Liberty bond act, approved March 3, 1919:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
COMMISSIONER OF THE PUBLIC DEBT,
Washington, August 10, 1921.

Hon. C. WILLIAM RAMSEYER,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: Answering your letter of August 9, and your personal call at the department this morning, the following information is furnished:

The law establishing the cumulative sinking fund is contained in section 6(a) of the Victory Liberty loan act, approved March 3, 1919. An explanation of the operation of the fund appears on pages 113 and 114 of the Secretary's report for the fiscal year 1920. The Government actuary estimates that through the operation of the cumulative sinking fund the debt covered by the sinking fund will be retired in 25 years.

It should be noted that the sinking fund computation is based on the amount of Liberty bonds and Victory notes outstanding July 1, 1921, less the par amount of obligations of foreign Governments purchased under the several Liberty loan acts and held by the United States on July 1, 1920. To cover this latter sum section 3 of the first Liberty bond act, approved April 24, 1917, and section 3 of the second Liberty bond act, approved September 24, 1917, contain provisions for the application of repayments of loans to foreign Governments to the retirement of outstanding Liberty bonds.

Copies of the acts above referred to and of the Secretary's report for 1920 are inclosed for your information. I am also inclosing copies of the hearings before the Committee on Ways and Means, House of Representatives, and before the Senate Committee on Finance at the time the Victory Liberty loan bill was under consideration, your attention being invited to pages 14, 27, 57-9 of the former and to page 21 of the latter for references to the sinking fund.

Very truly, yours,

WM. S. BROUGHTON,
Commissioner.

FIRST LIBERTY BOND ACT, APPROVED APRIL 24, 1917.

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of the Treasury, under such terms and conditions as he may prescribe, is hereby authorized to receive on or before maturity payment for any obligations of such foreign Governments purchased on behalf of the United States, and to sell at not less than the purchase price any of such obligations and to apply the proceeds thereof and any payments made by foreign Governments on account of their said obligations to the redemption or purchase at not more than par and accrued interest of any bonds of the United States issued under authority of this act; and if such bonds are not available for this purpose the Secretary of the Treasury shall redeem or purchase any other outstanding interest-bearing obligations of the United States which may at such time be subject to call or which may be purchased at not more than par and accrued interest.

SECOND LIBERTY BOND ACT, APPROVED SEPTEMBER 24, 1917.

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized, from time to time, to exercise in respect to any obligations of foreign Governments acquired under authority of this act or of said act approved April 24, 1917, any privilege of conversion into obligations bearing interest at a higher rate provided for in or pursuant to this act or said act approved April 24, 1917, and to convert any short-time obligations of foreign Governments which may have been purchased under the authority of this act or of said act approved April 24, 1917, into long-time obligations of such foreign Governments, respectively, maturing not later than the bonds of the United States then last issued under the authority of this act or of said act approved April 24, 1917, as the case may be, and in such form and terms as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe; but the rate or rates of interest borne by any such long-time obligations at the time of their acquisition shall not be less than the rate borne by the short-time obligations so converted into such long-time obligations; and, under such terms and conditions as he may from time to time prescribe, to receive payment, on or before maturity, of any obligations of such foreign Governments acquired on behalf of the United States under authority of this act or of said act approved April 24, 1917, and, with the approval of the President, to sell any of such obligations (but not at less than the purchase price, with accrued interest, unless otherwise hereafter provided by law), and to apply the proceeds thereof, and any payments so received from foreign Governments on account of the principal of their said obligations, to the redemption or purchase, at not more than par and accrued interest, of any bonds of the United States issued under authority of this act or of said act approved April 24, 1917; and if such bonds can not be so redeemed or purchased the Secretary of the Treasury shall redeem or purchase any other outstanding interest-bearing obligations of the United States which may at such time be subject to redemption or which can be purchased at not more than par and accrued interest.

VICTORY LIBERTY BOND ACT, APPROVED MARCH 3, 1919.

SEC. 6. (a) That there is hereby created in the Treasury a cumulative sinking fund for the retirement of bonds and notes issued under the first Liberty bond act, the second Liberty bond act, the third Liberty bond act, the fourth Liberty bond act, or under this act, and outstanding on July 1, 1920. The sinking fund and all additions thereto are hereby appropriated for the payment of such bonds and notes at maturity, or for the redemption or purchase thereof before maturity by the Secretary of the Treasury at such prices and upon such terms and conditions as he shall prescribe, and shall be available until all such bonds and notes are retired. The average cost of the bonds and notes purchased shall not exceed par and accrued interest. Bonds and notes purchased, redeemed, or paid out of the sinking fund shall be canceled and retired and shall not be reissued. For the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1920, and for each fiscal year thereafter, until all such bonds and notes are retired there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purposes of such sinking fund, an amount equal to the sum of (1) 2½ per cent of the aggregate amount of such bonds and notes outstanding on July 1, 1920, less an amount equal to the par amount of any obligations of foreign Governments held by the United States on July 1, 1920, and (2) the interest which would have been payable during the fiscal year for which the appropriation is made on the bonds and notes purchased, redeemed, or paid out of the sinking fund during such year or in previous years.

The Secretary of the Treasury shall submit to Congress at the beginning of each regular session a separate annual report of the action taken under the authority contained in this section.

Mr. TAGUE. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LANKFORD].

Mr. LANKFORD. Mr. Chairman, I had not intended to speak upon this bill. It has been prepared by the Republican members of the Committee on Ways and Means, without the assistance of the Democratic members of that committee, and brought in here under a rule passed by the Republicans, over the protest of the Democrats, the effect of which rule will be to prevent any amendments being offered by the Democrats. This is certainly not right. This deprives the country of any constructive ideas the Democrats may have about the legislation now about to pass.

After reading the bill carefully I decided to discuss one feature of the bill only. There are many other features that I do not approve and yet there are some features in the bill that are good. I shall vote against the bill, believing that it contains more vicious matter than good. But I shall not let the debate proceed further without entering a protest to one provision of the measure.

Democrats and Republicans alike all over this country have pledged to the people the repeal of the tax on soft drinks—that is to say, on soda water, coco cola, ice creams, and so on. This bill pretends to repeal this tax and yet there is a provision in the bill putting a tax on all vendors of cool drinks which will put many cool-drink establishments in the country districts out of business and will force many of those who stay in business to charge as much for cool drinks as have been charged heretofore, and the people who are expecting to be relieved of the tax on cool drinks will be disappointed. There is also a provision calling for a straight tax on sirups used in the manufacture of cool drinks. This will of necessity be paid eventually by the small dealer or by the consuming public. I venture the assertion that if this bill passes in its present form there will be no reduction in the price of cool drinks and ice creams. How long is Congress to fool the people about this proposition? Long before last election, because of the great clamor for the repeal of the soda-water tax, the House of Representatives passed, by an almost unanimous vote, a bill to repeal this tax. The country was informed that the law would be promptly enacted. The bill went over to the Senate, but never reached the President, and since that time has slept the sleep that knows no awakening. Why did not that bill pass? The Republicans were in the majority in both Houses and are to blame for its failure to pass, and my friends on the Republican side will be to blame when this bill passes and gives no relief to the boys and girls and people who patronize the cool-drink stands.

This bill will make very little impression on the country in many respects except that it will shift the burden of taxation from the shoulders of those more able to pay to those less able to pay. In its present form it will be a deception to the hundreds of people who want the tax taken from soft drinks. It will be very much like the case of the old Negro who had caught the possum and baked him together with the necessary sweet potatoes and then fell asleep while thinking of the sweetness of the "possum and taters." Another Negro came along and taking in the situation ate the "possum and taters," and put the bones and potato peels at the feet of the sleeping darkey after having greased his lips and fingers. The old darkey awoke and observing the possum bones and potato peels near by and the grease upon his lips and fingers remarked, "I may have ate that possum but if I did it made the least impression on my constitution of any possum I ever ate." [Applause.]

Thus it will be with this bill. It will make the least impression upon the 6 cents the little boys and girls spend for ice cream that was ever made by any bill.

Mr. Chairman, the question of taxation is a very important one, and the tax upon cool drinks and cool-drink establishments is one of the small items in this bill. But the policy of the Republican Party, as evidenced in this matter, establishes their theory of deception, as shown through the bill. There has been a faithful promise made to relieve these taxes which has not been kept, in fact. In other words, the bill purports to repeal a tax which is not repealed. When you gentlemen go back to your districts next summer and meet your people they will ask you why did not you repeal the soda-water tax as you promised. You may tell them that you did, and they will say, "Yes; but the man who sells cool drinks to us charges the same amount as before." You may see the cool-drink man, then, about the matter. He will explain to you just as I am now doing that while you took off the tax of each drink you placed other taxes which must eventually be paid by the consumer.

Gentlemen, I hope that some Republican will offer an amendment to strike out these objectionable features, so that there will not be the $10 tax left on the vendors of cool drinks and so that the tax on sirups used in the manufacture of cool drinks will be repealed. I object to the tax on cool drinks because it is a tax on refreshments which the children buy and which the common people buy, and if we can not get legislation to relieve taxes which must be paid by children, then how are we to except legislation to relieve the burdens of the grown-ups? If you leave this tax to be paid by the children of the country and by those who buy cool drinks, the children of the country will rise up and accuse you of being untrue to them. And of the next election it may be truthfully prophesied that "A little child shall lead them" that shall vote to overthrow you. [Applause.]

Mr. TAGUE. I yield one minute to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER].

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, all through the campaign, from every stump in the country last fall we heard the statement that the Democrats were in the majority during the war Congress, and a few moments ago when I interrupted him the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Fess], with his usual assumption of dictum, said, "I would have the gentleman understand that the Democrats were always in the majority at that time." I have just gotten from the library the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for January, 1918, the only one available for the moment, and I find that on that date this House was composed of 208 Democrats, 213 Republicans, and 14 independents and vacancies.

Mr. TAGUE. I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES].

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, this is not a bill to raise revenue; this is a bill to create a deficit. There is not a member of the Ways and Means Committee familiar at all with the subject who does not know that my statement is true. I am satisfied that the membership of the House generally does not know it. But the men who framed this bill know that in doing so they failed to provide the revenue with which to run this Government for this fiscal year, and by circumstantial evidence I can prove that deliberately they are creating a deficit during the fiscal year.

On July 19 the Director of the Bureau of the Budget wrote the President of the United States a letter, in which he claimed that from the appropriations made and the unexpended balances available for this year he would save $112,000,000. Last week I analyzed that statement and showed how absurd it was. And in the face of that, this report calls attention to an agreement arrived at at the White House between the Ways and Means Committee and the President by which they said they would reduce expenditures available for this year in the sum not of $112,000,000, but of $350,000,000.

This afternoon the gentleman from New York [Mr. COCKRAN] stated this was impossible. Two gentlemen on this side questioned the accuracy of his statement. Why, they said, the administration said they would reduce the appropriation $350,000,000. There is not a man on the Appropriation Committee who will dare to say that he believes that it is possible at all. They set forth in this report how they will save $350,000,000. I hope the membership of the House will look at it. They say they will save in the War Department $50,000,000. That is an absurdity on its face. The Director of the Budget said he would save $15,000,000 in the War Department, and he could do that, but this committee says they will reduce the amount appropriated by $50,000,000.

In the Navy Department they say they will reduce the expenditures $100,000,000. I made diligent inquiry into it. The officials of the Navy Department do not know where they can save more than $10,000,000. There is no bureau official of the Navy Department who will dare to say that they can save $100,000,000. I talked with many men who were before the subcommittee having charge of naval appropriations, and not one of them says that they can save $100,000,000. I heard it said that they could save $40,000,000 out of the sum appropriated to build destroyers. I inquired of Admiral Taylor, head of the Bureau of Construction and Repairs, and he said that all of that money except $10,000,000 was obligated. There is not a dollar that could be saved over and above the $10,000,000. And yet the majority of the Ways and Means Committee are trying to fool the people of the country by saying that they will save $100,000,000.

Now, of the Shipping Board they say that they will save $100,000,000 out of the expenditures estimated by the Secretary of the Treasury August 4. He estimated $200,000,000.

In a deficiency bill in March, 1921, you gave them $25,000,000 for the construction of ships, and by another deficiency bill a week ago you gave them $48,500,000, which was only expected to run them six months. In other words, you are giving them $75,000,000 and informing them that they are expected to come back in December, that this was only to carry them six months. In the face of that you come in here and tell Congress and the country that you are going to save $100,000,000 from the Shipping Board funds. Save it, how? From an organization which, according to the Bureau of Efficiency in a statement sent me this morning, has more employees to-day than they had on January 1 of this year; an organization in which three men are drawing $90,000 a year; an organization paying $9,500 a year to a man whose duty, according to the testimony, is to tell them when the Merchant Marine Committees of the House and the Senate meet. It is impossible to save $100,000,000 in a year from the Shipping Board funds.

Now they say that they will save from the Department of Agriculture $25,000,000. Think of it. The total appropriation for the Department of Agriculture is $33,000,000, and if they save $25,000,000 they will bankrupt the department and they will have to go out of business. I heard a rumor that they were going to save it from the funds of Federal aid for roads. I asked the Director of the Office of Public Roads and he said that every dollar had been allotted to the States in September, 1920, and he can not withdraw a dollar, and yet they are trying to deceive the people of the country by saying that they are going to save $25,000,000 from the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. Why is my friend feeling so badly about it? Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Because I hate to see them trying to fool the people. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I think that it is the duty of the party in power to the people not to try and deceive them with such political bunk as you are trying to deceive them with here. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

You promised to reduce expenses and did not do it, and now you say you are going to reduce $350,000,000, when you know you can not do it. You make this claim because you know there is going to be a deficit by April 1 of this fiscal year, and when there is a deficit we will have to issue bonds. You will violate your duty under the Constitution to provide revenue. You do it to fool the people, believing that they will never know you are going to issue bonds. You think you can get away with it, but the bill discloses the truth. Turn to page 82 and you will find that knowing you would have to issue bonds in time of peace, you have authorized the Secretary of the Treasury to increase the amount of bonds from $7,000,000,000 to $7,500,000,000 to pay the authorized expenditures of this fiscal year. [Applause on the Democratic side.] If you did not intend to do it, why do you make this authorization at this time? Because you know that you are not providing sufficient revenue, and then when you issue certificates you will depreciate the value of the Liberty bonds of the people of the country, and when these bonds are depreciated below the price they are at now, you think they will not know the cause, but I have confidence in the minority side of the House and believe they will inform the people. You fooled them once last fall, but you can not do it again. You tell us in this report that you are reducing by some $450,000,000 the amount paid by the rich people of this country in excess profits and in surtaxes. You are doing that. Instead of giving them a tax receipt for it, you are going to sell them $500,000,000 worth of certificates, and you are going to give these men of wealth $500,000,000 worth of securities instead of $500,000,000 worth of tax receipts.

Mr. MONDELL. Why should the gentleman from South Carolina feel so funeral about it?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Because the people of this country whose incomes are in excess of $65,000 a year should pay that money into the Treasury, instead of your relieving them of one-half of their taxes, so that instead of paying the taxes and getting a tax receipt they can purchase bonds of the United States paying them interest. That is the reason, and it is a sufficient reason. My friend thinks he can fool the people all of the time. He tells them that he is reducing the taxes. He does take $642,000 off Mr. Rockefeller and off the Secretary of the Treasury I have no doubt, for I assume that he comes within that class, but I feel that way about it because while you save that amount of money for them and for J. Pierpont Morgan by this bill you are levying a 5 per cent tax on every kid who buys a baseball or a baseball bat. When you take $600,000 off Mr. Mellon or Mr. Rockefeller, you are levying a 5 per cent tax upon the patent medicine which may be purchased by a poor man to save his very life in the rural sections of the country. When I mentioned this medicine tax this afternoon to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH], he said, "That is a little thing," and he was not interested in it. No; he is not interested in it, and the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] may not be interested in it, but the man whose income is not over $100 a month, who can not afford to send for a doctor who would charge him $4 a visit when he lives some distance from the town, out in the West or the South or the Northwest, is interested in it. It is a big thing when you go to his home and tell him that his medicine costs him more. You should say to him, "All right, old fellow, don't you worry, for I have struck $642,000 off Mr. Morgan's taxes for this year." When some kid wants to buy a baseball for a dollar that his uncle or some one has given him, and goes to a sporting goods store—

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. No.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Of course not, when the gentleman makes a statement of that kind—

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The trouble is that the facts that I am stating are getting under the gentleman's shirt, and that is the only way to reach his brain.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. When the gentleman states facts, all right, but he ought not to stand up there and romance.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. You can tell the laboring man who is working on a per diem basis when the doctor goes to see him and tells him the medicine costs him more not to pay any attention to it, for you have reduced the tax on golf balls. That will help him. You might tell him that you have taken the tax off electric fans, when he is freezing to death, being unable to buy coal this winter because of your transportation charges.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. When did we reduce the taxes on golf balls?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. You now propose to reduce the tax on golf balls in this bill.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman just spoke about the taxes on sporting goods, because he was feeling so sorry for the boy who had to buy a baseball.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has expired.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Will the gentleman give me two minutes more?

Mr. TAGUE. I yield two minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The gentleman from Wyoming has not read the bill; if he had, he would know that the tax on sporting goods was 10 per cent and that you have reduced it to 5 per cent.

You did this. You reduced the taxes on Mr. Mellon and Mr. Rockefeller $500,000 and $600,000 and you levy a tax on medicines, you levy a tax on soft drinks and levy a tax upon candy, you levy a tax upon moving pictures, you levy a tax upon many articles that are used by the people. You do not reduce the tax on incomes from $5,000 to $66,000. You take all off the rich people of this country who contributed to your campaign last fall. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman yield? I would like to ask him a question.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I yield.

Mr. WINGO. Under the bill they increased the amount exempted from taxation by a provision which makes it possible for a man to invest his fortune in foreign securities and foreign properties. The gentleman understands the provision I refer to?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I do.

Mr. WINGO. Has the gentleman made any estimate as to how much that is worth a year to "Herb" Hoover?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. No. But if he has any such investments I have no doubt it is worth considerable to him. There never was any doubt in my mind of what was going to be the result of this situation. I know it was worth a great deal to the Republican Party to win the last election, as long as they have the internal revenue offices and other offices in this country.

Mr. COLLIER. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TAGUE].

Mr. TAGUE. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I have listened very attentively to every speech that has been made on this floor since this debate began, and as a member of the Ways and Means Committee—I say Ways and Means Committee, although neither myself nor any minority member of the committee has ever been permitted to take part in the activities of that committee in the framing of this bill—I believe this bill is not in keeping with the promises that have been made to the people of this country by the Republican Party.

There seems to be a difference of opinion, and I suppose there always will be, on the matter of taxation. It is one question that almost any two or three men in any gathering will disagree upon. Mr. Chairman, I listened to our chairman [Mr. FORDNEY], whom we all respect and admire, as he delivered his speech yesterday, in which he paid a fitting tribute to our boys who went across, and alluded to his own fine son who we are all so glad came back home to him, and he told of the great service that the boys had rendered to the country. I wondered then how any Member of this House, after listening to him reading this bill, knowing of the great profits that have been made by those who were pilfering and robbing the people and making large profits while your boy and the other boys were on the other side fighting for the country, fighting for the men who were robbing them, could vote to take from the shoulders of these profiteers, not a burden unequally distributed but a just tax, which they now seek to avoid and which falls on the poor people of the country.

The taxes of the country should be so distributed that they shall be borne by those best able to pay them. This bill does not do that, but, instead, takes the burden off the rich and places it upon the poor people. I believe the time has not come when, having conscripted the young men and after having taken from the fathers and mothers of this land their sons and sent them across the sea, and after they had sacrificed their lives for the protection of this country, and after these mothers had given up their all—that the time has not yet come when we should say to these profiteers—say to these men who nobody will deny have been robbing the people right and left—that the time has come to relieve them of their just burden of taxation. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I differ with the majority membership of the Committee on Ways and Means in the matter of distributing taxation. I do not believe that we should begin at the top, with the man of wealth, and then go to the bottom. The gentleman from California [Mr. BARBOUR] has been trying all day and yesterday to get some one on the committee to tell him why they have not equally distributed the burden of debt so that the $5,000 man should receive the same consideration given to the $10,000,000 man, and no one has answered him. They told you that they had relieved the married men by increasing their exemption to $2,500; that they had allowed him $400 for every child. Whom would you relieve if it were not the fathers and mothers of the country who are raising the children who are to be the future men and women of our country? What great privilege have you given them when you give them only $500 more exemption and $200 more exemption for the upkeep of their children? I believe this should be entirely eliminated, and no man of family should be taxed who earns less than $5,000. Why, you pay $400 a year for the keeping of a horse. Yet you say you are paying tribute to these people. I believe in beginning where the debt weighs the heaviest—on the common people, and relieve them first. I would relieve the unjust taxation directly from the shoulders of the common people of the country. I would take off the profits from their clothing and the jewelry and the soda water that you have taken off, but I would not leave there a tax of 5 cents on the carbonic acid gas that goes to the making of the soda water; neither would I add a tax on the fruit sirups that go to make up the glass of soda water. I would take all these taxes off before I would start to take off the excess-profits tax on the great profits that have been accumulated and made by these great multimillionaires of the country.

I take issue with the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Fess] when he says that these men should not be condemned. They should be condemned for their selfish un-Americanism. In the speeches that have been made on this floor I believe the greatest condemnation has been made of some men of wealth that has ever been made on any floor of any tribunal in the history of the world. It is a just condemnation. Think of it—tax-exempt securities of sixteen billion and the country struggling under this terrible debt! What are you going to say to your farmers out in Kansas and other parts of the country when you tell them that the men on Wall Street in New York have taken their money out of the industries of the country and placed it in tax-exempt securities?

Only a few days ago you were pleading here for assistance to the farmers of the country and wanting the Government to raise money in order that they may carry on their enterprises. Are you going to get it from the men who put their money in tax-exempt securities? Think of it—$16,000,000,000! An increase of $13,000,000,000 in three years. The most cowardly thing that could be done, when they know that this country is struggling under the most gigantic debt that any country has ever been called upon to meet. And no men in the country profited more or to a greater degree than did these selfish un-American capitalists who are now putting their money into tax-exempt securities, trying to evade their duty to their country.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAGUE. Yes.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. These men made $38,000,000,000 of profit during the war. There are only $16,000,000,000 of these tax-exempt securities, and so they have got $22,000,000,000 left, and they can not put that into these securities, because there are not securities to put them into.

Mr. TAGUE. The gentleman is correct. Surely it should not be necessary in a great, free country like this that we should sit here idle, as Members of this Congress, representing the people from all parts of the country, and have it said that a few hundred capitalists can snap their fingers in the faces of the American people and say to them, "Unless you come to our way of thinking and bargaining, we refuse to do our duty as Americans."

Where is their patriotism? Shame on them if they have any shame. I saw these men as the boys were marching away; I saw these men as they stood on the sidewalk, and they waved the boys good-by. Their great capital was at stake then and they were willing to promise the boys anything as these good boys went away, and 70,000 of them now lie dead in France, never to return. What are you going to say to the mothers of those boys? Have they paid their debt? They paid their debt, and it is our duty to see to it that these profiteers who robbed the mothers and fathers of the land while their boys were lying dead in France pay their debt also. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

It is not my intention to take up the time of the committee in discussing this bill, for it has been very carefully covered by the ranking member of the minority, who has so successfully disclosed the injustice of it. He has clearly shown how it is an attempt to relieve the rich and to injure the poor, and no one has yet successfully denied his claim.

Your attempted criticism of the position taken by the minority members in the report that has been filed is in keeping with your effort to deceive the people, and, as usual, you are in error.

The report is an expression of the views of every member of the minority, and your attempt to find fault with the report shows clearly that it disturbs you very much.

You do not attempt to answer this report, but you try to dispose of it by saying that it is the view of only one man, our leader [Mr. KIRCHIN], but when the vote of the House is taken it will show that the Democrats are a solid unit with him and the rest of the committee.

You can not answer that report, for you know that it is true, and when read by the people of the country it will receive the approval of every man and woman who believes in a just and fair distribution of the country's taxes.

Where in this bill have you shown an equal and fair distribution of the taxes? True, you have taken off some of the taxes because the people have demanded that you should, and as far as you have gone in this direction we agree with you, but you have not gone as far as you should.

True, you have some good sections in the bill, but you have spoiled this good by doubling the relief to the rich who have doubled their fortunes during the late war at the expense of the boys of the country who were giving up their lives for their country.

You can not deceive the people by this method.

I do not contend that we should punish the rich because they are rich, but I do not believe that they should be the chosen people to receive relief until some reduction of the debt of the country is made.

The action of this committee in doing this is a great injustice to the people who have done their duty to their country by giving their sons, by making great sacrifices in helping to win the war, while these rich men were living in luxury watching their immense fortunes grow larger while the majority of the people grew poorer.

Your action in repealing the excess-profits tax is one of the glaring injustices that you have done to the small corporations of the country when you cut the taxes of the large, water-soaked corporation and increase every corporation making less than $66,000 per year. You can not answer to the country why you have done this and show that it is fair.

Your answer for reduction of the higher surtaxes, that they should be repealed because the men who have this wealth have taken their money out of the active industries of the country and placed it in tax-exempt securities, is a surrender to the man who believes that he and his wealth are of more importance than is the country that has given him the opportunity to make these fortunes, and has given him protection while he has been doing so.

It is an open defiance of the rights of the people, and is a protection of the classes at the expense of the masses.

The report of the minority clearly points out the injustice of your bill and gives the figures to prove our contention.

I intend to quote some of these figures in my speech, for they are the figures given by the experts of the Treasury and can not be denied, and your inability to deny them should be the grounds upon which this bill should be defeated and a new bill drawn which meets the wishes of the people for a fair and just revision of the taxes of the country.

The proposed scheme in the Republican tax program of repealing the excess-profits tax and substituting therefor a flat 12½ per cent tax has for its purpose and will result in relieving about 2,000 of the big profiteering corporations making 15, 20, 30, 40, and 50 per cent, and over, of at least $500,000,000 and putting this amount on the small and weak corporations making not over 8 or 10 per cent on invested capital, numbering over 100,000; the purpose and result will be to make the burdens of those most able to bear them lighter and the burdens of those least able to bear them heavier, which is violative of every fundamental principle of the Democratic Party.

An analysis of the statistics contained in the detailed report as to corporation incomes and income and excess-profits taxes in the report of the commissioner for the calendar years 1917 and 1918—the 1918 report being the first and only one containing the details of corporate income and income and excess-profits taxes arranged in classes according to the amount of profits each class made—shows that 180 corporations making annually from $5,000,000 up to $300,000,000 and over (the steel corporation made over $500,000,000 net profit in 1918) had a net income of $2,554,000,000, and while paying only $203,000,000 income tax paid $848,000,000 excess-profits taxes, while the over 300,000 corporations making from nothing up to $100,000 net income yearly paid only $285,000,000 excess-profits taxes.

One thousand and twenty-six corporations, with a net income of $4,255,000,000, more than one-half of the total corporate net income of all the 317,559 corporations, while paying only $333,000,000 income tax, paid $1,422,000,000 of excess-profits tax; that is, paid over one-half, or nearly two-thirds, of the entire excess-profits tax, and $344,000,000 excess-profits tax more than the remaining 316,500 other corporations. At a glance one will see that the proposed proposition is one to relieve a few hundred of the biggest profiteering corporations in the United States, and not, as Secretary Mellon says, to unclog business. It also shows the small amount of income tax paid in proportion to the excess-profits tax paid. It further shows the conscienceless and exorbitant profits on invested capital they made, from 20 to over 50 per cent on the capital invested.

Of course, the excess-profits tax will not be as much hereafter as in 1917, 1918, and 1919, but the proportion between these big rapacious profiteering corporations and the balance of the corporations will remain the same and, in fact, will be more in favor of the big corporations, for the reason that these corporations have a monopoly and can at will fix and keep up their prices. The 9,634 corporations making $250,000 yearly profits and over paid in excess-profits taxes $2,217,000,000, over five times as much as they paid in income taxes and about seven-eighths of the entire excess-profits taxes. The repeal of the excess-profits tax will relieve these few corporations of hundreds of millions of taxes wrung from the people by conscienceless profiteering, but will not relieve the more than 300,000 other smaller and weaker corporations as the Republicans would seem to think.

One will see at once that the more than 300,000 other corporations will derive but little or no benefit from the excess-profits tax repeal, and the Government will be deprived of hundreds of millions of dollars—not four hundred and fifty millions or less, estimated by the guessers at the Treasury Department, but much more than $600,000,000 annually, which the Government will sorely need.

An analysis of the returns as detailed in the reports of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue since January 1, 1916, up to and including the present commissioner's report of July 12, 1921, will show that corporations in the United States made net profits from January 1, 1921, in round numbers $50,000,000,000—to be more exact, $47,000,000,000. After deducting all the taxes they paid since January 1, 1916, income, excess-profits tax, and other war taxes, they have a clear profit left of $38,000,000,000, more than four-fifths of which was made by less than 10,000 corporations and more than half of which was made by 1,026 of the big profiteering corporations, which includes the Steel Trust, the Bethlehem Steel Co., the Du Pont companies, the various Standard Oil companies, the coal combine, the Woolen Trust, the meat packers, and so forth. Let every Democrat and Republican bear in mind always that these same corporations were filling their coffers with these fabulous billions for the profits of their stockholders while our brave boys in France were spilling their blood for the protection and defense of their country.

Remember, too, that not a large stockholder or officer or director of one of these rapacious corporations ever faced a German gun, braved a danger, took a risk, made a sacrifice, or endured a suffering during the entire war, but remained at home in safety 3,000 miles from the danger line and made the war and its resulting stress of their Government and the people an opportunity to plunder and profiteer upon both to the extent of these inconceivable billions, while our boys in France were being killed and their eyes being shot out and their legs and arms being shot off. In the face of these ugly and staggering facts, is it possible that any patriotic Member, Republican or Democrat, can consent to relieve these big profiteering corporations of hundreds of millions of dollars yearly and putting these millions upon the small and weak and nonprofiteering corporations making from 8 and 10 per cent and less upon invested capital, which a 12½ per cent flat rate will do, and especially in view of the further fact that the Republicans have passed in the House a tariff bill which gives these same profiteering corporations the power to exact yearly from the people from three to five billion dollars profits above the world market price?

I trust no Democrat will join with the Republicans in this monstrous scheme. The 12½ per cent flat tax on corporations, even retaining the present exemption of $2,000, will increase the tax of the smaller and weaker corporations making 6, 7, and 8 and 10 per cent on invested capital—which number about 250,000—at least 50 per cent and decrease the taxes of these big profiteering corporations from 33½ to over 50 per cent, which make 20, 30, 40, and 50 per cent, and over, on invested capital, which corporations number less than 10,000. What an impregnable position would it be and what an appeal it would make to the sense of right and justice of the people for the Democrats to take the position that not a dollar of taxes should be reduced on these profiteering corporations and on the millionaires and multimillionaires that reaped harvests of wealth during the war as long as a single dollar of war indebtedness remains, or as long as there is a single disabled or wounded soldier, or a single widow or orphan of a dead soldier, or a single veteran in need.

Why in the name of right and justice should these big profiteering corporations and the millionaires and multimillionaires who filled their rapacious maw with these fabulous billions of blood money be relieved of taxation while we not only keep but actually increase the war taxes on hundreds of thousands of small and weak corporations and keep the war income taxes on millions of our fellow citizens who and whose sons went to the trenches in defense and protection not only of their country but of the profits and wealth of these same corporations and millionaires and multimillionaires? Not one of them made a sacrifice, braved a danger, endured a hardship financially or otherwise for their country during the war, but was millions richer after the war than before, without a scar or scratch. It would be a thousand times better to keep the excess-profits tax and high surtaxes on under the existing law and relieve altogether the more than 4,000,000 of our less fortunate citizens whose income is under $5,000, or our more than 5,000,000 whose income is under $10,000, every dollar of which in both classes is needed for the support of themselves and their families and the education of their children.

We thoroughly agree with President Wilson in his message to the extra session of May, 1919, that the principal, permanent sources of our internal revenue hereafter should be the income tax, the inheritance tax, and the excess-profits tax.

Let the membership of the House, especially the Democrats, not overlook another important fact which demonstrates clearly that the repeal of the excess-profits tax is an absolute surrender to and obedience of the will and command of the big corporate interests and one of the most vicious pieces of legislation that was ever proposed or advocated openly by any public man since the beginning of the Government. It further demonstrates the fact that the Member voting for it will and must look hereafter to these corporate interests for support rather than to the plain people.

According to the report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue on the details of corporate incomes and income and excess-profits taxes, the last of such reports being for the calendar year of 1918, 9,534 corporations making annual profits of $100,000 and over had a net income of $6,621,000,000. Their excess-profits taxes amounted to $2,218,000,000. After deducting this large amount of excess-profits taxes from their net income they still have left $4,403,000,000. The other 308,000 corporations in the United States had a net income of only $1,738,000,000. They paid an excess-profits tax of $287,000,000. After deducting this from their net income they had left only $1,450,000,000.

In other words, these 9,534 big corporations had left, after paying all excess-profits taxes, $4,403,000,000, while the 308,000 other corporations had left only $1,450,000,000. The 9,534 corporations, after paying all excess-profits taxes, had left over three times as much as the entire 308,000 other corporations. Yet the Republicans feel that they must rush to the relief of these 9,534 corporations to the extent of hundreds of millions of dollars yearly.

Another important fact showing the absolute control and domination over and of the Republicans by the big profiteering corporate interests: One thousand and twenty-six corporations, each averaging over $3,000,000 profits annually, not one making less than $1,000,000 profits a year, had a net income of $4,253,000,000, and after deducting the $1,422,000,000 excess-profits tax paid, had a clear profit left of $2,831,000,000. The 308,000 remaining corporations in the United States in the classes making under $100,000 profits annually, averaging much less than $2,000 each, had a net income of only $1,738,000,000.

Deducting the $278,000,000 of excess-profits tax paid leaves these 308,000 corporations only a net profit of $1,451,000,000, while the 1,026 corporations, after paying all excess-profits taxes, have left a clear profit of $2,831,000,000, twice as much as the remaining 316,000 corporations in the United States. Any system that will produce such results in the United States should be abolished. It is absolutely incredible that even a Republican, much less a Democrat, could vote for such a system, which he most assuredly does in voting for the repeal of the excess-profits tax for the relief of such corporate interests. What will the answer be to one's constituent when he asks, "Why were you so anxious to relieve these corporations that profiteer and still continue to profiteer on the people, and not only refuse to vote for the small 10 per cent corporations in your own community, but to actually increase his war taxes at least 50 per cent; and why were you so willing to vote to relieve these corporate profiteers and refuse any relief for the millions of farmers and daily wage earners and doctors and lawyers and merchants in your and every other community in the United States?" Let every Member who votes for this vicious, monstrous Republican corporate interests' scheme to repeal the excess-profits tax begin now to conjure up excuses to give to his constituents in the primary and the election why he so voted. To do this will take until the primary and the election day.

Let us give one simple illustration of the monstrosity of the Republican scheme to repeal the excess-profits tax and put the flat 12½ per cent corporation tax on all corporations. As we have said, and it can be mathematically demonstrated, the flat corporation tax with the repeal of the excess-profits tax will increase the tax of corporations making 6, 7, 8, and 10 per cent at least 50 per cent and will decrease the taxes of big corporations making 20, 30, 40, and 50 per cent and over at least 50 per cent, and some much over 50 per cent. Mr. Beck, public accountant in the State of Michigan, has demonstrated it by taking every class and kind of corporation with capital from $5,000 up to and over $10,000,000, on each class of corporation making from 5 up to 50 per cent, and has worked out the amount of taxes each corporation in the several classes pay under existing law and will pay under the proposed law.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I have listened with a great deal of interest to what has been said so far on this measure, and I am convinced that it will meet the approval of the people in simplifying the tax returns and in deducting the excess-profits taxes and reducing the surtaxes. I am sure that it is a good measure for the country. Our wheels of industry have stopped in more than one-half of the factories, and more than 5,000,000 workmen are idle. Nobody in peace times would carry on a business or be justified in starting a factory when he knew that he would have to pay more than one-half of all the earnings and perhaps more in taxes to the Federal Government. Many of the patriotic citizens worked full time and overtime during the war to help win, but we are now at peace and are passing through the reconstruction period. It may be that the dire calamity predicted by our Democratic friends will be visited upon us if we pass this bill. But my chief concern is for my country, and I am sure that the passage of this bill will grant some needed relief to all.

It is necessary to the successful operation of any corporation to provide for its finances and to so operate it that it will produce enough surplus out of its own earnings to pay its current expenses, its upkeep, and to meet its indebtedness. We are now considering a measure to carry on the greatest corporation in the world, that of the United States Government, and to produce enough revenue to pay certain of its indebtedness. In this we are aided by a committee composed of men of learning, integrity, ability, experience, and success in their own affairs, the Ways and Means Committee. I want to testify to their untiring energy. I know that they have spent many long days of hard work in its preparation, and while it may not be perfect or please everyone it represents the embodiment of their judgment after listening to many witnesses and business men from all parts of the country.

I want to mention one feature of the bill that impresses me in reading it, and that is there is no new experiment, fad, or chance work in its make-up. The single taxer, the sales taxer, the tax on spending, the theorist, and the experimenter have all been heard, but their new ideas must wait, for they have not been engrafted into this bill. This bill is based upon sound, well-established, and good financial business principles. It imposes no new system of taxation. It imposes no new tax. It travels along no new road. The committee knew what they were doing and just what they wanted to accomplish. I was privileged to attend some of the hearings. It seemed to make no difference whether the witness was an expert or a layman, he received careful and painstaking attention, and now the result of their efforts and deliberation is brought here and submitted for our approval. I think we ought to approve it. It is not exactly such a bill as I wanted. It may not be exactly the bill you wanted. Some think the excess-profits tax should remain. Some think it ought to provide for more inheritance taxes in the case of large estates running up into the millions.

I probably would not have reduced the luxury taxes. Perhaps many of you would have had a different method of taxation, or provided for other taxes, or the retention of some that are eliminated. But the committee was not legislating for my individual case, or to meet my wishes or yours, or any other private interests. Why, it was interesting to listen to the witnesses. Every witness knew full well that we had to have the money and that we had to pay the running expenses of the Government and its debts. But the witness could give the most convincing reasons why he should not be taxed, and why the tax ought to be put on the other fellow or on some other business. Gentlemen, it takes courage, intelligence, and an intricate knowledge of government and its needs to prepare such a bill, and it is among the impossibilities to have it please everybody. And one cogent reason given by you Democrats here on the floor of the House is that it will wreck the Republican Party. This reason ought not to appeal to a Democrat to vote against it.

Reduction of taxes was what the committee sought to accomplish. Not more taxes, but less taxes and still have enough left to pay the expenses of Government, economically run, and make payment on our national debt. Taxation can not be reduced like finance, to an exact science. They ought to be imposed equitably, uniformly, and as far as possible so that each person would pay his just proportion, no more, no less.

It appears from the report of the committee that the enactment of this bill will save the people the gross amount of $790,330,000, and I wish to incorporate herewith the table of estimated changes:

Responsible estimates show that under the provisions of the bill taxes will be reduced in the aggregate $193,640,000 for the fiscal year of 1921, $377,990,000 for the following calendar year, and $790,330,000 for 1923.

Economists in their writings affirm that all taxes levied against the producer and manufacturer are paid by the ultimate consumer. If this is a sound doctrine, it can readily be observed that the great reduction made by this bill will bring relief to all the people. Economically considered, a manufacturer adds taxes to his fixed and overhead charges. These charges in turn are added to the cost of his product and correspondingly increase the price to the consumer.

The country will be relieved by the passage of this bill from excessive taxation, which ought to aid industry, and as there is soon to be held in this city a conference for the purpose of reducing armament and military upkeep the future seems promising for better times. There is every reason to believe that much good will come from this meeting. We are at peace with the world, and no nation is looking for war. It is the most expensive establishment connected with our Government. The efficiency of huge battleships is now in question and made more so by the recent experiments of the bombing planes. During the late war the efficiency of the battleship was also greatly modified by the submarine. Former Secretary of War Baker recommended a standing army of 576,000 men. We have reduced the number to 150,000. Our best defense is our young men who have returned from the late World War, who could readily be prepared for action in a very short period. This makes it more unnecessary to provide for a large standing army, since in time of danger they would all return to the colors.

I remember that when war was declared against Spain, the veterans of the Civil War, through the G. A. R., proffered to President McKinley 1,000,000 men in arms, and I am sure that double that number of ex-service men from the World War would respond now, so why needs be a large standing Army. With a reduction in our armament which bids fair to be agreed upon by the peace convention, and the readiness of our young men trained to war, we can certainly cut down the vast expense of our Military Establishment.

But some say our danger is not from without, and I for one am in favor of lessening our danger from within and disposing of the anarchist and all those who would destroy our Government by force, either by deportation or confinement.

The transition from a large war footing to peace is a great change. There are many problems to solve. Much can be said about many of them, but I have every faith that in due course we will be back to normalcy and our country go forward to that destiny which makes for superiority among the nations of the earth.

We are the greatest nation on earth: First, in inventive genius; in fine arts; in manufacture, commerce, and agriculture; in high, lofty, and ennobling purpose for the uplift of humanity and the betterment of the human race. Our churches are more numerous and schools and colleges better attended than in any other nation. Here the blessings of liberty are secured to us and to our posterity by the greatest charter ever penned by the hand of man. If need be, we can feed and clothe a large portion of the world. We have a population of over 100,000,000 of people. We have increased in population three times since the Civil War, and can support a billion inhabitants. Our national wealth is estimated at $350,000,000,000, which is more than that of all our European allies in the late World War save Russia. Turning to page 405 of the World's Almanac for 1921, we find the wealth of nations to be:

United States	$350,000,000,000
United Kingdom	120,000,000,000
France	92,500,000,000
Italy	35,500,000,000
Belgium	12,000,000,000
Japan	23,500,000,000

While our indebtedness and that of the same countries amounts to—

United States	$24,300,000,000
Deducting our foreign loans	10,000,000,000

Leaves our total present indebtedness— 14,300,000,000

United Kingdom	39,300,000,000
France	46,000,000,000
Italy	18,000,000,000
Belgium	4,000,000,000
Japan	1,300,000,000

The following interesting table is taken from a book published by the Bankers' Trust Co., of New York City:

Debts and interest charge compared with estimated wealth and income of principal belligerents in the late war per capita basis.

Population.	Nation.	Debt per capita.	Wealth per capita.	Interest per capita.	Income per capita.
107,000,000	United States	$224	$2,803	$9.34	$360
46,000,000	Great Britain	782	2,608	34.24	337
40,000,000	France	500	2,250	45.00	300
36,000,000	Italy	350	1,111	15.22	208
65,000,000	Germany	600	1,231	30.00	154

This shows that our capital wealth is more per capita than that of any of our European allies and that our indebtedness per capita is much less.

At the end of the chapter the author says:

It is gratifying to know that the trial to which we have been compelled to submit for the purpose of cleaning the world from German autocracy has left us in a position where we are strong financially and able to do most effective work in assisting to carry through a reconstruction program which will make the world finer and better than it was at the beginning of the conflict.

With national wealth of $350,000,000,000 and net national indebtedness of $14,000,000,000; with twenty-five times more wealth and resources than the debts we owe, it will only be a matter of a short time in our national life when our indebtedness will all be liquidated. No one is in danger of financial stress when he has resources twenty-five times greater than his debts. I think we should mobilize all our resources, get our foreign loans into interest-bearing bonds, dispose of our surplus war material, reduce expenditures, and practice economy wherever possible, and thus relieve our national burden. There is no good reason for ominous times. If anyone thinks so, just let him look at the financial affairs of other nations, and then take courage. It was our misfortune to be forced into the great World War, but we won and added luster to our national fame. I believe if we had not entered the war when we did that it would have been prolonged many months, if not years, that not only our national existence would have been at stake but more of our youth would have been sacrificed and our indebtedness greatly increased. So let us meet our duty cheerfully, not complainingly or begrudgingly but determined to do our part as well as our soldier boys did theirs. Let us adopt the motto of the Postmaster General, when he says, "Come on, let's go!"

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KNIGHT].

Mr. KNIGHT. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, nothing is easier in theory than to formulate an ideal system of taxation. The crossroads philosopher, the statesman redolent of the meadow, no less than bankers and learned Members of Congress, often present solutions entirely satisfactory, at least to themselves. As a matter of fact, however, the perfect scheme of taxation yet remains to be invented.

The bill now before us is not perfect. On the contrary, it has many defects. But when we consider the unusual difficulties of the situation, if one desires to be candid, he must admit that the Ways and Means Committee has presented us with a remarkably good bill. Personally, I object to the reduction of the surtaxes on the larger incomes while no reductions have been made on the smaller ones, and I shall vote against this provision of the bill; but if this fails I shall nevertheless vote for the bill itself. I shall do this because it is infinitely a better measure than the law under which we are now operating. In its repeal of the excess-profits tax it lifts the ban upon legitimate business, which has slowed down the wheels of industry almost to the stopping point and has so paralyzed initiative, deadened effort, and demoralized all calculations for the future as to leave us halting and uncertain whether to try to go forward or to stop and give up the ghost at once.

Even as a war measure this provision of the present law was wholly indefensible from any standpoint, as the direct consequence of its operation was to dry up the very sources from which it was attempted to draw revenue. With its blighting burden suspended over business no man would, nor indeed could, expand his enterprises. Under its baneful operation its dead hand clutched all incentive by the throat and made us—from the smallest to the greatest—stand marking time, preferring to endure the evils of the present rather than fly to others we knew not of.

I do not propose to discuss the fallacy that such a tax fell upon those best able to bear it and consequently saved the people to some extent, for the veriest tyro in taxation knows that all such burdens are passed on to the consumer, and that, in added costs to production, he pays it in the last analysis. The manufacturer adds it to his product and passes it on to the retailer. The retailer adds it to his prices and passes it on to the consumer. This is so clear that it needs no discussion.

Much has been said in this debate about the injustice of putting a 12½ per cent tax, in lieu of the excess-profits tax, upon the small corporation. The small corporation was hit harder by this excess-profits tax than anyone else. Thousands of these corporations had only a nominal capital, and therefore their earnings showed very large. In many cases they were ruined, while the big concerns, organized for stock-selling purposes, were able to show an apparent invested capital that gave them exemptions which reduced their tax often to the vanishing point. The bill now before us removes this burden from the small corporation, organized for legitimate business and not for stock-selling purposes, and in its exemption of $2,000 of earnings lifts the ban from honest business. If the bill did no more than this it would be a constructive measure eminently worthy of the support of the country.

I wish now, Mr. Chairman, to discuss something which I consider of the very greatest importance. During this debate there have been two ideas continually brought to the front. One of these is that the possession of great taxable property is in some way a crime, while high taxation is a blessing in that it is a means of punishing that crime. It is hardly necessary to say that such reasoning is wholly and absurdly unsound. I am not going to defend the uses sometimes made of the great estates accumulated in this country. Much less have I any desire to defend the methods by which some of these fortunes have been accumulated. But to make war with the destroying weapon of taxation upon all great property possessions because some of them have been accumulated dishonestly and used offensively and unwisely is as foolish as it would be to assume that because a man had his pockets picked once all men are pick-pockets. The possession of property is in itself no more a sign of depravity than is its absence a sure mark of virtue, and any effort to imbue the public mind with any such false idea is injurious and pernicious.

Even more unsound is the theory that high taxation is a good thing. Those who know anything of economics must realize that exactly the reverse of this proposition is true. Taxation saps the resources of a nation and does not create anything that adds to its happiness or wealth. It breeds and sustains governmental activities, with their attendant train of offices and officials, which add nothing of value to the public welfare. Taxes create no great enterprises which add to the wealth of a country nor to the happiness and well-being of its people. But they do call into existence bureaus, boards, and commissions, with their attendant shoals of useless officials. They promote not the welfare of the people, not wealth nor happiness, but pap suckers and hangers-on who are leeches upon the body politic, reaping of the people's substance where they have not sown. Through such a system nations die, and the highways of history are strewn thickly with the bleaching bones of dead nations that have disregarded this fundamental fact. Yet notwithstanding this plain teaching of history, we are disregarding the lesson and with accelerating steps are treading the same road that has so often led to doom.

The war is not responsible for this false and fatal idea in government. Long before the war there was a nation-wide propaganda for high taxation. It sought to impress the masses with the idea that the rich were not carrying their share of the tax burden, and such is human nature that, in the vain delusion that the rich would be punished while they would escape, they authorized these new burdens of taxation. They did not understand that they were going to be hoisted by their own petard. But such was the case—and always will be when a people adopt high taxation as a method of punishment.

But there was another delusion involved which was even more dangerous. There has grown up in this country a tremendous sentiment for State socialism. Its adherents would be shocked if they were accused of being disciples of Karl Marx or of following in the footsteps of those ideas and ideals that were practiced by the late German Empire. But they are doing nothing less. They have conceived the false idea that there is some latent and inherent virtue in government that enables it to do better those things which a people should always be left to do for themselves. As a consequence, every State capital at every session of every legislature is flooded with demands for the creation of activities which, if the experience of the ages means anything, should never be undertaken by any government.

From the States these paternalistic ideas have converged upon the National Capital, until to-day Congress is besieged by every class and coterie which has conceived an idea beneficial to itself and therefore, in its opinion, to the whole country. There is nothing under the sun these advocates of Government aid do not seek to compel us to undertake. Unfortunately, I think we have yielded to these demands of the advocates of the new freedom, who would, by governmental action, make the lion and the lamb lie down together while the little child might play in safety upon the hole of the adder. They would abolish by governmental decree not only poverty and want, but vice and temptations, disregarding the age-old truth that very little, and possibly nothing at all, can be done by laws to make mankind good until the sentiment back of them is so overwhelming as to compel their enforcement. But the idea is rampant in the land that we must be born under governmental operation, that our children should be educated by the Nation, that health and happiness are all proper subjects of legislative decree, and consequently should be sustained, fostered, nurtured, and promulgated by new departments. Right now there are enough bills before Congress to convert the Government into one vast nursery—and possibly a madhouse—if half of them were enacted and enforced.

In view of these undoubted facts it requires neither a philosopher nor a seer to see how dangerous it is to accustom the people any further to the idea that high taxes are a blessing. The duty of the House is rather to cut out all these frills and get back to first principles and teach the people that taxation is not a good thing further than to provide protection for life and property and to secure to our people a fair share of equality of opportunity. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, we must do this or pay a heavy penalty for our failure to do so. Already our departure from first principles is costing our people most dearly. In my own State, taxation in a few years has increased from $6 to $22 per capita. In the Nation it is now not far from $60 per capita, or an average annual assessment against each family of the usual size of about $400. Unfortunately, there are not sufficient returns from which to make an accurate estimate of the average wages paid, but from such data as we have it is fair to conclude that it does not exceed $1,000 a year. That tells a story that should challenge the interested attention of every man and woman in America, for the thing can not go on as it is now going. We can not continue to stray after the strange gods we have been taught to worship without quick and widespread disaster to the whole Nation.

I did not share them, and I do not now indorse the paternalistic theories of the last administration. Whether as promulgated by Col. House's hero, Philip Dru, or as handed down by the master amidst the flame and thunder of Mount Vernon, they sounded beautifully, but they have not made the world safe for democracy, or for anything else, except the taxgatherer and the profiteer. They have almost destroyed legitimate business and have brought the Government to where the people are struggling under a load of strange and useless taxes to the very verge of bankruptcy. I am not going to blame my Democratic friends for all the wild orgy which has followed this attempt to remake a Nation that was quite good enough for most of us. We had more than our share of Republican hogs, who not only got into the trough with all four feet but tried to stand in it sideways. I admit, sir, that while all too many of them were Republican hogs, the Democratic Party, nevertheless, created the trough and it can not escape the responsibility.

Those on the other side, who are now so generous in their criticism of this bill, had full opportunity to prevent most of this disgrace to the country. They were in full power, but instead of showing their independence of the throne they bowed the knee and humbly did the bidding of the master at the other end of the Avenue.

Why did not they, with full power in their hands, frame a revenue bill that would not have destroyed the prosperity of the country? Then was the time to have shown the inerrant wisdom which now emanates from their side. But they did not. The idols of Baal were not more silent than they in the dazzling light of the new freedom. It comes, therefore, with bad grace from those whose policies fastened upon the Nation an era of extravagance, waste, and graft the like of which no country has ever seen, policies that created 20,000 new war millionaires, to lecture us upon our delinquencies to the people. I am willing to vote for a capital tax to pay the expenses of the war out of the wealth amassed by the war. But I can hear our friends over there talking about something else not under discussion, if such a proposition were before us. I am sorry to see politics injected into this discussion, for this is neither the time nor the place for the exhibition of partisan spirit. Neither party is entirely free from responsibility for the condition of the country.

Both parties have been guilty of weakly yielding to the clamor of class interests even before we entered the war, and both have joined to write upon the statute books a mass of paternalistic laws which are in large measure responsible for the exorbitant burden of taxation that now afflicts the country. The war itself only created new opportunities for the rapid development of the virus which had already been deeply implanted in the body politic. It is not necessary for any ghost to "burst the ponderous and marble jaws of the tomb and once more revisit the glimpses of the moon" to tell us where this pernicious idea must end, if we do not turn back to the ways of sanity and simplicity in government. There is nothing new or strange about it, except that a people so sensible and practical as we are should have yielded so quickly and rapidly to this arch heresy of the ages. From the days of the Pharaohs one mighty nation after another has yielded to its seductive plea, and we have seen, as a consequence, each one of them become the roosting place of the bat and the owl. Such a system inevitably not only destroys the resources of the people but saps their vitality, weakens initiative, deadens energy, and leaves them at last easy victims of the very forces which they created.

We have already created this Frankenstein. He is with us, wherever a legislative body meets in this country from the town council to the Congress of the United States. A veritable mania for regulating everything and everybody is upon us. More than 160,000 laws have been passed in this country in the last five years, ranging in their scope from preserving the purity of the breed of the bulldog to securing for us a front seat at the shining throne of grace. The voice of the uplift fills the land and under its seductive persuasion we are no longer willing to let a harassed people work out their own destiny. On the contrary, we beseech lawmakers—to whom at home we would not pay $25 a week—to create governmental agencies, to spend our money, to care for our bodies, and to save our souls.

At every State capital there is a bewildering array of commissions grinding out salvation and grinding up the taxpayers' money. They not only tell us what we shall eat and drink but also what we shall think. Not even the lowly but vociferous jackass has escaped their solicitous ministrations, for in my own State we have a commission to teach him the way he should go. As a consequence, the costs of State governments have doubled and tripled in the last 10 years until now, in many places, the people absolutely have not the money to pay their taxes. I need not advert to Washington where one can hardly walk out of the Capitol without stepping on a bureau chief. In fact we have just about handed the Government over to bureaus, commissions, and boards, and it is a dull day in Congress when we do not create a few additional assistants of something. Hordes of pap suckers consuming the people's substance and creating nothing but deficits swarm over and around us until we almost despair of any hope of return to the simpler and better days of the Republic.

And standing now as we do, at the parting of the ways, we must decide whether we shall return to the ideas of the fathers that made this the greatest, the freest, the happiest people in all the tides of time, or whether we shall follow the alluring light of the so-called new freedom that in the name of progress marries death and leads down to hell.

This bill, as I have said, is not perfect, but because it is a step back toward a sane economy I shall vote for it. I myself may not believe that it is going to raise all the revenues we shall need. In fact, I very much doubt it. But be it so, it will nevertheless lighten the burden of taxation to some extent for one year. What happens after that is in our own hands. I can not speak for others, but for myself I shall vote against every appropriation bill that comes into this House when the money is not absolutely necessary to provide for the orderly and economical administration of the Government.

I shall vote for no appropriations to create supermen, for none to stretch the American people upon the procrustean bed of a standardized education, for none to perpetuate the follies of further making the Government the wet nurse of the people.

This is a matter which should not appeal to one but to all parties. I shall, in my humble way, fight for everything that may cause my own party to rededicate itself to this, our ancient faith. I call to my friends on the Democratic side, to my colleagues on this side, who may have heard the voice of the siren of the new freedom, to the red-blooded American people everywhere, to close up the ranks regardless of party, and to stand shoulder to shoulder in a new advance to rescue our country from the dangers into which it has fallen, to eradicate the evils we have brought upon ourselves, and to return to that sanity, simplicity, and economy with which its affairs were once conducted. [Applause.]

Mr. COLLIER. Mr. Chairman, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. ALMON].

Mr. ALMON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the Record by printing therein a letter from the American Farm Federation Bureau, expressing its views on this subject.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the Record by printing the letter referred to. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I now yield to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON].

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, in approaching the consideration of this bill the financial situation in which we find ourselves should first be taken into the account. We are just emerging from a devastating war in which we incurred a national indebtedness of nearly $25,000,000,000 in addition to the vast expenditures made from current revenues and the untold billions of loss suffered by private individuals. The interest on the national war debt alone now exceeds the aggregate of the sums required to pay the total expenses of the Government for any year prior to the war.

During the war taxes were imposed to raise the enormous sum of $8,000,000,000 in a single year. This amount was somewhat reduced soon after the war closed, but even last year about $6,000,000,000 were realized.

Let us consider for a moment the effect of a constant drain of this magnitude upon the lifeblood of the business of the country. Abundant capital is the very first requisite of a prosperous community. Upon it every industry must draw and all commerce must depend. It is staggering to contemplate the withdrawal of eight billions, six billions, or even four billions of liquid capital each year from productive enterprise to be used up in paying the running expenses of the Government. The present unhappy and depressed state of business throughout the entire country is the logical, inevitable result of such a course.

The present Congress is confronted with the problem of stopping just as far as possible this "bleeding white" process and at the same time providing for the necessary running expenses of the Government, the payment of the interest on the public debt, and a proper sinking fund for its final payment.

The first element of the problem was to ascertain as nearly as possible the amount absolutely necessary to defray the expenses of the Government. After an orgy of extravagant expenditures in nearly every department of the Government unequaled in the annals of free, self-governing nations, it is no easy task to even stop the increase in the rapidly mounting expenditures, much less to materially reduce them.

The executive heads of the present administration, however, have entered upon the task with a will and determination indicative of success. Our Democratic friends insist that the proposed economies can not be realized, but we believe that they can and should be.

Having ascertained as nearly as possible the amount necessary to defray expenses and accumulate a proper sinking fund, the next step was to determine what taxes imposed by existing law could be eliminated and still raise the necessary amount. It was realized that it is impossible to relieve directly the man of very small income from any tax burden now borne by him for the good reason that no tax is now directly laid upon him. The income of a married person is already exempted to the extent of $2,000. This bill increases the exemption to $2,500 for married persons having an income not in excess of $5,000, but the great majority of persons do not have an income amounting to $2,500. It is believed therefore that the best and only way to relieve the tax burden of the great mass of the people is to take the burden off of productive enterprise just as far as possible, so that business may revive and prosperity again prevail.

As to what taxes are most destructive of business and stand as the greatest obstacle in the way of a return of prosperity there is no difference of opinion among financiers and economists who have considered the question, and there is no party line dividing them. In a message to Congress shortly after the war ended, President Wilson said:

The Congress might well consider whether the higher rates of income and profits taxes can in peace time be effectively productive of revenue, and whether they may not, on the contrary, be destructive of business activity and productive of waste and inefficiency. There is a point at which in peace times high rates of income and profits taxes discourage energy, remove the incentive to new enterprise, encourage extravagant expenditures, and produce industrial stagnation, with consequent unemployment and other attendant evils.

Secretary McAdoo said of the excess-profits tax:

The excess-profits tax must rest upon the wholly indefensible notion that it is a function of taxation to bring all profits down to one level, with relation to the amount of capital invested, and to deprive industry, foresight, and sagacity of their fruits. The excess-profits tax exempts capital and burdens brains, ability, and energy. The excess-profits tax falls less heavily upon big business than small business, because big business is generally overcapitalized and small business is often undercapitalized.

Gov. Cox, the Democratic candidate for President in 1920, said during the campaign, and he was standing on the Democratic platform:

The excess-profits tax had the special excuse for existence during the war period that it was supposed to fall, and did to a certain extent fall, upon those industries which made peculiar profits out of the war. Now that the war is over and no industries can be making such profits, that reason for the excess-profits tax is removed. The excess-profits tax now falls with notable injustice upon new enterprises, the very kind of enterprises that it should be the purpose of the Government to encourage, not only for the development of industry but for the additional employment of labor.

Such a form of unjust taxation is a burden upon a new enterprise—indeed, a blight upon a new enterprise—and there is no excuse for maintaining it, no reason for retaining it.

Former Secretary of the Treasury CARTER GLASS, now United States Senator from Virginia, in a report to Congress said:

The Treasury's objections to the excess-profits tax even as a war expedient (in contradistinction to a war-profits tax) have been repeatedly voiced to the committees of the Congress. Still more objectionable is the operation of the excess-profits tax in peace times. It encourages wasteful expenditure, puts a premium on overcapitalization, and a penalty on brains, energy, and enterprise, discourages new ventures, and confirms old ventures in their monopolies.

In my judgment Senator GLASS is the soundest and safest financier on the Democratic side to-day.

On the Republican side it is well known that President Harding, Secretary Mellon, the Treasury experts, and all others whose opinions are entitled to weight in this connection agree with President Wilson and his Secretaries of the Treasury that the excess-profits tax on corporations and the very high surtaxes on individual incomes are not only the most injurious taxes upon the business of the country but that they are rapidly defeating the very purpose for which they were enacted. The tax returns in the Internal Revenue Commissioner's office prove conclusively that the high surtaxes not only fail to produce revenue, but they cause a heavy loss of revenue from capital now being invested in tax-exempt securities, which would otherwise be invested in productive enterprises. There is also the further loss of remunerative employment for labor that would follow the employment of additional capital in industry.

There is every reason why these two forms of taxes should be now repealed and no good reason whatever why they should not be. In fact, not a single argument has been advanced why they should be retained. The reckless assertion several times repeated during this debate that the effect of the repeal of these taxes is to shift the burden from the rich to the poor is unsupported by facts or argument, because it is impossible to produce either in support of such an assertion.

It is regrettable that it has been found necessary in order to replace a portion of the revenue lost by the repeal of the excess-profits tax to add an additional 2½ per cent to the tax on incomes of corporations. It is especially unfortunate in the case of public service corporations, which do not have control over the rates to be charged for service.

As you all know, the bill as first drafted by the Committee on Ways and Means provided for the immediate repeal of the excess-profits tax and the higher surtaxes, so that the revised taxes would be levied upon incomes received during the calendar year 1921. It became apparent, however, that a majority of the House favored carrying forward the date of repeal to January 1, 1922, so that the revised taxes would be levied upon incomes for the year 1922. In my judgment this was a serious mistake, but ours is a Government by majorities.

The repeal of the transportation taxes is of the next importance to the business of the country, and thereby to the person of small income as well as to all others.

The repeal of many of the so-called nuisance taxes and the material reduction of many others will be acceptable to everyone more as a relief from petty annoyance than from the magnitude of the burden itself. The greatest benefit from the repeal of these taxes will be the general effect upon the volume of business which will be helpful to all.

The increase in the exemption of married persons from $2,000 to $2,500 on incomes below $5,000 will benefit a comparatively few very worthy persons and the increase of the exemption for dependents from $200 to $400 will help a few others.

To simplify our tax laws just as far as possible consistent with the adequate protection of the revenues has been the earnest effort of the committee. We believe that we have succeeded to a considerable extent in this bill. In addition to this, a commission is provided for, composed of taxpayers and experts of the Treasury, to work out together a simplification of tax returns, so as to cause the taxpayer as little of expense and inconvenience as is possible.

When a final vote on this bill is reached the effect of the question to be decided will be whether the present law, passed in time of war and imposing taxes not only heavy and grievous to be borne in time of peace but vexatious in their application and unnecessarily harmful in their effect, shall continue to be the law, or whether the changes which I have briefly outlined shall be made.

A vote for the bill means a vote for the repeals and modifications to which I have referred, while a vote against the bill is a vote to retain the present law, with all its unnecessary burdens, its petty annoyances, and the certainty that it will continue to restrict legitimate business and retard the return of prosperity. It would seem that between two such alternatives there should be no hesitation.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. BURNES].

Mr. BURNES. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee. In the time allotted to me it is impossible to detail my views either on this bill specifically or on income taxation in general. Suffice it to say that I am in hearty accord with the beliefs of the Republican Party and of the people in general who believe that the bulk of the revenue required to operate our Government should be obtained through an income tax upon individuals and corporations. Many novel plans of taxation are being suggested from time to time, and practically every one of such plans have some merit in them. The objection to most of them, even those which may appear scientific in principle, is that the difficulties of administration are so great as to make them impractical. The fundamental test that must be applied to every system is whether the taxes are levied and collected in accordance with the taxpayer's ability to pay them. Most important factors also are the effects that such taxes have upon the productive industries of the country.

It must be remembered that all our industries are actually dependent upon each other. The laborers and capitalists of our large industrial centers depend upon the basic industry of agriculture, not only for the products which they place upon their tables to form their daily diet but also in many cases for their raw materials required to keep their industries going, and last, but not least, are in the final analysis almost entirely dependent upon the agricultural interests to buy their finished products. When the farmers of the country cease to buy, whether it be from choice or necessity, every other industry is in a bad way and general stagnation results. Likewise, agriculture can not prosper unless manufacturing, mining, and other industries prosper. Idle men in industrial centers can not buy wheat, meat, cotton, wool, fruits, or any other products of the farm, either in their raw or finished state. Capital must be awarded fair returns, otherwise the owners thereof will not and can not furnish employment to labor. Then, again, a transportation system serving the needs of the people for a reasonable cost, but rendering a service that is prompt and efficient, is a prime requisite for progress in any civilized State. All these things must be borne in mind when revising tax schedules.

The revenue act of 1918, which we are about to amend, was the product of war times. I understand that during the war revenue legislation was not treated in a partisan way. I regret that party politics is playing such a prominent part in connection with this bill.

It is unfortunate that the able Democratic members of the Ways and Means Committee did not see fit to join their Republican colleagues upon that committee in drafting the bill so that the country might have had the benefit of the combined work, energy, and judgment of leading men from both parties on this momentous question which has heretofore not been a party issue. It is always easier to sit back and pick holes than it is to plan and construct and build, but I predict that the country will not look with favor upon the efforts of the minority with reference to this bill, for the debates here and the permanent records will show that its attitude has been that of trying to gain party advantage rather than to make constructive criticisms or offer constructive suggestions for improvement. As Republicans and Democrats alike are entitled to share in both the credit for the good and the responsibility for the bad in former revenue acts the obligation to correct the present admitted defects is likewise joint.

We must not forget that while the war is over this is, and for years must remain, a war-revenue measure. The war debt is not paid. You and I and every other citizen have still the largest portion of our share of that debt to pay. The only Americans who have paid their portion in full are those who were left to sleep in the fields of Flanders and of France. I regret to be forced to admit that our society is so constituted that even the service men, who fought so bravely and so well and who were ready to sacrifice their all for their country—that even they must apparently continue to sacrifice further by helping to pay the enormous cost of the war.

Sums of money so large that they would have seemed incredible a few years ago must be raised in order to meet the just and honest obligations of our Nation to its many creditors, practically all of whom are American citizens and not least of whom are the disabled service men and their dependents to whom the Nation owes a debt that can never be paid in dollars and cents. Shortly it is to be hoped that less need be raised each year for the maintenance of armaments for military defense.

I do not regard this bill as perfect. Probably no one does that. It must of necessity be more or less a result of compromises, for on no question is there a greater variance of opinions among our people than on the question of taxation. It is, however, the composite judgment not only of the Ways and Means Committee but also of the majority of this House, of the House itself, and, I believe, of the general public. The practical question for determination for each individual Member, it seems to me, is whether this bill is, on the whole, preferable to the existing law. To my mind there can be but the one answer—that it is.

On the whole, I think the bill will be well received by the country. The reductions provided, while not as large as had been hoped, are very substantial. The elimination of all transportation taxes will possibly give the most immediate and direct benefit to all industries and to all the people. Everyone will "thrice welcome" the repeal of the so-called "nuisance taxes." Increasing exemptions for dependent children to $400 per child gives relief just where it is needed the most, and increasing the exemption for married men to $2,500 where incomes are less than $5,000 also helps many of the vast middle classes of the country. Such provisions as these would amply answer the false charge that the common people were forgotten in order to help more powerful interests.

I am, however, one of those who believe that the bill was much improved in the Republican conference, and as one of the most humble Republicans I have no objection to acknowledging with thanks the congratulations of the ranking Democratic member of the Ways and Means Committee, who so highly commended the work of the conference and so warmly congratulated its membership. I have not the time to detail my views on the excess-profits tax and the higher surtaxes. Regardless, however, of possibly valid arguments for eventually repealing the excess-profits tax and the higher brackets of surtaxes, any attempt to make such repeal retroactive to January 1 last was indefensible. The possible objection to such taxes is not that of the inability of the taxpayer to pay, but rather that excess-profits taxes are passed on to the consumer in a pyramided form, and that the very high surtaxes, with normal taxes amounting to more than 70 per cent, force large incomes into tax-exempt securities with a disastrous effect not only upon the revenue of the Treasury but also upon the productive enterprises of the country generally. Assuming such arguments to be sound they constitute, in my mind, special reasons why the repeal should not be retroactive for the excess-profits tax for this year will have been collected from the public before the bill becomes a law, and cutting down the large surtaxes can not possibly help the situation in the investing market this year. The persons or corporations helped by such repeal should regard themselves very lucky to be relieved in the future.

At the same time it must not be assumed that large incomes will not continue to pay enormously large taxes. The maximum rate, including normal and surtaxes, will under the terms of this bill be reduced to 40 per cent, which, relatively speaking, is still a very high rate. It is to be hoped that further issues of tax-exempt securities may be promptly prevented, for that would to a large extent simplify the problem of getting proper revenue from large incomes.

Most pernicious in my mind, however, was the proposal to shift most of the loss from such retroactive repeals to all corporations, large or small, by increasing their normal tax for this year from 10 to 15 per cent. That would have increased by 50 per cent the tax of every ordinary corporation throughout the country making a profit on its invested capital of about 10 per cent or less, and, at their expense, relieved profiteering corporations making much larger and sometimes extortionate profits. The work of the conference, therefore, made it possible not to increase the normal corporation tax for this year.

I also sincerely hope for and commend the necessary amendment to the earnest consideration of the Ways and Means Committee the possibility of not increasing such normal tax commencing with January 1, 1922. While an increase from the present rate of 10 per cent to 12½ per cent, commencing next year, is much better than the original proposal of an increase from 10 to 15 per cent, commencing last January, I know from personal experience and observation that even a tax of 10 per cent is a mighty heavy burden upon the relatively small corporations in my State, whether they be banks, mercantile establishments, farmers' elevators, farmers' stores, or what not. They often have a difficult task to show a gain on the right side of the ledger of from 4 to 8 per cent on their invested capital. The increase proposed means a burden of $133,750,000, much of which is imposed upon those companies least able to bear it.

Let me submit for the candid consideration of the Members of this body the proposal for an early amendment to the revenue bill wiping out entirely the so-called normal tax on corporations against the corporation itself and substituting in lieu thereof a tax upon the profits of the corporation when they reach the individual stockholder in the form of dividends. This would mean no loss of revenue to the Government, but rather a likelihood of an increase. Of course, to prevent an evasion of the tax by failure to declare dividends there would have to be a tax of about the present normal tax, or a little larger, on all undistributed profits. An excess-profits tax could be levied or not, as desired. If excess-profits taxes are to be eliminated as a permanent proposition, then the tax on the undistributed profits should probably be graduated within about the same limits as taxes against individuals—say from 10 to 40 per cent, depending upon the rate of return on the investment. In such way the earnings of the corporation would eventually carry such a rate of tax as the individual stockholder pays on his income. To illustrate: A widow or other person of small means, whose total net income is less than $4,000 above exemptions, receiving a dividend from a corporation like the Great Northern Railway Co., would pay a tax of 4 per cent; a stockholder of more ample means but whose net income including dividends is just below $8,000 would pay a tax of 10 per cent; a stockholder whose net income is $66,000 or more would, under the rates proposed in the present bill, pay a total tax of 40 per cent; a stockholder whose total income, including dividends, is less than his exemption would pay no tax.

To-day the income from the "widow's mite" and from the funds of the millionaire stockholder, both invested in corporations earning normal profits, pay the same rate of 10 per cent. Next year, under the terms of the present bill, the rate will be 12½ per cent. Is this based upon the fundamental principle of collecting taxes in accordance with ability to pay? Perhaps even a more important argument in favor of such proposal is this: A corporation engaged in any business will, as a business proposition, estimate its normal tax, treat it as part of its overhead expense, and pass it on, or at least try to do so, to the public with which it deals. If you eliminate that tax and levy it against the profits in the hands of the stockholder, that overhead expense will not be a factor in the price charged the public for the corporation's product or service. The result then would be that the tax would not be shifted, but would be paid by the person who should pay it, the person actually benefited by the income and not the consuming public. [Applause.]

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURTNESS. Certainly.

Mr. TILSON. I think a great deal of what the gentleman says. This piling of taxes on a corporation simply because it is an aggregation of capital, in my judgment, is unwise, and I think the gentleman is on the right tack when he insists that it should be paid by the person who receives the benefit of the corporation rather than by the corporation.

Mr. BURTNESS. It is plain to be seen, as far as the Government is concerned, it will get the same amount, if not a larger amount, of revenue in the long run.

Just a word in closing, particularly to those Republican Members who, like myself, come from the agricultural States of the great Northwest. This bill is not exactly to our liking, but we have received many considerations we asked for. I was pleased to hear the gentleman, the fearless and possibly sometimes stubborn fighter from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR], yesterday state on the floor that he was going to vote for the bill. The Republican conference met us more than half way in acceding to our views. It is only fair for us to support this measure wholeheartedly. It is a great improvement over our present laws. A vote against this bill is a vote to continue the present taxes so harassing to agriculture and all other businesses, and in my humble judgment could not be justified. Let us all help to swell the majority for a bill which, it seems to me, will aid in reestablishing good times throughout the land, which will aid all those industries which I referred to at the beginning of these remarks and which are so dependent each upon the other. [Applause.]

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly the committee rose, and Mr. FESS having assumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. WALSH, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 8245, had come to no resolution thereon.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, August 19, 1921.

The Chaplain, Rev. J. J. Muir, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father, we thank Thee that our lives are in Thy keeping. We thank Thee for all the providences which enrich those lives and ask Thee for that sense of dependence upon Thee that whatever comes to us we may know is of a Father's good pleasure. Direct us in the duties of this morning, be with us constantly, and may we see Thy face always, whatever may be the surroundings of time and sense. We ask in Christ Jesus' name. Amen.

NAMING A PRESIDING OFFICER.

The Secretary, George A. Sanderson, read the following communication:

UNITED STATES SENATE,
PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE,
Washington, D. C., August 19, 1921.

To the SENATE:

Being temporarily absent from the Senate, I appoint Hon. C. L. McNARY, a Senator from the State of Oregon, to perform the duties of the Chair this legislative day.

ALBERT B. CUMMINS,
President Pro Tempore.

Mr. McNARY thereupon took the chair as Presiding Officer.

The reading clerk proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of the legislative day of Tuesday, August 16, 1921, when, on request of Mr. LODGE, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

RETURN OF SOLDIER DEAD FROM FRANCE.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, some time ago by request I had printed in the RECORD a letter by Mr. Owen Wister and a letter from Mr. Thomas Nelson Page in regard to the return of the bodies of our soldiers from France.

I have now been asked to print a reply from Col. H. F. Rethers, Quartermaster Corps, Chief American Graves Registration Service, replying to what was said in those letters. I think it only proper that the reply should be printed, and I therefore ask that it may be printed in the RECORD without reading.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the New York Times, June 8, 1921.]

OUR SOLDIER DEAD—A PROTEST FROM FRANCE AGAINST MR. WISTER'S STATEMENT.

To the Editor of the New York Times:

Under the caption, "Plea for our dead in France," an article from the pen of Owen Wister, dated Paris, April 14, appeared in the New York Times which has been given wide circulation in the United States and has presented to the reading public a gross misrepresentation of the work of the American Graves Registration Service, Quartermaster Corps, in Europe, and cast a highly slanderous slur upon the personnel assigned to the solemn and sacred duty of returning to the United States the remains of the soldier dead who fell abroad.

From other articles appearing in the same issue it would appear that a controversy is raging in the United States between two factions, one urging for the return of the dead and the other for their retention abroad. It is not the purpose of this letter to enter in any way into this controversy, as this service is a governmental agency engaged in a solemn duty to carry out a policy dictated by higher authority, but in passing it may be said that it is to be extremely regretted that this controversy has reached such a stage that one faction will resort to flagrant falsehood and insult in what seems to be an effort to add weight to its argument.

The American Graves Registration Service has been operating since the autumn of 1917, and from a small organization, composed of scattered burial detachments with our fighting divisions of those harrowing days, it has grown to a service which has successfully combed the fighting area wherein America's troops were engaged, has located the graves of our dead, concentrated them into large cemeteries or plots, maintained these cemeteries in such shape as to receive commendation from all, and is now entrusted with the sacred obligation of returning our fallen comrades to their native land. This solemn duty is being performed silently and without ostentation, with every precaution taken by means of orders and instructions and direct supervision by commissioned officers of the Army to insure careful and reverent handling of the dead. That this is being done in a fitting manner is testified by many letters of commendation received from parents and relatives who at their request have been permitted to be present when the bodies of their loved ones were exhumed.

During the fall of 1920 the Massachusetts State Memorial Commission visited the American cemeteries of France and under orders of the Secretary of War were extended every assistance possible in the fulfillment of their mission. They were granted by the undersigned an authorization to inspect the activities of this service in such cemeteries as were being operated by the field parties, and I desire to quote from their printed report the following extract, which is only one of the highly commendatory references which were made toward this service:

"Massachusetts has, up to this time, been the only State to make an independent and thorough examination of this unattractive but very necessary work of the Graves Registration Department, to ascertain if their findings are to be given full faith and credit by our people. Our inquiry and investigation appear to justify the claims of the department that every effort has been made to do the business part accurately, decently, and with all respect, and after that to bestow the honors due to the heroic dead. The commission, standing with devoted American officers and civilians in charge of the work, and in the presence of a thousand receptacles of the dust that was the living wall against which the Hun raged in vain, expressed their admiration of the devoted work of the department and their perfect satisfaction with it."

It is needless to refute categorically the ghastly imputations flowing from the facile pen of Mr. Wister, as their own exaggerations brand them as falsehoods, but it is considered the duty of the writer to reply to the allegations in general on behalf of the service and its personnel. To show that the article mentioned was either the figment of the author's brain or was not based upon first-hand knowledge, it may be said that he never witnessed the operations at the cemetery "Seringes-et-Nesles." It is a matter of record that Mr. Wister visited the cemetery before operations had started and tried to secure information from personnel by asking questions which clearly showed their intent. It is true that he later visited this cemetery during operations, but was not admitted, for when a cemetery is under operations the work is screened from the public for obvious reasons, and only the nearest of kin or their delegated representatives are permitted to witness the removals, and then only of the particular body in which they are interested.

As to the personnel whom the writer of "Plea for Our Dead in France" has so slanderously attacked in his statement: "It (the body) is sprinkled with disinfectant and shipped to Hoboken. Those who sprinkle never embalmed in their lives; they came from the slums and anywhere, and they look it," it is appropriate to mention that the following are the Government's requirements in engaging the technical personnel, who are directly engaged in handling the remains and in whose hands the body remains from the time of exhumation until laid away and sealed in its final casket: "An applicant for supervisory embalmer must be 28 years of age and must have had three years' and preferably five years' actual experience in embalming, and preferably hold a license as an embalmer." "An applicant for appointment as assistant embalmer must be 21 years of age, must be a graduate of an embalming school or have had one year's actual experience in embalming." It is true that not all of the assistant embalmers are professional embalmers, but are men who have won promotions from lower ratings by long and faithful service, and who, by the instructions they have received from supervisory embalmers, have proven themselves qualified assistants for this work.

By process of elimination the unfit of the technical personnel were long ago returned to the United States, and it is they who are so prone to vilify this service. Those remaining are skilled operators with a high sense of appreciation of the reverence of the duty in which they are engaged. Furthermore, it is appropriate to remark that of the American personnel on duty with this service (and the actual handling of bodies is only intrusted to Americans), over 90 per cent are ex-service men, the majority of whom performed long and meritorious service at the front.

With this class of men, men who stood the test of iron and fire, saw their comrades fall by their side and knew what heroes' deaths they died, is it not natural that they would have a keen appreciation of the fitness of things and reverently care for the mortal remains of their brothers in arms? Can it be conceived that an ex-service man would perform this sacred duty intrusted to him by "dragging the bodies from the graves"? We think not, and are satisfied that the reading public will pay scant attention to a screech that can not glorify its author, nor strengthen his argument, and can only by its gross misstatement of facts tear the heartstrings and cause needless anguish to the sorrowing relatives of our heroic dead.

H. F. RETHERS,
Colonel, Quartermaster Corps,
Chief American Graves Registration Service.

DIVISION OF CUSTOMS, DYE AND CHEMICAL SECTION (S. DOC. NO. 67).

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following communication from the President of the United States, which was read and, with the accompanying estimate of appropriation, referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, August 18, 1921.

THE PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit for the consideration of Congress a supplemental appropriation for the Division of Customs, Dye and Chemical Section, in the amount of $7,000. The greater portion of this amount is required to meet pay rolls, and the balance for the payment of traveling expenses necessary in making investigations.

By the dye and chemical control act, 1921 (42 Stat., 18, 19), Congress authorized the transfer of unexpended balances under the war trade board section, Department of State, for the use of the Treasury Department in continuing the work being performed by the war trade board section. Under this authorization the sum of $6,356.76 was transferred to the credit of the dye and chemical section, Division of Customs, 1921. The unexpended balance was not available for the service of 1922. But under a decision of the Comptroller General, dated July 5, 1921, $2,635.19 of the amount so transferred was made available for the service of the fiscal year 1922, up to August 27, 1921, the close of the three-month period of control provided in the act of May 27, 1921, above referred to. This appropriation is exhausted. A bill is now pending which, if it becomes a law, will extend the activities of the dye and chemical section to January 1, 1922, but without carrying any appropriation therefor.

It is assumed from this that Congress desires to continue the activities of the dye and chemical section under this act, and an emergency is thus created which will require an appropriation. As such emergency exists on account of laws enacted after the passage of the regular appropriation bills, no further explanation under section 203 (a) of the budget and accounting act seems necessary, or, indeed, possible.

Respectfully,

WARREN G. HARDING.

THE DYE INDUSTRY.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I desire to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that the dye act with the embargo feature by operation of law expires on the 27th day of August and unless the act is granted a longer life there will be no law governing the importation of dyes whatever.

In view of the fact that we are liable to have a recess or a brief adjournment in a very short time the committee thought best to report the bill (H. R. 8107) to control importations of dyes and chemicals, with an amendment which also extends the provisions of the emergency tariff bill, both to be extended until the 1st day of January, 1922, and to ask for its early consideration.

Of course, when the date of August 27 was fixed, or the three-month period for the dye embargo, it was supposed that by that time we would in all probability have effectuated legislation covering the same subject, but we will not do so, for the general tariff bill it is feared will not become a law much before the 1st day of January, 1922.

I was instructed by the committee to report the dye bill with an amendment extending the emergency tariff act and also with an amendment to include the Agricultural bill, both to cease to exist and operate on the 1st day of January, 1922, at which time in all probability we will have perfected and passed a new tariff bill.

Therefore, Mr. President, I move at this time to proceed to the consideration of House bill 8107.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I demand the regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of the opinion that the motion of the Senator from North Dakota will not be in order until morning business is closed.

Mr. McCUMBER. Very well. I desire to give notice that at the close of the morning business I shall renew the motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Petitions and memorials are in order.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. FLETCHER presented a communication from C. S. Long-acre, general international secretary Religious Liberty Association of Takoma Park, Washington, D. C., transmitting the memorial of Isidor Cohen and sundry other citizens of Miami, Fla., remonstrating against the enactment of Senate bill S. 1948, providing for compulsory Sunday observance, etc., which were referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, I wish to present a communication from a citizen of California, accompanied by certain resolutions passed by an organization of that State concerning pending legislation, and I respectfully ask that the communication and the resolution be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the communication and resolutions were referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION FOR THE RECOGNITION OF THE IRISH REPUBLIC,
CONGRESSIONAL DISTRICT COUNCIL,
Fresno, Calif., August 12, 1921.

HON. SAMUEL M. SHORTRIDGE,
United States Senator, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I most earnestly object to the passage of the Penrose bill, because the placing of such power in the hands of one man may prove disastrous to our national finance; the matter of foreign debts should be handled by Congress exclusively, and the interest and principal of these foreign debts should be paid at once.

Prudent regard for our national welfare would suggest the refusal of German Government bonds in payment of Europe's indebtedness to us.

Great Britain, our principal debtor, pleads inability to pay, although she is expending vast sums for battleship construction and the exploitation of weaker peoples, thus contributing much to the disturbance of the peace of mankind. Our ex-service heroes, who saved England from disaster, and our own liberal citizenship who furnished this money should be our first consideration.

May I ask you, therefore, to use your good offices to insist upon a prompt payment of the interest and a reasonably prompt payment of the principal of all money due us from foreign Governments, to oppose the Penrose bill and similar legislation and not to agree to any settlement such as is suggested by Great Britain until she recognizes the elected government of the republic of Ireland.

Yours, very truly,

T. E. COLLINS,
Chairman Fresno Branch A. A. R. I. R.

Resolution.

Whereas there has been introduced into the Senate of the United States the so-called Penrose bill (S. 2135) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury "to refund or convert and to extend the time of payment of the principal or the interest, or both, of any obligations now owing to the United States of America, and from time to time receive bonds and obligations of any foreign Government in substitution for those now or hereafter held by the United States of America"; and

Whereas this bill confers upon the Secretary of the Treasury greater powers than should be vested in any one man, and removes from the jurisdiction of Congress a matter which should only be settled by the Congress; and

Whereas the Government of Great Britain, although owing the United States some $5,000,000,000, which is now past due, is spending millions of dollars on battleship construction and on the furtherance of imperialistic designs throughout the world, and is giving a liberal bonus to its ex-service men, while our Government, on the plea that the condition of the Treasury will not warrant it, is unable to provide even a moderate bonus for our ex-service men:

Resolved, That the members of Fresno (Calif.) Branch of the American Association for the Recognition of the Irish Republic most vigorously oppose—

(1) Any and all suggestions made by any foreign Government or by their agents or friends in this country to cancel, refund, or reduce this indebtedness.

(2) The passage of the Penrose bill or any such legislation giving such sweeping authority to the Secretary of the Treasury in the matter of foreign loans.

Resolved, That we demand that the President and the Congress of the United States take the steps necessary to secure the prompt payment of the interest and the reasonably prompt payment of the principal of all obligations due us from foreign Governments.

Resolved, That we further demand that Congress agree to no settlement of the British debts until Great Britain recognizes the elected government of the republic of Ireland.

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be forwarded to the President of the United States and to Senator HIRAM JOHNSON and Senator SAMUEL M. SHORTRIDGE with the request that they present the resolution to Congress and have it read into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

By direction Fresno Branch, No. 33, American Association for the Recognition of the Irish Republic.

F. E. COLLINS, President.

FRESNO, CALIF., August 12, 1921.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I also hold in my hand a telegram received from Honolulu and a letter written by the sender of the telegram concerning matters of very grave importance and affecting pending legislation. As that legislation may have to do with the interests of the Hawaiian Islands, I think it would be helpful to Senators to read this communication, and I ask that it be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it will be printed in the RECORD as requested.

The telegram and letter referred to are as follows:

HONOLULU, HAWAII,
August 6, 1921.

Senator S. M. SHORTRIDGE,
Washington, D. C.:

Business outlook sugar industry bad. Shortage labor delaying harvest 1921; sugar loss enormous. Prevents proper cultivation 1922 crop; prevents planting 1923 crop. Acreage being abandoned, which means American requirement must be met by sugar raised under foreign flag; urge you support emergency labor bill now in Congress. Our efforts are to retain American control industries and islands. Want only unskilled field labor which does not compete with citizen labor. Japanese question real menace.

J. W. JONES.

HAWAIIAN EMERGENCY LABOR COMMISSION,
EXECUTIVE BUILDING, TERRITORY OF HAWAII,
Honolulu, Hawaii, August 6, 1921.

Senator SAMUEL M. SHORTRIDGE,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR SHORTRIDGE: Confirming my wire of even date herewith, your attention is invited to the serious national and industrial aspects connected with our Hawaiian situation.

We are short of labor to such an extent that our harvest of the 1921 crop is greatly delayed, and there will be a great loss of sugar. The same shortage of labor prevents proper cultivation of the 1922 crop and prevents planting for the 1923 crop.

When it is borne in mind that it takes 18 months for a crop of cane to mature and therefore there must be three crops under cultivation at the same time in order to harvest yearly, the critical financial as well as industrial situation may be readily understood when a shortage of labor exists.

The Japanese situation presents the phase that the Japanese Government always has intended to own these islands—if I am correctly informed, they have not to this day acknowledged through diplomatic channels American ownership, as was done by the other powers—and it is a fair inference from their activities during the time of the Monarchy, the Provisional Government, and the Republic to the time of annexation, when the Japanese stood on the sidewalks cursing the little band of Americans (of whom I was one) marching up the street with American flags upon receipt of the news of annexation, and from the facts developed in the various strikes of the Japanese and the insolent boasting of the Japanese here to our residents, that their intentions have not changed.

Sincerely,

J. W. JONES.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE also presented two memorials signed by 198 citizens of the State of California, remonstrating against the enactment of Senate bill 1948, providing for compulsory Sunday observance, etc.; which were referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, I have a letter and statement which I have received from the Hope Chamber of Commerce, a shipping association of my State, protesting against the high freight rates. I ask unanimous consent that it be referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce and printed in the RECORD.

The statement itself covers five shipments, two carload shipments of cantaloupes and three of peaches, and in each case it shows that the transportation company received in freight charges from 60 to 70 per cent of the entire sales price.

There being no objection, the matter was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce and ordered to be printed in the RECORD in full, as follows:

HOPE CHAMBER OF COMMERCE,
Hope, Ark., August 13, 1921.

HON. T. H. CARAWAY,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: In behalf of the farmers and truck growers in southwest Arkansas, we appeal to you for aid in procuring an immediate reduction in express and freight rates on perishable products. The extortion that is being practiced with the knowledge of the Interstate Commerce Commission is damaging to the morale of this and adjoining communities. The farmers are clamoring for a square deal. They have a right to expect some little return from their labor, yet the railroads want, and are exacting, practically the whole of the sale price of our truck crops.

The freight and express charges are simply sapping the life out of the fruit and truck industries of southwest Arkansas. Is there not some remedy for it and will you give the Arkansas farmers the benefit of your intellect and wide experience in finding that remedy? When we examine the returns on car-load shipments and find that seven-eighths of the sale price is exacted as freight toll, we are reminded that "the difference between Jesse James and the railroads is that Jesse rode a horse."

In order that you may realize the nature of our distress, I am inclosing a sheet showing returns on car lot and express shipments by local shippers.

We would greatly appreciate anything you could do for us, and assure you that there is need for immediate relief.

Very sincerely,

HOPE CHAMBER OF COMMERCE,
C. A. TUNNELL,
Secretary-Manager.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD certain resolutions, in the nature of a petition, which have been passed by the Legislature of Texas on the subject of an immediate reduction of freight-transportation rates on farm and ranch products.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The matter of printing in the RECORD communications from State legislatures is covered by the rule of the Senate, which provides that they shall be so printed. The resolutions presented by the Senator from Texas will, therefore, be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

The resolutions were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce, as follows:

House concurrent resolution 5, relating to the Interstate Commerce Commission and excessive freight rates.

Whereas the increase in all interstate freight and express rates on all railroads which was granted by the Interstate Commerce Commission has resulted in restricting the movement of all commodities, especially products of the farm and ranch; and

Whereas said freight rates are so high on many classes of freight, notably fruit and truck, as to prohibit the shipment of the same, and in many instances the value of commodities shipped is absorbed by the freight, thereby making said freight rates confiscatory and prohibitive, and entirely destroying the value of such commodities; and

Whereas said freight rates result in a reduction of the price received by the producer, an increased cost to the consumer, and a restriction of the area of distribution; and

Whereas the wages of railway employees have been reduced 12 per cent beginning July 1, 1921; and

Whereas the United States Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce is at this time considering the transportation problem: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring), That, in view of the facts as herein set forth, the Congress of the United States is earnestly requested to give the matter of freight rates most careful consideration, and the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce is respectfully urged to devote its best efforts toward an immediate reduction in freight rates on farm and ranch products; and, be it further

Resolved, That our Senators and congressional Representatives be requested to do all in their power to amend the Federal transportation act of 1920, known as the Cummins-Esch bill, so as to repeal the features wherein encroachments are made upon the proper supervision and jurisdiction of the railroad commission of Texas; and that a copy of these resolutions be sent to each Senator and Representative in Congress from Texas.

CHAS. G. THOMAS,
Speaker of the House.
JNO. H. BAILEY,
President of the Senate.

I certify that house concurrent resolution 5 was adopted by the house July 21, 1921.

C. L. PHINNEY,
Chief Clerk of the House.

I certify that house concurrent resolution 5 was adopted by the senate August 10, 1921.

W. V. HOWERTON,
Secretary of the Senate.

Mr. NELSON presented the memorial of R. G. Champlin and sundry other citizens of Vernon Center, Minn., remonstrating against the enactment of Senate bill 2135, to enable the refunding of obligations of foreign Governments owing to the United States of America, etc., which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CAPPER presented a petition of sundry citizens of Beattie and Home, both in the State of Kansas, praying for the recognition of the republic of Ireland by the Government of the United States, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

SPECIAL REPORT ON FLORIDA SEMINOLES.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I desire to present a special report on the Florida Seminoles by Capt. Lucien A. Spencer, special commissioner to the Seminoles. I want to have it printed as a Senate document, but perhaps it should first go to the Committee on Printing. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Printing.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS.

Mr. WADSWORTH, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 29) authorizing the Secretary of War to grant to Lloyd E. Gandy, of Spokane, Wash., his heirs and assigns, the right to overflow certain lands on the Fort George Wright Military Reservation, at Spokane, Wash., on such terms and conditions with respect to improvements to be made on the present target range as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War, or in lieu of such improvements to be made on the present target range the Secretary of War may accept a conveyance to the United States of such other lands to be designated by the Secretary of War as may be deemed suitable for a target range in exchange for such overflow lands; that to facilitate the acquisition of the necessary additional lands the Secretary of War is authorized to condemn land necessary and suitable for target-range purposes, such condemnation to be at the expense of said Lloyd E. Gandy, grantee, his heirs and assigns, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 262) thereon.

Mr. FLETCHER, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 2138) providing that the Government property known as the St. Francis Barracks, at St. Augustine, Fla., be donated to the State of Florida for military purposes, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 263) thereon.

COMPILATIONS OF TREATIES, CONVENTIONS, ETC.

Mr. LODGE. I report back favorably from the Committee on Foreign Relations with amendments the resolution submitted by me on the 10th instant, and I ask for its present consideration.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution.

The amendments were, on page 1, line 7, to strike out "from" and insert "since"; and, in line 8, after the numerals "1910," to strike out the words "to June 30, 1921, inclusive," so as to make the resolution read:

Resolved, That there be prepared, under the direction of the Committee on Foreign Relations, a revised supplement to the compilation entitled "Treaties, Conventions, International Acts, and Protocols Between the United States and Other Powers, 1776-1909," to include treaties, conventions, important protocols, and international acts to which the United States may have been a party since January 1, 1910.

The amendments were agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED.

Bill and joint resolutions were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. WATSON of Georgia (for Mr. HARRIS):

A bill (S. 2430) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the St. Marys River, at or near Wilds Landing Ferry, between Camden County, Ga., and Nassau County, Fla.; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. CALDER:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 105) to change the rate of compensation paid to stenographers to committees of the Senate; to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

By Mr. HEFLIN:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 107) to regulate the speed limit of automobiles and other motor vehicles in front of the Capitol in the District of Columbia; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. BRANDEGEE:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 108) authorizing the erection on public grounds in the city of Washington, D. C., of a memorial to Jeanne d'Arc; to the Committee on the Library.

RELIEF OF DISTRESS IN RUSSIA.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I introduce a joint resolution, which I desire to read and make just one observation. It will take only a moment.

Resolved, etc., That the President is hereby authorized to take from any surplus drugs, medicines, and medical supplies of his selection and of the value of $5,000,000 from the medical stores of the War Department and use and apply the same for the relief of sick and suffering people in Russia. The value of said supplies, to wit, the sum of $5,000,000, shall be credited to the War Department and charged against the appropriation of such supplies authorized by this act, and for this purpose this act shall be regarded as an act appropriating $5,000,000 for the purchase of such medical supplies.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 104) authorizing the President to use Army medical supplies for the relief of famine sufferers in Russia was read twice by its title.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I add just one sentence? The word which we are receiving from authoritative sources in Russia shows the catastrophe which is overwhelming the people of that unhappy land. Millions are dying from starvation and millions are in need of drugs and medicine and medical supplies. I am advised that the War Department has a considerable surplus supply of medical stores. This resolution merely provides that $5,000,000 worth of those supplies shall be sold, to be used by the President of the United States in Russia, and an appropriation shall be carried covering the amount.

It will really be a matter of bookkeeping. The War Department will get credit for $5,000,000 and the corresponding charges will be made upon the books of the Treasury Department.

I move that the joint resolution be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The motion was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OF TARIFF BILL.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McNARY) submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to House bill 7456, the tariff bill, which was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed.

RAILWAY ADJUSTMENT.

Mr. TOWNSEND. From the Committee on Interstate Commerce I report back favorably with amendments the bill (S. 2337) to amend the transportation act of 1920, and for other purposes, and I submit a report (No. 261) thereon.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, that report was not presented to the committee and I have had no opportunity to examine it. I therefore ask leave to file a minority report, if I should desire to do so, within the next three days.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, leave will be granted.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, may I ask if it is the intention of those in charge of the railroad bill to urge its passage prior to the recess?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I recognize the fact that there are measures pending before the Senate which must be disposed of. I assume that the Senate is going to determine for itself whether it will dispose of the road bill, which, I trust, will be done this morning in a very few moments. I understand that notice has been given to call up after that the emergency deficiency appropriation bill and the bill for the extension of the emergency tariff act. I understand also that the Senate has practically agreed to the proposition that a bill relating to agricultural credits, which passed the House and the Senate and is now in the House with the Senate amendments, must be finally considered before the Senate adjourns.

I desire to call up the so-called railroad bill or funding bill, which I have just reported from the committee, at the very earliest opportunity. I have not considered the question whether all this work can be done or whether the road bill can be considered before the recess or not. That proposition I have not considered. I am instructed, and am inclined to follow the instruction, to call the bill up at the very earliest practicable opportunity.

Mr. BORAH. We have passed a resolution to adjourn next Wednesday. Manifestly we could not pass any railroad bill, and ought not to undertake to pass any railroad bill, between now and next Wednesday. Manifestly, too, we would not undertake to pass that kind of a bill when we are running shy of a quorum about every two hours. I only wish to say that if there is going to be an effort to pass this bill there will have to be a full Senate or a reasonably full Senate. I do not mean to pass upon the merits or demerits of this bill, but it is an important measure. I want it considered under circumstances which will permit of proper and wise consideration.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the other evening when the executive session had closed and the Senate had gone back into legislative session for the purpose of adjournment, I gave notice that I would move to reconsider the vote by which the Senate had agreed to adjourn on Wednesday next unless I could receive assurance that no effort would be made to jam through this railroad measure. I did receive such assurances as were satisfactory to me, and so I did not press the motion.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, if the Senator from Utah will yield—

Mr. KING. Certainly.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I know of no disposition on the part of anybody to jam through the railroad legislation. Nobody has suggested such a thought to me. It is legislation that some of us believe ought to be enacted. I understand, I think, as well as anybody that if we are to recess on Wednesday next we can not give the bill the consideration to which it is entitled, but it is possible that the House may not agree to the proposed recess. That has not yet been decided. I have made the report as all other reports are made.

I consider it of very great importance and of as urgent necessity as I do other measures, and I repeat to the Senator that I have no disposition, and I know of no other Senator who has a disposition, to jam legislation through. In fact, I do not know of any way to jam legislation through the Senate.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I did not use the word "jam" offensively. I used it in connection with my efforts to secure an understanding that the bill would not be called up for consideration or passage during the period between now and the time when we shall take a recess. Of course the measure is so important that it will take a very long time—perhaps weeks—properly to consider it.

I wish to say to my friend from Michigan that I regret very much that full hearings were not had and that further testimony, that might have elucidated somewhat more fully other phases of the matter, was not presented to the Senate. It is to be hoped that between now and the time when Congress again meets we shall have further enlightenment and further facts presented to the Senate upon this very important question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further morning business?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I should like to say, Mr. President, while this matter is receiving the attention of the Senate, that I believe that this bill should be returned to the Committee on Interstate Commerce with an order from the Senate that it investigate this subject and receive the testimony of witnesses in opposition to this bill who desire to be heard and who ought to be heard if the Senate is to be fully advised as to its merits. At the proper time I may submit a motion of that kind to the Senate. For the first time, I think, in the history of Congress hearings were had upon one side only, namely, those who were promoting the passage of the bill for extending the credit of the Government to the railroads to the tune of hundreds of millions of dollars, and the committee by a vote of those who are in favor of the bill refused the testimony from others who were opposed to the passage of the bill. That is a matter of such grave importance, establishing as it does a bad precedent, that I think it should receive the condemnation of the Senate.

No committee is more than the mere servant of the Senate. It is for the Senate to say what information it wants in reference to proposed legislation; and I am very certain that the Senate of the United States has not yet reached the time when it is willing to consider a bill upon a lopsided investigation of facts. I believe the Senate wants all proposed legislation thoroughly investigated by its committees. If hearings are to be held, not only should the facts and opinions presented by those who favor the legislation be taken, but the facts and opinions of those who oppose the proposed legislation should likewise be received. This ought to be the rule if the Senate is to be truly helped by committee investigations and committee hearings upon proposed legislation.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I dislike very much now to enter into this discussion. All these points will later be discussed in full. The committee acted in such a manner that it may properly defend its action. It did refuse to go into what it considered extraneous matters, but did not deny itself or the Senate any hearings which it thought were pertinent to the particular question that we had under consideration. All this, however, will be discussed later.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Have the hearings been printed to which reference has been made?

Mr. TOWNSEND. They have. Is morning business closed, Mr. President?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further morning business? If not, morning business is closed.

INTERSTATE HIGHWAY SYSTEM.

Mr. TOWNSEND. The morning business now having been closed, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment reported by the Senate Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads to the amendment of the House of Representatives to Senate bill 1072 be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. McCUMBER. A moment ago I gave notice that at the conclusion of the routine morning business I would move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8107) to control importations of dyes and chemicals, but the Senator from Michigan informs me that the bill which has been the unfinished business has reached a stage in which there is likely to be a vote upon it at any time, thus disposing of the matter. I wish to state, however, that upon the disposition of the road bill I shall move that the Senate take up House bill 8107.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I made a request for unanimous consent to have the unfinished business laid before the Senate.

Mr. KING. A parliamentary inquiry. Is the matter referred to by the Senator from Michigan before the Senate, Mr. President?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. By unanimous consent, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the amendment of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1072) to amend the act entitled "An act to provide that the United States shall aid the States in the construction of rural post roads, and for other purposes," approved July 11, 1916, as amended and supplemented, and for other purposes.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum being suggested, the Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Caraway	Hale	Kellogg
Borah	Culberson	Harrell	Kenyon
Brandegee	Curtis	Harrison	King
Broussard	Dillingham	Hedin	Knox

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to announce the absence of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE], on account of official business. I will ask that this announcement stand for the day.

I also desire to announce the absence of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES], on account of a death in his family.

Mr. SIMMONS. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. OVERMAN] is unavoidably absent from the Senate.

Mr. HARRISON. I desire to announce the absence of the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY], on account of illness.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-seven Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present. The Secretary will state the pending amendment to the amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The pending amendment is that offered by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW], on page 17, line 18, in the amendment reported by the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads to strike out "$100,000,000" and in lieu thereof to insert "$75,000,000."

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President—

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, we were in the midst of the roll call when the Senate adjourned last evening.

Mr. LODGE. There is nothing in order but a continuation of the roll call. There is a roll call pending. On the call of the roll last evening the presence of a quorum was not disclosed.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. HEFLIN. At the last session of the Senate the roll call was in progress when the Senate adjourned because we did not have a quorum. Does not that vacate the roll call and leave the matter open before the Senate for discussion this morning?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The present occupant of the chair thinks it does not. The Secretary will call the roll on the amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana to the amendment reported by the committee.

The reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CALDER (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. FRANCE] and vote "yea."

Mr. CARAWAY (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. MCKINLEY]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. DIAL] and vote "nay."

So Mr. New's amendment to the amendment reported by the committee was agreed to.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The Assistant Secretary read as follows:

I move to amend by striking out the figures "$5,000,000" in line 6, section 26, page 20, and substituting therefor the figures "$2,500,000"; to strike out the figures "$10,000,000" in line 8, same section and page, and to substitute therefor the figures "$5,000,000"; and to strike out the words and figures "but not to exceed $3,000,000" in line 10, page 20, section 26.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, what page does this amendment refer to?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Page 20, the section beginning on line 3.

Mr. NEW. It is the section relating to forest trails.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may we have the amendment stated again? Some of us did not have the committee amendment before us at the time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will restate the amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On line 6, page 20, section 26, strike out the figures "$5,000,000" and substitute therefor "$2,500,000."

On line 8, strike out the figures "$10,000,000" and substitute therefor "$5,000,000."

On line 10, page 20, strike out the words and figures "but not to exceed $3,000,000."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, this amendment merely cuts in half the appropriation made for the building of forest trails, and I do not think there is serious objection to that on the part of the committee itself. Of course, I am not speaking for the committee; I have no authority to do that; but I think the amendment is one that can well be adopted, under the circumstances.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I think there is very serious objection on the part of the committee to a reduction in these items.

During the last fiscal year, ending June 30, there was a $3,000,000 appropriation for this work plus the $1,000,000 a year theretofore appropriated under previous laws. There is not any doubt but that the national forests of the country are entitled to proper protection. The people who live adjacent to those forest reserves are also entitled to some consideration in passing through the forests. I do not believe there ever has been an adequate appropriation for this particular item.

The part which the Senator from Indiana proposes to strike out, namely, "not to exceed $3,000,000," would, in my judgment, materially interfere with the plans which the committee had in mind. We made this appropriation of $5,000,000 for next year for the purpose of aiding in the construction of roads and trails through the forests and in the forests for their protection, for the protection of the property, and for the benefit of the people who live adjacent to the forests.

The States themselves are not able and they ought not to be required to build all of these roads. In fact, they are not permitted to do so under the law. We make that especial provision, "not to exceed $3,000,000," to be expended by the Secretary of Agriculture, for the benefit of the people who live adjacent to the forests, and it is a provision that tends to carry out the purpose of this bill, namely, to get an efficient system of roads.

Furthermore, Mr. President, we have not given the public-land States, or the States that contain these forests, any benefit under the special provision we have made for the division of the money in the public-land States. That is, we have not allowed them under the rule of apportionment to count the area of the public forests in the particular fraction or subdivision that we make for the benefit of the public-land States.

Therefore it seemed to us—and I think it will to you if you understand the proposition correctly—that we ought to make this special provision for the national forests, for these trails for the protection of the Government property, worth billions, throughout the whole United States. It seemed to us that we were doing as little as we could afford to do in providing for these trails and roads through the forests, and we owe a duty to the people living adjacent to the forests that we shall furnish them with reasonably acceptable facilities for traveling from one part of the State to another, in the course of which journey these forests are an obstacle.

Now, Mr. President, just a word more, because I do not want to occupy the time of the Senate unduly.

This $5,000,000 increases what the Forest Service actually had last year by $1,000,000. Last year it had the $1,000,000, and the authorization for that will expire in 1926. It will have that amount next year. We are appropriating for this purpose $3,000,000, which will expire on June 30, and that provision is no longer operative.

Now, we have provided $5,000,000, which makes an increase of $2,000,000 for this purpose, and make provision that it shall be divided by the Forest Service and the Department of Agriculture, which is looking after the roads we are providing for here. It may be divided so that not to exceed half of it, or $3,000,000, shall be devoted to this particular purpose of road building.

There may be some question, Mr. President, as to whether we ought to make provision for two years. We do not do that in reference to the roads, but we did put in the $10,000,000 for next year, because we believed that the system of protection, to be properly carried out, should have a two-year total. Therefore we put that in for the benefit of the public lands.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I want to say a word in regard to this amendment. I do not know whether the able Senator from Indiana is entirely familiar with the situation which confronts us in the Western States.

I may be in error as to the exact per cent, but it was only a short time ago when, according to my recollection, 79 per cent of the State of Idaho was withdrawn from public entry and dedicated to eternal silence. It is under the control of the National Government. The management of it and caring for it are under the National Government. It is withdrawn from taxation. Our State is getting along by taxing the small percentage of the entire area of the State which remains after this immense area has been withdrawn. In a State which has 79 per cent of its land withdrawn from public entry, and the State compelled to find taxes from the other part of it, the Senator from Indiana can see in what position we are left out there to take care of our public roads and everything else.

Not only that, Mr. President, but unless these forests are penetrated by public roads, and unless methods are provided for by which they can be easily crossed and recrossed, there is not only a great loss year by year to the National Government by reason of fire but there is a constant menace to all the communities anywhere near the forests.

I did not anticipate that this was coming up for discussion, but I would like to see the Senator familiar with the loss which year by year has followed since the creation of the forest reserves by reason of fire, and the report is to the effect that that loss must continue unless these roads are built, and methods are provided by which the forests in this way can be at least better protected.

So I say, Mr. President, that so long as the National Government withholds these lands from entry, so long as it withholds them from taxation, so long as they are a menace to the communities by reason of the danger which they constantly carry, the National Government ought to see to it that they are taken care of in a proper way.

Unless that is done, as I have said, not only does the National Government lose much more than is involved in this appropriation year by year, but the different communities lose by reason of the danger.

Mr. WARREN. The loss is many times this appropriation.

Mr. BORAH. As is well said by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN], the loss is many, many times this appropriation. We are informed that the reason they can not be protected is because of the want of roads, and so on, and I beg the Senator from Indiana to consider that before he urges this amendment, because I think that, as a matter of fact, it would be a very serious mistake to adopt the amendment.

If the National Government is growing weary of taking care of the national forests, or if it has come to the conclusion that the expense is too great, all the Western States ask of the National Government is to turn the lands loose, and we will take care of them; we will build roads, and we will build homes, and we will reduce the land to taxation, and build Commonwealths, such as is contemplated under our theory of Government. It amounts to a condemnation of a State, to an inhibition against growth and progress and against the education, security, and happiness of the people of a State to withdraw vast areas, cut off taxation, and then leave the withdrawn areas in such condition that they are a menace to the property and lives of the people.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, it is really unnecessary for me to say a word, or for anyone to say a word, after the masterful arguments which have been made against this amendment. The Senator from Michigan, the chairman of the committee, who doubtless does not have many national forests in his State—

Mr. TOWNSEND. None that will receive any benefit under this.

Mr. ASHURST. None, the Senator says. He has exhibited here this morning a width and breadth of statesmanship of which I am very proud. He has taken the broad, national view of the question, followed and supplemented by the able argument of the Senator from Idaho.

Let me ask Senators to reflect for a moment upon the State of Arizona, with 11,000 square miles of national forests, and a great many Senators believe that in those national forests cattle and sheep are free commoners, and may be taken there if the flock masters wish to take them there. Not so at all. When you take your sheep or cattle into a national forest you pay the Federal Government a very high price per annum to go upon those forest lands.

You withhold those immense domains in our State from settlement and cultivation. You make our citizens pay extortionate sums for the privilege of taking their cattle and sheep thereon, and you fine and imprison our citizens who go without a permit on those forest domains. Yet we are to be deprived of this just appropriation for building roads and trails through those forests.

This provision in the bill providing for an adequate appropriation to build trails and roads in the forests is granted in appreciation of the abuses under which we labor; granted, in a manner, to compensate those States because of the oppressions under which they are placed by the administration of these forests. This is a good bill now, I think; it is a splendid bill, because the forestry question is taken care of, as well as the interstate roads.

Last year alone there was paid to the Federal Government as fees for grazing live stock on these national forests $2,000,000, paid by our citizens who temporarily grazed their sheep and cattle thereupon. It is not like the great Mississippi Valley and the plains of 40 or 50 years ago, when sheep and cattle were free commoners and could go as they pleased. Now we are reduced to a system somewhat like that which obtains in the Black Forest of Germany or the tenant system of Ireland, where they pay to go upon the land. Yet, under the amendment proposed by my distinguished friend from Indiana, the appropriation is to be cut in two, and that condition, which has been almost intolerable in the Western States, is to be perpetuated.

I again congratulate the Senator from Michigan on his broad view of this important question, and the cause of the Western States can rest on his argument alone, if necessary.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, the Senator from Idaho and the Senator from Arizona appeal to me, as Senators residing in States where there are forest reserves, to withdraw this amendment, on the ground that the money to be spent in accordance with the provisions of the bill as drawn is to be spent in the general interest of protection against forest fires.

Mr. President, I think both Senators may reasonably appeal to me on that score. I doubt if either of them, having been raised in the West, as they have, have spent more time in the forests, and know more about fires and the devastation they have wrought in this country, or have suffered more pecuniarily as the result of them, than I have.

Mr. President, there is not a line in this section, as I read it, which indicates that the money is to be spent for that purpose. I do not think anybody will find a line or a suggestion in that section indicating that the money is to be spent for that purpose. I fully agree with all that both Senators say about the necessity of making ample provision against forest fires. It is absolutely true that not only in the States they represent but in many others we have suffered, and suffered enormously, as a result of forest fires, and upon the assurance of the Senator from Michigan that that is the purpose—

Mr. TOWNSEND. If the Senator will yield, I will state that we already have a law on this subject, and the object of forest roads and trails is for the protection of the forests. That is what they are used for. We have a force of foresters who go out into the forests. It is for the purpose—and there is no other purpose—of allowing that protection to be efficient that roads and trails are necessary through the forests.

Mr. NEW. I quite understand that, Mr. President, from long experience of my own, and with the understanding that this money is to be expended with that primary object in view, I withdraw the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the withdrawal of the amendment? The Chair hears none, and the amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. NEW. Before I conclude, Mr. President, permit me to say that my attention has been called to the fact—at least I think it is a fact—that in the amendment which was adopted a short time ago reducing the amount of the general appropriation from $100,000,000 to $75,000,000 a further provision should be made by striking out the figures "$50,000,000," in line 19, page 17, and inserting in lieu thereof "$25,000,000."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. In section 23, page 17, line 19, strike out "$50,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$25,000,000."

Mr. NEW. That is right.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I supposed that was included in the other.

Mr. NEW. I thought so, too; but it appears not to have been.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. NEW. I wish to merely add, before taking my seat, that that merely completes the amendment which was adopted a little while ago, and is necessary for its completion. Now I yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. McCORMICK. Before we turn from the first paragraph of section 26 will the Senator from Michigan explain why it is necessary to appropriate not only $5,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, which is proper enough, but also an additional sum for the ensuing fiscal year?

Mr. TOWNSEND. The reason which actuated the committee in carrying an appropriation for next year, as well as this year, was that the forests had been neglected—there is no doubt about that—and in talking this matter over with the Forest Service, which I think is a conscientious service and doing a great work, while they indicated that they believed they could get along with $5,000,000 additional this year, and, of course, could get along with whatever is apportioned to them, they made a showing to us that was very convincing that if they could have the prospect of a $10,000,000 additional appropriation they could give very much more protection to the valuable forests of this country than they could if it were simply limited to one year.

Mr. McCORMICK. The Senator means that the area is so great that in the development of their plans they must know what they can have in a certain time?

Mr. TOWNSEND. That is the idea of the committee and of the service.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Indiana to the committee amendment.

Mr. HEFLIN. I thought he had withdrawn that.

Mr. TOWNSEND. No; the Senator from Indiana makes a motion merely to reduce the $50,000,000 to $25,000,000, in accordance with the reduction of the total appropriation to $75,000,000. That means that $25,000,000 are to be expended for the first six months and $50,000,000 for the second six months. The Bureau of Public Roads has just informed the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] that that can be done without embarrassing the road operation for this year. We have reduced the total appropriation by $25,000,000 and now we cut that $25,000,000 from the first $50,000,000 that is to be expended out of money now on hand.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I wish to make an appeal to the Senator from Indiana against reducing the amount immediately available as low as $25,000,000.

Mr. LODGE. The total amount has been reduced $25,000,000.

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes; I know the total amount has been so reduced, but I am speaking about the amount that is immediately available. I regret very much that we did reduce the total amount. That has been reduced to $75,000,000, and now the proposition of the Senator from Indiana is to make only $25,000,000 of that immediately available and the other $50,000,000 available in six months from the date of the passage of the bill.

I wish to say to the Senator from Indiana that while there is an unexpended balance of former appropriations for road work, every dollar of that unexpended balance, as I am advised, has been contracted for, so that there is now no fund for the making of future contracts. Therefore the $25,000,000 which would be made available now is the only sum that could be used in making contracts for future work. The road building must be done by contracts. Those contracts anticipate the future and provide for the work of months, probably six months in advance. Twenty-five million dollars distributed among the 48 States would provide very little money upon which to base future contracts.

I hope the Senator will be a little more liberal toward road construction and divide this sum of $75,000,000 something like equally. Let half of it, or, say, $35,000,000 of it, be immediately available and the balance available six months from the date of the passage of the bill. I ask if the Senator does not think that would be justified under the circumstances?

Mr. NEW. No; Mr. President, I can not accord the request of the Senator from North Carolina, much as I regret to have to refuse it. In my judgment it would be impossible to expend judiciously more than $25,000,000, which the amendment proposes to make immediately available during the rest of the road-building season. We have, then, six months hence, $50,000,000 more available for the making of contracts, and they can certainly be made with that fact in mind. I think that to make $25,000,000 immediately available, in addition to the very considerable unexpended balance now in the Treasury, will suffice for the immediate needs. I do not know just what that balance is.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I may say that I have made inquiry and ascertained that the balance of Federal money to be expended this year is $130,000,000.

Mr. NEW. To be expended this year?

Mr. TOWNSEND. During the year 1921.

Mr. NEW. During the year 1921. $130,000,000. Does not the Senator from North Carolina think that answers the objection which he raises?

Mr. SIMMONS. I did not understand the statement of the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. TOWNSEND. It appears there is about $130,000,000 of Federal money now on hand to be expended this year. That has been practically all assigned, but it has not been expended. It will cover the work that will be performed during this year. We are adding $25,000,000 to that sum. It would suit me if the Senator would amend the six months' proposition by making it available on January 1 next, so it would come within the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, instead of saying the balance shall be expended after six months. The bill has been pending for some time. I would just as soon have it stated that the balance of $50,000,000 shall become available on January 1 next.

Mr. SIMMONS. That would be better than nothing. I would be glad if that could be done.

Mr. TOWNSEND. This will not embarrass the road program at all, as the Senator will discover if he will confer with the Bureau of Good Roads. This amount of money will care for the whole situation in a reasonably satisfactory manner.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator is willing that the $50,000,000 shall become available on the 1st of January, 1922?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Yes.

Mr. NEW. I think we have found something that we were not looking for in the shape of the statement that there is $130,000,000 of unexpended balance.

Mr. TOWNSEND. It is all assigned, and the work on the contracts already let has not yet been completed, of course.

Mr. NEW. I have no doubt it is all assigned and that any other sum that we appropriate will be very quickly assigned, but I think that revelation should disabuse the minds of Senators of the thought that there is any danger of embarrassment to the road-building department.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Michigan will not accept the proposed amendment fixing January 1, 1922. That will fall within the present fiscal year, and I wish to say to the Senator from Michigan that we have about all the obligations that we can possibly meet during the present fiscal year.

Mr. TOWNSEND. How does that come within this fiscal year?

Mr. SMOOT. The fiscal year ends June 30, 1922.

Mr. TOWNSEND. What is six months from to-day?

Mr. SMOOT. Six months from to-day would be in February, but that would be in this fiscal year also.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Would not the other provision be within the same time?

Mr. SMOOT. As I understood the Senator, it is to be divided into two six-month periods.

Mr. TOWNSEND. No; $25,000,000 is immediately available upon the passage of the act and $50,000,000 six months from the date of the passage of the act.

Mr. SMOOT. I thought it was a year.

Mr. TOWNSEND. No; it is all the same proposition.

Mr. SMOOT. It would make no difference at all so far as that is concerned either one way or the other. It is only a difference of a month.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW]. [Putting the question.] The ayes seem to have it. The ayes have it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I rose before the question was put and was trying my best to attract the attention of the Chair without screaming. The amendment has been declared carried?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then the topic of my conversation has ceased to exist.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment to section 8, upon which the Senate spent so much time yesterday, to be found at the bottom of page 7 of the bill. The section now reads:

That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to transfer to the Secretary of Agriculture upon his request all surplus war material, equipment, and supplies not needed for the purposes of the War Department but suitable for use in the improvement of highways—

And so forth.

I move to amend by inserting, after the word "supplies," at the end of line 23, the words "now on hand and," so that it will read:

That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to transfer to the Secretary of Agriculture upon his request all surplus war material, equipment, and supplies now on hand and not needed for the purposes of the War Department but suitable for use in the improvement of highways—

And so forth.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, how does that differ from the amendment offered yesterday by the Senator? The Senator offered an amendment then that was voted down.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I moved then to strike out the entire section. If the words which I suggest are not inserted it means that a continuing policy over an indefinite period of time is established that whenever the War Department has anything surplus which may be considered as useful for roads it shall be turned over free of charge to the States. We have discussed this provision. Of course, I am opposed to it, but my contention was roundly beaten yesterday. I do ask that the Senate confine it to those materials which the War Department now has on hand.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I understand from the reading of the bill, and certainly the committee had in mind, that that referred to surplus war materials, just as it states. The Senator contends that any future supplies bought during the time of peace—

Mr. WADSWORTH. I contend that they are war supplies, certainly. They are purchased by the War Department for use of the troops potentially in war.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Every provision that we have ever had for this purpose had reference to the surplus materials that were bought in consequence of the war.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I want to have it nailed down, so that we may understand exactly what it means.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. HEFLIN. If this amendment is agreed to, the road departments in the various States can only share in the surplus supplies which the Government now has on hand. If other camps are abandoned hereafter and other motor trucks, explosives, and so forth, are brought in, under the proposed amendment the road departments of the States can not get such material.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yielded for a question, but the Senator is making a statement in my time. The Senator is mistaken. If he will look at the language, if he has a copy of the bill before him, he will see that it reads:

All surplus material, equipment, and supplies not needed for the purpose of the War Department.

Mr. HEFLIN. "Now on hand."

Mr. WADSWORTH. The camps are now on hand, are they not? The materials are now on hand, are they not?

Mr. HEFLIN. They are now on hand, but they are being used and have not been declared to be surplus materials.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It does not make any difference if they are now on hand.

Mr. HEFLIN. But later on the War Department will say this camp was abandoned after the bill was passed and therefore the materials are not subject to be distributed.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I think the Senator understood this matter as I do and as every member of the committee did. What we were seeking to do was to make available the surplus material that was good for road building, that was on hand and had been purchased as the result of the war. We had a lot of war material all over the United States. We wanted to utilize that surplus war material for road building. If the construction should be placed on this that any material which the War Department might purchase in the future in the ordinary operation of that department should be turned over, I do not think any of us would concede that we had considered it in that light.

I wish to confine this, as I think it was the intention of the committee, to the material that was purchased because of the late war and that is on hand now and not necessary for the operation of the War Department.

Mr. HEFLIN. That is the very material to which I have reference, which now may be in use in camps that have not yet been abandoned, but which may be abandoned. The Secretary of War would probably make the contention that those were supplies on hand at the time this bill passed, and I fear that under the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York we could not then distribute war materials which might come in hereafter from abandoned camps.

Mr. WADSWORTH. In order to disabuse the Senator of that idea I should like to change the form of my amendment so that the language will read:

All war material, equipment, and supplies now or hereafter declared to be surplus and not needed—

And so forth.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that the Senator from New York desires to modify his amendment.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I do, by striking out of line 23 the word "surplus" where it occurs after the word "all" and inserting, after the word "supplies," at the end of the line, the words "now or hereafter declared to be surplus and from stock now on hand and."

Mr. HEFLIN. I have no objection to that.

Mr. WADSWORTH. So that it will read:

Transfer to the Secretary of Agriculture upon his request all war material, equipment, or supplies now or hereafter declared to be surplus and from stock now on hand and not needed—

And so forth.

Mr. HEFLIN. I have no objection to that.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I think that is all right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend so as to read:

Now or hereafter declared to be surplus and from stock now on hand and not needed.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I have no objection to that amendment, because I think it states the clear intent of the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, since this section is now under consideration, I desire to ask unanimous consent to have placed in the RECORD two letters which have come to me this morning from the Bureau of Public Roads. Senators will recall that in the discussion during the last two days criticism has been indulged in with reference to the conduct of that bureau in connection with sending material out to the different States. I think everyone is entitled to his day in court, and I therefore ask unanimous consent to have these two communications from the Bureau of Public Roads printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letters referred to are as follows:

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE, BUREAU OF PUBLIC ROADS,
Washington, D. C., August 19, 1921.

HON. FRANK B. WILLIS,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR WILLIS: Having reference to the discussion concerning the distribution of war equipment to Ohio, the impression created as to the use of surplus materials by the State of Ohio should be cleared up by placing the following facts in the RECORD:

1. This bureau holds a certificate by former Commissioner A. R. Taylor, dated March 26, 1920, requesting a large number of items specified for delivery under the act of March 15, 1920. Among other items the request includes 2,000 feet rubber hose and 500 feet steam hose.

2. The allotments to the State made by the bureau are taken directly from the certificate made by the commissioner, but we have to rely upon the inventories and specifications furnished by the War Department. Our records show that no materials or equipment have been shipped to the State of Ohio which had not been previously requested by the proper officials of the State highway department. It is undoubtedly true in Ohio, as it is in all of the other 47 States, that more or less material either in unserviceable condition or not corresponding to the specifications of the inventories has been shipped by the War Department. The Department of Agriculture does not make the shipments to the States. All shipments are made by the War Department.

3. As illustrative of the value that is being received by the State of Ohio from this equipment, two exhibits are submitted, as follows:

(a) Mr. C. H. Lindsay, in charge of securing all equipment for the State of Ohio, advised the bureau that because of the failure of contractors to complete contract for Federal-aid road between Cleveland and Columbus, it was necessary for the State to take over the work and to supply equipment estimated to cost about $270,000. It was possible from the equipment delivered to the State to obtain approximately $251,000 worth of the necessary equipment, leaving only $19,000 to be spent for new equipment.

(b) A letter written by Robert N. Waid, deputy highway commissioner, under date of May 17, 1921, sets forth in detail the immense value the war surplus has been to the State.

There is no evidence to show that the State of Ohio has not utilized all equipment in such a manner as to secure a very large value from it. Certainly the public has received greater value than had this material passed into the hands of speculators and junk dealers. The matter of disposing of this surplus property is really a big salvaging operation, and the problem is to secure the greatest possible value from this surplus for the taxpayers.

Very truly, yours,

THOS. H. MACDONALD,
Chief of Bureau.

STATE OF OHIO,
STATE HIGHWAY DEPARTMENT,
Columbus, May 17, 1921.

MR. THOMAS H. MACDONALD,
United States Office of Public Roads,
Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Word has recently been received in this department to the effect that the policy of distributing road-building machinery to the various States may be discontinued. Unquestionably such a step would work a serious hardship on our proposed program here in Ohio.

During the past two years road building has been slowed up to a large extent due to war conditions. This is especially true of maintenance, as what little material could be secured and what labor could be had was usually secured by the contractors who were able to take advantage of their knowledge of local conditions. It is planned during the present season to catch up with our maintenance program. The large amount of motor equipment which has been allotted to us is being utilized to do our own hauling on all projects on both construction and maintenance where the work is not let by contract. The 10-ton tractors are being fitted out with heavy graders and ditch machinery to cover all our roads and make sure that ditches are put in first-class condition. Also, a fleet of them is being equipped with trailer wagons to use in connection with the camps where we propose to utilize prison labor. Cast-iron pipe, pumps, engines, fence posts, metal sheeting, and all such supplies are being utilized in many different ways and permit of our doing a large amount of work by force account. This is especially advantageous in our maintenance program, where it is next to impossible to specify the work for a contract.

We are still in need of such equipment as concrete mixers, steam shovels, air compressors, small tools, machine-shop units and supplies, additional motor equipment and accessories, camping outfits and other equipment of a similar nature.

To now stop the distribution of this equipment, which is being utilized for replacement and for enlarging our operations, would make necessary an entire change in our plans and mode of operation and would seriously curtail the program of road building and adequate maintenance at a time when it appears that our goal of serviceable roads throughout the entire State is about to be realized.

We earnestly trust that the policy of distributing surplus war supplies may not only be continued but may be extended to include other much-needed road-building equipment.

Yours, very truly,

ROBERT N. WAID,
Deputy Highway Commissioner.

Mr. WADSWORTH. May I call the attention of the Senator from Michigan and other Senators, if they are interested, to section 20 of the amendment? I do not do it in a hostile spirit, but in order to get a little better understanding of what the policy is to be. As I understand from that section, the Secretary of Agriculture may file a notice with any Cabinet officer who has jurisdiction over public lands to the effect that he would like to have portions of those public lands transferred to a State highway department to be used either as a right of way for a highway or as a source of materials, and if the Secretary who receives the notice or the application or the requisition from the Secretary of Agriculture does not within a period of four months decline on the ground of public interest to make the transfer, the transfer takes place automatically. This language is used.

Such land and materials may be appropriated and transferred to the State highway department for such purposes and subject to the conditions so specified.

From the legal standpoint, what does that amount to in the matter of the transfer of the title? Can the land be subject to taxation by the State?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I think that the legal effect would be for the department that has charge of such lands to transfer them under the authority granted to the department of roads in each particular State where they are needed, and that when the purpose for which they are turned over shall have been served, then they would go back to the department. I do not think it would even be necessary to execute a deed for their transfer if the consent of the department were obtained to use the lands for the purpose of obtaining material such as gravel or clay or for any similar purpose for which it would be necessary to use the land in the construction of roads by the State. When the need for the use of the lands for road purposes shall cease, they will go back to the department. If there were objection on the part of the department to the use of the lands for such purposes, the department could file its objections and state that such use would interfere with the purpose for which the reserves were originally created, and that would end the matter. The section will operate simply as permission to a particular department to allow the road department in a particular State to use certain lands for road purposes, and when the lands shall cease to be useful for those purposes they would go back to the department which originally had jurisdiction of them.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I do not know what the interpretation of the word "appropriated" would be. "Appropriate" is a pretty strong term. When lands are appropriated they are taken completely, as I understand.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I might say to the Senator—

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am in sympathy with the general proposition of making it easier for the Western States to build roads through the public lands.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I have no doubt everyone is.

Mr. WADSWORTH. If I had my way about it I would follow very closely the suggestion which the Senator from Idaho made this morning.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I desire to state to the Senator from New York that I have given this matter some attention, but there still remain some matters in controversy as to the wording of this particular provision. As a member of the conference committee which must meet the conferees of the other House I should feel free to make any change in the language in order to carry out the idea that we all have in mind and to which I think there is no possible objection anywhere.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator from Michigan yield to me?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I yield.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator have in mind any reservations or territory that would be affected by this provision other than forest reserves and military reservations?

Mr. TOWNSEND. For the time being State highway commissions might want to use certain material on the public lands. Roads are being constructed through the public lands. The States are compelled to build such roads and to furnish the material; if the Government has on its lands any material which could be used without detriment to the particular object for which the lands were set aside, it is the duty of the Government to allow the States to use it.

Mr. KING. Unquestionably that is true; and I am not so sure but that under legislation beginning with the act of July 14, 1866, followed by other acts in the seventies, in the eighties, and by subsequent legislation in the nineties, the power exists to go upon the public domain—not upon reservations, however—for the purpose of obtaining stone or gravel or sand which may be needed for the construction of roads. I am not sure that we should need this proposed legislation with respect to the public lands. However, I am in favor of it.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Question!

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment of the committee as amended.

The amendment of the committee as amended was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment of the House of Representatives as amended by the Senate.

Mr. KING. Does that question relate to the entire measure?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes.

Mr. KING. I want to make an inquiry before the measure is finally passed upon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will suggest that the Senate is considering an amendment of the House of Representatives to the Senate bill.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, before the amendment is passed upon I wish to make an inquiry of the Senator regarding one or two matters. I direct the attention of the chairman of the committee to section 21 for the purpose of getting his construction of what I regard as a very important provision of this bill. That section provides:

That the commission—

That is, the Secretary of Agriculture, as the bill has now been amended—shall prescribe and promulgate all needful rules and regulations for the carrying out of the provisions of this act—

I am not sure that I have any fault to find with that—including—

Mr. TOWNSEND. That provision confers authority to make recommendations to Congress.

Mr. KING. The provision continues—including such recommendations as the commission may deem necessary for preserving and protecting the highways and insuring the safety of traffic thereon.

There is no purpose, I assume, to intrude the Federal Government in the economies of the State and to enact penal regulations or laws by Congress which will interfere with the control by the States of its highways.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Absolutely none. The words refer to recommendations. Originally it was intended that they should be promulgated by a commission which would have given great study to the subject and which could make recommendations which would be of great value in dealing with this question. The words relate now purely to recommendations on the part of the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator feel that the first two lines of the sentence—

That the commission shall prescribe and promulgate all needful rules and regulations for the carrying out of the provisions of this act—would be construed to be limited by the following words which I have quoted, having reference to recommendations, so that the Secretary of Agriculture, in the rules and regulations which he may promulgate, may take charge in a penal way of the highways of the various States?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I do not think that would be possible. I do not think he could do that if he wanted to. There would be no legal right to do that. He could make the rules necessary for carrying out the provisions of this act, and it is necessary that such rules should be made; there should be rules and regulations in regard, for instance, to the letting of contracts and all other necessary matters which go with this bill to carry out its provisions.

Mr. KING. The Senator has not lived in a Territory, as some of us have; the Senator has not lived in a State where there are thousands—I was about to say tens of thousands—of petty officials who get their instructions from Washington and carry out regulations and rules and prescriptions and orders and ordinances and rescripts that are promulgated here in Washington and who make life unbearable to the people who live in the public-land States. With the voracious appetite of Federal officials for the promulgation of rules and regulations, violations of which are denominated crimes and offenses, and to enforce the criminal statutes and the criminal regulations, I want to be sure that there will be no power given to the Department of Agriculture to promulgate rules and regulations, a violation of which would be a crime with respect to matters which belong essentially to the States.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I do not think there is anything in this bill that the Senator need fear in that respect.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. KING. I am through, Mr. President.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I can not quite see the force of that provision. I do not make any objection to it, but I presume that the concluding clause, beginning in line 24, "including such recommendations as he may deem necessary for preserving and protecting the highways and insuring the safety of traffic thereon," does not mean that such recommendations are to have the force of law, but they are merely recommendations which he shall make to the Congress or to the State authorities or to other authorities.

Mr. TOWNSEND. They will be made to Congress, of course, but they will be published and they will be available to the States.

Mr. FLETCHER. The recommendations, then, are not to have the force of law?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Not at all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question before the Senate is on agreeing to the amendment of the House of Representatives to Senate bill 1072 as amended by the Senate.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I listened to the debate on yesterday, which disclosed that there were some complications in connection with the bill known as the prohibition bill which resulted from asking for a conference and then getting the measure in such condition that it has been delayed for weeks. The question I wish to ask the Chair is this: The pending measure is a Senate bill, having originated in the Senate, and being known as Senate bill 1072. The bill went to the House, was amended by the House, and was returned to the Senate, where it was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, and amended by that committee, and the Senate has now adopted the amendment. Under the circumstances is the Senate in a position to insist upon its amendment and ask for a conference? If it is, I want to make such a motion; but if it is going to complicate the matter, as was the case with the bill to which I have referred, and will delay action, I do not want to make the motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The present occupant of the chair thinks the Senator from Michigan has the right to ask for a conference.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I have a right to ask for a conference, but should that motion be accompanied with a motion to insist upon the Senate amendment to the House amendment?

Mr. McKELLAR. How can we get the bill in conference otherwise?

Mr. TOWNSEND. The House could ask for a conference—I can readily understand that—but I do not know whether we could ask for a conference, the bill being a Senate bill.

Mr. CURTIS. Under the rules, it is perfectly proper for the Senator to move that the Senate insist upon its amendment to the House amendment and ask for a conference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The present occupant of the chair is of the opinion that it has been the practice here for many years to ask for a conference.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Then, I move that the Senate insist on its amendment—

Mr. FLETCHER. I do not see how we can insist on a Senate amendment to a Senate bill unless we substitute the Senate bill for a House bill.

Mr. CURTIS. The amendment is to an amendment of the House.

Mr. FLETCHER. But we have been acting upon a Senate bill; that is the situation now.

Mr. WARREN. I do not understand that we have passed the bill, and we can not ask for a conference until we have passed the bill.

Mr. FLETCHER. No; but we have been acting upon a Senate bill. That is the situation now.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I do not understand that we have passed the bill, and we can not ask for conferees until we have passed the bill.

Mr. TOWNSEND. We have passed the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. We are acting at this time upon a message from the House of Representatives—the House amendment to the Senate bill.

Mr. TOWNSEND. If I could be informed as to just how to proceed in this matter so as not to delay action, I should be glad to take that course.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I did not understand that we were considering the Senate bill. I thought we were considering amendments to a House bill.

Mr. TOWNSEND. We have before us the original Senate bill, known as the Phipps bill. That bill passed the Senate months ago. It went to the House. The House struck out all after the enacting clause and inserted what is known as the Dowell bill. The Senate bill as so amended came back to the Senate, and the Senate now has amended that same Senate bill. We amended the House provision, of course. We passed the bill originally.

Mr. SIMMONS. Then we are really considering a Senate bill.

Mr. TOWNSEND. What is the motion, then? The motion is to insist upon our amendments to our own bill. We passed that bill once.

Mr. SIMMONS. No, Mr. President; it seems to me that if we are considering a Senate bill it would be premature to move for the appointment of conferees. If it were a House bill, and we amended it, we could then ask for a conference; but I do not see how, on a Senate bill, we can ask for a conference until the House has acted upon it and disagreed to it.

Mr. TOWNSEND. That is the thought I had, that if we asked for a conference on it we would just get confused, as we have been in regard to the prohibition bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I do.

Mr. McKELLAR. I desire just to make this statement: The Senate passed what was known as the Phipps bill and sent it over to the House. The House amended that bill and sent it back to us. Ordinarily the rule would have been that a conference would have been asked for and conferees appointed; but we simply sent it to the Senate committee instead, and the Senate committee recommended that certain amendments be adopted. The Senate has adopted those amendments, and it seems to me perfectly in order under those circumstances for the Senator from Michigan to ask for a conference. In other words, we are in the same position as if we had disagreed to the House bill when it first came back and asked for a conference. That is all there is about it. It has just gone through the committee and come back. We have acted upon the amendments of the committee. It is in exactly the same situation, and it seems to me that the Senator should ask for a conference.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, it seems to me that the Senator from Tennessee is right, because the bill has been the property of the Senate since it came from the House; and if the Senate saw fit to refer it to a committee to suggest certain changes in it, and then the Senate ratified those changes suggested by the committee, it is proper to ask for a conference now, just as it would have been at the time it came over from the House.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, this is a rule that I think ought to settle the matter—Rule XI:

The amending House may insist at once upon its amendments and ask for a conference.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, the trouble I have is that in the bill we are considering there is not a line which indicates that the House has ever had anything to do with the bill. If it had been a proposal to strike out all except the enacting clause and insert, then what the Senator says would be right; but there is not a line here that indicates that this bill has ever been to the House.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I think the Senator will realize that he is in error in that statement.

Mr. SIMMONS. I have the bill before me.

Mr. McKELLAR. It is S. 1072, and that is the original Phipps bill.

Mr. PITTMAN. If the Senator will let me finish, the Phipps bill was remedial legislation. It was to take care of a condition in the West that blocked the building of roads. The House reenacted the same thing. The House, however, dealt slightly with general legislation. By reason of that fact the chairman of the committee thought he should go further. The Senate has stricken out of the bill a very large portion of the general legislation suggested by the committee as an amendment to the House amendment; but the House bill did carry the Phipps provision with regard to the amount that was to be put up by the public-land States. That is the real issue, and the only addition in the bill as amended by the Senate is the appropriation; nothing else.

I think the suggestion of the Senator from Tennessee is entirely right. It has been the practice in this body very lately, when a bill gets into this condition, having been passed by both Houses with substitute bills, to throw it immediately into conference. It seems that it facilitates things to do it.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I think I will make that motion. It seems to me the proper course from the advice I have received from those who understand this matter.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think the motion is in order. The Senator from North Carolina has been laboring under the mistake of reading the heading "S. 1072," omitting to read that this is an amendment and not the bill itself.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that the House on the 27th day of June passed the bill with an amendment, which is here in the possession of the Secretary.

Mr. FLETCHER. Precisely.

Mr. SIMMONS. This, then, is an amendment to that House bill. Then that is right.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendment to the amendment of the House and ask for a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Michigan.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. TOWNSEND, Mr. STERLING, Mr. PHIPPS, Mr. McKELLAR, and Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts conferees on the part of the Senate.

URGENT DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. WARREN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of H. R. 8117, the urgent deficiency appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 8117) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. WARREN. I ask that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with and that the bill be read for amendment, the committee amendments to be first considered.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President—

Mr. HARRISON. This is quite a short bill. I do not see any necessity for waiving the first reading of the bill.

Mr. WARREN. Otherwise it simply means reading it twice under the rules.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I have no objection to taking up this bill at this time. I was just trying to ask the Senator from Wyoming if he would let it be temporarily laid aside in order that I may call up a bill which is very short, and to which I am sure there will be no opposition, to permit the people of Birmingham, Ala., to have a stamp made for use during the semicentennial of that city, which occurs in October of this year, just such a measure as was passed for Chicago. It will take only a minute.

Mr. WARREN. I wish first to complete getting the bill up and make ready to proceed with it.

I ask that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with and that it be read for amendment, the committee amendments to be first considered.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I think I shall object to dispensing with the formal reading of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

Mr. WARREN. Then, of course, I can not comply with the request of the Senator from Alabama. The bill is in the possession of the Senate, and I ask that the Secretary proceed to read it.

The reading clerk proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, did the Secretary read the appropriation for the District of Columbia?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The formal reading simply calls for the reading of the House text.

Mr. KING. Very well.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I withdraw the objection to waiving the formal reading of the bill.

Mr. KING. Providing it is all read, so as to give us a chance to consider it.

Mr. WARREN. I presume I shall be asked to pass over one or two of the first amendments when we come to them, and I am ready to accede to that request until later in the consideration of the bill; but I ask that the formal reading be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the formal reading of the bill will be dispensed with.

BIRMINGHAM SEMICENTENNIAL.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I ask for the consideration of Senate bill 2420.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. WARREN. I wish to say that in the short time available I ought not to yield for anything, but if this bill will lead to no discussion I will yield for its consideration.

Mr. HEFLIN. It will not lead to any, Mr. President. I am anxious to get it over to the House.

Mr. WARREN. I shall be obliged to object if there is any discussion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 2420) authorizing and directing the Postmaster General to permit the use of a special canceling stamp at the post office of Birmingham, Ala., bearing the words "Birmingham semicentennial." Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads with an amendment, in line 6, after the word "semicentennial," to insert "October 24 to 29, 1921," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Postmaster General be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to permit the use in the Birmingham, Ala., post office of special canceling stamps bearing the following words: "Birmingham semicentennial, October 24 to 29, 1921."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill authorizing and directing the Postmaster General to permit the use of a special canceling stamp at the post office of Birmingham, Ala., bearing the words 'Birmingham semicentennial, October 24 to 29, 1921.'"

COLUMBIA INSTITUTION FOR THE DEAF.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, there was but little opportunity for morning business this morning, the road bill having been taken up shortly after the Senate met. I now introduce a joint resolution and ask that it may be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. I merely want to say a word or two about it.

Mr. WARREN. Does it require the expenditure of any money?

Mr. POMERENE. I am going to ask to have it referred to the committee. I will state the object of it after it is read.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 106) directing the Secretary of War to transfer one truck to Columbia Institution for the Deaf, Washington, D. C., was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of War be and hereby is directed to transfer to the Columbia Institution for the Deaf, Washington, D. C., one truck of 1½ tons capacity, with a hand-operated dump body, if possible.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I happen to be one of the directors of the Columbia Institution for the Deaf. Our appropriations have been very much limited, so much so that the institution is embarrassed in procuring necessary equipment and making necessary repairs. A truck is needed for the purposes of the institution, and it has developed heretofore, as it was again developed in the Senate within the last few days, that the War Department has acres and acres of trucks which are rusting out in the open fields.

Mr. WARREN. Inasmuch as I allowed this joint resolution to be introduced, I hope the Senator will not recall the situation in regard to the Army truck matter, which has been gone over in the Senate.

Mr. POMERENE. I ask that the joint resolution be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. The committee can take it up with the War Department. I have not any doubt that the Congress will prefer to turn over one of the trucks now on hand which are not now needed by the War Department rather than to vote the money that would be necessary to buy a new one.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

URGENT DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8117) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will resume the reading of the bill.

The reading clerk resumed the reading of the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 1, after line 6, to insert:

Miscellaneous expenses: For such miscellaneous expenses as may be authorized by the Attorney General for the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia and its officers, including the furnishing and collecting of evidence where the United States is or may be a party in interest, including also such expenses other than for personal services as may be authorized by the Attorney General for the court of appeals, District of Columbia, fiscal year 1921, $5,500.

Sixty per cent of the foregoing sum for the District of Columbia shall be paid out of the revenues of the District of Columbia and 40 per cent out of the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the first item in this bill calls for an appropriation for the District of Columbia.

I do not have before me the District appropriation act for the fiscal year 1922, but my recollection is that we appropriated over $19,000,000 for that year and that the appropriations for the District have been increasing by leaps and bounds.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator perhaps observes that this is for 1921 and not the last appropriation act.

Mr. KING. Nineteen hundred and twenty-one?

Mr. WARREN. It applies more particularly to the act providing appropriations for 1921, passed in 1920.

Mr. KING. Then it was not taken care of in former deficiency bills?

Mr. WARREN. No. At the beginning of the fiscal year, the 1st of July, they bring in these deficiencies. But let me say to the Senator that this is entirely for the courts, and I think we are rather fortunate that we have only that much in the deficiency bill at the end of a year. It is only a matter of $5,500.

Mr. KING. For 1921 there were appropriated for the District of Columbia, leaving out the odd figure, $18,000,000. For the following fiscal year, 1922, the appropriations for the District were over $19,000,000. As indicative of the tremendous increase in the District appropriations let me call attention to the year 1907, when the appropriations were $12,841,000; for 1918 they were $14,000,000 plus; for 1919 they were $15,000,000 plus; for 1920 they were $15,000,000 plus; for 1921 they were $18,373,000; and for the current year more than $19,000,000. Mr. President, the Congress has been exceedingly generous to the District of Columbia in its appropriations. Yet the claim is constantly made that the District has been denied adequate appropriations.

I desire to present some figures showing the appropriations made in various States of the Union so that we can form some idea of what is being done for the District. Take, for instance, the State of Wisconsin: The entire appropriations for that great Commonwealth in the year 1919 for all purposes were only $17,000,000 plus, and the District of Columbia received this year more than $19,000,000, and last year received nearly as much, and is now submitting an estimate for a deficiency appropriation. My recollection is that we have already appropriated large sums to meet deficits for last year.

Missouri appropriated but $15,000,000 plus in 1919; Connecticut, $12,000,000; Indiana, $14,000,000; the State of Washington, $12,000,000; Iowa, $11,000,000; Kentucky, $11,000,000; Maryland, $11,000,000; Virginia, $10,000,000; Georgia, $8,000,000; Maine, $8,000,000; Kansas, $7,000,000; Alabama, $7,000,000; Louisiana, $7,000,000; Tennessee, $7,000,000; Oregon, $7,000,000; Nebraska, $6,000,000; Colorado, $6,000,000, and so on down the list to Nevada, which appropriated $1,316,059. In these figures I have omitted those calling for less than the million mark. The great Empire State of New York expended but $90,151,412 in 1919. The District of Columbia has received these large appropriations, three and four times as much as some of the Commonwealths, sums larger than the great States of Missouri, or Connecticut, or Wisconsin, or Minnesota have appropriated and used in carrying on all the State organizations and discharging all of the State functions. These figures do not show the amounts expended by the municipalities or the county organizations, which, undoubtedly, are larger.

I saw in the newspaper the other day, Mr. President, that estimates were now being prepared by the District Commissioners for the coming fiscal year, and that they would probably aggregate $30,000,000. There seems to be no end to the voracity of some of the officials of the District of Columbia and some of the departments of the Federal Government.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. KING. Let me complete this sentence and then I will yield. Many of the States of the Union, discharging all of the responsibilities resting upon them to provide for State expenses, excluding municipal and county governments, do not spend amounts equal to those appropriated and spent for the District of Columbia. Now I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, in connection with the comparison the Senator has made between the appropriations of the various States and appropriations for the District of Columbia, I merely wish to suggest this fact, which might be overlooked: In the District of Columbia the appropriations are made to cover all the various activities—the matter of schools, roads, parks, and everything of that sort—while the State appropriations to which the Senator refers do not cover municipal appropriations for streets and parks and do not cover the county appropriations, I take it, which are made largely for roads and schools and all that sort of thing. I think if the Senator would take the appropriations, not only for the States proper but appropriations for the various counties for county purposes, and appropriations of the various cities for city purposes, he would find that the amounts in the various States would be increased very much, would be larger than he has given. Yet, I think that would be a little bit fairer comparison with the appropriations for the District of Columbia than the one which he has made. I do not say that there is not too much money appropriated for the District of Columbia, but I thought I ought to suggest that in connection with the comparison the Senator has made.

Mr. KING. What the Senator says is substantially true, and I did not call attention to these figures for the purpose of indicating that there were not other expenditures for municipal and county purposes. Indeed, I expressly excluded the cities and other political subdivisions. The Senator may be interested to know, though, that all of the appropriations made by all of the States of the Union for 1919 aggregated only $635,370,153, and that the expenditures of all the cities having more than 30,000 population were but $1,201,923,310. And it will be remembered that the expenses of the States and municipalities were much higher in 1919 than in any previous year. They responded to the extravagant demands created by war conditions. I have been unable to obtain full information as to the residue of the appropriations made in the other political subdivisions of the States, but my information is, Mr. President, that the entire amount—that is, all appropriations made by all States, cities, and political subdivisions within the States—would be less than two and one-half billions.

Let me add right here that 48 Republics, 48 autonomous States, including all political subdivisions and cities within their borders, discharged the great responsibilities of sovereign States and expended approximately but $2,500,000,000 in 1919, while the Federal Government during the same year expended some five or six billion dollars for what might be denominated purely governmental expenses, besides ten or twelve billion dollars growing out of the war.

The amount of taxes paid by the people of the United States to the Federal Government is entirely disproportionate to the amounts paid to the States for the maintenance of State Governments, and the benefit which the people derive from the Federal Government is not commensurate with the tremendous burden which is imposed upon them.

Federal taxation is too high and must be reduced. I have pleaded with Democrats and I have conjured Republicans to lighten the burdens of taxation. We pass huge appropriation bills only to have them followed in a few days or a few weeks with deficiency appropriation bills. Gen. Dawes has been appointed for the purpose, if possible, of improving executive administration and securing economies in governmental expenditures, and he reported recently in a letter to the President of the United States that he had discovered where more than $112,000,000 might be saved. I promptly introduced a bill requiring the various amounts which he reported could be saved to be covered back into the Treasury of the United States. I should state that twenty millions of the amount which Gen. Dawes reported resulted from the postponement for the year of construction now being carried on by the Government, so that after all this item is not a saving but only a postponement of an obligation. I make the prediction, Mr. President, that my bill will die in the committee. It will not be reported, because the committee will not believe there has been any such saving. Those fancied savings reported by Gen. Dawes are purely paper savings. The claim will fade away. There are no savings, there will be no savings, and in those departments where Gen. Dawes has reported that there will be savings I predict that there will be deficiencies. I fear that Gen. Dawes will discover that he is impotent against this bureaucratic tide that will surge against Congress and will drag him under its powerful sweep.

Gen. Dawes is doing excellent work. I wish he had more power. I wish he had authority to coordinate where authority is now denied him and to discharge right and left in the departments where he finds inefficiency and unnecessary employees. We were promised a reduction of the number of employees in Washington to the prewar number. This has not been done and will not be done. There are now more than double the number of Federal employees within the District than there were in 1916. Our Republican friends will retain most of them and may add thousands of additional ones.

Returning to the statement as to the estimates now being prepared by the District officials which, it is reported, will call for $30,000,000 for the coming fiscal year, it would seem that if this information is accurate these officials seem utterly oblivious to the conditions of the country and the empty Treasury which is before us.

The United States, it is insisted by many, shall pay one-half of all the expenses of the District. The United States should make contribution for the District government and it should be just and generous, but it should not be called upon to pay a portion so large as will stimulate unwise and extravagant demands for appropriations, largely upon the theory that the property of the District owned by private persons will escape much of the burden.

What is needed here to-day is an overhauling of the administrative branches of the District. I hope that the present commissioners will devote their energies sedulously to remedying some of the evils which exist in the District, and that they will apply the pruning knife and cut down expenses and produce efficiency and bring the District government to a higher state of efficiency than it has yet attained. In saying this I am not condemning past administrations. The fact is that the District as a whole, taking it by and large, has been well governed and perhaps sets an example to most of the municipalities of the United States.

But there has developed here an insatiable appetite for appropriations. There are organizations in the District—and I am not complaining about organizations—that see only the particular point in which they are interested, and they batter at the doors of Congress for appropriations for their particular interests. Other organizations make representations because of the peculiar interest which they have in the District government. The result is that the demands for appropriations are entirely too great. It will be impossible to meet them. Indeed, there should be reductions in some departments so that the appropriations for 1923 will be less than those of 1922.

I should like to ask the chairman of the committee, or the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES], temporarily in charge of the bill, in view of the very liberal appropriation carried in the bills for 1921 and 1922, why we are called upon now to meet a deficiency? Can the Senator explain the estimate and give any reason for the deficiency?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I have a statement here from the Department of Justice with reference to the deficiency, in which they say:

The deficiency in this appropriation is due to the increased cost of heating and lighting in the courthouse building, which is accomplished through the plant of the Department of the Interior, the unit charge for heat having been greatly advanced; to the extraordinary cost of subsisting prisoner witnesses in the Arnstein case, which was tried twice; and to the unusual expense of printing briefs, records, and court calendars at the Government Printing Office.

The total payments under this appropriation, including overdrafts, were $26,627.90, while the unpaid bills covering authorized items aggregate $2,861.74, making a total of $29,489.64. The total amount heretofore appropriated is only $24,000.

It is an actual deficiency actually incurred in the fiscal year 1921. It is submitted to the Senate in regular form, and these are the reasons given by the department why those overexpenditures were necessary.

Mr. KING. The Senator will remember, however, that when the District bill was up for consideration, both in 1920 and in 1921, there was some discussion in regard to the increased court costs, including the care of prisoners, and so on, and my understanding was that we had made very liberal appropriation to meet all possible contingencies.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Apparently we did not. Apparently, as they say, there was necessity for the deficiency. I do not know much about the Arnstein case, but they say the prisoner witnesses in that case, which had to be tried twice, had to be subsisted, and apparently a large number of witnesses had to be cared for. I have no doubt they did not pay out any more than the statute authorizes to be paid for witnesses and prisoners. They had to do it. On this showing I do not think there is any ground upon which we can criticize the department for doing anything improper.

Mr. KING. May I inquire of the Senator whether the plant furnishing the light and heat is under the control of the District?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Apparently not.

Mr. KING. Or is it the power plant owned by the local power company?

Mr. JONES of Washington. All I know about this is what is said in the memorandum from the department, which states that—

The deficiency in this appropriation is due to the increased cost of heating and lighting in the courthouse building, which is accomplished through the plant of the Department of the Interior, the unit charge for heat having been greatly advanced.

Apparently they got their heat and light from the Interior Department and not from the local company.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator know whether the Interior Department obtains light from the power company that supplies the District?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I understand they have their own plant.

Mr. KING. Then it means that the Government greatly increased the unit cost?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Apparently so. I suppose it is a good deal like the general idea of the Government in business; it is more expensive.

Mr. KING. If the Government had anything to do with it, then the reason of the increased cost is apparent. If it furnishes light or heat, it will do so at a cost greatly in excess of that which would be charged by private corporations under proper regulations.

FREE TRANSIT THROUGH PANAMA CANAL.

During the delivery of Mr. KING's speech—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KENYON in the chair). The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The READING CLERK. A bill (S. 665) to provide for free tolls for American ships through the Panama Canal.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business may be temporarily laid aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I ask that the pending appropriation bill may be proceeded with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it will be proceeded with.

BURIAL OF UNIDENTIFIED AMERICAN SOLDIER.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I report back favorably without amendment from the Committee on Military Affairs the bill (H. R. 7255) authorizing bestowal upon the unknown unidentified American to be buried in the Memorial Amphitheater of the National Cemetery at Arlington, Va., the congressional medal of honor and the distinguished service cross.

I ask the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] if he will yield in order that I may ask unanimous consent to temporarily lay aside the pending appropriation bill for the passage of the bill which I have just reported?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Very well, if it leads to no discussion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill reported by the Senator from New York?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States be, and he hereby is, authorized to bestow with appropriate ceremonies, military and civil, the congressional medal of honor and the distinguished service cross upon the unknown unidentified American to be buried in the Memorial Amphitheater of the National Cemetery at Arlington, Va., on November 11, 1921.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

URGENT DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8117) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes.

After the conclusion of Mr. KING's speech—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the first committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum is suggested. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Borah	Hefflin	McKellar	Simmons
Broussard	Hitchcock	McNary	Smoot
Cameron	Jones, N. Mex.	New	Stanley
Capper	Jones, Wash.	Nicholson	Sutherland
Caraway	Kellogg	Norbeck	Townsend
Curtis	Kenyon	Oddie	Trammell
Dillingham	King	Phipps	Wadsworth
Fletcher	Knox	Pomerene	Walsh, Mass.
Gooding	Ladd	Reed	Warren
Hale	La Follette	Sheppard	Watson, Ga.
Harrison	Lodge	Shortridge	Willis

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-four Senators have answered to their names. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the names of absent Senators.

The reading clerk called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. ASHUEST answered to his name when called.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-five Senators have answered to their names. There is not a quorum present.

Mr. WARREN. I move that the Sergeant at Arms be directed to request the attendance of absent Senators.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SWANSON, Mr. NELSON, Mr. CALDER, Mr. POINDEXTER, and Mr. GLASS entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. WARREN. I ask unanimous consent that the order directing the Sergeant at Arms to request the attendance of absent Senators be vacated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The next amendment of the committee will be stated.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 2, line 21, after the words "United States," to strike out the additional proviso in the following words:

Provided further, That not more than three officers or employees of the United States Shipping Board or the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation shall be paid an annual salary or compensation in excess of $12,500.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, as I understand, we have reached the committee amendment proposing to strike out the proviso beginning in line 21, down to and including line 25, on page 5, of the pending bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is the pending amendment.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senate committee proposes to strike out the proviso incorporated in the House bill. That proviso relates to the appropriation of $48,500,000 to provide for administrative purposes, including the employment of attorneys. The proviso is designed to limit the expenditure so that not more than three officers and employees shall receive in excess of $12,500 a year.

Mr. President, I offer an amendment to the House text so that it will read:

No officer or employee of the United States Shipping Board or the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation shall be paid a salary or compensation at a rate in excess of $12,000 a year.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, will the Senator allow us to pass over that amendment for the time being until we go through with the remainder of the bill? I should prefer that course if the Senator is willing to let the amendment of the committee be laid aside with his amendment to it, to be considered later on.

Mr. HARRISON. That is perfectly agreeable, although I should like to discuss the proposition.

Mr. WARREN. Unless there is objection, we may pass over the committee amendment and the Senator's amendment to it, the matter to be taken up later.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment will be passed over.

Mr. HARRISON. One moment, Mr. President. I desire to discuss this proposition at this time.

[Mr. HARRISON addressed the Senate. After having spoken, with interruptions, for more than two hours, he yielded the floor for the day.]

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

RECESS.

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Saturday, August 20, 1921, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, August 19, 1921.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Lord, as we begin the work of this day in this quiet moment we would have our relationship to Thee solemnized. We would unite our breaths in saying, "Holy, holy, holy, all glory be to Thee. Only Thou art holy." And forbid that we should ever take Thy name in vain. Clothe us with the garment of strength without the sense of toil and with the spirit of service without the thought of hardship. Dwell in all of our breasts and there shall be a union of heaven and earth, of day and night. And then divine might shall embrace human frailties. And at the close of the day turn weariness into rest, and we shall hear, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant." Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

THE DREDGE "MARYLAND."

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 1942) for the relief of the owners of the dredge Maryland and agree to the Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Florida asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table and agree to the Senate amendments a bill which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 1942) for the relief of the owners of the dredge Maryland.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, may we have the Senate amendments reported?

The Senate amendments were read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right, I want to ask the gentleman if the term "and costs" refers to court costs, or does it take any claim that they might make for any expense outside of court?

Mr. SEARS. I do not think it does. To be frank with the gentleman, I am not positive about it.

Mr. BLANTON. I notice the Senate put in an amendment providing that "and costs" should be included.

Mr. SEARS. They struck that out.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question is on agreeing to the Senate amendments.

The Senate amendments were agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

THE REVENUE.

The SPEAKER. The House automatically resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the revenue bill.

Accordingly, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 8245), with Mr. WALSH in the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 8245) to reduce and equalize taxation, to amend and simplify the revenue act of 1918, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

TITLE II.—INCOME-TAX AMENDMENTS.

SEC. 201. Section 200 of the revenue act of 1918 is amended by adding at the end thereof two new paragraphs, to read as follows:

"The term 'foreign trader' means a citizen or resident of the United States less than 20 per cent of whose gross income for the three-year period ending with the close of the taxable year (or for such part of such period immediately preceding the close of the taxable year as may be applicable) was derived from sources within the United States as determined under section 217.

"The term 'foreign trade corporation' means a domestic corporation less than 20 per cent of the gross income of which for the three-year period ending with the close of the taxable year (or for such part of such period as the corporation has been in existence) was derived from sources within the United States as determined under section 217."

Mr. DUNBAR. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, is an amendment offered?

The CHAIRMAN. A pro forma amendment is offered. The gentleman from Indiana moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. DUNBAR. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, in the debate on yesterday the assertion was frequently made by Members on the Democratic side of the House that in the provision contained on page 82, to which amendment is offered to insert $7,500,000,000 instead of $7,000,000,000, which is an authorization for the issuance of Treasury notes, the increase was anticipated, because there was to be an increase of $500,000,000 in our public debt, due to the fact that the appropriations for the coming year would exceed our expenditures.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DUNBAR. Yes, sir.

Mr. GARNER. I do not want to take the gentleman off his feet, neither do I want to disturb him in his argument, but I want to get the attention of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY].

Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to make a point of order against the speech being made by the gentleman now occupying the floor, but I do want to call attention of the gentleman from Michigan that under the rule under which we are now proceeding to consider this bill it is impossible to offer an amendment unless it is read under the 5-minute rule, if the Committee on Ways and Means have preferential amendments under the rule.

The gentleman is discussing a portion of the bill to which the amendment he has offered does not apply, and I want to give notice now to the gentleman from Michigan that hereafter I shall be compelled to make a point of order against the discussion of any amendment to strike out the last word, unless the amendment is confined to that particular word. I do that in order to protect the minority in their effort to get the bill read under the 5-minute rule, so that we can offer pertinent amendments. I give that notice now, but I will not make the point of order at this time.

Mr. LONGWORTH. That applies to both sides of the House?

Mr. GARNER. To any amendments of this character.

Mr. LONGWORTH. To both sides of the House?

Mr. GARNER. It certainly applies to both sides.

Mr. DUNBAR. I will state that this authorization is for the purpose of converting into Treasury notes of from three to five years outstanding obligations which are now in existence, and which it is thought best to fund in order that the Treasury Department may be relieved of the embarrassment of notes frequently falling due. On March 31, 1921, the outstanding short-term obligations amounted to $7,570,000,000. Four billion one hundred millions of those fall due in May, 1923; $2,474,000,000 fall due within a year. The war savings stamp certificates, amounting to $723,000,000, fall due in 1923. The amount of these short-term obligations outstanding on July 31 was $7,419,000,000. The authorization for the issue of Treasury notes which may fall due in from one to five years is only $7,000,000,000. Now, in order to fund all these short-term obligations into Treasury notes it was necessary to have authority to issue $7,500,000,000 of Treasury notes.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. How much of that total that is outstanding has been placed since the 4th of March?

Mr. DUNBAR. Three hundred and eleven millions dollars has been placed since the 4th of March, and placed on June 15 of this year. I will state that it was asserted on the floor of the House yesterday that the United States Treasury could not borrow a billion dollars without creating a panic. I want to say that on June 15 our Treasury Department borrowed in the open market $311,000,000 at the rate of 5½ per cent interest, and this was oversubscribed many times.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield right there?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. DUNBAR. I will yield to the gentleman from Virginia, who rose first.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I will ask my friend if this is not a fact: As I understand from my friend, the short-time indebtedness has been increased in the last few months between $300,000,000 and $400,000,000?

Mr. DUNBAR. No, sir. That short-time indebtedness took the place of other indebtedness.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Has the gentleman the figures that will show the amount of the indebtedness accrued from time to time and the replacements?

Mr. DUNBAR. I have not the figures to show the replacements, but I have the figures showing how they are due from time to time.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Will my friend allow me to make one further observation?

Mr. DUNBAR. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I have believed that this increase of half a billion dollars is a sort of insurance policy against the failure to make the reduction in expenditures that are reported by the majority of the Committee on Ways and Means are to be effected.

Mr. DUNBAR. No, sir; not at all.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DUNBAR. Certainly.

Mr. STEVENSON. If this is only to take up outstanding obligations, as the gentleman states, I would like to know why they included, in addition to the "redemption of notes issued hereunder," the words "and to meet public expenditures authorized by law"? If that is not made for the purpose of paying some of the current expenses of this Government, what is it there for? [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. DUNBAR. Mr. Chairman, may I have a minute in which to answer the gentleman's question?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to proceed for one minute. Is there objection?

Mr. DUNBAR. I will state that in every note issued by the United States Government, whether it is to be issued exclusively for the funding of the debt or to be used to pay current expenses, that phraseology is always to be used. If it were to borrow $700,000,000 to-day to pay off $700,000,000 worth of notes falling due to-day, that phraseology of authorization must be used, has always been used, and always will be used.

Mr. STEVENSON. And then it makes it, therefore, perfectly possible to use this to pay current expenses, and that is the reason why it is used?

Mr. DUNBAR. Just as it is possible to use every dollar obtained from the current receipts for the payment of any debts which to-day may mature. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has again expired. Without objection, the pro forma amendment is withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

TITLE II.—INCOME TAX AMENDMENTS.

SEC. 201. Section 200 of the revenue act of 1918 is amended by adding at the end thereof two new paragraphs to read as follows:

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the two paragraphs in section 201, page 2, be passed over for the present for the reason that a committee amendment will probably be offered which has not yet been entirely agreed upon.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the committee would have the right to offer the amendment under the rule.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I will withdraw my request if the understanding is that the committee will not be precluded from going back and offering the amendment to parts of the bill that have been read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that the provision of the rule is that the committee amendments to any part of the bill shall be offered at any time and shall take precedence of other amendments. If these two paragraphs are now read and no amendment is offered and some other part of the bill is read, the committee would have the right to offer amendments to these two paragraphs.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Whether they have been read or not?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee rose.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Tennessee rise?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. To see if I understand clearly the ruling or opinion of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman may not have heard the Chair.

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee has already propounded a parliamentary inquiry to the Chair.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, do I understand the Chair to hold that under the special rule it will be in order after a paragraph has been read and passed without there having been any consent given for a return to that paragraph for the committee to return to it and offer an amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. That is the interpretation which the Chair thinks is warranted from the language of the third paragraph of the rule, which the Chair will read, and with which the gentleman is probably familiar:

Thereafter the bill shall be considered for amendment under the five-minute rule. The committee amendments to any part of the bill shall be in order at any time and shall take precedence of other amendments.

The Chair thinks that that language will permit a committee amendment to be offered to any part of the bill, although that part of the bill had been read without any action having been taken or any amendments having been made to it.

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. KING. Will an individual be permitted to offer an amendment, for instance, to strike out these two paragraphs after they have been read? And will he be permitted to return to that section for the purpose of moving to strike it out?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks not, if a Member not a member of the committee desires to offer an amendment. If no member of the committee is seeking to offer an amendment, a Member not a member of the committee can offer his amendment at the conclusion of the reading of any paragraph.

Mr. KING. Has the reading of this paragraph been concluded?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is informed that the reading of the paragraph is not concluded. It was interrupted by the request of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH]. The Clerk will conclude the reading of the paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

The term "foreign trader" means a citizen or resident of the United States less than 20 per cent of whose gross income for the three-year period ending with the close of the taxable year (or for such part of such period immediately preceding the close of the taxable year as may be applicable) was derived from sources within the United States as determined under section 217.

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out lines 2 to 17, inclusive, on page 2.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the first paragraph, lines 2 to 4, inclusive, have been read and passed, and lines 12 to 17 have not yet been read. The only paragraph open to amendment is paragraph from line 5 to line 11.

Mr. FORDNEY. I will say to the gentleman that an amendment will be offered to change that when we get the amendment prepared.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KING] is offering an amendment.

Mr. KING. I desire to offer an amendment to strike out lines 12 to 17, inclusive.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that that paragraph has not yet been read, and that, therefore, the amendment is not yet in order.

Mr. KING. Then I move to strike out lines 5 to 11, inclusive.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. KING: On page 2, strike out beginning with line 5 to line 11, inclusive.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I offer a preferential amendment to perfect the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio offers a preferential amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment offered by Mr. LONGWORTH: Page 2, strike out lines 5 to 17, inclusive, and insert two paragraphs to read as follows, the first paragraph to begin with quotation marks and the second paragraph—

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, I rise to make a point of order. The portion of the bill from lines 12 to 17, inclusive, has not been read, and the gentleman from Ohio offers an amendment which undertakes to strike out that provision of the bill.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I will ask to modify my amendment so that it shall relate to the first paragraph, which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KING] moves to strike out.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to modify his amendment by making it applicable only to lines 5 to 11, inclusive. Is there objection?

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can make his point of order against the amendment when the amendment has been reported. The question is whether there is objection to modifying it.

Mr. WINGO. No; just so I do not lose my right to make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment as modified.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment offered by Mr. LONGWORTH: Page 2, strike out lines 5 to 11, inclusive, and insert a paragraph as follows, to begin with quotation marks:

"The term 'foreign trader' means a citizen or resident of the United States or domestic partnership, (1) 80 per cent or more of whose gross income for the three-year period ending with the close of the taxable year (or for such part of such period immediately preceding the close of the taxable year as may be applicable) was derived from sources without the United States as determined under section 217, and (2) 50 per cent or more of whose gross income for such period or such part thereof was derived from the active conduct of a business without the United States, either on his own account or as the employee or agent of another."

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, there was a great deal of confusion, so that it was difficult to hear everything. As I understand now, lines 5 to 11 have been read, and the gentleman from Ohio offers a substitute for that. My point of order is not only against the text of the bill but against the substitute, because it is not germane to section 200 of the revenue act to which it seeks to add new paragraphs. Section 200 of the act, unless I am mistaken—if I am mistaken the gentleman can correct me—is on page 21 of the pamphlet headed "Laws of the Sixty-fifth Congress relating to financing the war," is it not?

Mr. LONGWORTH. It is under Title II.

Mr. WINGO. Section 200, which it seeks to amend, is the definition of corporations, is it not?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. No.

Mr. WINGO. It says:

That when used in this title the term "corporation" includes joint-stock companies or associations and insurance companies; the term "domestic" means created under the law of the United States, or of any State, Territory, or District thereof.

And so forth.

Those are the different things that are sought to be defined, and I want the Chair to note—

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Is the gentleman reading from section 201?

Mr. WINGO. I am undertaking to read what I understand to be section 200 of the act of 1918.

Mr. STAFFORD. I call attention to the fact that the gentleman is reading from the revenue act of 1917. The revenue act of 1918, as the gentleman will see if he will turn to it, is found beginning on page 81 of the compilation; and referring to section 200 of the war revenue act of 1918, which section 201 of this bill attempts to amend, he will find that the amendment proposed is entirely proper.

Mr. WINGO. I was in error as to the particular one, but I suggest that section 200, which the gentleman from Ohio has very kindly shown me, undertakes to define certain terms; first, the "taxable year," second, the "fiscal year," third, the term "fiduciary," fourth, the term "withholding agent," next the term "personal service corporation," next the term "paid," and next the term "paid or accrued." Those are the different things.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Arkansas contend that an amendment to be offered to section 200 of the revenue act of 1918 of this bill must be germane to section 200 of the revenue act?

Mr. WINGO. Certainly. When you offer an amendment to a section it must be germane. I have just read the section, and it does not include the term "foreign trader." That is the point.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman mean to say that if we want to amend an act of Congress or law we can not add anything to it?

Mr. WINGO. You can not offer an amendment to a section that is not germane to it, as I understand it. Is that true or not?

Mr. MANN. The same thing would be applicable to a law. Does the gentleman mean to say we can not amend a law and add anything entirely new?

Mr. WINGO. I know so little about parliamentary law that I would not undertake to answer that question, but I will ask the gentleman from Illinois a question. Can you amend a section except by a germane amendment?

Mr. MANN. Why, certainly we can by a new act of Congress add a new section, whether it is black, white, red, or yellow.

Mr. WINGO. You can amend any section by an amendment, whether it is germane or not?

Mr. MANN. Absolutely; this is a new act of Congress.

Mr. WINGO. If the Chair thinks I am in error—

Mr. MANN. You do not subject bills to the rules with reference to amendment.

Mr. WINGO. I am under the impression that when you offer an amendment to a section that it must be germane to that section.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The gentleman from Arkansas makes the point of order to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio on the ground that the proposed amendment is not germane to section 200 of the revenue act of 1918. The Chair will state that the rule of germaneness applies to amendments offered to a bill under consideration, but there is nothing in the rules of the House that requires when a former act is sought to be amended that the amendment under consideration should be germane to the former act sought to be amended, either to the paragraph or section. The rule requires that the proposed amendment to the bill shall be germane to the subject matter of the bill under consideration.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I want to be sure that I understand the ruling of the Chair. If there is a bill which the committee proposes to amend, then anywhere in that bill is it proper to amend any section of the law by adding to that section matter not germane to the section?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was about to state that the rule of germaneness does not require a measure under consideration, proposing an amendment to a former act, to be germane to any part of the former act or the act itself. An entirely different subject by way of amendment could be added to any particular section of the former act by a bill under consideration. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, it is only fair to say that this is, strictly speaking, not a committee amendment. The situation is this: It is an amendment that has been informally agreed upon, but it was understood this morning that it would be passed over until to-morrow for final action by the committee. I am convinced, however, that a large majority of the committee are in favor of this amendment.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. I want to call the gentleman's attention to the situation he is going to find the committee in. I understand we passed over the amendment this morning at the suggestion of some Republican Members. Suppose, after analyzing the amendment and discussing it, you come to the conclusion that you ought to amend it in a different form than this; under the rule you would not be permitted to go back and offer an amendment to this particular paragraph again.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The gentleman was probably absent this morning—

Mr. GARNER. No; I was not absent; the gentleman from Ohio asked a question and the Chair properly ruled that under the special rule you could go to any part of the bill at any time and offer a committee amendment, it having preference over any other amendment that might be offered. But having once offered an amendment and it once being adopted, I doubt very seriously whether the special rule gives you the power to go back and amend it again.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The situation would be the same in any paragraph that has been amended.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GARNER. If the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union should adopt the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio, would the committee, or the membership of the committee, or the Committee on Ways and Means itself by formal action, have the power to substitute another amendment for the one the Committee of the Whole adopted at this time?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman mean that the Committee of the Whole having once acted on a committee amendment to a particular paragraph, whether the Committee on Ways and Means subsequently have the power to offer an amendment changing the action of the Committee of the Whole?

Mr. GARNER. That is it.

Mr. MANN. That would depend. I suggest to the Chair how the matter came before the committee. There are many cases where it could do it and many where it could not.

Mr. GARNER. I am trying to get what information I can in a parliamentary way now.

Mr. MANN. For instance, suppose we adopted an amendment striking out or inserting special language in the paragraph. That is agreed to by the committee. That would not prevent the committee subsequently under this special rule striking out the entire paragraph and substituting language for it or striking it out entirely.

Mr. GARNER. What limits have we, if any, under the special rule?

Mr. MANN. That is not under the special rule; that is ordinary parliamentary usage.

Mr. GARNER. Let me ask the gentleman from Illinois a question. This section has been read under parliamentary law. It is passed on and we read another section of the bill. How could you get back to the former section under parliamentary law?

Mr. MANN. Under the special rule the Committee on Ways and Means can offer an amendment to any part of the bill at any time.

Mr. GARNER. Yes; but the gentleman says that this could be done under parliamentary law, and I was asking how it could be done under parliamentary law. Here is what I want to understand, whether the Ways and Means Committee to-morrow morning, if it saw fit to change the amendment as offered by the gentleman from Ohio, would have the power to return and amend this again?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will say that the Chair does not care at this time to interpret the special rule as compared with the ordinary rules of the House. He prefers to reserve his ruling until the case arises. There are different ways in which the motion might be submitted under ordinary rules of the House, which might or might not be in conflict with the special rule. The Chair prefers to wait until the particular case arises before answering the parliamentary inquiry of the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Yes.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, because of the noise in the Hall, I could not just understand the statement made by the Chair. I want to make this suggestion: We are not, of course, acting now under the general rules of the House, and yet I presume to a certain extent that we will be bound by the rules of the House even where there is an apparent contradiction. I agree with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] that if we should adopt in Committee of the Whole a specific amendment, that thereafter that could not in any form be practically reconsidered, but certainly under the rule, Mr. Chairman, that we have now adopted, this could be done: Suppose we should amend this paragraph in a specific way and that thereafter the committee should bring in an amendment rewriting it; even though it change the language that was specifically passed upon, in other words, the larger would include the lesser always, and in any case in which it could be said that was true, the right which is granted by the special rule would give the committee the power to bring in at any time any amendment which has been considered by them and which would affect in general the purposes of the bill, even though it might change some of the action that had already been taken.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, in order that no question may be raised, and that it may not be necessary to determine the right of the committee to go back at this time, I ask unanimous consent to pass over these paragraphs for the present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that the paragraphs 5 to 11 and 12 to 17 be passed over. Is there objection?

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I have made a motion here to strike out the paragraph which has just been read. If this is passed over by unanimous consent, I shall be precluded from that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's motion would be pending if the paragraphs were passed over. Is there objection?

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the gentleman from Michigan one question before we pass over these paragraphs. Will the gentleman tell the committee who suggested the amendment that is now in the bill at this particular point?

Mr. FORDNEY. The Treasury Department.

Mr. GARNER. Did any other Cabinet officer suggest this amendment?

Mr. FORDNEY. No; I think not.

Mr. GARNER. I understood that the gentleman from Michigan gave as a reason for this to some of his colleagues at one time that there was another Cabinet officer who suggested this amendment, and that that is how it came to be in the bill.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, if I may claim some pride of authorship—

Mr. GARNER. I want to know whether the gentleman from Michigan would make the same statement on the floor of the House that I heard he made in the secret Republican conference. If he would, I think it would be of interest to the country. I understood that the only reason that he gave in the Republican conference for this provision being inserted in the bill was that Herbert Hoover suggested it, and I understand that Mr. Hoover at the same time has a large portion of his property invested in foreign countries.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman can not discuss what occurred in the Republican conference. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Hoover never made any such suggestion to me, and I have not seen him in respect to the matter.

Mr. GARNER. Did the gentleman make that statement to the Republican conference?

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I demand the regular order. [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is, Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Then I should like to be heard upon the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would state that the gentleman from Ohio has one minute remaining, he having yielded to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER].

Mr. LONGWORTH. Oh, the gentleman from Iowa was speaking on the parliamentary situation.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa was yielded to by the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Ohio have an additional five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Ohio may proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I repeat that it is only fair to say that the committee has not yet officially adopted this amendment; but unquestionably it represents the opinion of a majority of the committee, because it limits the operation of this section in such a way that no man who was merely a holder of foreign securities would be relieved from taxation. It adds to the provision in the bill these words:

Fifty per cent or more of whose gross income for such period or such part thereof was derived from the active conduct of a business without the United States either on his own account or as the employee or agent of another.

I am prepared to admit that without this amendment the provision in the bill might be open to perhaps serious objection, because it would enable a man who has 80 per cent or more of his capital invested in foreign securities without any labor on his part to be exempt from taxation on that portion of his income; but where he is compelled to have it invested in an active working business—at least 50 per cent of all his capital in an active going business—all objection, to my mind, is entirely removed. I am entirely confident, Mr. Chairman, that this would be offered as a committee amendment to-morrow, and I only offer it at this time in my individual capacity because the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KING] offers to strike out the section as it now reads. I am not prepared to say that I would not have supported such a motion. I had some doubts as to the provision incorporated in the original bill, but I want to explain to this committee that this amendment which I have offered, and which would be offered to-morrow as a committee amendment, removes any possible danger that might arise from it. It removes any possibility that some very rich man would transfer all of his investments abroad and be exempt from taxation on 80 per cent of them.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Yes.

Mr. FESS. I understand the purpose of this is to avoid double taxation—taxation here and taxation abroad.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Men in active, going business in foreign countries are subjected to great disadvantages when they are compelled to pay the full income tax on the return from that investment.

Not long ago the House by, I believe, a unanimous vote passed a bill exempting American citizens who had business in China from tax on that business there.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I will.

Mr. FESS. I want to ask my colleague whether the committee considered the possibility of laying a tax upon the foreign investment to make up the difference between what this tax would be and what is placed by the foreign Government? Would that be practicable?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I should very much doubt if that would be practicable. But when we have this so hedged around—in the first place, 80 per cent of his income must be derived from foreign investment and 50 per cent of his holdings must be invested in active business abroad—it removes practically any objection that may be.

Mr. FESS. The purpose of my colleague is simply to encourage our foreign trade?

Mr. LONGWORTH. To encourage our foreign trade, to encourage men who have business abroad and are put at a disadvantage to the competition in other countries with reference to paying our income tax.

Mr. KING. Would it not encourage the deportation and expatriation of American capital in foreign industries?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I am one of those who believe it is a very good thing commercially that American citizens should be actively engaged in foreign trade of all sorts, if it is legitimate, to promote our exports. We must look after our exports as well as our home market—

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LONGWORTH. When American citizens are at a disadvantage, as they are at the present time, this seems to us fair.

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, I desire to rise to oppose the amendment. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, if the committee amendment is adopted, it will certainly very much improve the bill in the particular in which it has been criticized, but, as a matter of fact, it does not relieve all the evils which will result, in my judgment, from the passage of this measure, and which, as a matter of fact, will result in the loss of millions of dollars in taxation to the Government of the United States and will result in the expatriation and removal of millions of dollars of capital from the United States to foreign countries for manufacturing purposes. Now, by cutting out the amendment as it now stands, which will be done by the substitute, we get rid of one evil which was proposed and is proposed in this bill. Without this amendment, as a matter of fact, there will be a lot of men who will buy debentures of an Edge bank who would be absolutely free from taxation by the Government of the United States. Instead of having farm-loan bonds exempt, municipal bonds exempt from taxation, we would have foreign bonds and foreign debentures exempt, and that feature of it the committee has cut out, but unfortunately they still leave in that objectionable feature which permits manufacturers in this country to build plants out of the United States and in various parts of the world and thereby exempt them from the payment of income tax. Now, the argument suggested by the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] that there should be an equalization of taxation, and so forth, because these concerns pay taxes in foreign lands, is not applicable. There is no income tax charged by any foreign nation whatever. It is true they have to pay taxes upon the factories and upon the personal property, but no income tax whatever is exacted by foreign nations from an American citizen engaged industrially abroad. Why, we hear they are establishing silk factories in Italy with American capital, lace factories in France with American capital. A concern in New York, a printing concern, a publishing concern, proposes to put up a plant in Germany, and Henry Ford is erecting or about to erect a large factory in Cork, Ireland. Now, under this provision he will be exempt from all income received from that factory—

Mr. LONGWORTH. Oh, no; will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KING. Or practically so.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Only provided 80 per cent of the entire income was invested, which, of course, would not apply in this case. You can not get 80 per cent of Mr. Ford's—

Mr. KING. But suppose instead of having a small factory at Cork he moves his entire plant over there? The more money you take up and transport away to build factories over there in Europe the less amount of income you get. I know a concern—and it is a very good illustration—that makes a small article in this country which is also made in Japan. They were about to move the factory to Japan on account of not having a tariff put on the article manufactured, but they have every prospect of having that tariff put on, so they are not going to Japan; but if you offer them this reward by relieving them from their income tax on a million dollars a year they will simply transfer their manufacturing plant to Japan, and my judgment is they will move it at a very early date.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I do not suppose that it will do any good to appeal to the Republicans with reference to these amendments. If it would, this is one amendment that this Committee of the Whole ought to give two hours' consideration to, because there is not a half dozen men in the House that know—or, probably, there is not a single one that knows—the full effect of this amendment. For instance, the Standard Oil Co., to give one illustration, can organize a subsidiary corporation, entirely independent of the Standard Oil Co. itself, and move over to China or any other country and get comparatively full exemption from tax on income from that source.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I want to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that he is not discussing this amendment under consideration.

Mr. GARNER. If the gentleman wants to do that, all right. I am talking about this amendment—

Mr. LONGWORTH. It applies to individuals only.

Mr. GARNER. Then individual owners of the Standard Oil Co., if desiring to avoid their taxes, will each individually organize their business in foreign countries and have the Standard Oil Co. sell them their goods at cost and make their entire profit in a foreign country.

Let me get the attention of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY]. You know he was called here, and I think very justly, "old man, honest JOE FORDNEY." Being honest, though not being quite as discreet as some of the astute politicians of the Republican organization, he tells the truth now and then, regardless. In your conference he told you the truth, that the only reason that it is in this bill is that Herbert Hoover told him to put it in.

Mr. FORDNEY. The gentleman is mistaken. The information is not correct. I did not say anything of the kind as you have just repeated it.

Mr. GARNER. What did you say to them?

Mr. FORDNEY. I did not say anything of the kind.

Mr. GARNER. Let "Honest Joe" tell what he did say.

Mr. FORDNEY. No; I will not.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, that ought to illustrate to you the reason you should look into this amendment and see what effect it will have. You want money in this country to go into new enterprises and develop this great Republic. The reason you reduced the surtax was that you wanted money to go into American business. You repeal the excess-profits tax because you want money to go into new business. Here is a direct bid to send all the money out of the country. But that is not the purpose of it. The purpose of it, and of every provision in this bill, is to exempt somebody of large means from taxation.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I think probably the gentleman heard what I said about this provision in the bill yesterday. So far as I was concerned, I had no objection to its going out, and I feel quite sure the Ways and Means Committee is perfectly willing to have a vote of the House on it. But does not the gentleman understand that if a company should go abroad under the present law and incorporate over there to escape taxation, say the Standard Oil Co., it could have one of these subsidiary corporations over there?

Mr. GARNER. I am very glad to hear the gentleman from Iowa make that statement. On the first day of debate in this House I selected a sort of fly and threw it over Connecticut way, and said something about the occupation tax and tax on soft drinks, and I got a bite. The gentleman said that they were in favor of repealing it, and, lo and behold, the Republican membership of the Ways and Means Committee decided to strike that out of the bill. Let us hope the gentleman's conversion, or contention of his original opinion, may influence the Members over there, and there will be the same result with this amendment that we had with the medicine amendment this morning. Give the honest Democrats a chance to vote and we will knock it out as we did the medicine amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, I ask to proceed for two additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GARNER. Brother GREEN, if you will put your motion in the Committee on Ways and Means and permit us to vote on it, as we did on the tax on medicines this morning, we will get enough Republicans to join with the unanimous Democrats to put it out of business.

Mr. FORDNEY. We did not vote this morning on your motion.

Mr. GARNER. The gentleman from Michigan, of course, would like it to appear that the Republicans put the medicine amendment out of the bill. But every Democrat voted for it, and the Republicans were divided, and when we catch you dividing, Joe, you know what we do to you. The result is that the people of this country, as long as the proposed law is in existence, will probably buy their medicine free of any tax by this Government, and the Democrats are entitled to credit for it. You can not make it any other way.

Mr. FORDNEY. That could not be so. You have not got the votes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has again expired.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I will speak very briefly on the amendment. The House will remember that we have been appealed to for the last two years to give relief to citizens of the United States doing business abroad. The Ways and Means Committee some months ago reported a bill to the House to relieve citizens of the United States doing business in China, for the reason that our citizens doing business in China must pay a tax imposed by our Government on profits made abroad, while the English Government impose no tax upon their citizens doing business abroad. Therefore the citizens of the United States are at a great disadvantage in doing business in a foreign country, paying a heavy tax when their competitors pay none.

I have in my possession a report made last fall by a tariff commission in Canada. That commission traveled about in Canada from east to west and held hearings in the various cities throughout Canada on the question of their tariff law, and in that report that commission says there were 600 factories in Canada last fall, all American capital, employing 85,000 Canadian citizens or people in those factories, and where their competitors from Great Britain pay no tax to the English Government, our citizens do pay to our Government. The way the law operates is this: That a citizen of the United States doing business in a foreign country is subject to our taxes the same as if he did business here, except that whatever tax is imposed upon him in that foreign country is deducted from the taxes here, and if our taxes are higher than those imposed by a foreign country upon our countrymen doing business there, then they pay the difference here. But if the foreign tax is greater than ours, they are excluded from the payment of tax here at all.

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes; I yield.

Mr. KING. Would not a United States citizen producing oil in Mexico come under the provisions of this amendment?

Mr. FORDNEY. He would in the condition set out in the paragraph and in the amendment as offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH]; yes; he would be relieved to that extent. But the point is, Why should he not be, in order that he may compete in a foreign country with his foreign competitors there? That is the only excuse.

Mr. KING. Why should he be relieved from the payment of income tax when he is a citizen of this country?

Mr. FORDNEY. Personally, my friend, I am in favor of striking the whole thing from the bill. If we can not get that, then I want to better it as far as possible.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, my particular interest in this matter lies in the fact that the existing law taxes Americans doing business in the Philippines as well as in foreign countries, and this provision of the law, if it remains in the bill, will present the application of our taxing laws to Americans doing business in the Philippine Islands.

The way that law works in the Philippine Islands is this: Every other foreign country exempts its own nationals doing business in the Philippine Islands from all forms of taxation on business and income derived exclusively on business done in the Philippines, so that if the nationals pay the local taxation that is all the charge that is made upon them on such business. Now, Americans doing business in the Philippine Islands are compelled to pay the local taxation of the islands. In addition they are under obligation to pay all of the income tax which is provided in the bill, both corporation, individual, and every other form, upon all business that they do not only in the United States but in the Philippine Islands as well. Of course, you can readily see what a handicap is placed upon American traders in the Philippine Islands, upon all Americans doing business in the Philippine Islands.

Gentlemen, it occurs to me that there should be no possible question but that we ought to pass this bill in its original form and certainly in the form suggested by the amendment to guard against any injustice that might arise.

Gentlemen, let us be careful about these matters. Let us remember what has been so strongly urged, especially on the minority side of the House, that if we desire to develop the trade of the United States, if we desire to sell the surplus products in foreign countries, we have got to encourage and develop our trade with foreign countries. How can we do it? There is hardly any other method but to send our Americans there to handle American business, to become centers of American trade.

Mr. KING. Of what advantage would it be to have a button factory in the United States removed to Japan except to promote the income of the owners?

Mr. TOWNER. Let me say to the gentleman that cases will be exceedingly few in which button factories will be removed. It will never be removed from the United States, because it could not do business in the Philippine Islands.

Mr. KING. I instanced the case of a button factory being moved to Japan.

Mr. TOWNER. It will remain near where it is. It will remain near the source of the raw materials in the United States. It will remain here. But the sale of the products, the putting of them on the market there, the establishment there of a market for our surplus products must be placed in the hands of Americans trying to promote American trade and the distribution of American products in foreign markets, and especially in our own possessions like the Philippine Islands.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOWNER. I yield for a brief question.

Mr. HUSTED. Is it not true, so far as the Philippine Islands are concerned, that our own people in the islands labor under a greater disadvantage than anybody else doing business there?

Mr. TOWNER. Yes. I have expressly stated that such is the case, and the gentleman has stated it very well. We are placed in our own territory, under our own flag, at a disadvantage and compelled to trade at a disadvantage with foreigners who do not pay any taxes imposed by their home country.

Let us not be deceived by this proposition that American capital is to be sent out of America. The capital will not be sent out unless it is to the advantage of the United States that it be sent out, unless it is to the advantage of the United States to spend it in those countries. I sincerely hope this amendment will be adopted, and I sincerely hope we will not allow ourselves to have this section stricken out. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas moves to strike out the last two words.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, let us forget politics for a moment and analyze just what you are doing. I think, from what I have discovered from the statements made here, that if gentlemen will study what you are proposing to do in the bill and what you say you are doing, you will follow the judgment of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY], frankly expressed, and cut this out.

Now, let us see what you do. It is not, as the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER] says, a question of the Philippines. If you want to bring in a provision here that will undertake to put our people doing business in the Philippines upon the basis that he suggested—to remove that handicap—that is a different proposition. But that is not the proposition. What is the proposition, gentlemen? Let us go back a few months. It was not many months ago that you brought in a bill and passed it through here granting exemption from taxation to an American corporation doing business in China. At that time many of you supported it with a great deal of reluctance, and you said you did it on account of our peculiar interest in developing the trade of the East.

I remember quite well the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] warned you then that you were merely getting the nose of the camel under the tent, and that sooner or later you would come in here with the bald proposition to exempt all of them. That is just exactly what you propose to do not only by the tax bill as it was written but even with the amendment that is now offered. Candor compels me to admit that at first blush on first reading it looks to me like the substitute is really better than the text, but when you consider the effect of the proposal you are doing something that I do not believe you want to do. Let us see. The proposed substitute that is offered provides that a "foreign trader" means a citizen or resident of the United States 80 per cent or more of whose gross income was derived from sources without the United States or 50 per cent or more of whose gross income was derived from the active conduct of a business without the United States. Well, gentlemen, standing alone, that might not be as bad as it appears. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] was wrong when he said the gentleman from Texas was not discussing the pending question, because he said this proposition applies only to individuals, and the gentleman's illustration was as to subsidiary corporations. But turn to page 24 of the bill with me, gentlemen. I am not making a partisan appeal to you, but I am appealing to your intelligence as a lawyer who is really interested in this question, and I would like to have you turn to page 24, line 17, of the bill, where it says—

The following items of gross income shall not be included as income from sources within the United States:

(1) Interest other than that derived from sources within the United States as provided in paragraph (1) of subdivision (a);

(2) Dividends from foreign corporations and from foreign trade corporations.

Those are exempt from income taxes. Now, gentlemen, you do not want to go that far. Why? Regardless of which side of the aisle we sit on, do we not all agree that the policy of tax exemption was entered upon at a time when we never contemplated that there would be such volume of outstanding tax obligations as we now face, and is it not agreed on both sides among thoughtful men that we ought to try to devise some plan by which we can meet that evil? And yet what do you do? At a time when you bring in one provision of your bill and say, "We are compelled to relieve certain incomes from surtax and excess-profit taxation, because the men who are getting these incomes and these profits, unless we do remove the tax burden from them, will take their income and capital and invest it in tax-exempt securities," then why in another provision of the bill should you turn around and broaden the avenues of tax-exempt securities and make them not American securities, bonds issued for the purpose of securing funds first for the support of the Government of the United States, and then bonds of municipal corporations for the support of municipalities; next road-district bonds and school-district bonds issued for the purpose of building public enterprises in the United States, the money to be spent here?

Why say you are going to try to shut down on them and then say to a man, "We will not let you invest in such securities of the United States and of the States and municipalities and road districts and school districts; we will not let you evade taxation in that way by investing in tax-exempt securities of which the American people get the benefit, but go and invest your money in foreign corporations and your gross income from that source will be absolutely exempt from taxation"? Gentlemen, I ask you to go back to your committee and reconsider that. The first impulse of the gentleman from Michigan was correct. You had better cut this out. You let down the bars and you add an incentive to these gentlemen under which they will say, "No; I can go and invest in foreign securities. I can go and put my money in foreign corporations. I can organize foreign corporations and I can snap my finger in the face of the American taxpayer"; and even though the Navy of the United States may be called upon to defend and uphold the rights of that foreign trader in a foreign land, and the American people be taxed to support that Navy and the consular agents in that country, that man will be absolutely exempt from paying the bill. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas has expired.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. I ask unanimous consent, that the gentleman's time be extended one minute.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Arkansas be extended one minute. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINGO. I will.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. I do not know that I understand this bill, but if it provides that the income derived by American citizens from foreign corporations shall be exempt from taxation by this Government it goes further than the Chinese corporation act did, which was of peculiar application to conditions there. The people interested did not want exemptions for the incomes derived from those corporations.

Mr. WINGO. Of course, I may be in error. If I am wrong I want to know it, but I believe page 24 of the bill, together with this language, has the effect which I state. What is it we are trying to escape now? What is the law now? Is it that they get credit for the taxes paid in foreign countries? Is not that correct? And if the American tax be greater, then they have to pay the difference.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas has expired.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I must confess that in the original draft I think the section was open to criticism in that it exempted income from investments abroad received by the resident American citizens, but the amendment would seem to cure that provision and so not add to the tax-exempt securities.

Now, the answer to all of this argument is a very simple one: That the provisions of this bill really recognize the situation which already exists—clearly in so far as the corporations are concerned, and almost as certainly in so far as individuals are concerned. Suppose that an American corporation does a large foreign business. Does it have to submit to taxation by this Government on that business under existing law, under the revenue act of 1918? It does not. Through a very simple expedient, the forming of a foreign subsidiary corporation, through the simple further step of the purchase of an American bond, it comes under section 216 of the revenue act of 1918, which you will find on page 14 of that act. It says:

A corporation is exempt from dividends which it receives from another corporation that is taxed under the provisions of this bill.

Now, see the result. Corporation A forms a subsidiary corporation, B, to carry on business in China. Corporation B purchases an American bond and therefore becomes a taxpayer on the revenue derived from that bond. Whereupon corporation A, the parent corporation, is entirely exempt from the tax on dividends received from China. So, to-day, if American business takes out a foreign charter it escapes this taxation.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLS. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. What the gentleman says is true, and it makes no difference whether they purchase a $500 bond or a $50 bond.

Mr. MILLS. Yes; and all this provision does is to recognize the situation and remove the inducement of taking out a foreign charter and inducing American business men to do business under an American charter. So, in so far as losing revenue is concerned, even as far as individuals are concerned, the chances are very small, if not infinitesimal.

Mr. COCKRAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLS. Yes.

Mr. COCKRAN. I would like to know how the gentleman sees inducement in this to foreign corporations to do business under an American charter.

Mr. MILLS. I say to-day we offer a positive inducement to Americans doing business abroad to take out a foreign charter and to incorporate abroad in order to avoid taxation. You will not get taxes from them anyhow.

Mr. OLDFIELD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLS. I can not; I am afraid if I do I will not have a chance to say that which I wish to say, particularly to my Democratic friends. They have been a good deal troubled owing to the fact that the United States is becoming a creditor Nation, and that we, even though we are a creditor Nation, have imposed a protective tariff, and they wonder under those circumstances how our export business can live. Now, it is very true that prior to 1914 we were a debtor Nation, and that, excluding invisible items, we exported some $400,000,000 in excess of the imports to pay the interest on the foreign debt. It is true to-day that we shall have in the long run to import $600,000,000 or $700,000,000 more goods than we export goods in order to receive interest on the money now owed us; unless a very familiar economic phenomena takes place, and that is unless American capital seeks an opportunity for investment and trade abroad. If it does that, that capital can be exported in the form of American goods, and we will maintain our export market, even though we be a creditor Nation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MILLS. If you study the history of England during the great industrial development of the last century you will find that England, though a creditor nation, continued to export more than she imported, and what was the answer? England was exporting capital the world over, and that export of capital subsequently developed the export market of Great Britain. If you study the history of this country after the Civil War, you will find that, although we were a debtor Nation, we were importing more goods than we exported. What was the answer? We were importing foreign capital to develop the railroads and other great industrial enterprises. Now, the situation is reversed; we are a creditor Nation, and are confronted with the problem of developing and preserving the export market. Anything that will tend to develop American trade abroad will enhance the export of our goods. My friends on the other side are the last men in the world, in view of their previous theories, who should object to anything that will develop the American export market.

Mr. COCKRAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLS. I will.

Mr. COCKRAN. I would like to ask the gentleman if England ever in the development of the export of her capital exempted income derived from money invested abroad from the operation of the income tax?

Mr. MILLS. Oh, yes. If the gentleman will study the subject, I think he will find throughout all of the great British Dominions that there is no tax paid to Great Britain.

Mr. COCKRAN. Oh, I am not speaking of the British Dominions, I am speaking of England.

Mr. MILLS. The major part of Great Britain's money invested abroad is in British Dominions.

Mr. COCKRAN. Will the gentleman say now before this House that the English have found it necessary to exempt the earnings of money invested abroad by an Englishman from the English income tax?

Mr. MILLS. If he is a resident Englishman?

Mr. COCKRAN. If he is a resident Englishman.

Mr. MILLS. No; I do not think they have, but neither does this bill exempt a resident American unless he is in active business abroad, and the gentleman will find that an Englishman in active business outside of England will not be paying his British income tax. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, the tax bill takes care of plutocracy as a whole. This amendment is to take care of a particular group of plutocrats; it is to relieve Americans who make their money abroad from paying taxes. There is no more expensive citizen than one who invests in a foreign country. Look at our experience with Mexico. During the last 15 or 20 years we were on the verge of war with Mexico on half a dozen occasions, and we are on the verge of war with Mexico to-day, principally because American capital has found there a field for ready exploitation. World commerce in the past was an agent for peace, bringing nations together, but modern commerce is just as frequently a promoter of war. Modern investments involve very often concessions and franchises from Governments. Where you deal with oil, iron, or railroads in a foreign land it means dealing with a foreign Government and the exercise of pressure upon the foreign Government. Weak nations yield, stronger ones resist. Now and then the strong nations get into a fight among themselves about the control of the helpless nations and the markets they offer. Have you learned nothing from the World War? These investors in foreign lands will be urging you to enlarge your Army and Navy so as to back them up in their demands. It is now proposed that those who are to do business abroad are to be relieved from the expense of supporting their Government. You are to grant exemptions to them, you are to favor them specially. This favoritism assumes an impudent form. It is claimed that the American investor abroad will be at a disadvantage because he will also have to pay taxes in the land where he makes the investment. When we discussed the tariff bill it was argued that we should have an American valuation, upon the theory that the collapse of foreign exchange has made the moneys of Europe worthless. Outside of every other consideration, is it not clear that they will pay their taxes abroad in worthless foreign paper? Is this Congress to become openly and avowedly a soviet of plutocracy? Are the directors of railroads and the attorneys of railroad companies to be permitted to lay down the law to the American people? Is there any limit to their arrogance? Is there anything that they would not dare? Are they so sure of continuing in power? The Republicans won in the last election because the people were so thoroughly disgusted with war and those responsible for it, and they were successful in their appeal to every racial and national prejudice, but they may not be able to repeat the performance. I would advise the Republicans to be careful. There is a limit even to the stupidity of the mass. It may some day wake up and find out what you are trying to do.

Mr. COCKRAN. Mr. Chairman, I want to express deep acknowledgment to my colleague from New York [Mr. MILLS], who has just taken his seat. I stated yesterday that the theory of this measure in its exemption of the rich from taxation is that you can not tax them anyway and I insisted that such an attitude by Congress amounts to a confession that we have a force inside the body politic which is stronger than the Government itself. The speech of the gentleman from New York confirms that statement. I remarked yesterday, and I repeat it to-day, for the purpose of pointing out the effect of such a position, that inside the State there can not be two supreme forces. The supreme force, whatever it may be called, must always be in fact the Government. If there is anything stronger than the nominal Government, then that thing itself is the Government. If now we are to be told—the necessities of the Government to the contrary notwithstanding—that there is in this country a force, an element, that we can not subject to the same taxation, the same rate of taxation, the same system of taxation as all other men and women, then we have confessed that this Government, this democratic Government, is at an end. The force which is beyond our control has by that very fact placed us under control.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCKRAN. If the gentleman will not take it out of my time. Will the gentleman yield me the time sufficient?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Unfortunately I do not control the time.

Mr. COCKRAN. Then I can not yield in the short time that I have.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I would like to have the gentleman tell us how we could tax State and municipal securities?

Mr. COCKRAN. The gentleman nearly always makes a contribution to truth by the absurdity with which he invests an assertion of error. No one has suggested that we should or could tax such securities. But we have had everyone here complaining about the multiplication of tax-exempt securities. I do not suppose the gentleman himself will claim it is a desirable feature of our economic system that fourteen or fifteen billion of dollars are exempt from taxation.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Certainly not.

Mr. COCKRAN. Yet you propose by this measure to increase that amount indefinitely. When it becomes law a billion or $50,000,000,000 of capital invested abroad and yielding perhaps enormous profits will be entirely free from taxation by the Government. Though all the capital of this country were employed abroad, all income derived from it will be free from taxation if this system be adopted.

But the matter to which I would call attention—the subject to which I referred yesterday—is the change in our whole system, industrial and political, which these proposals emphasize and encourage. We are rapidly establishing dynastic control of industry—and a dynasty always involves a tyranny. There is but one thing for which a dynasty ever wanted to establish itself or a tyrant to exercise tyranny, and that is to get possession of other people's money. Nobody ever heard of a tyrant oppressing a subject merely to injure the person of his victim, but always to empty his pocketbook. And the way by which it was effected was always through partial taxation. There is no other way whereby a Government can empty the pocketbook of the citizen. This is precisely the effect which these provisions must produce.

Every dollar that you remit here to the wealthy interests of the community—who are endangering the security of all property by this undue exemption from the burdens of government which they seek—must be paid by others.

There is but one basis of security for property, and that is equality of all before the law—equality of burdens as well as of privileges. I am not asserting this principle now for the first time. I stood here on the floor of this House many years ago and opposed imposition of an income tax which was confined to 80,000 of our population. And I opposed it on the ground that discrimination between citizens in the burdens they must bear would inevitably lead to discrimination in the privileges they enjoy.

That proposal was to impose on a small class a special tax, and I foretold then that some day or other the same argument would be used to justify extension of special privileges to the very class that was then being singled out for special burdens. That forecast is now fulfilled. You are here claiming a special privilege now for possessors of the very largest fortunes in the country, and indeed in the world. But I warn you now that the persons you intend to benefit will ultimately be the chief sufferers from this discriminatory legislation.

Property can never be secure when by such legislation as this it discredits the impartiality, the equality—that is to say, the justice—of the law which it must invoke for its own protection. Let it once be apparent to the multitude that any force can overcome the law, can defy it, can shape it, not according to justice but according to the desires, the prejudices, the cupidities of a class which is stronger than the Government, and other forces will spring up and challenge the Government in other ways that may work fearful results to the whole body of civilized society.

These other forces will not be able to control Republican majorities in Congress or to control the press, so that their iniquities will be concealed and their selfish purposes clothed with such deluding descriptions as the gentleman from New York has just contributed to this debate. But finding rich men permitted to escape their duty to the Government while they are forced to pay every dollar of its expense, these less fortunate multitudes may adopt methods of redress subversive of order and fatal to the security of all property.

Mr. Chairman, I am no enemy to property. I believe defense and protection of property to be among the principal duties and purposes of government—the most important of its duties next to protection of human life. I believe property that is the fruit of a man's industry is as much entitled to protection as is the skin that covers his body. I believe his property, the creation of his hands, is part of himself, and as such it is to be protected by all the resources of society; and through that protection its production will always be encouraged and enlarged. But the property which should be sacred is that produced by industry. No man can make a fortune too large for me if it be made through extending the volume of production. For a man can not increase by industry his own property by one dollar without increasing the property of the community by many hundreds of dollars. But any man who exacts a dollar or saves a dollar by perverting to his own purposes the power of government is not in possession of the fruits of industry but the fruits of swindling and of oppression. [Applause on the Democratic side.] And it is against such abuse and perversion of government that we cry out; we on this side are contending for the safety of all property when we protest against any extension of exemption from taxation or from any of the responsibilities which all citizens owe to the country which protects them.

These holders of foreign securities and foreign property would expect our Government to protect them if they were denied the benefit of equal laws in foreign countries. But for this protection they want to escape from paying a penny. It is on our protection that they rely when they engage in these foreign enterprises. They would not invest a dollar in them if they did not count upon the power and the willingness of this country to protect them in all their interests. Yet now you want to exempt them from the payment of one dollar toward the support of that Government.

Mr. Chairman, this House to-day has the power to do anything in the way of relieving one set of men at the expense of others from burdens which must be met if the Government is to live, and it is, I am afraid, disposed to go just as far as its power extends in the denial of equal justice to all citizens. It will undoubtedly adopt this measure. Nothing that I could say will avert that wrong which I fear will also prove to be a calamity. I warn you now that just as we find the very rich coming back here to-day and claiming special exemption from taxation as a consequence of the unequal burden of taxation placed upon them years ago, so after this inequality has been perpetrated you will find a returning wave of inequality, imposing on the beneficiaries of this injustice injuries which will vastly exceed all the benefits they can possibly derive from it. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last four words. Mr. Chairman, I do not think I can add very much to the admirable statement of my colleague from New York [Mr. MILLS], which fully expresses my views. This amendment should be adopted and the paragraph as amended should be retained in the bill. It is apparent from the debate that some gentlemen on the floor of the House feel that all American capital should be employed exclusively within the United States, but that is not my view, and that, I believe, is a very narrow, insular view. I believe there is nothing that would help this country so much to-day, that would get our business upon its feet, that would stabilize industrial conditions, not only in this country but throughout the world, as the employment of American capital abroad. [Applause on the Republican side.] You can not secure the employment of American capital abroad unless the conditions of doing business are favorable—you could not get any common-sense American business man to do it unless he can do business on equal terms with other men who are employing their capital in a nation where he seeks to invest his own. We had this question up in relation to China, and it was made perfectly clear to the Committee on the Judiciary of this House, and this House unanimously adopted their views, that Americans could not do business in China unless they were placed upon equal terms with their competitors, and so we passed the legislation, and to-day the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER] cites the situation in the Philippine Islands where Americans in islands of their own are under a greater disadvantage than anybody else doing business there, and when you admit the principle as to China and when you admit the principle as to the Philippine Islands, you admit the principle the world over. It is not a question of escaping taxation, because American individuals or American corporations who do business abroad have to pay the local taxes where they do business, whatever those taxes may be—income taxes and all other taxes. It is a question of so loading down the American business man with the American tax plus the foreign tax that he can not do business on equal terms with others, and if we are to have an export market, if we are to send our goods abroad, we have got to employ American capital abroad. As the gentleman from New York [Mr. MILLS] said, that has been the policy of Great Britain, that was the way in which she expanded her trade, and that is the only way in which trade abroad can be permanently extended so that it will remain there, and we can build up a great foreign business for the manufactures of the Nation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New York [Mr. HUSTED], who has just addressed the committee, suggested that there seemed to be many here who felt that American capital should be invested exclusively in America. That is not correct, Mr. Chairman. I do not think there are many who believe that. But I do believe that most thoughtful Americans are of the opinion that American capital invested by Americans outside of America should not be given protection and privilege beyond American capital invested by Americans in America. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I do not refer now to the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH], but to the amendment brought in by the committee to the original act, and, if I understand it correctly, that is what it proposes. American capital invested abroad always calls for American force, American power, to protect it in its rights. Why, therefore, should that capital be given a privilege not given to American capital? Why should American capital invested in America have to bear the whole expense of protecting American capital invested abroad? [Applause on the Democratic side.] The Longworth amendment to the proposed committee amendment improves upon the committee proposition, but the King amendment is the one that should prevail, to strike the entire matter from this bill. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH].

The question was taken and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, there is a motion before the committee to strike out the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio was to strike out the paragraph and insert new language. That motion being carried the pending motion to strike out the paragraph falls.

Mr. KING. I move to strike out the paragraph as amended.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that that motion is not in order.

Mr. GARNER. Why is it not?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the Chair hear me?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The very ground upon which the Chair sustained the point of order was that the gentleman from Ohio was offering a preferential amendment to perfect the text. I know division could be demanded, but that is neither here nor there.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that at the time the gentleman from Ohio stated he intended to offer a preferential amendment, in the Chair's recollection, the amendment had not been reported, and it did not develop until afterwards that the motion was to strike out and insert. The rulings, in the recollection of the Chair, state that a committee having stricken out language and inserted language and substituted an entire new paragraph, that a pending motion to strike out falls by the action of the committee. That action upon the motion to strike out the entire paragraph could only be had on the failure of the motion to strike out and insert.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I respectfully appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee appeals from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. EVANS. Is the motion to reconsider the vote by which the change has just been made in order now?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the motion to reconsider is not in order in the committee.

The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the yeas seemed to have it.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. REAVIS] will take the chair.

The committee proceeded to divide.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I will ask for tellers, if it is in order at this time, if that will relieve the Chair.

Mr. REAVIS assumed the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on ordering tellers.

Tellers were ordered.

Mr. LONGWORTH and Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee took their places as tellers.

The committee again divided; and there were—ayes 110, noes 76.

So the decision of the Chair stood as the decision of the committee.

Mr. WALSH resumed the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The term "foreign trade corporation" means a domestic corporation less than 20 per cent of the gross income of which for the three-year period ending with the close of the taxable year (or for such part of such period as the corporation has been in existence) was derived from sources within the United States as determined under section 217.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I offer a second portion of the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LONGWORTH: Page 2, strike out lines 12 to 17, inclusive, and insert a new paragraph, inclosed in quotation marks, to read as follows:

"The term 'foreign trade corporation' means a domestic corporation (1) 80 per cent or more of the gross income of which for the three-year period ending with the close of the taxable year (or for such part of such period as the corporation had been in existence) was derived from sources without the United States as determined under section 217, and (2) 50 per cent or more of the gross income of which for such period or such part thereof was derived from the active conduct of a business without the United States."

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I demand a division of the question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee demands a division of the question. The Chair will state that a motion to strike out and insert is not a divisible question.

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, when will be the proper time to offer a substitute?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio is recognized.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is in the same wording as the last, and applies to corporations as well as individuals. That is all I care to say now.

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. KING. I desire to offer a substitute to the motion offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] yield the floor?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I yield the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KING] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. KING. I move to strike out, on page 2, lines 12 to 17, inclusive.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. KING: Page 2, strike out, beginning with line 12, up to and including line 17.

Mr. KING rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The vote will be had first, will it not, on the amendment I offered? It is in the nature of a perfecting paragraph, and we should vote first upon it, I think.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, I submit to the Chair that if you take the vote on the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio first, according to the rule of the Chair, just sustained by the membership of the committee, then the motion of the gentleman from Illinois would not be in order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas contend that the gentleman from Illinois can offer a motion to strike out the paragraph and substitute that for the motion offered by the gentleman from Ohio to strike out and insert?

Mr. GARNER. There ought to be some way, Mr. Chairman, and there is some way, under the rules of this House, if this committee will enforce them, where there is an opportunity to test out in this House whether they want this provision in the law or not.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARNER. Certainly.

Mr. TILSON. There was a perfectly plain way by which it could have been done. Vote down the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio, and then the motion of the gentleman from Illinois would be in order. Having voted up the motion of the gentleman from Ohio, the motion of the gentleman from Illinois falls. That is all there is to it. The parliamentary way was to vote down the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio. We did not do it, but voted it up, and with that disposition of the matter the motion of the gentleman from Illinois falls, and nothing further is now in order.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I will put my inquiry in the form of a statement. This is the first time I ever heard, even from that side of the House, that a motion to strike out took precedence over a motion to strike out and insert.

Mr. GARNER. No gentleman on this side took that position.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The gentleman just took that position.

Mr. GARNER. No. I said the Chair sustains the motion of the gentleman from Illinois, which was to strike out.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I move a vote on my motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the motion offered by the gentleman from Ohio—to strike out from line 12 to line 17 and insert.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The Chair holds that this motion is not divisible?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has expressly so stated.

Mr. MANN. The Chair announced that.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Ohio.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. KING. A division, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks for a division.

The Committee divided; and there were—ayes 92, noes 78.

Mr. KING. I demand tellers, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois demands tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chairman appointed Mr. LONGWORTH and Mr. KING to act as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 103, noes 85.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 202. Section 201 of the revenue act of 1918 is amended to read as follows:

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers a committee amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment offered by Mr. GREEN of Iowa: Page 2, strike out lines 18 and 19 and insert in lieu thereof the following: Section 202 (a). Subdivisions (a), (b), (c), and (d) of section 201 of the act of 1908 are amended to read as follows:

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, this is a case where the committee originally took in a little too much territory. We amended the whole of section 201, which was not intended. Section (e) of 201 was to be repealed because it is being amended. This amendment simply changes the situation to conform to the intent of the committee, and only amends the particular subdivisions that were originally intended to be amended by the committee.

I do not know whether on this subject we will hear considerable talk about this being in the interest of the wealthy and shifting the taxes upon the backs of the poor. If we do, it will have just as much application as all of this talk that we had yesterday upon the same subject, when the bill does not increase the taxes of anybody.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Why do you insert (a) following section 202 in your amendment? That is section 202 of this bill.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. If the gentleman has the printed report of the amendment, he will find in it amendment No. 5, which becomes (b) in this provision. That is the reason why this is altered to (a).

Mr. MANN. That is to be (b) of this new section?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes; that is to be (b) of this new section.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, may we have the amendment again reported?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the committee amendment.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, up until yesterday, and perhaps at the present time, I had supposed that, as a rule, the wealthy gentlemen of the South were high-minded, honorable gentlemen. I have met a number of them, and they appeared to be such. So far as I could see, they were not only honorable and high-minded, but stood high in reputation, as I supposed, in their communities in that respect. But yesterday I heard gentlemen of the South talking about "the criminal rich," "the grasping profiteers," "the idle rich." I have forgotten the other adjectives they applied to the wealthy, but there were some even worse epithets that were applied to those who were wealthy, and I wondered if I was wrong in the opinion that I had formed. When I met these gentlemen I formed such a high opinion of them, that I would dislike very much to have it shaken in any kind of a way by the remarks of the gentlemen who ought to know better than I do.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Will the gentleman yield in order to supply that term?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. A celebrated Republican called them malefactors of great wealth.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Those gentlemen down South there?

Mr. HARDY of Texas. I think that is what he called them.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Oh, no.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, it was the testimony of the Republican members of the Ways and Means Committee that men of large incomes and that men and corporations that made excessive profits were deliberately covering up their incomes and their excess profits, and we took it for granted that it was the neighbors of the gentlemen who were making the statement, and those were the men that we were denouncing, and they were not the men from down South who have these incomes, because they have been paying their income taxes and their excess-profits taxes on their excess profits where they have not honestly expended them.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Who made such a statement as that to which the gentleman referred in his opening remarks?

Mr. STEVENSON. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] stated that, corporations of above $100,000 capital were able so to shift their capital stock and bad accounts as to get around it, while those under $100,000 were not. He was one of the gentlemen who stated it. Mr. MILLS, of New York, stated that large capitalists were seeking investments that were shielded from these taxes.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman, beginning to apologize here about this being in favor of the big rich before anybody said a word about it, reminds me of an old colored man who was very deaf, whom I defended once for stealing corn. After a fair trial, the jury acquitted him. They brought in a verdict of not guilty; but the old man could not hear it, and he was so conscious that he was guilty that he said to me, "Boss, ask the judge to be easy with me. It was mighty poor corn." [Laughter.] So the gentleman began apologizing even before he was accused on this particular amendment, and it shows the consciousness of the guilt on that side of doing exactly what we are charging them with.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. It shows how ready the gentleman from South Carolina is to repeat the same statements that he made yesterday.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] of course did not explain his amendment. It did not need any explanation, however, except to say—and this ought to be said in the beginning of the consideration of the amendments to this bill that will be offered by our Republican friends in order as they term to "perfect" it—here is a provision in this bill inserted after weeks of consideration of the bill by the committee, while surrounded by all the experts in the Treasury Department as well as the draftsmen of the House, which if it had stayed in the bill as it is would have been absolutely indefensible. And why was it placed in that way? Who drew the original section? Somebody drew it either ignorantly or maliciously, one of the two. If he drew it ignorantly, I want to know which one of the Ways and Means Committee it was.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARNER. I will.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I will inform the gentleman that with the exception of merely polishing up the bill it would not make a particle of difference whether this amendment is adopted or not.

Mr. GARNER. That does not answer my question. I yield to the gentleman to tell me whether this was ignorantly drawn or maliciously drawn in the first instance.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I do not think that it was either.

Mr. GARNER. Who drew it?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The Treasury experts.

Mr. GARNER. Now, we are beginning to get at who drew this bill. That is what I am trying to get at, and what I am taking advantage of on this amendment, to illustrate to this committee, and to the Republican membership of it, that your Committee on Ways and Means knew nothing about this bill. It was not drawn by them, but was drawn by the Treasury Department experts. They themselves do not know what is in it, because they have not explained it. As they go through this bill and offer these amendments, various and sundry as they will be, some 70 amendments already agreed to by the committee to be offered to this bill and still another meeting of the Ways and Means Committee to be held to-morrow morning to agree to more, they do not know what is in it, and the membership does not. I call attention to it now in order that the Committee of the Whole as it goes along with this bill may realize what Members are voting on, to wit, a lot of propositions submitted by the Treasury Department that they do not know anything about, and the Ways and Means Committee know less. [Applause and laughter.]

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The gentlemen on the Democratic side of the House yesterday engaged in very serious sarcasm and criticism of the men who prepared this bill and presented it to the House. It was repeatedly stated by gentlemen from that side of the House yesterday that this bill had been drawn in the interest of the rich and against the poor, and more than once it was stated by gentlemen on that side of the House that the bill had been drawn and was intentionally drawn by the Republicans in order to relieve persons who had contributed to the Republican campaign fund. No more unjust criticism could have been offered by any man. I know nothing about any man's contribution to the Republican campaign fund except my own. I know how much I gave to that campaign fund, and I do not believe I ever made a better investment in the interest of the general public. [Applause and laughter.] One gentleman, a very dear friend of mine, a fine man, brought in here yesterday a chart to point out how the small corporations are being fleeced by this bill and the large corporations favored. A week or 10 days ago I asked the Treasury Department for a statement showing the amount of taxes paid by the corporations of this country with the average amounts of capital, from small capital up to the largest. About 5 o'clock last evening the Treasury Department handed me that statement, and I call the attention of the House to that very question which was so much discussed yesterday by our Democratic friends. The chart shown by the gentleman [Mr. OLDFIELD] was drawn theoretically and did not accurately illustrate the facts. I had gone over that chart heretofore. I knew it was incorrect. It was drawn by a theorist. Here is the situation: Of 115,000 corporations out of a total of 317,000, or a fraction more than one-third of all the corporations in the United States, here is what the Treasury Department says about them:

Ten thousand six hundred and eighty-nine corporations having an average capital of $1,319,511 paid taxes on incomes of less than 5 per cent. There was $14,104,000,000 invested in those corporations.

The next step downward, 21,865 corporations, with a total capital of $15,925,000,000 and with an average capital of $728,000, paid taxes on less than 10 per cent income.

The next step downward, 22,684 corporations, with a total capital of $8,962,000,000 and an average capital of $395,000, paid taxes on incomes of less than 15 per cent. Nearly one-half of all the large corporations paid taxes on less than 15 per cent income.

The next step downward, 17,388 corporations, with an average capital of $315,000, paid taxes on less than 20 per cent income. But when you get down to the small corporations, an average given here last of all, 2,194 corporations, with an average capital of $61,000, paid taxes on incomes of more than 100 per cent, and an average per cent of their income of 67.4 per cent was paid in taxes. The small corporations, as shown by these figures, which I will put in the Record for the benefit of the Members of this House—the small corporations are the only ones that made excessive profits. They are favored under this law by being given the exemption provided for in existing law, and an exemption of $2,000 on a $5,000 corporation is an exemption of 40 per cent of their capital. Two thousand dollars exemption on a $10,000 corporation is 20 per cent. Therefore these small corporations must have an income of 20 to 40 per cent before they get into the tax column at all.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan asks that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. In connection with putting the figures in the Record, is the gentleman going to show us who prepared them in the Treasury Department?

Mr. FORDNEY. I made the request of Dr. Adams, who has been assisting the committee in amendments, especially those relating to the administrative features of the bill, and I asked him 10 days ago for these figures, and Dr. Adams handed me them as coming from the Commissioner of Internal Revenue's office about 5 o'clock yesterday afternoon. He showed me a large chart from which the figures were copied in my presence.

Mr. GARNER. Does not the gentleman think, so that there can be no question about their being authentic figures, that he ought to have some responsible person, either the Secretary of the Treasury or the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, write him a letter saying that these are the official figures?

Mr. FORDNEY. I will ask the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to certify to these, and yet I know of no Republican who would question that he was not ready to certify to them.

I will proceed. Mr. Chairman, in addition to the statement which I was making before this little unpleasantness occurred I want to say that the majority portion of the taxes stricken from the existing law by the provisions of this bill affect the people of small incomes and not the rich beneficially. They go to the poor people. I have shown how the exemptions given to the heads of families and the additional allowance to children amounts to $70,000,000 on that one item alone, and it can not be said that it goes to other than poor people. The transportation tax applies to the poor the same as the rich because God made more poor people than he did rich, and of that $276,500,000 stricken from the existing law a majority portion benefits the poor. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The question is upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to. The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 201. (a) "That the term 'dividend' when used in this title (except in paragraph (10) of subdivision (a) of section 234 and paragraph (4) of subdivision (a) of section 245) means any distribution made by a corporation to its shareholders or members, whether in cash or in other property, out of its earnings or profits accumulated since February 28, 1913; except that a distribution made by a personal service corporation out of earnings or profits accumulated since December 31, 1917, and prior to January 1, 1921, shall not be taxable.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I offer a committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment offered by Mr. GREEN of Iowa: Page 2, line 26, strike out the semicolon, all the remainder of the line, and all of lines 1, 2, and 3 on page 3, and in lieu thereof insert a comma and the following:

"Except a distribution made by a personal service corporation out of earnings or profits accumulated since December 31, 1917, and prior to January 1, 1922."

Mr. HERRICK. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment as a substitute to the one pending.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is made necessary by the change which we made in the original bill setting forward the date one year, when the change in the corporation tax was effective. That is all there is to it. I will say, however, just one word in reply to what the gentleman from Texas said as to the manner in which this bill was drawn. It was drawn just exactly in the same manner as the revenue law which is now on the statute books, but the drafting part of it in that case, in this case, and doubtless in all other bills to follow will be left to the drafting clerk of the committee, Mr. Beeman, and Treasury experts whom we found to be of great assistance. The gentleman from Texas himself has greatly commended them on many occasions and aided us, as I remember, in passing an appropriation to pay for their services. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I offer a further committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment offered by Mr. GREEN of Iowa: Page 3, line 9, strike out the words "in stock dividends or otherwise," and the comma following such words.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, that paragraph has not been read.

The CHAIRMAN. It is a committee amendment, and it is not necessary the paragraph should be read.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Is the gentleman offering that as a committee amendment?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes; Mr. Chairman, this amendment is offered simply to perfect the text. Under the decision of the Supreme Court, it is now impossible to tax stock dividends, and for that reason the committee thought those words had best be omitted. I ask for a vote.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, that may be sufficient explanation, but I am frank to say this morning the Ways and Means Committee took these amendments en bloc. I do not know whether you have got it before you or not, but this list contains 58 amendments, running all the way from page 1 to page 80, line 24; and then there is a supplemental list of amendments, No. 2, which runs the total of amendments to 64.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I will yield to the gentleman, but I have not yielded the floor.

Mr. GARNER. If the gentleman yields the floor I will take it in my own right. Mr. Chairman, I demand recognition. The gentleman asked for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas was recognized, the gentleman from Iowa having asked for a vote.

Mr. GARNER. The gentleman from Iowa can sit down if he wants to. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Mr. Chairman, I merely want to say to the committee what must be in the mind of each of you and is in the mind of the members of the Ways and Means Committee, at least the minority of them, and that is it is impossible for us to know the effect of these amendments. They were not considered in the committee this morning except they were considered en bloc. Mr. GREEN of Iowa may have, or Mr. HAWLEY, I have forgotten which—probably I should not refer to what occurred in the committee—

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman can not narrate what took place in the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. GARNER. I agree with the gentleman, and I withdraw the statement.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. GARNER. But I will state this, that these amendments were reported from the Ways and Means Committee. I have a right under the rules to say they were never considered by the committee.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman has the right to say it, but that does not make it correct.

Mr. GARNER. I do say it, and I want some gentleman to controvert it.

Mr. TILSON. Did the gentleman say that no opportunity was given him for consideration?

Mr. GARNER. Oh, sir, I do; and if the gentleman wants me to recite, I will tell him what happened in the committee.

Mr. TILSON. Was not opportunity given to you to consider the amendments?

Mr. GARNER. Opportunity nothing! If we had taken up the amendments, even to read them, we would be over there in the committee room now.

Mr. TILSON. But you had an opportunity to do it.

Mr. GARNER. The gentleman says we had an opportunity. If the Ways and Means Committee had been considering the amendments they reported on this bill, they would have been in session at this hour and you would not have been through the first stage, to say nothing of the second. I want the membership to understand that when we fail to comment on the effect of these amendments it is because we have had no opportunity to gain information, no opportunity to consider them. It was half past 10 o'clock when the committee was called together this morning, with the House meeting at 12. The result is that the entire business considered was whether or not the amendments should be put en bloc, and the motion was carried. We did not and could not know anything about what we were deciding in the very nature of things. Then as to the amendment the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] has offered now, I doubt if there is a man here who knows what the effect of it will be. The gentleman gets up and makes a statement and demands a vote, and the committee votes, and that is all the information you have. Probably that is all you need, because when we give you information it does not seem to do any good.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired. The question is on the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I offer another committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers a committee amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment offered by Mr. GREEN of Iowa: Page 3, after line 21, insert a new paragraph, to read as follows: "(b) Subdivision (c) of section 201 of the revenue act of 1918 is repealed, to take effect January 1, 1922."

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, the committee will doubtless remember that in calling attention to one of the previous amendments I stated the committee had found it necessary to repeal this section as having no further application under the present law, and that was the reason for one of the prior amendments. I am sorry the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] does not understand these amendments, but I do not know how we can make up his deficiencies. I explained the previous amendment very clearly, to the effect that we could not tax stock dividends any more on account of the Supreme Court decision. If the gentleman is not able to understand that, it certainly is not my fault.

Mr. LONDON. Will the gentleman from Iowa yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. LONDON. What has the committee substituted for the stock dividends?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. We have not substituted anything.

Mr. LONDON. There was no effort made to reach the stock dividend?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. There is no way in which the stock dividends can be taxed under the Supreme Court decision. A different kind of a tax, of course, could be imposed.

Mr. LONDON. But the committee has not found any way to do so?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. No.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I offer another committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers another committee amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment offered by Mr. GREEN of Iowa: On page 5, line 17, strike out the word "less" and insert in lieu thereof the words "not more."

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The draftsman of the committee and the Treasury expert felt the language could be improved. It appeared as the language originally stood that there was no disposition of the case where the two instances mentioned in the paragraph were exactly equal. In order to cover a case of that kind the amendment is offered.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, I merely want to call the attention to, or rather refer to, what the gentleman said about my not having any information about this. I have not any information about it, and what I complain of, Mr. Chairman, is that the entire membership of this House has not any information about it. If we had information touching this particular amendment, under the rules of the House we might want to offer an amendment to an amendment, or rather an amendment striking out the entire section, as we did in the first amendment this morning.

But in our ignorance, in our lack of information as given to us by the committee, except a statement as to what it means, it is impossible to act on it intelligently. It is no reflection on the committee of the House; it is no reflection on the membership of the House. It is a reflection on the Ways and Means Committee in their failure to give you the information in a proper report coming from their committee. They have not given you the information with reference to this administrative act. They have given you some information, such as a change in the system of taxation, but there is just as much effect upon the taxing of the people in their exemption and modification of the returns as in levying the tax itself. I do not understand it, and I do not believe that you do.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Texas thinks we ought to delay a reduction of the taxes until the general ignorance of the Democrats has been overcome? [Laughter.]

Mr. GARNER. No. I just want to do this, Mr. Chairman: I do want to be honest enough to point out to the gentleman from Illinois that the ignorance of the entire Republican side, as well as the Democratic side, is dense on this subject, including the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. Speaking for yourself?

Mr. GARNER. I am speaking for you now.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I offer another committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers another committee amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 5, line 18, strike out the word "more" and insert in lieu thereof the words "not less."

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, this is offered for the same reasons as were given for the amendment to the former paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I offer another committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers another committee amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 6, line 7, after the word "a" insert the words "definite and."

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I am not sure that this really changes the effect of the bill at all, but it is made in order to conform to another part of the bill to which this paragraph is related. I ask for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I offer another committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers another committee amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 7, line 15, after the word "and," strike out the word "of" and insert in lieu thereof the word "in."

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, this is simply a misprint, the fault of the printer.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I offer a further committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers a further committee amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 9, line 22, strike out the colon, all the remainder of line 22, all of lines 23 and 24, and in lieu thereof insert a period.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, these words, originally inserted in this place, seem to belong more properly further along by reason of the change of the bill changing the year when the corporation taxes go into effect.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I offer another committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers a further committee amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 10, line 1, strike out the words "herefore or hereafter" and insert after the word "paid" the words "before or after the passage of the revenue act of 1921."

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is made necessary in order to make the language clear and correct. It is merely clerical.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I offer another committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers a further committee amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 10, after line 8, insert a new paragraph, to begin with quotation marks, and to read as follows:

"(b) If a taxpayer makes return for a fiscal year beginning in 1921 and ending in 1922, his tax under this title for the taxable year 1922 shall be the sum of: (1) The same proportion of a tax for the entire period computed under this title (as in force on Dec. 31, 1921) at the rates for the calendar year 1921 which the portion of such period falling within the calendar year 1921 is of the entire period, and (2) the same proportion of a tax for the entire period computed under this title at the rates for the calendar year 1922 which the portion of such period falling within the calendar year 1922 is of the entire period: Provided, That in the case of a personal service corporation the amount to be paid shall be only that specified in clause (2)."

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is made necessary by the fact that we set forward the year in which the corporation taxes take effect, and by the further fact that the fiscal year of the taxpayer does not always correspond with the calendar year, and as a result part of the income of the taxpayer will be taxed at the rates provided for one calendar year, and then, his fiscal year extending over another year, a portion of it will be paid under the rates provided for the following year. Besides this there are changes in the bill where the administrative provisions apply. This is to provide for cases of that kind.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I offer a further committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers a further committee amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 10, strike out lines 9 to 20, inclusive, and insert in lieu thereof the following paragraph, inclosed in quotation marks:

"(c) If a fiscal year of a partnership begins in 1920 and ends in 1921, or begins in 1921 and ends in 1922, then (1) the rates for the calendar year during which such fiscal year begins shall apply to an amount of each partner's share of such partnership net income (determined under the law applicable to such year) equal to the proportion which the part of such fiscal year falling within such calendar year bears to the full fiscal year, and (2) the rates for the calendar year during which such fiscal year ends shall apply to an amount of each partner's share of such partnership net income (determined under the law applicable to such calendar year) equal to the proportion which the part of such fiscal year falling within such calendar year bears to the full fiscal year."

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, this paragraph, like the one which was amended by the previous amendment, is in the bill as it now reads in accordance with the dates originally fixed when the new corporation taxes should go into effect. With the change of the year it not only became necessary in respect of partnerships, corporations, and individuals to set forward the year, but it also gave rise to the situation that I spoke of before, in which the fiscal year of the taxpayer, which in this particular case is a copartnership, pays for part of the year according to the rates of one year, and then, going over into another year different from the calendar year, pays according to a different rate. Gentlemen will remember that the taxes are imposed by calendar years, whereas taxpayers can pay in accordance with the fiscal years, and have been so doing, and those who have had fiscal years different from the calendar years, of course, would have to go on paying in that manner. This amendment is brought about by that situation.

Mr. HAWLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I yield to the gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. HAWLEY. In addition to the difference in rates of the two years, there is also a difference in the administrative provisions.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes; there is a difference in rates and a difference in administrative provisions, and the change in the rates is not made in all instances at the same time as the change in the administrative provisions.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I offer a further committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers a committee amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 10, line 23, after the word "follows," insert a comma and the words "to take effect January 1, 1922."

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment is simply to postpone until January 1, 1922, the effect of these provisions with reference to capital gain and capital loss, to correspond with the time when the change in the corporation taxes takes effect.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I yield to my friend from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. Would it not probably be a little better to insert that language after the word "section"—"adding at the end thereof a new section to take effect January 1, 1922, to read as follows"?

Mr. HAWLEY. Either that or else strike out the colon and insert a comma.

Mr. MANN. In other words, this is supposed to be a quotation.

Mr. HAWLEY. I think the gentleman ought to accept the suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I have no objection to accepting the suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois. It would need the word "and" there, I believe.

Mr. MANN. "A new section to take effect January 1, 1922, to read as follows." It does not make any great difference, I take it.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman restate his suggestion? I am not sure that I have got it.

Mr. TILSON. It is to amend by inserting it after the word "section."

Mr. MANN. I suggest that the amendment would be in a little better form if it was inserted after the word "section" in line 22.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I accept the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks to modify his amendment in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment as modified.

The Clerk read as follows:

Modified amendment: Page 10, line 22, after the word "section" insert a comma and the words "to take effect January 1, 1922," and a comma.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers a further committee amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 11, lines 5 and 8, strike out the figures "1920" and insert in lieu thereof in each instance the figures "1921."

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, this simply sets forward the date in each case one year to correspond with the dates when the change in the corporation taxes takes effect.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman purposes to change the date as found in line 8, page 11, does he intend to make a corresponding change in line 5 on the same page?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The amendment does both. Perhaps the gentleman did not hear the amendment fully read. The gentleman is correct, that both should be changed.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers a further committee amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 12, line 8, strike out the figures "$40,000" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$29,000."

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, when the bill was originally prepared the committee fixed the maximum amount which ought to be allowed for either capital gain or capital loss at 15 per cent. Subsequently, in order that an individual or copartnership might not be compelled to pay more than a corporation, which under the change in the corporation rate was made 12½ per cent, we changed this maximum of gain or loss as provided in the next paragraph from 15 to 12½. This change necessitated a change in the amount of net income and capital gain taken together, which was fixed at $40,000 originally as being the amount which would pay 15 per cent.

Now, having changed the rate to 12½ per cent, this needs to be changed to $29,000, which is approximately the income which would pay 12½ per cent.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman one or two questions, if I may.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I yield.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. What effect will this amendment have on the amount of revenue raised under this particular provision?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The Treasury Department thinks that the ultimate result will be to bring in more revenue. The gentleman will remember that it is often stated under the provisions of the present law a man would refrain from making a sale of land or other property constituting capital assets because he would have to pay so large a proportion to the Government that he would not realize very much out of it. It would so increase his income taxes that he would not make the sale. This amendment, of course, will reduce the rates in many instances which people will pay on sales of real estate and in some instances on sales of personal property that are capital assets, but it is quite certain that it will bring about sales which otherwise would not occur. The gentleman is aware that a large portion of property is being held which people would like to sell but will not sell on account of the amount it would add to their surtaxes, and therefore they refrain from selling and the Government gets no return. It has been the opinion of all of the experts of the Treasury—at least of Secretary Houston and Secretary Glass—I do not remember whether Mr. McAdoo expressed an opinion or not—that the ultimate working out of this would bring more revenue into the Treasury.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. This means losses after December, 1921?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. And, of course, it means gains after December, 1921?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Losses that are realized after that period and gains that are realized after that period, but the computation would go back to 1913.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. 1913 is still the basis of computation?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes; but that applies only where the property is in the hands of the same owner.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the gentleman from Iowa a question. The language of the bill is:

The term "capital loss" means deductible loss resulting from the sale or exchange of capital assets consummated after December 31, 1921.

Suppose a sale had been consummated before December 31, 1921, and the papers had been taken and, subsequently, when you came to foreclosure your security is found to be deficient and you suffer a loss of $1,000 on a $5,000 transaction; will you be able to set that up in your income tax return for the year in which that loss is divulged? That is a very large question.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman is an excellent lawyer and can probably interpret that word "consummated" as well as I.

Mr. STEVENSON. Consummated means completed.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. STEVENSON. The sale may be consummated without a single dollar of money being paid. Obligations may be taken, but the security may turn out afterwards to be useless. If the gentleman had used the word "sustained" instead of the word "consummated" I would have less difficulty. You have apparently good paper, with good security, on the 31st of December; you have consummated your transaction, but when you come to foreclose that in the next July you suffer a 50 per cent loss. The loss is sustained when you make the sale.

Mr. TILSON. Even then, could not the gentleman get credit for it as a bad debt? It is a loss.

Mr. STEVENSON. It would not be a bad debt. It is an actual loss.

Mr. TILSON. It is a bad debt up to that time, and is supposed to be good before that, but in the end it is a loss.

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes.

Mr. TILSON. The gentleman could set it off then.

Mr. STEVENSON. You could set it off then, but by using the term "consummated" you cut off on the 31st of next December the claim of a loss arising from the sale of assets that was consummated and completed before the 31st of December, notwithstanding the fact that you may suffer a loss when you come to foreclose your securities.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has expired. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following committee amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 12, lines 14 and 15, strike out the figures "15" and insert in lieu thereof, in each instance, the figures "12½."

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I have already explained this. We have made the rate 12½ per cent to correspond with the rate the corporation would pay.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. I understand that the rate that is proposed is for the purpose of taxing, in many instances, unearned increments of land values.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. In many instances it would apply to that. It is not entirely for that purpose.

Mr. STAFFORD. In those cases that have heretofore occurred, when property has been owned by a corporation, if the increased profits arising from the sale of real estate would take the transaction into the 20 per cent or the 40 per cent class, the owner of the property would be compelled to pay a tax to the Government of 40 per cent.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. He would if he should sell it, but the experience of the Government has been that under the circumstances he would not sell.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman does not contend that there have not been sales of real estate when the corporation has paid 20 per cent on the transaction because of profits arising out of unearned increment.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. There have been very few.

Mr. STAFFORD. I think if the gentleman would examine the records of conveyances he would find many cases. I wish now to ask why the gentleman reduces it 2½ per cent when it is a matter of taxing unearned increment, something over which the owner has been in no wise potential in the matter of increasing the value.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman will remember that we made the corporation tax 12½ per cent. If a corporation should sell any of its capital assets, it would pay only 12½ per cent, and the committee was of opinion that an individual ought not to pay any more than a corporation, and, therefore, we fixed the maximum rate of 12½ per cent.

Mr. GERNERD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. There are two things to which I would like to direct the attention of the committee. The first thing I have in mind is the matter of the chain-store corporations. Instead of being owned and controlled by one great corporation, they are now beginning to break them up and to incorporate each store separately. The result is that we are getting thousands of small corporations which will be reached by this very bill. The effort of trying to cripple the large corporations by added burdens is compelling them to dissolve wherever practical from one large corporation into many smaller ones. By the provisions of this bill they will not escape.

Last night I heard complaints about the inheritance taxes. I want to cite an illustration of just how it is possible to defeat such a tax. I have in mind a man who died in my vicinity about a year ago. He knew he was quite ill and he took his chances. He had five children. He conveyed a property here and transferred some stock there, and in this manner reduced his estate, and when he died he was worth just a little over $100,000. Yet I know that less than a year before that he was reputed to be worth over a half million dollars. I believe the new bill in this respect to be just and equitable. If, however, this provision is so unjust, why did not our Democratic friends correct it when they framed the present bill? They had the opportunity. When you impose an excessive tax you defeat the very object sought.

You are not going to get it by excessive taxes. The rich men are gradually beginning to realize that there is a way to get around it, and a shrewd lawyer and a man who knows how to make a success in business soon learns how to protect himself.

Mr. MILLER. And going to die.

Mr. GERNERD. Yes, sir. Mr. Chairman, I desire to extend my remarks.

Mr. STEVENSON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GERNERD. Yes, sir.

Mr. STEVENSON. Was the gentleman referring to the rich man down South which my friend, Mr. GREEN, referred to awhile ago, or referring to some rich man up North?

Mr. GERNERD. I do not know whether you have many rich men down South.

Mr. CARTER. We have not.

Mr. GERNERD. I tell you if you had more real business men in the South, your views would be different.

Mr. STEVENSON. I wanted to know where you located the men who avoided the law.

Mr. GERNERD. I do not know that your men are so much better in the South than they are in the North.

Mr. STEVENSON. But the gentleman from Iowa made a statement awhile ago, and I wanted to know where your man was.

Mr. GERNERD. My friend, when it comes to avoiding the law, I do not think anybody has it over the fellows down South.

Mr. STEVENSON. I thought that was about what the gentleman thought.

Mr. GERNERD. Mr. Chairman, the 6th day of April, 1917, shall always be regarded as the beginning of a new epoch in this country's history. On that fateful day we declared war upon Germany. We were unprepared and without a definite policy of action. Immediately our energies were diverted from peaceful pursuits into agencies of war. Our young men were called into military training; every available factory was converted into a munition plant. New weapons of warfare were being devised by the inventive geniuses of the Nation. The bankers began the marshaling of our financial assets. Millions of unproductive acres of land were seeded for the purpose of feeding the allied armies. Our womanhood learned the art of knitting socks and scarfs, and began the making of millions of bandages with which to protect the wounds of the unfortunate. Everybody was cooperating; there was but one dominant spirit—the winning of the war. With such a spirit behind them, the American youth sailed across the perilous sea into a foreign land to conquer or to die. Ever true to the great traditions of our country, they achieved undying fame by their valorous deeds, and preserved the civilization of the twentieth century from disintegrating. Upon hitherto unknown fields they made the great sacrifice; though silent, their heroic spirit shall forever enshrine the scenes from which their souls took their eternal flight.

We are proud of that achievement. Time alone will justify the effort. Now that the martial spirit has died away we have again resumed the avenues of peace. We must put forth the same unselfish and strenuous effort to liquidate our great war obligations and to meet the abnormal burdens that we assumed as a part of the great venture in winning the war. We took little heed of the financial cost. There was no time to hesitate. Action alone was the slogan of the hour.

To-day we are experiencing a great industrial and economical depression. Millions are out of employment; business is inactive. Money is plentiful, but is seeking unproductive investments. Our granaries are filled with grain, but there are few buyers. We are drifting in a state of uncertainty. It is the convalescent stage that follows after a great crisis.

On the 4th of March last the Republican Party, under the gallant leadership of President Harding, assumed the gigantic task of restoring this Government upon a sound, normal, and efficient basis. That responsibility was assumed with high courage and supreme confidence. That same spirit continues to-day. Every department of the Government breathes a new spirit. Remarkable progress has been made. A rigid economy has been inaugurated and every governmental department is being stripped of inefficiency, duplication, and waste, and millions of dollars have already been saved to the Nation.

In order that we may thoroughly appreciate what the Harding administration is confronted with, I shall endeavor to present an impartial statement of our financial obligations, most of which we inherited as the result of the World War and the mismanagement of governmental affairs after the signing of the armistice.

We must raise in taxes and other governmental revenues $4,250,000,000 to meet the current expenses for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922. This is a staggering sum of money, but the Harding administration accepted the reigns of government as it found it. There can be no evasion from this responsibility. It is a business in which everyone is vitally interested and must cooperate with a willing spirit. Criticisms and excuses fail to bring constructive results, and the Harding administration has tackled the problem with a firm resolution. What the principal items are that make up this great expenditure I shall endeavor to state. Our public debt to-day amounts to $23,996,522,863.75, whereas on June 30, 1914, just before the beginning of the World War, our public debt was but $1,027,000,000. In other words, the public or per capita debt of each person of the United States prior to the World War was $8.65. To-day it is somewhat in excess of $224.81.

To meet the interest upon this public debt we must raise this year $922,650,000. This is a fixed annual charge and will continue until that debt is paid. Before the World War the entire per capita debt was $8.65, now the annual interest charge alone per capita is $8.62. Of the total public debt there is owing us by foreign Governments $9,436,225,329.24, on account of which we are not receiving a penny of interest. England owes us $4,166,318,358.44; France, $2,950,762,938.19; and Italy, $1,648,034,050.90. This makes a grand total of $8,765,115,347.35, leaving a balance owing by other foreign countries, such as Belgium, Cuba, Greece, and others, of $670,109,881.89, of which amount Russia owes $187,729,750, which is regarded as a total loss.

Our Government advanced to the allied Governments, prior to the signing of the armistice on November 11, 1918, $7,077,114,750, and after that date $2,503,708,927.18. There has been repaid on account of this foreign indebtedness $114,540,505.93. I am in favor that these foreign Governments pay interest upon the amounts that we have loaned them, and which is the very effort that President Harding is now making. In order that this may be accomplished, Secretary of the Treasury Andrew Mellon has proposed the refunding of this entire foreign debt, and I firmly believe that Congress will shortly pass the necessary legislation which is expected will cause these foreign nations to pay interest upon their obligations until such time as they are able to repay us that which we so generously advanced them at the height of the war. This is one of the great objects of the Harding administration, and every effort will be put forth to accomplish this desirable result.

More than 50 years have passed since the close of the Civil War. The ranks of the Grand Army have faded away until but a few of these sturdy men remain. Nevertheless, the pensions for those remaining, and the widows of the deceased veterans, will cost the Government this year $246,584,639.64. Veterans of the Spanish-American War will receive in pensions $6,171,569.82, while the survivors and the dependents of the Mexican and Indian wars will cost in excess of $1,565,862.41; thus it will be observed that the Pension Bureau will require the surprising sum of $254,322,071.87 to satisfy the claims that have been recognized, and these will be continuing obligations until terminated by the death of the dependents.

The untiring efforts that the Government is putting forth to care for the ex-service men will require a gross expenditure of $530,000,000. At present 154,960 young men are being cared for, owing to disabilities that they incurred through their military service. All over the country hospital accommodations have been placed at the disposal of the young men whose health has been impaired by the exposures they endured. In the great work of rehabilitation there are enrolled 107,824 men, who are being educated and taught useful occupations in order that they may contribute toward their own maintenance. On August 1 last 27,084 men were patients in hospitals provided for by the Bureau of War Risk. This is a stupendous undertaking, but no American who has a just appreciation of what these young men did in behalf of their country would have our Government do less. The cost of this work is still progressing, and it is calculated that within the next two years it will mount to the enormous sum of $1,000,000,000 annually.

The maintenance of the Army and Navy will require $738,686,819.03; of this huge sum the Army's share is $328,013,529.80, while that of the Navy is $410,673,289.23. The appropriations for this year were cut to the very bone, and I take pleasure in stating that I joined the forces in cutting the Regular Army from 238,000 to that of 150,000. While there was a great deal of agitation throughout the country to still further reduce our military and naval forces, it was impossible to do so without disorganizing and endangering our national defense. The Congress of the United States is not unmindful of the people's desire for rigid economy, but our unpreparedness before the war cost us such staggering sums of money that the security of the Nation could not again be jeopardized through mistaken motives. Great Britain and Japan have not abated their program of building additional armaments, and President Harding, realizing that a halt must be made in this endeavor for supremacy has challenged the moral conscience of the world by calling a conference to be held at Washington on the 11th day of November next for the purpose of discussing with the nations the wisdom of adopting a policy of disarmament. Until a sincere understanding is arrived at between England, France, and Japan, our Army and Navy must be maintained upon a substantial basis in order that the honor and safety of the Nation may not be imperiled.

The Treasury Department must provide $265,754,864.87 as a sinking fund in accordance with the act of Congress dated March 3, 1919. This requires that a sum equivalent to 2½ per cent of our public debt, exclusive of that loaned to the foreign Governments, must be raised each year, and in addition thereto a sum equal to the interest upon the Liberty bonds and Victory notes that have been retired and the interest upon those that are to be retired during the current year. In accordance with this plan the Liberty bonds and Victory notes are to be paid for within a period of 40 years.

To take care of our fortifications, lighthouses, and life-saving stations will cost us $8,038,017. Very few of us think of the American Indian, who is being taken care of by Uncle Sam. His children are educated by Government schools and hospitals are maintained upon the different reservations to care for his health. To provide for his means requires $9,761,554.67. Our Diplomatic and Consular Service costs very much less than any of the leading nations of the world, and yet our expenditures for this purpose will amount to $9,326,550.79. The District of Columbia, which includes the city of Washington, which is under the jurisdiction of Congress, will cost us $19,512,412.99, while our navigable rivers and harbors cost us to maintain them in a navigable condition $15,250,000.

It is conceded on every hand that the most efficient department of the Government is that of the Postal Department. To operate this great institution will cost the Government $574,057,552. Fortunately this is the one agency of the Government that is nearly self-supporting, and yet the deficiencies for this year are estimated at $65,000,000. The legislative, executive, and judicial departments of the Government will cost this year approximately $145,348,018.75. There are many other governmental agencies too numerous to mention that are an essential and vital part of our Government which cost us to maintain in excess of $80,000,000 annually.

By these figures it can be seen that a great business proposition confronts the Harding administration. There is but one way to raise this huge sum of money, and that is by taxation. The actual cost of operating the Government aside from the great fixed war obligations is easily within the control of efficient administration. Every effort is made to cut expenses, and I am confident that in less than two years the business of the Government will be upon a sound and efficient basis. This is our Government, and every citizen must play his part. There can be no escape from taxation. The only ones who have paid their full tribute as the result of the war are they who made the great sacrifice. It is for us to emulate their fine spirit and to cooperate in a truly American fashion with those intrusted with the responsibility of the Government. There can be no relief from burdensome taxation for years to come, and the present Congress can only try to equalize and distribute that burden as equitably as possible. The Republican Party, guided by its splendid President, can be relied upon to extricate us from the financial abyss that we now find ourselves in. Faith, patience, and perseverance on the part of every American will soon return us to an era of prosperity and real happiness.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

The question was taken, and the committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I offer a committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 12, line 15, after the word "be," insert a semicolon and the following: "But in no case where the taxpayer derives a capital net gain shall the total tax be less than 12½ per cent of the total income."

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, this is a case where the Treasury experts and the draftsmen came in very usefully. They called our attention to the fact that without this provision the provision we had made in the preceding paragraph would enable a man to split up his tax between capital gain and net income and succeed in paying less taxes, and it was to prevent a thing of that kind happening that we offer this amendment.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I will.

Mr. MANN. The language is, "But in no case where the taxpayer derives a capital net gain shall the total tax be less than 12½ per cent of the total net income." Suppose he has an income now of $4,000 and his capital net gain is $10 or $15, would he still have to pay 12½ per cent of the total net income?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. No.

Mr. MANN. That is what this says. Of course, I never have been able to understand what was going to be done by reading a law, but that is what it says. That is not what it means.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I will call the gentleman's attention to the fact that this whole section (b) only applies to those whose income was as the bill was originally drafted, $40,000, but reduced to $29,000, and this particular paragraph has no application to those having incomes below that sum.

Mr. MANN. Well, of course, as I said before, I never know what is meant by reading the language, but it says "But in no case where the taxpayer gains a capital net gain shall the total tax be less than 12½ per cent of the total net income." Of course, I could tell you without going there that somebody in the Treasury Department drew the language, because they never have and never will learn how to draw language which means what it says.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Ordinarily I would accept the interpretation of the gentleman from Illinois, and I often find him correcting me to my great advantage, but in this particular case I would like to correct him to his advantage.

Mr. MANN. I am only asking for information.

Mr. HAWLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITE of Maine. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman from Maine has been trying to.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. The gentleman says this only applies in particular cases—that is, in cases where the net income and capital net gain together exceed $29,000—but it does not say so.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. That is exactly—

Mr. TILSON. It is all predicated upon it.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. That is the gentleman's construction of it, but that is not what the language says. This is general language applying to capital net gain, without any limitation upon it whatsoever.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Let me call the attention that if my friend will examine provision (b), page 12, he will observe that the two paragraphs are linked together and apply only to the case of any taxpayer other than a corporation whose ordinary net income and capital net gain together exceed $29,000. Now, wait a moment, please. It provides there shall be levied and collected in this case of this particular taxpayer, in lieu of the taxes imposed by sections 210 and 211, a tax to be computed in the manner stated in the second paragraph.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. Well, will you be safe in many cases where the tax from capital net gain—in those cases where the ordinary net income plus capital net gain exceeds $29,000, that would be done, but you have simply used the words "capital net gain," and on the preceding page 11 is the definition of capital net gain, and it is not limited in the way in which the gentleman suggests.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Well, but in this case it reads like that which I hold in my hand.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. The language says "in no case."

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. As applied to this particular taxpayer.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. That is what it says. Your amendment says "in no case." That is not in this particular case defined in section (b), but it says "in no case."

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. In no case of those specified.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Does the gentleman contend that because in the beginning of paragraph (b) you have named a certain class, that in the following paragraph you can not make an exception that will be beyond that class?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. No; if the first subdivision was a part of the paragraph. It is a part of the first class, and when you make it a part you can not go beyond that.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. If you go beyond that class it is a gain?

Mr. MANN. I would like to ask the gentleman what is the necessity for a taxpayer with a net income of $29,000 to pay a tax of 12½ per cent if the law provides he shall pay more than that?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The law provides in some instances that he should pay more.

Mr. MANN. Is there any instance of where a man with an income of $29,000 should pay more?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. No.

Mr. MANN. This must be an income of at least $29,000. What is the necessity for putting it in that he should pay at least 12½ per cent when the income might be more than that?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The Treasury expert thought it could be split up between his total net income and the capital gain, so that he would pay less. And that is the reason it was thought best to insert this provision.

Mr. TILSON. Would there be any objection, in order to make it perfectly clear and beyond any sort of doubt, to inserting, after the word "tax" in the amendment, "computed under this section," so that it will read "the total tax computed under this section be less than 12½"? That would make it clear, so that no one could possibly misunderstand it.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. If the gentleman will permit, the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HAWLEY] also suggests the use before the word "case," in the amendment, the words "no such," making it read "no such case."

Mr. TILSON. That will make it certain.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I am a little afraid that the gentleman's amendment, without reading it over, would be a little bit too broad.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to modify the amendment by inserting, after the word "no" in the first line of the amendment, the word "such," making it read "but in no such case."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to modify his amendment. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the modified amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Modified amendment: After the word "no," the third word in the amendment, insert the word "such," so that it will read: "but in no such case where the taxpayer derives a capital net gain shall the total tax be less than 12½ per cent of the total net income."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment as modified.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I offer another amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 17, line 2, after the word "country," insert the following: "and allowed as a credit under section 222."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, we are about as near to section 208 of the bill as we will get, because I presume that under the special rule section 208 will not be read for amendment, and therefore at this point I want to make just a remark or two on that section, because it is a very important one, especially to those States which have community-property statutes. The following States have such statutes, namely, Texas, Arizona, California, Washington, Louisiana, and New Mexico. Section 208 reenacts section 213 of the present revenue law with an amendment, which I shall presently read.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. In just a moment.

It defines income as in the old law and adds to the section the following language:

Income received by any community shall be included in the gross income of the spouse having the management and control of the community property.

Now, that language will cause the States of Texas, Arizona, California, Washington, Louisiana, and New Mexico to have to pay many millions of dollars more taxes than they now have to pay under existing law. Of course, I do not have the figures of the Treasury Department and can not say how much additional tax it will impose, but it will be a very substantial amount.

Now I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I personally am very much interested in what the gentleman from Texas is saying, but I want to call the attention of his colleague [Mr. GARNER] to the fact that he is not discussing the provision of the bill.

Mr. GARNER. Is not doing what?

Mr. LONGWORTH. That his colleague is not discussing the provision of the bill now under consideration. The gentleman announced that he proposed to object to Members discussing matters other than the amendment under discussion.

Mr. GARNER. May I state to the gentleman from Ohio that after I permitted the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN], members of the committee, to continue for some 20 or 30 minutes to discuss provisions that were not in an amendment I felt somewhat stopped from making points of order against Members who were not members of the committee.

Mr. BLACK. Now, under the community statutes of the different States which I have cited all income from property acquired during coverture is community income, and the wife absolutely owns one-half of it. It is not a fictitious right. It is not a theoretical right, but it is an actual ownership under the law. And if the husband undertakes to make disposition of any of the wife's interest in the community property by his will, it is without effect. It is true that the husband has the management and control of the community property, and has the right to sell and convey it without the wife joining in the conveyance, except as to the homestead, but the wife's interest in the property is none the less real. Under the present law if a husband and wife have an income of $50,000, we will say, the husband has a right to render $25,000 of it, because $25,000 of it is his income, and the wife has a right to render $25,000 of it, because it is her income. And the surtaxes apply on the separate returns as provided by law. But under this provision of the law, as you propose to amend it, you say that "income received by any community shall be included in the gross income of the spouse having the management and control of the community property."

Granting that one-half of the income from the community property belongs to the wife, and that proposition is well settled by a long and unbroken line of decisions from our Texas Supreme Court, I do not see the logic of forcing the wife's part of the income to be rendered on the husband's return and thus subject it to a much higher rate of surtax than would be the case if the wife is allowed to render separately. Suppose the husband is acting as trustee for some cestui que trust and in such capacity receives $10,000 income. Would he have to render it on his own return? Certainly not. The case is not very different under the community property law, except, of course, the husband has free control and disposition of the community income in the payment of debts of the community, and so on. But, after all, he is the owner of only one-half of the income and the wife is the real owner of the other one-half, and I am not at all clear in my mind that Congress would have the right to compel the husband to render all the income as his own.

Of course, Congress would clearly have the right to make the consolidation of the two returns permissive, but would it have the right to make the consolidation compulsory? What right has Congress to say that any owner of income shall be compelled to render his income upon another's return and thus pyramid surtaxes upon it?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Does the gentleman desire an answer?

Mr. BLACK. Yes; I would like to get the gentleman's views, because I think it is a very important question.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, may I have five minutes more?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to proceed for five additional minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I will answer the gentleman by saying it is by the right of justice and fairness, so that those of your State who are paying taxes under the community property law will pay the same amount that they would under precisely the same circumstances in my own State, so that you would not be permitted to split up the property of husband and wife any more than could be done in my own State, and practically control it.

Mr. BLACK. That is naturally the answer that I expected the gentleman from Iowa to give, and I do not quarrel with him for making it, and yet it does not go to the heart of the question, because in the State of Iowa the wife does not own one-half of the income, and upon the death of the wife the husband has the right to dispose of the whole estate except as to the wife's dower rights. But in those States which have community property laws the wife is the real owner of one-half the property and one-half the income. Here is what Mr. FORDNEY's report says, although I can not agree to his conclusions:

Residents of States having a community property law enjoy a marked advantage over the residents of other States under the present income tax law. Income which in other States is taxed as a unit to the husband is in such States divided, and the surtaxes correspondingly reduced. The present bill proposes to restore uniformity of treatment by providing that income received by any community shall be included in the gross income of the spouse having the management and control of the community property.

Mr. FORDNEY says:

Income which in other States is taxed as a unit to the husband is in such States (community property States) divided and the surtaxes correspondingly reduced.

Well, the reason income in the other States is taxed as a unit against the husband is because in those States it belongs to the husband. The reason that in the community property States the income is divided and the surtaxes correspondingly reduced is because the law in such States divided the income, the husband owning one-half and the wife one-half.

Now, I will admit that if in this law you undertook to write a new class of taxes taxing community incomes as such Congress would have the right to do that. The taxing power is a very broad one, and such a tax would be similar to a tax on partnerships, which Congress would clearly have the right to levy. Such a tax would apply only, however, to seven States, because only seven States have a community property law. Such a new tax law would have to be general in its terms and not single out community property States by name.

That is all I have to say. I think this provision is an important one and well worthy of discussion. Of course, if the Chair would recognize me to offer an amendment I would now offer an amendment to make the provision conform to the law, as I understand it to be. Will the gentleman yield to me to do that?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I am unable to yield to the gentleman for that purpose. I have not the power.

Mr. BLACK. Would the Chair recognize me for that purpose?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would state that the paragraph has not been read, and a committee amendment is pending. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I offer another committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers a further committee amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment offered by Mr. GREEN of Iowa: Page 19, line 15, strike out the word "trusts" and the comma following such word.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, nobody knows how the word "trusts" ever got in there. It does not apply there. The committee did not put it in there. It crept in there by some printer's mistake. I ask for a vote.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I ask for recognition in opposition to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee is recognized.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. I desire to obtain some information from the Committee on Ways and Means in regard to section 211, subsection 8, on page 15, which allows as a deduction the income of a nonresident alien or foreign corporation which consists exclusively of earnings from the operation of a ship or ships documented under the laws of a foreign country which grants an equivalent exemption to citizens of the United States and to corporations organized in the United States. I would like to know the occasion for this additional deduction.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The occasion was this: The Treasury Department found that we were getting almost nothing out of the attempt to tax these nonresident aliens or foreign corporations on their ships. The gentleman will understand that that applies to a ship of a foreign country belonging to a nonresident alien, but which in some way comes into our ports, and therefore if we undertook to do so we could collect a tax upon it, but we are in danger of retaliation by foreign countries, and those foreign countries, now that we have so much shipping on our hands, could give us the worst end of it decidedly.

Another thing: The Treasury Department found it impossible to collect anything in any event, because we could not get control of the books and we can not determine whether they are making any profit.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I do not think those are very compelling reasons.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Let me ask my friend, Do you really believe that as an independent principle we ought to start in taxing ships of foreign nations, owned by foreign citizens, and built in foreign countries, simply because they come over here and come into our ports?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. I think they ought to be taxed if they come under our jurisdiction, just like our own citizens. Earlier in the day the committee adopted a provision exempting from income taxation the income of American corporations earned in foreign countries, and the chief reason given for that was to avoid inducing the investment of American capital in foreign corporations.

Now you are proposing to grant an exemption from taxation to incomes of foreign corporations in the shipping business, and at a time when we have spent $4,000,000,000, and are still spending a great deal, in an effort to build up an American merchant marine; and we all pretend to be in favor of an American merchant marine.

Here in this section we are discriminating against our own merchant marine as well as the American taxpayers. If no income is being collected from this source there is no occasion for repealing it, and if we are not exercising proper efforts to collect that income, I think we ought to undertake to do that.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I think there is this to be said, that we have heard that a number of the foreign nations very seriously object to this provision, and it appears that if it is not removed, and if we insist on trying to tax these vessels, foreign nations are very apt to take retaliatory measures; and if they did, it would be of great damage to our merchant marine. There is no question about that. We are operating under such tremendous handicaps to-day that any new taxes imposed on our merchant marine by foreign nations would be greatly to our detriment.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. But does not the gentleman from Ohio believe that a much larger percentage of foreign ships engage in American merchant shipping than do American ships engage in the same business in foreign ports?

Mr. LONGWORTH. That would be difficult to answer off-hand. The trouble is that this tax has been attempted to be collected against foreign ships which simply land for a day or so. Now, that is utterly impossible.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Whenever a foreign ship comes in, it collects money from our citizens in the way of freights and rates of different kinds and, of course, earns an income in that way.

Mr. LONGWORTH. But it is difficult to segregate the amounts taken in that way. Suppose a foreign ship touches at a number of ports of different countries, among them an American port. It is a matter of the most infinite complexity and detail to determine what portion of that foreign ship's business is done with Americans. It is an extremely annoying tax; and if foreign nations should undertake to retaliate against us, it would be a most serious damage to our merchant marine.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Eliminating those technical objections, I want to ask the gentleman from Ohio if he thinks, as an abstract proposition, that is a correct American policy?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Speaking from an absolutely theoretical standpoint, I should say the gentleman was right, but the practical difficulties are too great.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired. The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to offer three amendments which simply change punctuation, to be voted on at one time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to submit three amendments involving changes of punctuation, to be voted on en bloc. Is there objection?

Mr. GARNER. Reserving the right to object, what sections are they?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I will send them to the desk and have them read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the three amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 19, line 20, after the word "Secretary" and before the quotation marks, insert a semicolon; page 20, line 1, strike out the semicolon and insert in lieu thereof a comma; page 20, line 9, strike out the semicolon and insert in lieu thereof a comma.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

Mr. GARNER. Reserving the right to object, will the gentleman from Iowa tell us just what these provisions in the bill seek to do—not the amendments that he offers, but the provisions of the bill? What is the purpose in inserting them in this bill?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The first one relates to contributions and gifts.

Mr. GARNER. What changes does it make from the present law? What change does "section 216, paragraph 11 of subdivision (a) of section 214 of the revenue act of 1918, amended to read as follows," make in the present law?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. This somewhat enlarges it. It does not make any very material change. It broadens it somewhat.

Mr. GARNER. What does the gentleman mean by broadening it? That is the point. What will the loss be to the Treasury by virtue of amending the present law as proposed in this section?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Nothing to speak of. It does not amount to anything. The gentleman can read the words there which show what the application is now. The gifts must be made exclusively for public purposes. Gifts may be made by any corporation to community chests, funds, or foundations organized or operating exclusively for religious, charitable, scientific, literary, or educational purposes, or for the purpose of preventing cruelty to children or animals, and so on. Some of that language is not in the present law.

Mr. GARNER. Some of that language is not used. Now, what I would like to know, and I think it would be interesting to the committee, is about how much money will the Treasury lose in a fiscal year by that change in the law?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Nobody on earth can tell, but you can probably safely stow it away in the corner of your eye.

Mr. GARNER. I merely wanted to bring out the fact that not only did the committee not know but that there was not an expert on the face of the earth, as the gentleman says, who is able to tell us about how much money the Treasury is going to lose by virtue of that amendment.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Somebody will give a little more to some charitable institution, and that will be exempted. Whether it will be $10,000 or $1,000 I could not tell the gentleman.

Mr. GARNER. I understood there was a gentleman in the Treasury Department, and I believe there is, who is the best guesser in the United States, and I still believe that if we had him here and put him on the stand he could make an estimate of about how much the Treasury would lose by this provision in the law.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Nobody can put an estimate on charity and generosity or tell to what extent it will go.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the amendments being submitted and voted on en bloc?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendments which have been read.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 20, line 12, after the word "proceeds," insert a comma and the words "and the property acquired shall be treated as taking the place of a like proportion of the property converted."

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, this paragraph refers to cases where property is involuntarily converted into other property. For instance, if a person has a ship at sea which is insured and it is lost at sea and he gets his insurance, this paragraph is intended to apply to a case where he immediately buys another ship of the same kind. There are other cases covered, like in the case of theft or seizure or property condemned by court. Suppose the property is a factory and it is condemned and he lets the Government take it, then he gets his condemnation money and buys other property. The amendment simply makes the paragraph a little more specific.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

The question was taken, and the committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I offer a further amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 27, line 15, after the word "repealed," insert a comma and the words "to take effect January 1, 1922."

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, this simply postpones for a year the taking effect of the tax on personal service corporations.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was considered and agreed to.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I offer another committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 27, line 17, strike out the figures "1920" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "1921," and in the same line strike out the figures "1921" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "1922"; line 18, strike out the figures "1921" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "1922"; line 19, strike out the figures "1919" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "1920"; line 22, strike out the figures "1920" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "1921."

Page 28, line 1, strike out the figures "1920" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "1921"; line 2, strike out the letter "b" within the parentheses and insert in lieu thereof the letter "c."

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, this is a change in the dates made necessary by our putting ahead one year the date when the tax would apply on personal service corporations.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendments.

The question was taken, and the committee amendments were agreed to.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I have a further committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 31, line 22, strike out the word "corporations" and insert in lieu thereof the word "corporation."

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. This is simply to correct a misprint.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

The question was taken, and the committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I have a further committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 31, line 23, after the word "all" insert the words "income, war profits and excess profits," and in lines 23 and 24 strike out the words "by this title" and insert in lieu thereof the words "for the taxable year."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. This is simply a clerical amendment made necessary by a change in the corporation tax.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. This applies to war profits, excess profits, and income. Do I understand the gentleman to say that this is merely a correction of verbiage, that there is no purpose of changing the meaning of the proposed revenue act of 1918?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. No; except as we have changed it by the whole bill.

Mr. GARNER. The question of changing the excess-profits taxes, taking effect in 1922—is that the reason you are offering this amendment?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes; this is purely clerical.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

The committee amendment was considered and agreed to.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following further committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 35, strike out lines 18 to 23, inclusive, and insert in lieu thereof a paragraph, inclosed in quotation marks, to read as follows:

"(5) The above credits shall not be allowed in the case of a foreign trader; and in no other case shall the amount of credit taken under this subdivision exceed the same proportion of the tax which the taxpayer's net income (computed without deduction for any income, war-profits and excess-profits taxes imposed by any foreign country or possession of the United States) from sources without the United States bears to his entire net income (computed without such deduction) for the same taxable year."

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, this amendment was offered because after consideration the Treasury experts thought it would be almost impossible or extremely difficult of administration to comply with the provisions of the paragraph as originally written. The principal reason that it is offered is in order to insert the language included in the parentheses to the effect that the taxpayers' income, that is, the foreign trader's income, is to be computed without deduction for any income, war-profits and excess-profits taxes imposed by any foreign country or possession of the United States.

Mr. GARNER. You put on just a little more additional exemption?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Oh, no; it does not allow him so much exemption.

Mr. GARNER. In what particular?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. In the particular of the language that I have just read—it is "to be computed without deduction for income, war profits, and excess profits," and so forth.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following further committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 36, line 14, after the word "has," insert the word "already," and in line 15, strike out the words "under the provisions of this act."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, this is purely a clerical amendment and was made necessary by the fact that this act is an amendment to the preceding acts, and by striking out the words "provisions of this act," we avoid any conflict as to whether the words apply to this particular act or to the preceding law.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I offer a further committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 39, line 6, after the word "repealed," insert a comma and the words "to take effect January 1, 1922."

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, this amendment simply postpones for one year the repeal of the taxes on personal-service corporations and the substitution of other taxes.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I offer a further committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 40, line 4, after the word "country," insert the following: "and allowed as a credit under section 238."

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, this extends to corporations the same provisions which we have already by amendment extended to individuals. This now gives the credits to corporations in the same manner.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following further committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 41, line 16, strike out the semicolon and insert in lieu thereof a colon.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, a further committee amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 41, line 24, after the word "repealed," insert a comma and the words "to take effect January 1, 1922."

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, that is made necessary by reason of our having put off the time when the change in life insurance taxes should take effect until January 1, 1922.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. FORDNEY: Page 42, line 2, strike out the words "a new paragraph" and insert in lieu thereof "two new paragraphs," and after line 3 insert the following paragraph, to begin with quotation marks:

"(15) Contributions or gifts made within the taxable year to or for the use of: (A) The United States, any State, Territory, or any political subdivision thereof, or the District of Columbia, for exclusively public purposes; (B) any corporation or community chest, fund, or foundation, organized and operated exclusively for religious, charitable, scientific, literary, or educational purposes, or for the prevention of cruelty to children or animals, no part of the net earnings of which inures to the benefit of any private stockholder or individual; or (C) the special fund for vocational rehabilitation authorized by section 7 of the vocational rehabilitation act; to an amount which in all of the above cases combined does not exceed 5 per cent of the taxpayer's net income as computed without the benefit of this paragraph. In case of a foreign corporation or foreign trade corporation this deduction shall be allowed only as to contributions or gifts made to domestic corporations, or to community chests, funds, or foundations created in the United States, or to such vocational rehabilitation fund. Such contributions or gifts shall be allowable as deductions only if verified under rules and regulations prescribed by the commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary"; and in line 4 strike out the figures "15" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "16."

The CHAIRMAN. Does the Chair understand the gentleman from Michigan to offer this as a committee amendment?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes; this is offered as a committee amendment. Mr. Chairman, under the law a corporation is not permitted to charge as a portion of their cost of production a donation of this kind unless it is directly donated to a hospital where the injured of the firm may be taken care of. In my own town, for instance, we have what we call the welfare league, which collects money to pay the running expenses of all the charitable institutions of the town, the hospitals, the home for the friendless, the Young Women's Christian Association, the Young Men's Christian Association. A portion of the money collected is collected from corporations, based by their pay roll, the number of employees they have.

Everyone in the town, every merchant, every corporation, every institution, contributes to the giving of money to pay the running expenses of all these charitable institutions, and the welfare league pays the bill and supervises the expenditure of each and every one of these institutions, and the portion of the money that comes from the corporations in that way to be used to support homes for the friendless under the law the Government will not permit them to use as deduction. It must be used through the hospitals in order for the corporation to get that credit. Therefore this amendment is to enable the corporations to donate in that way the same as an individual in a sum not in excess of 5 per cent of the total net income and use it as part of its deduction.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman inform the committee when this provision will take effect? It is my understanding it is to apply to deductions this year on the returns of corporations of this year.

Mr. FORDNEY. Last January is the date fixed for it to take effect.

Mr. STAFFORD. So it will apply to donations this year?

Mr. FORDNEY. During this calendar year.

Mr. STAFFORD. On the returns to be made next January?

Mr. FORDNEY. The tax will be paid next year on the business of this year.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. The gentleman from Michigan asked for a vote and so I assumed that he had finished, and I did not want the committee to vote on this amendment without drawing the attention of the committee to the effect of the amendment. This is simply one more exemption from taxation of corporations. There are a number in this bill, and this is only one which includes 5 per cent of taxes. Now, I do not know whether you gentlemen want to continue to do this or not. I do not know whether you fellows from Kansas or Missouri and a few others want to vote for an amendment of this kind or not, but that is the effect of it. I imagine if I had you down before a Missouri or Kansas audience, and I would take up this one amendment and get you going before an honest country audience, that you would have some difficulty in explaining just exactly what it meant—

Mr. EVANS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARNER. Not just now. It means this: It means that, for instance, the United States Steel Corporation will take a part of the money due the Government and support a hospital to which it will send all its employees, and pay a part of the expenses of the institution. That is what it means. It means your hospital you have to have and which you have got now, which you must pay to support as a part of the salary of the employees of the institution, that you can take out of the Treasury for the support of an institution in that way. That is what it means. I do not know whether you want to vote for it or not.

Mr. EVANS. Do I understand the gentleman to say that the legal obligation can under this be called a charity?

Mr. GARNER. I undertake to say that the United States Steel Corporation is now supporting its own hospitals—

Mr. EVANS. But the gentleman stated it had to, was compelled to.

Mr. GARNER. They do it now; and you are going to relieve them of the support of that hospital which is part of their business by allowing them to take this exemption out of the United States Treasury.

Mr. FORDNEY. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. They will not be relieved.

Mr. ANDREWS. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. GARNER. I will yield to the gentleman from Michigan. I will yield to the gentleman from Nebraska; go ahead.

Mr. ANDREWS. After eight years of Democracy we need a big hospital to keep the country on the way to convalescence.

Mr. GARNER. I am very glad I yielded to the gentleman to contribute so much to the argument.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, let me say I thank the gentleman for yielding. Under the law now a corporation can maintain a hospital of its own.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. And deduct—

Mr. FORDNEY. And deduct the expenses, even though it may pay 90 per cent of the total income, and care for their own injured or sick. These hospitals to which the corporation donates are for the sick and wounded or injured men employed by the corporation without charge to the corporation, and the corporations can donate not to exceed 5 per cent of their total income for that purpose, but if any portion of that donation is used for any other charitable institution in the town under the law the Federal Government will not permit them to deduct and use it as a portion of their general expenses.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the ayes appeared to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. GARNER) there were—ayes 64, noes 25.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer a committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HAWLEY: Page 27, line 24, before the word "subdivision" insert the letter "a" inclosed in parentheses, and on page 28, after line 3, insert the following:

"(b) Subdivision (d) of section 28 of the revenue act of 1918 is amended to read as follows:

"(d) The net income of the partnership shall be computed in the same manner and on the same basis as provided in section 212."

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, this strikes out the following words from the present law:

Except that the deduction provided in paragraph (11) of subdivision (a) of section 24 shall not be allowed.

That is to do for partnerships that which we have done for corporations.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer another committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oregon offers a further committee amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment offered by Mr. HAWLEY: On page 42, line 14, strike out the semicolon and insert in lieu thereof a comma.

Mr. HAWLEY. That is to correct a typographical error.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer another amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oregon offers another committee amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment offered by Mr. HAWLEY: Page 42, line 16, after the word "bears," insert the word "to."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer a further amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oregon offers a committee amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment offered by Mr. HAWLEY: Page 42, line 17, after the word "proceeds," insert a comma and the words "and the property acquired shall be treated as taking the place of a like proportion of the property converted."

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, this does for corporations in the matter of replacement of property taken, requisitioned, or destroyed what we have already done for individuals.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer another committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment offered by Mr. HAWLEY: Page 43, line 4, strike out the word "Section" and insert in lieu thereof the words "On and after January 1, 1922, section."

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, this postpones the operation of the tax until that date, in conformity with the tax law.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, as to the amendment which the gentleman offered a moment ago on page 42, line 17, has the gentleman any data which will give an idea of how much the Government will lose annually by the insertion of that amendment in the present law?

Mr. HAWLEY. In the case of property under the present law, where a loss is sustained, for instance, by the loss of a building, and insurance money is paid, they determine as well as they can the question of loss, and if the man replaced the building he probably was not charged with the gain or loss. And so in the case of property requisitioned or otherwise taken. And this practically carries out in the law what has been the practice of the department. It will affect the revenue very little one way or the other.

Mr. GARNER. I thought the gentleman stated that this put the corporations in the same situation as individuals in the present law.

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. What I wanted to know was, in changing the law so as to put a corporation on an equality with an individual, what the Government would lose in each calendar year?

Mr. HAWLEY. We have provided heretofore that individuals or partnerships that suffer a loss by destruction of property, or property taken or requisitioned, and replace the property by property of equal value, that shall not be considered a gain or loss. We provide now the same privilege for a corporation. The Treasury Department has practically done this for some years in the administration of the law. We write into the law what has heretofore been done, and therefore there can not be much gain or loss in the revenue.

Mr. GARNER. I would like to know what authority the Treasury Department had for writing this into the law when it did not exist?

Mr. HAWLEY. Because it was the right way to settle the account.

Mr. GARNER. Why do you change the law that is being administered already without any change in the law?

Mr. HAWLEY. I am one who believes we should do by law as much as we can and leave as little as possible to regulation.

Mr. GARNER. I agree with the gentleman exactly as to that. The department has been doing what they ought not to do, in administering the law which he now wants to put on the statute books.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oregon has expired.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have one minute more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HAWLEY. I would not impute either to the former commissioner or the present commissioner the doing of a wrong. I think they settled the accounts in the right way, but I think the authorization for their settlement ought to be a matter of law rather than a matter of regulation.

Mr. GARNER. I understood the gentleman a moment ago that he thought the law ought to be put on the statute book and not made by a bureau. Now, inasmuch as he admits that the bureau has made this law without any authorization of statutes, that he is trying to put a law on the books now, does he not think that the bureau exceeded its authority and that it ought to have restrained itself until you could have amended the law that you seek to put in this bill?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oregon.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer another committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oregon offers a committee amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment offered by Mr. HAWLEY: Page 43, line 15, after the colon strike out the remainder of the line and all of lines 16, 17, 18, and 19 down to and including the period in line 19, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"Provided, That the amount of credit taken under this subdivision shall in no case exceed the same proportion of the tax which the taxpayer's net income (computed without deduction for any income, war-profits and excess-profits taxes imposed by any foreign country or possession of the United States) from sources without the United States bears to its entire net income (computed without such deduction) for the same taxable year.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, this does for corporations what we have heretofore done for individuals, and does away with a mathematical uncertainty and almost an impossible mathematical calculation to determine the credit before the income is determined, or the income before the credit is determined.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer another committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The clerk will report the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment offered by Mr. HAWLEY: Page 44, line 8, after the word "has" insert the word "already" and in line 9 strike out the words "under the provisions of this act."

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, this clarifies and improves the language.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Chairman, I have not taken up any of the time of the committee, and would not do so at the present time, because I had hoped I might have an opportunity to offer an amendment, but it seems that nothing but committee amendments will be offered, and I shall, therefore, briefly address the committee.

I might call the attention of the Members of this House to the time when the Democrats were in power. We then repealed in the House what was known as the luxury tax, about which a great deal of complaint was heard from all parts of the country. That did not pass in the Senate, because of a Republican filibuster, as I recall. At the next session of Congress, the Republicans being in control, the same bill was introduced, covering about four lines, but after a day's consideration the bill was withdrawn, and went back to the Committee on Ways and Means, and we have never heard from it since.

I find in your present bill, on page 72, that while section 904 has been repealed you have switched from section 904 articles that were formerly taxed under what was known as the luxury tax, and which included trunks, valises, purses, and so forth, to section 808. Now, we will take up on page 75 of the bill passed in 1918 carpets and rugs, 10 per cent in excess of $5 per square yard. In the present bill if a rug is sold for more than $3.50 you pay a tax of 5 per cent; therefore, instead of giving relief the man of ordinary means is in fact hit harder.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman will pardon me.

Mr. SEARS. You take trunks of the amount of $50—

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. This is wholesale price.

Mr. SEARS. It does not say so. In the bill of 1918 you only paid a tax of 10 per cent on the price in excess of $50. In the present bill there is a 5 per cent tax on trunks sold for more than $30. Does that give you relief sufficient to mention? The bill that you are trying to make the people of the country believe you are repealing, the luxury tax, a trunk sold at $30.50 is called a luxury, and you pay 5 per cent on same, while in 1918 under the revenue act a trunk had to sell for more than $50 before it was considered a luxury, and then you only paid 10 per cent on the amount in excess of $50.

We find on umbrellas in the present bill you pay 5 per cent tax if sold for more than $2.50. In the other bill, to wit, the bill of 1918, an umbrella had to be worth $4 before it was called a luxury.

In the bill of 1918 portable lighting fixtures, including lamps of all kinds and lamp shades, the same were not taxed or considered luxuries unless sold for more than $25, and you only paid a tax of 10 per cent on the amount in excess of $25. Under the bill you are now considering the above articles are considered luxuries if sold for more than $10, and you pay a tax on same of 5 per cent. It is true many of the articles taxed in the bill of 1918 are not included in this bill, but many of them are retained, and, as shown, the tax is greatly increased.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Florida has expired.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Iowa?

Mr. SEARS. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman is entirely incorrect. If he will buy one at the stores down town at that price he will not have to pay any tax.

Mr. SEARS. I am complaining about the bill now under consideration, and certainly if the bill means what is specifically set forth therein, then my comparisons are correct. But, Mr. Chairman, I leave this for the people to decide. Oh! How long can this camouflage continue?

Oh, Mr. Chairman, it is easy enough to cut the surtax from 60 per cent or more, as a present, down to 32 per cent on the man who makes his millions. It is all right to give to the man who makes the millions all in excess thereof in order that he may have a chance to go to some theater and enjoy some luxury. The committee can figure that out without any trouble, but when you get down to the ordinary citizen it seems no relief can be given. I want to call the attention of the country to the fact that I would offer an amendment to strike these propositions from the bill if the opportunity were given me to do so.

The other day it was stated by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] that he was talking about "big matters" and "big men." It is true he was talking about them, and I challenge anyone to show that this bill gives relief to any except the big men and the big interests. I ask any man on the other side to show me where the 4,000,000 boys who fought for $30 a month and returned to their homes and are now working and receiving $1,600 or $2,000 a year get any relief in taxes on their $600 or $1,000 in excess of the sum of $1,000 exemption allowed them by act of 1918.

For them and the other millions of our citizens who only receive wages barely sufficient to meet expenses it seems an impossible task to work out any system which will give them relief, but what more can we expect when you deal only with "big men and big matters"?

I have never arrayed the masses against the classes, and I would be the last man to do it. But, as was said by the distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER], whenever your neighbor sees there is a discrimination in taxes, then the neighbor complains. Each American citizen, if he can go into a store and buy what he wants without being discriminated against, will not complain, nor will he complain, Mr. Chairman, if there is no discrimination in taxes.

But you find shifting of taxes all through this bill. You have shifted, side-stepped, repealed, reenacted, put one section in one place and another section in another until one grows dizzy trying to keep up with you, but when the people of the country make out their returns year after next, after this bill really goes into effect, they will find that they have been handed a lemon instead of any relief along taxation lines, as they had hoped. The sad part of it is what an awakening it will be! Mr. Chairman, I sincerely trust the majority will yet correct the many inequalities, but I fear this will not be done. I trust my fears are groundless and that the Republican members of the Ways and Means Committee will eliminate these taxes and give to the people the relief, even if only in part, I believe they are entitled to.

Mr. HAWLEY. I ask for a vote, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer a committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oregon offers another committee amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment offered by Mr. HAWLEY: Page 44, line 15, after the word "may," insert a comma and the words "for any taxable year beginning on or after January 1, 1922," and a comma, and strike out all of lines 23, 24, and 25, and lines 1 to 5, inclusive, on page 45.

Mr. HAWLEY. This is to continue in force the regulations relative to the excess-profits tax, to conform to the changes made in the other parts of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer another committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oregon offers a further committee amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment offered by Mr. HAWLEY: Page 46, line 2, strike out the quotation marks and after line 2 insert a new paragraph, to be inclosed in quotation marks, and to read as follows:

(d) Corporations which are affiliated within the meaning of this section shall make consolidated returns for any taxable year beginning prior to January 1, 1922, in the same manner and subject to the same conditions as provided by this act as in force prior to the passage of the revenue act of 1921.

Mr. HAWLEY. This has the same purpose as the preceding amendment relating to consolidated returns.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. HAWLEY. Certainly.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. That is entirely new matter, is it not?

Mr. HAWLEY. Heretofore corporations have been required to make consolidated returns, and this provides that those which are affiliated shall make them in the same manner and subject to the same conditions.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. But this particular language is new, is it not?

Mr. HAWLEY. It is new language.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I was wondering why, if it is a new provision, there should be quotation marks about it. It is not quoted from anything, is it?

Mr. HAWLEY. It is quoted matter to go into the statute.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. It is new legislation on an old subject matter?

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. It is not quoted from any other law? I do not see why there should be any quotation marks about it when we enact it. It is not quoted from anything. It is not an old law quoted here, but it is new matter. Is not that so?

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes. It is amending the old law to read in a certain way.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. It is new legislation amending the old law. It is new language applied to an old subject matter. It is not a quotation at all, and I can not see why there should be any quotation marks about it as provided in the amendment. That same comment is true of half a dozen other amendments that have been adopted with quotation marks about them. They are new phraseology relating to an old subject matter, but the sentences themselves are absolutely new and not quoted from anything else.

Mr. HAWLEY. They are put in quotation marks to show that they are added to an existing law and not simply confined to the language of this bill.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I know, but quotation marks imply a quotation. If I see quotation marks about anything, I understand that that language has been used before on some other occasion in some other law. That is not true of the subject matter about which these quotation marks are put. It is new language, a new expression entirely on an old subject matter, and not a quotation, and there should not be quotation marks about it.

Mr. HAWLEY. It is the uniform practice of the House.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. It is entirely immaterial whether it is an old practice of the House or not. You never can be too soon in correcting an abuse. That is a thing which read in that way would imply to the reader not familiar with the facts that all of this language was in the law that you were amending, and it would mislead the reader.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. It would not mislead anyone familiar with the way we have been amending laws in Congress.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Very few of the rank and file know anything about how legislation is done here. They would have the right to infer that if a new law bears quotation marks it was taken from something else.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer a further committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 46, line 5, after the word "follows" insert a comma and the words "to take effect January 1, 1922."

Mr. HAWLEY. This postpones the taking effect of the new provision affecting life insurance until January, 1922.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer a further committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 46, line 19, strike out the figures "1921" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "1922."

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, this is for the same purpose as the preceding amendment, and the date should be the same.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer a further committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 50, line 17, strike out the word "paragraph" and insert in lieu thereof "and third paragraphs."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer a further committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 50, line 18, strike out the word "is" and insert in lieu thereof the word "are."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 52, line 2, after the word "filed," insert a comma.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the further committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 54, line 15, strike out the word "taxpayers'" and insert in lieu thereof the word "taxpayer's."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer a further committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 50: Page 56, strike out lines 4, 5, and 6, and insert in lieu thereof a new section to read as follows:

"Sec. 257. This title shall take effect as of January 1, 1921, except sections 206, 207, 224, 237, 242, 245, and 250, and subdivision (b) of section 202, all of which shall take effect January 1, 1922."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman from Oregon, on an amendment of this character, should make some explanation as to the purpose of the amendment and as to the date it takes effect.

Mr. HAWLEY. This is collecting into one section and making positive enactment the changes that we have previously made as to the time of going into effect of various provisions. There is nothing new in them.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. For instance, the very first number refers to capital gain and loss.

Mr. STAFFORD. It is a summary of the previous amendments that have been adopted?

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was considered and agreed to.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following further committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 56, strike out lines 8 to 17, inclusive, and insert in lieu thereof a new section, to read as follows:

"SEC. 301. (a) Title III of the revenue act of 1918 is repealed, to take effect January 1, 1922.

"(b) If a corporation (other than a personal service corporation) makes return for a fiscal year beginning in 1920 and ending in 1921, the war-profits and excess-profits tax for the taxable year 1921 shall be the sum of—: (1) The same proportion of a tax for the entire period computed under the revenue act of 1918 (as in force prior to the passage of this act) which the portion of such period falling within the calendar year 1920 is of the entire period, and (2) the same proportion of a tax for the entire period computed under the revenue act of 1918 (as in force on Dec. 31, 1921) which the portion of such period falling within the calendar year 1921 is of the entire period. Any amount heretofore or hereafter paid on account of the tax imposed for such taxable year by the revenue act of 1918 (as in force prior to the passage of this act) shall be credited toward the payment of the tax as above computed, and if the amount so paid exceeds the amount of such tax, the excess shall be credited or refunded to the corporation in accordance with the provisions of section 252 of the revenue act of 1918.

"(c) If a corporation (other than a personal service corporation) makes a return for a fiscal year beginning in 1921 and ending in 1922, the war-profits and excess-profits tax for the portion of the year falling within the calendar year 1921 shall be an amount equivalent to the same proportion of a tax for the entire period computed under the revenue act of 1918 (as in force on Dec. 31, 1921) which the portion of such period falling within the calendar year 1921 is of the entire period."

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, an individual or a corporation can select his or its own fiscal year. If the corporation selects the fiscal year other than the calendar year, it will pay a tax on a part of its income in one fiscal year and another part of it in another fiscal year. It will also pay under different administrative provisions, and this amendment enables the Treasury to apportion the income to the two calendar years and collect the proper amount of tax.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer a further committee amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 62, line 1, strike out "provided" and insert the word "prescribed."

Mr. HAWLEY. This is to correct a typographical error.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer a further committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 64, line 15, strike out all after the subdivision number and all of lines 16, 17, 18 and in lieu thereof insert the following:

"Upon all carbonic acid gas sold by the manufacturer, producer, or importer to a manufacturer of any carbonated beverages, or to any person conducting a soda fountain, ice-cream parlor, or other similar place of business, and upon all carbonic-acid gas used by the manufacturer, producer, or importer thereof in the preparation of soft drinks, a tax of 5 cents per pound."

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, the language in the bill as it stands puts a tax on the carbonic-acid gas when used by a person who buys it of the manufacturer. This amendment provides that the tax shall be imposed where a manufacturer manufactures both the gas and the drink.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer a further committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 65, line 18, strike out the letters between the word "a" and the word "of" and insert in lieu thereof the word "penalty."

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, this is to correct a typographical error.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer a further committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 73, line 17, strike out the figure "4" and insert in lieu thereof the figure "5."

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, this is to correct a typographical error.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer a further committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 75, strike out lines 4 to 10, both inclusive.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, this repeals the tax originally placed on the vendors of soft drinks. The bill provides a tax of $10 per year on each such vendor, and the committee decided to report an amendment eliminating that from the bill.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Chairman, I want to express my hearty approval of this amendment. While there are many provisions in the bill that do not meet with my approval and which I think are discriminatory, I do not believe there was any provision in the bill as objectionable from the standpoint of equity as the provision taxing the vendors of soft drinks. Under the provision originally reported a little merchant at a crossroads town selling a few bottles of soft drinks would have to pay the same tax as a large soft-drink emporium in New York or any other city doing thousands of dollars' worth of business a year. I congratulate my Republican colleagues upon their wisdom in moving to strike this from the bill.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRISP. Yes.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. I wish to heartily indorse what the gentleman from Georgia has said. Can the gentleman from Georgia tell us what prompted the majority members of the Ways and Means Committee to make this very just concession?

Mr. CRISP. I shall have to let the gentlemen answer for themselves. I for one have been very insistent in urging them to repent and repeal the provision. I do not know what influenced them. I would be very happy to learn that my urgent insistence had aided in bringing about this desirable result.

Mr. ALMON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I wish to heartily indorse the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oregon to strike out this tax. I think it would be a very unfair tax. I am sure the amendment will meet with the approval of my constituents, for I received some 38 telegrams from one town in my district this morning urging me to do all I could to have this stricken out. I am delighted to know that it is going out.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to present a further committee amendment, No. 56.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 80, line 16, strike out the word "and" and after the figures "1920" insert a comma and the word and figures "and 1921."

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is made necessary by the postponement of the repeal of the provisions of the present law concerning personal service corporations.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I present a further committee amendment, No. 57, which merely corrects a typographical error.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 80, line 21, strike out the letters between the word "the" and the word "day" and insert in lieu thereof the word "fifteenth."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I present a further committee amendment, No. 58.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 80, line 24, strike out the word "and"; and in line 25, after the figures "1920," insert a comma and the word and figures "and 1921."

Mr. HAWLEY. This as a companion amendment to amendment No. 56.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I present an unnumbered amendment not in the book.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 82, line 12, strike out the figures "4½" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "4½."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I present a further committee amendment, not numbered.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 71, line 24, strike out the figures "$3.50" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$3.60."

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, this is an immaterial amendment and facilitates the computation of this tax.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. WALSH, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 8245, had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for two minutes in order to make a statement.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wyoming? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I think that the gentlemen on both sides should understand that if they leave the city before the gavel falls for a recess they may be called back. We would not want to send the Sergeant at Arms to New York, Colorado, or Connecticut, or Alabama, to bring any of the brethren back, but I think that in fairness to those who are disposed to stay every one should understand that if they leave before the recess they leave with the possibility of being sent for. The House is entitled to a recess. Gentlemen on both sides have worked earnestly and faithfully for months, but there are certain things we must do before we recess. There is the bill for the extension of the dye embargo and the emergency tariff, there is the so-called beer bill, there is the bill now the unfinished business of the House providing aid for the export agricultural products. These and some other measures must be disposed of—I think I express the views of the House in that regard—before we recess, and if gentlemen go and there should be a lack of a quorum we would have to send for them. I think that all gentlemen who have any disposition to go must realize that it is not fair to those disposed to remain to have others take advantage of the anticipation of a recess and leave for home in advance of the beginning of the recess. A resolution for a recess will not be presented to the House until the program is, in the vernacular, "in the clear," so that no one who leaves before the hour of recess can be at all certain they shall not be asked to return.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I will yield.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The gentleman has stated the resolution for the recess will not be presented until the program is "in the clear." Does that mean that the measures to which the gentleman has specially alluded constitute the entire program and that when those measures to which he has alluded are disposed of the gentleman then will present the resolution?

Mr. MONDELL. Well, there is the measure providing a high tariff on the reentry of war goods from abroad. It should be included. There is the grain futures act.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. That is in conference, is it not?

Mr. MONDELL. There has been an agreement. There will be no difficulty, I assume, in regard to that. We shall also quite likely take up for consideration the railroad bill. The present plan is to take up for consideration to-morrow, after disposing of the pending bill, the bill which is the unfinished business, and dispose of it if possible before adjournment to-morrow night. I think that is about the program so far as I can recall.

Mr. STEENERSON. May I ask the gentleman if he intends to take up the Unanimous Consent Calendar and suspensions?

Mr. MONDELL. I have promised gentlemen on both sides that if it is possible to do it and it is agreeable to the Members we would try to take up Monday or Tuesday evening, perhaps, the Unanimous Consent Calendar. There are some Senate bills that in all probability would not be objected to which Members are anxious to have passed.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Pass those at night sessions?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Did I understand the gentleman to state that the railroad bill would be taken up? Has that been determined?

Mr. MONDELL. Well, my present impression is that it will. I can not say that it is absolutely fixed and determined, but I hope we shall take it up Monday.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Well, I believe the resolution of the Senate provided for adjournment on the 24th?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Does the gentleman hope to dispose of the several measures to which he has alluded and still be able to keep that date?

Mr. MONDELL. That is my hope. And there is another matter that I think I should refer to at this time. When the time comes I shall ask the House to adopt an amendment to the adjournment resolution under which the recess of the House shall be for a longer period than that of the Senate. [Applause.] I have discussed the matter with the gentleman from Tennessee. My own thought is that we can possibly provide for a reconvening of the House on Monday or Tuesday of the first week of October. That is subject to change, however, after further consultation with gentlemen on both sides.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. KINCHELOE. I understand the good roads bill passed the Senate this afternoon, and I presume it will go to conference right away. I wanted to ask the gentleman, in view of the fact that we are at a standstill in the activities of road building in various States and that in mine they lack funds, if that bill will be considered?

Mr. MONDELL. I have taken that matter up with gentlemen in both bodies, and I am under the impression it would not be possible to reach an agreement in conference on that bill before we recess. I am entirely in harmony with the gentleman's view in regard to the matter, but for the present there is still an abundance of funds. It is true that in some States there is some hesitancy about embarking upon new enterprises until we have further determined as to future appropriations. But so far as present progress is concerned I think nothing would be lost by having that matter taken up on our return.

Mr. KINCHELOE. I will say to the gentleman as to there being an abundance of Federal funds, so far as my State is concerned they have exhausted the Federal funds and have stopped their activities on roads that are only 3 or 4 miles apart that are included in a system 200 or 300 miles long.

Mr. MONDELL. My understanding is that there is about $180,000,000 available for roads. It is true that in some States they are pretty close to the margin. But I find among the best friends of the road bill there is a good deal of doubt as to whether an agreement could be reached on that bill before we adjourn. I hope that we can reach an agreement soon after our return.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts makes the point of order there is no quorum present.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Speaker, I want to submit a unanimous-consent request if the gentleman from Massachusetts will withhold his point for just a moment.

Mr. WALSH. I withhold it.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to introduce into the RECORD a small editorial from the Palm Beach Press.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Florida asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. I object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY].

The motion was agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-six Senators having answered to their names; there is a quorum present.

Mr. HARRISON concluded the speech began by him yesterday. The entire speech is as follows:

Friday, August 19, 1921.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, some weeks ago we passed what was known as the budget bill, and we were told that it was going to accomplish much; that the results would be material reductions in public expenditures. A very distinguished citizen was appointed as Director of the Budget, a man for whom we all have a high regard. He has accomplished great things, won high favor in business circles, and rendered conspicuous service to the country; but it seems peculiarly strange that in the first official act of this officer in carrying out his duties under the law as Director of the Budget he assumes so much authority, and fails to follow either the letter or spirit of the law.

The budget system was framed on the theory that the President would transmit to Congress estimates for the various bureaus, and that we would discontinue the old practice of having the heads of the departments make their estimates and send them to Congress for its consideration. The Director of the Budget has no authority under the law for transmitting estimates to Congress. He is to gather information and present it to the President. I think the distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Committee will agree with me in that view.

Mr. WARREN. Not exactly as the Senator states it. The President is the head of the budget. The President has the right to send estimates. The President does send them, and every amount in this bill is contained in some one of the estimates which the President of the United States has approved, and every one except perhaps the first item was sent over his own signature.

Mr. HARRISON. The President of the United States, under the budget law, is supposed to send the estimates here. Those estimates are prepared by the various heads of departments and scanned, so to speak, by Mr. Dawes, the director; but we find in this, his first case, that in the estimate Mr. Dawes is the man who transmits it to us and not the President of the United States. I read:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
BUREAU OF THE BUDGET,
Washington, July 20, 1921.

Hon. FREDERICK H. GILLET,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

DEAR Mr. SPEAKER: I transmit herewith, with the approval of the President, request for appropriation for $125,000,000 for the period of July 31, 1921, to December 31, 1921, for the United States Shipping Board. I am of the opinion that its needs should be met by Congress in the measure and manner submitted by A. D. Lasker, chairman of the Shipping Board.

Respectfully,

CHARLES G. DAWES,
Director of the Bureau of the Budget.

So the President up to this good hour, so far as this estimate is concerned, has not transmitted his recommendation to us. He nor Mr. Dawes has followed either the spirit or the letter of the budget law in making up the estimate and in transmitting it to Congress.

I desire to read two sections from the budget law.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator state to the Senate that Gen. Dawes, whose duty it is to scrutinize these demands for appropriations, recommended $125,000,000 for the Shipping Board?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; that is his estimate here, under his signature, dated July 20, 1921.

Mr. KING. Is there any testimony before either the House committee or the Senate committee that Gen. Dawes made investigations before making that recommendation for the purpose of determining whether the appropriation was warranted, whether it was just, or whether it was extravagant and uncalled-for?

Mr. HARRISON. I am sorry to say that there is no evidence before us on the subject. The only statement of Mr. Dawes is that—I am of the opinion that its needs should be met by Congress in the measure and manner submitted by A. D. Lasker, chairman of the Shipping Board.

There is nothing here to show that the President has transmitted it except the statement there that he sends herewith, "with the approval of the President," a request for the appropriation.

Mr. KING. Does not the budget law contemplate that the budget officer shall make a thorough examination of all requests for appropriations, so that by virtue of his examination he can put his stamp of approval upon them?

Mr. HARRISON. That was the object of the law, and from reading the newspapers one would judge that under the leadership of Mr. Dawes they are making great cuts and great savings, but the first communication does not bear out that impression at all.

Mr. KING. The Senator knows that notwithstanding the report which Gen. Dawes made to the President, showing $112,000,000 in various departments and itemizing it as to the departments and bureaus where cuts could be made or were being made, nothing has been done toward saving, and no returns have been made to the Treasury of any of those amounts alleged to have been saved.

Mr. HARRISON. I suppose the chairman of the Appropriations Committee will bear out the statement that every year there is some amount turned back into the Treasury by various bureaus that was not used, and I dare say that the amount has been not in excess of $112,000,000, but that that is about the sum that is usually turned back, and perhaps that was the amount that Mr. Dawes had in mind when he said that they had already saved $112,000,000.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, the Senator is undoubtedly correct in that surmise, because the $112,000,000 mentioned was a summary of advices from the heads of various bureaus and departments that possibly they could save that much in this fiscal year, and they predicated that, I assume, upon what had been saved and turned back at other times. I should say that it would be more than that rather than less.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; so while the people were led to believe by that statement and a great many thought that Mr. Dawes had already under this budget system accomplished the miracle of saving $112,000,000 this year, it was merely a saving that had gone on in the usual course in the years in the past; it was only due to the various bureaus turning back money into the Treasury that had been appropriated, and it was not any saving as a matter of fact.

Mr. WARREN. I may say, however, if the Senator will permit me, in that connection, that the appropriations for former years have been more liberal, as the Senator knows from the statement which the committee a short time ago had inserted in the RECORD. There are nearly a billion dollars less in the appropriations for the present fiscal year than in those of last year and the year before. So that the endeavor to save the $112,000,000 was in the face not only of the facts stated but of the fact that they were from very much leaner appropriations than before.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I desire now to read to the Senate two sections of the budget law to show that the intention was that the President should send in the estimates, and not that the Director of the Budget should send in estimates.

The first is section 203, which reads:

The President from time to time may transmit to Congress supplemental or deficiency estimates for such appropriations or expenditures as in his judgment (1) are necessary on account of laws enacted after the transmission of the Budget, or (2) are otherwise in the public interest. He shall accompany such estimates with a statement of the reasons therefor, including the reasons for their omission from the Budget.

I read now section 206:

No estimate or request for an appropriation and no request for an increase in an item of any such estimate or request, and no recommendation as to how the revenue needs of the Government should be met, shall be submitted to Congress or any committee thereof by any officer or employee of any department or establishment, unless at the request of either House of Congress.

Of course, this estimate is not made at the request of either House of Congress, and is transmitted to Congress by Mr. Dawes himself, and not by the President.

But, Mr. President, Mr. Dawes, who is supposed, if certain news notices are to be believed, to have effected a great saving in the public expenditures, in his first recommendation to Congress for $125,000,000 is repudiated by the appropriations committees of both the House of Representatives and the Senate, and by the Shipping Board, too. Let us analyze the proposition. We have in official capacity here one who is hailed as a close observer, who is supposed to analyze these expenditures and to save something for the people. Let us see whether or not he is doing it. His estimate for the Shipping Board is $125,000,000. Mr. Lasker appears before the House Appropriations Committee and tells them in the beginning that he needs only $100,000,000, because $25,000,000 of the $125,000,000 has already been appropriated, and he has it in hand. So we find this man who was going to be such a close observer, and cut down expenditures, and save something for the taxpayers of America repudiated in the first breath by the head of the Shipping Board.

Then comes the consideration of the request by the Appropriations Committee of the House; and what do they do? Do they give him the $125,000,000? Do they give him the $100,000,000? No. They cut it to $48,500,000. So we find in that instance that the Congress is more economical than the Director of the Budget. If he proceeds along that road in the future, I can not feel that there will be any great amount saved in the coming year by this Congress. No great strides for economy may then be looked for.

Mr. WARREN. I hope the Senator has not in mind amending it by making it $100,000,000 or $125,000,000.

Mr. HARRISON. Indeed, I have not. I have not gotten to the congratulations yet, but I really mean it as a congratulation to the distinguished chairman of this committee and the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations of the House that they are more economical and are watching the affairs of the Government more closely and trying to economize to a greater degree than the man who has been designated by the President of the United States to cut the expenditures to the bone. You have cut the estimate from $125,000,000 down to $48,500,000.

Mr. WARREN. Thanking the Senator for the compliment, I do not think I deserve any part of that, as it is due to the chairman of the committee on the other side of the Capitol. I know from the debate that was had over there, and an examination of the papers, that the Senator has the opportunity to hang his very well selected and delivered remarks about the first item, because of the haste in which that was gotten up to the House. The House accepted it at once, without waiting for that which would have followed, and which in every other case has preceded. As I say, the debate there has shown that it came about as the Senator says in the first instance, if not informally, in a way that was hasty during the consideration of that first item.

As to the other item, while there has been haste, and a good deal put in the bill on this side of the Capitol, the committee has insisted that in every case we have the estimates over the signature of the President. In the first case, it was just as real in every way as the others, except the haste in which the House wished to have the first items to commence with on the appropriation bill.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, if I may interrupt the Senator from Mississippi, in any event I think congratulations are premature, because if the Senator from Mississippi will examine the testimony he will there discover that Mr. Lasker says he will be back in a few months for the balance of it, and maybe more.

Mr. HARRISON. I have no doubt, if the same policy is pursued in the future by Mr. Dawes and the President that is pursued in this instance, the recommendation will come to Congress to make that appropriation, and then I hope that we can again congratulate the chairman of the Appropriations Committee of the Senate and the Appropriations Committee of the House for again cutting it down to the bone, or in refusing to give it to them at all.

Mr. GLASS. The trouble is, I will say to the Senator, that nobody knows where the bone is in this Shipping Board business. It is not a bone; it is a cavity.

Mr. HARRISON. I agree with the Senator.

Mr. GLASS. The end of it, in my judgment, has not nearly been reached, if it ever will be reached.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McNARY in the chair). Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. In the testimony, on page 7, there appears the following:

Mr. CHAIRMAN. Mr. Lasker, I noticed that Senator Jones stated on the floor once that you would require $280,000,000, that we would have to appropriate that amount. You stated afterwards that it would require $125,000,000. Now you say it will take $48,000,000. Is this $48,000,000 only a temporary appropriation, and for how long?

Mr. LASKER. I understand the $48,000,000 is for no specific length of time. When it is exhausted we shall have to ask for more.

I might liken the situation thus: I have in mind a concern that expected last year to make $5,000,000. When it finished the year it had lost $8,000,000. If you would go into it I presume you would find a hundred such firms on the New York Stock Exchange. They confidently expected to make money last year, and their directors bought the stocks, but they lost from 25 per cent to more than one-half of their capital. That is what the shipping business is now.

Senator OVERMAN. Do you think this $48,000,000 is enough to run you for the next 12 months?

Mr. LASKER. No, sir. Of course, you understand we have an appropriation of $25,000,000 to complete construction which we inherited, which could not stop, and with which we are connected merely pro forma.

Then we have an appropriation of nearly $65,000,000, if we can find it, out of the sale of assets. I have held—I am not trying to tell Congress—that that seemed to me to be very wasteful, because if we got our back up against the wall to pay bills we might be tempted to sell stuff at auction prices—at 10 cents on the dollar. I will not do that myself. I would rather get out.

Then this $48,000,000 was estimated for the next six months if we paid no claims.

Senator OVERMAN. If you paid no claims for the next six months?

Mr. LASKER. Yes; it might be more and it might be less.

So the the $48,000,000 signifies nothing at all, except simply a temporary expedient.

Mr. HARRISON. It is just a beginning.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The $48,000,000 is not an estimate of Mr. Lasker or of the Shipping Board. The estimate they sent down was for $100,000,000.

Mr. HARRISON. It was for $125,000,000.

Mr. JONES of Washington. One hundred and twenty-five million dollars; but I do not know why they included $25,000,000 which we had already appropriated for the construction of ships.

Mr. HARRISON. But Mr. Dawes did estimate for $125,000,000.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Whether he did or not the $25,000,000 had been actually appropriated, so that really was no estimate. In the House committee they cut it down to $48,000,000, as they thought the evidence warranted. I am merely stating that to correct the suggestion that this was an estimate of Mr. Lasker's.

Mr. HARRISON. I quite agree with the Senator; but I can not understand the reason why a man who stands as high as Mr. Dawes does, who is blessed with so much good common sense and exceptional business qualities, who is just beginning a great work, should go into the public prints with the statement that he has saved $112,000,000, when, as the chairman of the Appropriation Committee states, it is but the same way we have saved millions in the past, bureaus failing to expend the appropriations made for them and turning them back into the Treasury. So, as in this case, the first instance in which he makes a recommendation, it is for $125,000,000; and he is repudiated by the Shipping Board for which he requests the appropriation and by the Appropriation Committees of the House and the Senate.

If he wants to fool somebody, and tell them we are economizing here, and that the new administration is saving money for the people and cutting down expenditures when it is not true, and everybody knows it is not true, when the facts do not bear it out, if it is merely to deceive somebody, then they can go ahead with such publicity as that. But I do not believe they will get anywhere with it, and I think the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations will agree with me about it. I can not believe that Mr. Dawes has any such idea, and excuse him on the theory of his newness in the job and the human weakness for publicity.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, Mr. Dawes requires no praise nor support from me as to character or ability. He has made his reputation elsewhere, and he does not have to come to the Senate to make a reputation as if elected or appointed from civil life, without business experience and war experience. He stands high in both.

When the estimate of $125,000,000 was made it was understood to include the $25,000,000. The Senator will remember that when we passed in the last session the second deficiency bill the Senate included an item of $50,000,000 more, knowing that it was necessary to pay bills; but at that time the board was completely disorganized, in fact there was no board, simply Admiral Benson alone, and it was assumed we would wait until there was a new board, and so the $50,000,000 item was dropped.

The appropriation bills for the last two or three years have given the board no money of consequence except what they might get out of what they sold. The second deficiency bill carried $55,000,000 out of receipts from the sale of ships, which has not been realized upon, and also carried $25,000,000 for the completion of 19 vessels, but carried nothing for general expenses or payment of claims or the ordinary expenses up to date.

On the 1st of July there was a deficiency of about $17,000,000 to cover various matters of daily running expenses. I happened to come across some of them, not items having relation to this bill, but matters in which they owe certain States for the oil that has been sold to them through the Interior Department, and various other things.

So that after taking the $25,000,000 out the House then calculated on the $17,000,000, and I think they admitted there, as it would seem we would have to admit, that the lemon has been squeezed pretty dry as to ships and items that can be sold at a reasonable price at the present time with the market as it is. So that the $55,000,000 that we appropriated is nil unless they should be forced—and I do not even think they could be forced then—to get what they ask for out of the proceeds of the sale of ships.

So they have really had to run without appropriations of any consequence for a number of years, relying only on what the fleet earned and proceeds from ships and items sold.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I wish to ask a question purely for information. I do not know whether my colleague can answer it or not; perhaps if he can not, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations may.

The newspapers carried an item not very long ago stating that the Shipping Board was about to ask for an appropriation of three hundred and some odd million dollars, and that they would need that much, because otherwise they were afraid they would have to give up the great American merchant marine. Is that true?

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I have on my desk here a statement of some of the largest claims that are being sued on which the United States must defend. In fact, there are thirty-five hundred claims of consequence against the United States unsettled, in a large measure, on which suit has been commenced. Whether there are $300,000,000 of claims altogether or not I can not say, but I assume it is likely to be more rather than less. But I assume that many of those claims are spurious entirely, while as to others it will finally develop that the real, absolute claims are very much smaller than what they seek to recover now. That is one reason why it requires immediate work, with attorneys of experience in such things and of great ability.

To give the Senator an idea, this statement shows that there is one claim of $17,493,000; another of $14,328,000; another of $13,000,000. Then they go on down to lesser sums, and here are two pages of claims running anywhere from $1,000,000 to nearly $18,000,000. That accounts for the rumor that they will ask for an appropriation of $300,000,000.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I desired to call attention to that because I wanted to impress upon the Senate and upon the country by the inquiry and by the reply, if I am correct in my inference concerning both, that this is the most expensive form of ship subsidy ever proposed to the American people, although it is concealed under the guise of Government management of ships.

Mr. WARREN. I want to say, further, that in asking for a hundred million dollars—there was no trouble about the twenty-five, which had already been appropriated—it was thought advisable to have twenty-five million or more at hand to undertake to compromise some of these claims, to prevent long and expensive suits. But the House thought best not to allow anything upon those old claims, and hence have reduced the appropriation to $48,500,000.

Mr. WILLIAMS. What is the estimate of the Shipping Board as to what it will have to pay on these pending claims; or have they made any?

Mr. WARREN. I have no estimate. I made inquiry along the line of the one the Senator has made. In the first place, they said they did not know; they had not gotten far enough along. In the second place, they felt it was an injustice to themselves to ask them to even closely approximate; and, still further, they did not wish to give any notoriety as to what could be done which might be used against them when they undertook to settle the claims.

Mr. WILLIAMS. So it is not only a ship subsidy under the guise of the Government running ships, but the total amount of it is as yet unguessed at even by the Government.

Mr. WARREN. The term "subsidy" is the Senator's term. It is a mere matter of buying property. We have 1,700 ships, and I think I ought to say, if the Senator from Mississippi will permit me, that this shipbuilding business is one of those things we went into when everything was at its peak, when the tonnage was calculated on a basis of about $300 per ton, and that the present condition, of course, is different, and the tonnage would run less than $100 a ton; that the expensive part of it was all handled during the time of high prices. In undertaking to sell this shipping they must meet with very severe cuts, and on top of the general reduction is the fact that most of these boats are chained up, as most of the vessels of the other shipping concerns are, for want of business.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Does not the Senator really think, in the words of one of Charles Dickens's characters, that this is rather "one of those things that no fellow can tell anything about"?

Mr. WARREN. Most decidedly so. It has been heretofore.

Mr. JONES of Washington and Mr. McKELLAR addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield first to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. I wish to ask the Senator from Wyoming this question—

Mr. JONES of Washington. I wish, in connection with what the Senator from Mississippi asked about, to make a brief statement. Will the Senator permit me just a minute?

Mr. McKELLAR. I just wish to ask this question in connection with what has been talked about by the Senator from Wyoming. He read of a number of suits, one of $17,000,000, another $14,000,000, and another $13,000,000. What was the subject matter of those suits? Were they just damage suits, such as we sometimes see in the court records, where an immense amount of money is claimed, and where but little is expected to be recovered, or what is the nature of them? What are they about?

Mr. WARREN. They are of various natures, mostly for construction. Some are for cancellation of contracts and some for alleged shipping that has been furnished. Let me take up the $14,000,000 suit, for instance, that of Pusey & Jones. A man by the name of Hannafig, reported to be from Norway originally, with some money, secured options upon two or three not expensive shipyards. He then obtained contracts with the Government for large shipping. He formed the corporation of Pusey & Jones, and another one of Mann & Co., I think the name was, and proceeded to build vessels on the cost-plus scheme, and to abuse it, as most all cost-plus operators did. He went on building vessels, and in the course of the very heat of prices and transactions Mann & Co. were building some ships that were wanted by the Cunard Line, so that Hannafig and his subcontractors put up the job between them to charge the Cunard Co. for the ships and $5,000,000 more than the cost-plus. The Cunard people paid it and got those ships.

Later on when the United States was forced, in order to get its men across, to commandeer ships it commandeered those very ships from the Cunard Line. It has been discovered since that the British Government is now asking us to pay the $5,000,000, as well as that cost-plus price of the vessels, and we are in suit about that. After the Hannafig companies had beaten the Government—to use one of the phrases of the day—out of about $67,000,000 they come in with a claim now for $14,328,839.31. My colleague on the committee, the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES], will understand that and some of the others, but that is probably the worst sample of all.

Mr. KING. That seems to be a conspiracy under the law, and they ought to be sent to the penitentiary.

Mr. WARREN. I should like to find the man who instigated it. He absconded.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I gathered from a remark made by the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] that he had the impression these claims grew out of the operation of ships. They did not.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Their purchase, or operation, or claims for seizing ships and operating them during the war.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do not understand that any of these claims grow out of the operation of ships. They all grow out of the construction or cancellation of certain contracts, so that from that standpoint I do not see how they could be treated as a subsidy. If they did grow out of operation, I can see how it might be construed as a subsidy.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Does the Senator contend that the only deficiencies to be provided for by appropriation were the deficiencies of the Shipping Board operations which grew out of the loss of money from charter parties and from operation?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I did not know the Senator was discussing the $48,000,000 item. There are no claims involved in the $48,000,000.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understand that. I am not talking about that. I am talking about the three hundred and some odd million dollars which they are going to ask Congress to appropriate.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That is not for operation. That is with reference to claims for construction growing out of the cancellation of contracts.

Mr. WILLIAMS. How much has the Shipping Board lost through operation?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do not know.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Can the Senator guess at it?

Mr. JONES of Washington. What good would a guess do? The trouble is there are too many guesses now, and those guesses go out as facts to the country.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But the Senator does know that it has lost an immense amount of money?

Mr. JONES of Washington. No; I do not think the Shipping Board has lost a cent from operation. As a matter of fact, taking it from the beginning, it would have money to its credit if it had all the money it has obtained from operations. We have taken about $165,000,000 of the receipts from operation and put that into the construction of ships. That is the fact.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Does the Senator from Washington contend that the operation of those ships under the management of the Shipping Board is now a paying business?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Oh, no; not now. I said from the beginning.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is what I am trying to get at, how much we are losing per diem or per month or per year.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Senator knows as much about that as I do. I do not know. They say different amounts.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the Senator from Washington does not know any more about it in detail, measured in dollars and cents, than I do, his ignorance is immense—

Mr. JONES of Washington. It is immense.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Because mine is stupendous. I have been trying to find out something about it.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. Lasker said he could not tell from the books.

Mr. WILLIAMS. So the man at the head of the business can not tell how much money he is losing per month.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Senator should remember that Mr. Lasker has only recently taken charge of this stupendous enterprise and been there about two months. He has not had time to do it. He frankly comes and lays everything on the table.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If he has been there two months he has had time enough to report how much he lost the first month and probably how much he lost the second month.

Mr. JONES of Washington. He said that they can not make anything intelligible from the system of bookkeeping there. They have to get up a new system.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Well, Mr. President—

Mr. JONES of Washington. Let me tell the Senator this: He said that out of 9,000 voyages they had reports from only 3,000. There are 6,000 voyages made by ships as to which they can not tell how much money is coming to the Government or how much the Government will owe. He frankly states it. He does not try to conceal anything.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is all, of course, laid on the back of this stupendous, wicked, gone-into-history Democratic administration.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do not do that. I am not blaming anybody.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I want to know why this gentleman who has been two months organizing a new system of bookkeeping has not yet reached the point of being able to tell us how much was lost under his management the first month and how much it has lost under his management the second month, leaving out of consideration this wicked Wilson machine that outraged all the proprieties of every description of course. Am I to understand that the present management of the Shipping Board can not tell us how much it lost last month or the month before?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think that is true. The ships are all over the world. Some of them are on the other side of the world and they have not gotten reports from them. They have not had time to get their systems of bookkeeping in shape. Mr. Lasker promises, if he is given a little time, that he will have his books in such shape that upon a day's notice he can tell to the dollar the amount the Government has involved, earned, and collected.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Just wait one moment—

Mr. JONES of Washington. No; I want the Senator to wait a moment on me.

Mr. WILLIAMS. All right.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Senator may otherwise construe some of the language, but he can not find, in my judgment, where Mr. Lasker has been criticizing the past administration. Mr. Lasker in his testimony before the House committee frankly said, "I might have done the same thing if I had been in their place under the circumstances." That is my position. I say let the past go. I recognize that the last administration had a tremendous task to meet. It had a tremendous responsibility. Probably mistakes were made, mistakes of judgment, but I have not any doubt that they were honest mistakes. I am not criticizing them. I am not trying to make any party advantage out of it. I do not think this matter ought to be partisan at all. I do not believe the Senator from Mississippi ought to suggest partisanship about it.

I think we ought to try to look at the matter as a business proposition and take the position that at least the men in responsible positions and the great majority of those even in subordinate positions are trying to do the right thing and are trying to do what they can to build up the American merchant marine. They may make mistakes, they may make mistakes of judgment, and yet they have all the facts about them, and they do what they think is the right thing to do. I do not believe we ought to go on any other assumption and I am not going on any other assumption, either with the past administration or with this administration.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That may be the position of the Senator from Washington, although it is not the position of Mr. Lasker. Mr. Lasker, in the first place, said that he found the books in such condition that no human being could tell anything about the business. If that is not a criticism of the past administration, nothing can be.

Mr. JONES of Washington. It is the statement of the fact that confronted him.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Wait a moment. I do not care what it is. It must be a criticism. In another part of his testimony he refers to some very large sum of money running away up into the millions of dollars, and said that was an inheritance from the past administration. Leave the past administration out. You have crucified it, you have killed it, and politically it is dead.

I was not asking the Senator about that. I was asking the Senator why it was that this remarkable financial genius placed at the head of the Shipping Board could not give us an account of how much he lost or gained in his first month's operation or his second month's operation. If he had inefficient and incompetent and even dishonest predecessors, certainly he ought to be able to keep up the business since he got hold of it. If you or I were running a great business and put a man at the head of it as manager, and he told us after two months that he did not know where the business stood, I think we would discharge him, would we not?

Mr. JONES of Washington. No; we would not.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I would.

Mr. JONES of Washington. We would give him time and give him opportunity to acquaint himself with the details of a three-billion-dollar business spreading all over the world.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I would discharge him.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Senator might, but I would not.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If he told me that he did not know where his predecessor was because he could not read his books, I might forgive that; but if he could not tell me where he was since he got in and had charge of the business for two months, and was able to tell me only that at some time in the future he would construct a system of bookkeeping whereby he would know, I would say, "You are so thoroughly incompetent that if you do not get out the front door I will ask the porter to kick you out."

Mr. JONES of Washington. I should like to ask the Senator how much time he would give a man to get up a new system of books in an enterprise or business like that?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am not giving him time to get up anything, but I am asking a report of what has happened under him, which he ought to have recorded from day to day as it happened. He could not record as to ships being in India or somewhere else until he got the final report, but he should have been able to make a report as far as it really happened and had become an accomplished fact.

I understand from the Senator from Washington and from the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations and from the silence of my colleague that none of you who have been discussing this question know anything about it, so I am a little bit inclined to think—

Mr. WARREN. How does the Senator expect to make up from day to day a balance sheet of business where it is located in Paris, in London, and at other shipping points in the various countries of the world, as well as in New York, Philadelphia, and other points in this country, until we have had time to hear from those points?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I never imagined such an absurd thing.

Mr. WARREN. Whether it is absurd or not, it is the fact.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I suppose in two months he has had time to hear from some points, but he does not even give any report as to them. I said if we had a ship that was in India, and he had not heard from it, he could not make a return on whether that ship had made a gain or loss until he got the final report at the completion of the voyage. But some ships have completed their voyages.

Really at bottom, you know—I am not saying anything about anybody's intentions. I am just talking about the effect of things—men have been hounding the Congress of the United States for 30 years to get appropriations for a ship subsidy, to make the farmers, the mechanics, the lawyers, the doctors, and the school-teachers—all American people—pay to run ships at a profit, but they could not get it. They never have been able to get it. The country voted against it every time. Now, you slide in, in the way of perpetuating a war measure—

Mr. WARREN. Whom does the Senator mean by "you"? The whole Congress?

Mr. WILLIAMS. No; I do not. I mean the advocates of the bill. Now you are attempting, I will say, to slide in, under the guise of perpetuating a war measure after the war is over, and instead of having the Government devote itself to the business of running ships you are trying to continue it in the business of running ships, and you are continuing at an immense deficit—a current deficit so large that gentlemen prefer not to report it even if they can, and I am informed that they can not. So what is it? What are you trying to do?

Mr. WARREN. The Senator has run off the track.

Mr. WILLIAMS. You can not get a ship subsidy without letting the American people know what you are doing.

Mr. WARREN. There is nothing in the bill about continuing it at all. It is simply undertaking to pay what we honestly owe on the enterprise.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understand that; and also you are continuing the Shipping Board and you are also continuing its operation of ships.

My good friend, the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES], makes a regular paean and eulogy every now and then to the building up of the American merchant marine, but he does not offer a direct ship subsidy. It would be cheaper for the American people for Congress to appropriate $100,000,000 a year, or some such amount, if they are willing we should do it, and let the farmers, the mechanics, the school-teachers, and the preachers pay for it, while the men who operate the ships get the profit out of it.

Mr. WARREN. Would the Senator from Mississippi vote for that? Has the Senator from Mississippi voted for a subsidy heretofore when one has been proposed? Would he vote for a subsidy now?

Mr. WILLIAMS. No, indeed; I would not vote for one. I have carried my principle of opposition to subsidies so far that I would not even by way of a protective tariff use the taxing power of the Government to put money into my pockets or the Senator's pockets.

Mr. WARREN. So the Senator from Mississippi is obliged to oppose this proposition on that principle?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I should oppose it on that ground if I had no other reason, but I have another reason for opposition. I do not refer to the appropriations which are carried in this bill. I think they have been cut very nearly to the bone. Most of the money proposed to be appropriated is to pay for something that is an accomplished fact; that is past history, and we have got to take note of it; we have got to pay our honest debts, whether they were wisely incurred or not. I subscribe to that argument, but I want somebody on the other side, in reforming the Government, right now to divorce the Government from the operation of ships and other private business. The Government has already been divorced from the operation of railroads. Now, why not divorce it from the operation of ships? If a shipowner or a shipbuilder can not stand upon his own feet and make money out of his chosen vocation or business, then let him quit it.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Mississippi has yielded to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I merely wish to ask the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] a question right along the line of his argument.

Mr. NEW. I yield to the Senator from Washington for that purpose, with the consent of the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON].

Mr. JONES of Washington. I wish to ask the Senator from Mississippi a question, and I shall ask it entirely in good faith; I shall not ask it in a controversial way at all. The $48,500,000 proposed to be appropriated here by the pending bill is for the purpose of enabling us to operate our own ships; that is, the Government's ships. I take it from the question which the Senator from Mississippi has asked that he would have the Government get out of that business. How would he have the Government do it now? He must not overlook the fact that the Government actually owns these ships; they are not privately owned ships, but they are Government-owned ships. I should like to see the Government get rid of these ships as soon as possible. I favor that just as strongly as does the Senator from Mississippi, but the Senator knows that there is not any sale for these ships now.

It seems to me there is just one of two things to do; either to do what is necessary to have as many of these ships operated as can be operated nearly at cost or else tie them up and go to all the expense that will be thereby entailed, including the deterioration that will follow. In all good conscience, I should like to have the Senator tell us what he would do with the ships now.

Mr. WILLIAMS. There is no novelty about that situation, although the subject matter, to wit, Government operation of ships, is somewhat novel. Last year I was confronted with a cotton crop which I had to sell. I found that I had to sell it at 2 or 3 cents per pound less than the cost of production, but I concluded that I had better sell it at 2 or 3 cents a pound less than the cost of production, so as to avoid great risk of selling it later on at 5, 6, 7, or 8 cents less than the cost of production. So I sold. A great many other people, not equally wise, held on to their cotton until they sold it at 12 cents below the cost of production. The longer the Government runs a business like this the more money it is going to lose, and the sooner it sells out, even at a loss, the better it will be for the Government, for the people, and for everybody else.

Mr. JONES of Washington. These ships could not be given away if the condition were attached to the gift that they should be operated.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I would not put on the condition that the ships should be run. The buyers could let them lie in the harbor and rot, if they were fools enough to do that. I do not suppose that a man would buy a ship which he could not run; I certainly would not.

When the Senator asks me what I am going to do if I am about to lose money on land and horses and mules and wheat and corn because the war is over, I answer that I want to lose as little as I can. If the Senator should ask me to enter into details as to just how much I would sell the horses and mules and wheat and corn for, I would have to tell him frankly, "I do not know." I would have to respond, "At the best price I could get"; and I should probably proceed upon the theory that the later I sold them the more I should lose.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President—

Mr. HARRISON. I yield to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, I have at last discerned a thought in the discourse of the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] to which I subscribe, and that is that the sooner the Government gets out of the business of operating ships the better it will be for the Government and for all parties concerned.

I entirely agree with that, but, Mr. President—if the Senator from Mississippi will yield to me for a very few minutes—we simply can not step aside and wash our hands of this whole miserable mess, for it is a miserable mess. Mr. Lasker himself has characterized it as the greatest wreck in the history of commerce, and I think he is absolutely correct in that assertion. I do not think he overstates the situation when he so designates it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Did not Mr. Lasker call it "the most stupendous wreck," or something of that sort?

Mr. NEW. I have just stated that he said that it was the most stupendous wreck in the history of commerce. I also agree with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], who said a few moments ago, in stating his belief that we should cut to the bone, that nobody knew just where the bone was. I agree to that, but we must remember, Mr. President, that the covering of the bone, however thick it is, was put on some time ago. The surgeon of to-day has got to locate that bone, and the particular surgeon now employed has not had time or opportunity as yet to locate it.

In reference to Mr. Lasker, the senior Senator from Mississippi thinks that it is remarkable that he has not devised a system of bookkeeping within the last 60 days or less—I have forgotten just when he took hold of the Shipping Board; but whenever it was it was not very long ago. Mr. President, I happen to know that he did not want the job of chairman of the board; he has taken it rather as a call to duty than in response to any desire he had in the matter. I regard Mr. Lasker as one of the keenest, shrewdest, ablest business men I have ever known; I think his reputation is exactly that, and I believe that he will justify that reputation if he is given time to do it. But, however that may be, as I understand the motion of the Senator from Mississippi, his amendment applies to the legal department as well as to every other department of the Shipping Board.

The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] has mentioned three or four of the many suits and claims which have been filed against the Shipping Board. I have seen a list of them myself, and I have on my desk a partial list, including something like 40 of them. As I understand, the claims aggregate around $350,000,000, and run anywhere from $1,000,000 to $17,000,000 each. They are presented by whom? The attorneys pressing those claims are men like George W. Wickersham and Bainbridge Colby. It has not been long since we were regaled with estimates and statements of how able those gentlemen were, and I am perfectly willing to concede their ability. How are we going to defend the Treasury of the United States against the assaults of such gentlemen by interposing a $3,500 a year man? I do not think it can successfully be done.

I am for economy to the very last degree; I think it is called for; but there is such a thing, Mr. President, as false economy; I believe that to meet the attacks of the best legal talent there is in this country, and to defend the interest of the Government against suits of so large amount, presented by attorneys of the highest grade, the board must have legal talent of a similarly competent character. It is the height of folly to have the United States Treasury interest defended by mediocre talent, and we can not get the talent of the character required to defend against that sort of an attack for $3,500 a year or $7,500 a year either, with due apologies to the Senators upon this floor.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President—

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to make a suggestion right there?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. NEW. The Senator from Mississippi has the floor. He has been very courteous in yielding to me.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] asked me to yield to him, and I will do so.

Mr. KING. Very well.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I merely wish to advert to one remark of the Senator from Indiana. It is perfectly immaterial to me, as it is immaterial to the purpose of this discussion, who is to blame for the great expenditures of the Shipping Board. I concur entirely with the Senator from Washington in his view that the question should not be discussed in a partisan manner. I have about made up my mind, however, not to vote another dollar to the Shipping Board until somebody connected with it may be able to outline some sort of a policy and tell the Congress what ultimately is to be the amount of money that we must appropriate for the board's continued activities.

I have a very high personal regard for Gen. Dawes and a very high estimate of his skill and capabilities. I do not concur in the assumption that he has been repudiated by the chairman of the Shipping Board; on the contrary, the chairman of the Shipping Board very clearly indicates that he is coming back to Congress pretty soon to ask not only for $125,000,000, as estimated by Gen. Dawes, but for more than that; I have not the slightest doubt that, if matters keep on as they have been proceeding, he will come back and ask for vastly more than $125,000,000.

Mr. President, when I was at the Treasury I served notice on the chairman of the Shipping Board that unless he would present to the Treasury his accounts for an audit, as required by law, I would not agree to let him have another dollar out of the Public Treasury. He promised to meet that requirement, but it has never been done as yet. Of the accounts presented there were rejected accounts amounting to $1,500,000,000. Nobody knows nor has anybody any conception of what this enterprise is going to cost the Government; and, as stated, I shall not vote for another dollar to the Shipping Board until it shall establish a policy and give some approximate estimate of how much more money it is going to take from the Federal Treasury.

I do not agree with the suggestion that Mr. Lasker in two months' time ought to be able to tell this. I think Mr. Lasker was quite frank in his appearance before the committee. He does not know anything about this shipping business, and he said he did not know anything about it. It is my judgment that if he stays there two years longer he will not know much more about it than he knows to-day, for the thing is in an inextricable tangle.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, right along with what the Senator says, is he not reminded that it takes somebody and something to pay the men who are working at the very cause which the Senator presents; that is, to find out where we are and what it will take to close out or finish or go on with the work?

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, the Shipping Board paid, as I recall, about $600,000 out of the Treasury to a great auditing concern, either in New York or in Philadelphia, to find out, and they could not find out.

Mr. WARREN. That is the fault of their books. We have been struggling with that matter in the Committee on Appropriations for years. On account of the changes of the men on the Shipping Board, and on account of legislation here, and under the legislation, various orders, and so forth, there has been such confusion in that line, added to that which has been mentioned by the Senator from Washington—the absence of ships, and no settlement having been returned—that the most that they can ascertain at any time is how much money they have on hand. If they are out of money there, and their neighbors are carrying them along from day to day upon the items of the daily grind, the Senator must know that in order to complete this finding of "where they are at," and presenting it here, it will take some amount of money; and we thought that with the amount that is due others we have cut this as closely as we could.

Mr. GLASS. I have said to the Senator that I do not believe they ever will find out, and I do not think the Government ought to continue in a business which has taken three years to correct its accounts; they are not now correct. I think this Government when the war ceased should have written off its books the losses incident to this Shipping Board business. Very properly we took no account of cost during the war. We were advised by those across the seas that unless we built ships the German submarines would win the war, and we did not pause to consider the cost. That was all right. Mr. Lasker frankly said that had he then been connected with the board the likelihood is he would have done the same thing and done it no better; but it seems to me that when the armistice was signed it was the height of folly to proceed along the same extravagant line, without accounting that anybody can comprehend, without even presenting to the Treasury, as required by law, the accounts for auditing. The accounts that were presented were in such a chaotic condition that the Treasury had to reject an immense part of them as inadequate.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, what would the Senator do now?

Mr. GLASS. What I would do would be to stop appropriating money until they can get a system of bookkeeping that will enable them to give to the Congress some comprehensive estimate of the cost of this thing.

Mr. President, when I was abroad in the fall of 1918 Admiral Sims, much to my amazement, told me in London that he did not think the United States ought to undertake the development of a merchant marine of its own. He thought that field of activity should be left to Great Britain, saying the British were our kinsmen, bone of our bone and blood of our blood, and might be relied on to come to our defense in case of war; that they were natural seamen, and we knew nothing about it. Besides, he added, it would require a great subsidy to conduct a merchant marine, and the American people were inherently opposed to subsidies.

Mr. McKEELLAR. Mr. President—

Mr. GLASS. I did not agree with Admiral Sims. I thought we ought to have a merchant marine; but I shall presently come to agree with him if we are to proceed in the wasteful methods that have been pursued by the Shipping Board. It will bankrupt the Government if we do not put a stop to it.

Talk about not voting a bonus to the American soldier! I did not vote for the bonus, and I am not going to vote for the bonus, for many reasons, economic as well as sentimental; but I would vastly rather vote $2,000,000,000 of bonus to men who offered their lives for their country than to be sinking other millions in this shipping arrangement. There is no bottom to it, and it will bankrupt the American Government if we do not put a stop to it.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, if the Senator from Mississippi will yield for just a moment, I want to say a word in connection with what the Senator from Virginia has said.

Mr. HARRISON. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BORAH. Of course, in a measure the past is past. We can not correct it, and I agree perfectly with the proposition that there ought not to be any partisanship in trying to settle this matter. I think there ought not to be any partisanship, either, in trying to find out who is responsible for what I consider not only incompetency but crookedness in the managing of this business for the last two or three years.

Mr. GLASS. Oh, I quite agree that if there has been any crookedness it ought to be exposed, and the culprit ought to be punished.

Mr. BORAH. A business could not be run as this has been run on the mere basis of incompetency. It passes beyond that. When men are dealing with public affairs, dealing with public money and public interests, and will not keep a record of what they do, will not furnish their countrymen or the Congress with any evidence of what they did or why they did it or to what extent they did it, it is not incompetency; it is sheer crookedness. Millions have been spent, millions wasted, and no living man can tell or find out how it was spent, or why or where. I say when men deal with public funds in that way they ought to be denounced, prosecuted, and exiled from among honest men.

Mr. GLASS. I quite agree with the Senator that if there has been any dishonesty it ought to be exposed and the dishonest person ought to be punished; but very likely the Senator will find that if there have been any crooks mixed up with the conduct of the Shipping Board they are Democratic and Republican crooks alike.

Mr. BORAH. I do not think there is any politics in crookedness.

Mr. GLASS. No; nor I, either.

Mr. BORAH. That is the reason why I say there should not be any partisanship here; but it is useless, in my judgment, to stand up and say it was a mere question of incompetency.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Of course, the Shipping Board might make the excuse at times that the inefficiency with which the business of the board was conducted was due to the laws under which they were operating. I do not think they can possibly excuse themselves altogether on any such plea; but take the pending bill, for instance: I notice that there is a proviso in it that the money that is appropriated shall be used, as I now recollect the language, in substance, for operating expenses of the fleet, and that none of it shall be used for paying claims. In other words, the board is told that it can not pay its debts.

How can any business on earth be carried on under any such condition as that? It leads inevitably to failure, according to the very terms and conditions under which this money is appropriated. One of the most flagrant abuses of this board has been the delay and, as the Senator said a moment ago, its failure even to keep a record of the debts that it owes under the contracts which it has made; and here we are perpetuating this thing by the express provision of the law.

Mr. BORAH. What I have just said was incidental to what I rose to say. I agree absolutely with the Senator from Virginia that these appropriations ought to stop until we know what the policy of the future is, at least. What are we proposing to do? Is there any policy connected with the future of this affair? The Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW] says he agrees with the proposition that we should get out. Well, is that the policy—to get out? Are we winding up the business? Are we proposing to get out, or are we proposing to run it as a governmental institution and to continue it from time to time? If so, in my opinion this $48,000,000 is not even a bagatelle to what we shall have to appropriate in the near future.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President—

Mr. BORAH. What I should like to know before I begin to vote any more money is, What has the future in store? Is it proposed to continue the operation of these ships by the Government? If it is not, then are we winding up this affair as we would if we were a receiver? Does anybody know what the policy is?

Mr. KING. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. KING. I think we may say that the construction placed by the past board and I think placed by Mr. Lasker upon what is known as the Jones bill contemplates a continuation of governmental operation. I agree with the Senator. We ought not to appropriate another dollar until a sane and rational policy has been adopted. It would appear that the Government should ask for a receiver and wind up a bankrupt concern and sell the ships to Americans or American companies to be operated under the American flag and take our losses and charge them off.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, the Senator asks what the policy is and whether the Shipping Board has any policy. The nearest expression of any policy that I have seen was the statement of the new chairman of the Shipping Board, in which he said that the policy was to get Congress to appropriate $300,000,000 for the deficiencies incurred in the operation of the fleet.

I am not advised about the number of ships that they have nor the value of them, but some one who has some knowledge of it said to me the other day that the entire fleet is not worth over $750,000,000, and here they are asking nearly 50 per cent of the value of the entire fleet to cover a deficiency for its operation for one year! Nothing more preposterous from a business standpoint was ever proposed in the annals of government.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I think if the Senator will subtract $200,000,000 from the amount he has stated it will more nearly state the true value of the ships according to the views of many.

Mr. WILLIAMS. They are asking for money not only for operation but for construction. They are going on with the construction of ships that they know will lose money.

Mr. POINDEXTER. They are going on accumulating further liabilities.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield, but I want to proceed to discuss my amendment as soon as the Senator finishes.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] asks what the policy is. Congress has declared its policy. Congress has declared that it is the policy of the Government to get these ships ultimately into private ownership; but Congress thus far has gone on the theory that this is not a bankrupt country.

Mr. BORAH. It will have to change its policy on that point pretty soon.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That may be true; and when we reach that point, of course, we shall probably have to change our policy with reference to dealing with these ships; but Congress has declared that we want a merchant marine. We have declared as a policy that it shall be a merchant marine ultimately owned and operated by private parties; but these ships are owned by the Government. The Government is not operating them directly. It is operating them through private parties, and it will continue to do that; and I want to say that you will find that so far as any policy is necessary or has been announced by the Shipping Board it is their policy, acting, as they said, under the law that Congress has passed, to get these ships into private ownership just as soon as it possibly can be done; but they are proceeding on the theory that this Government will act like an individual with his property. The Senator from Mississippi a while ago stated that he sold his cotton because he thought that if he held it longer he would get less for it. The shipping industry is about as low as it can possibly be. Ships all over the world are running at a loss. Ships all over the world are being tied up. Some are being run at a loss, just as any man will run his business, hoping to tide over and thinking he will make more money by keeping it going than by stopping it. It is declared in these hearings that it will be the policy of this board to get the ships not only sold by the Government but out of operation by the Government just as rapidly as it can be done, and that the ships that can not be operated except at a loss, especially as compared with the loss that would be entailed by tying them up, will be tied up. I do not know whether Mr. Lasker has made a public statement or not, but he stated to me this morning that he believed the wise thing to do would be, if necessary, to cut the operation of the ships down to possibly a hundred, or even less, if necessary, and begin to build up with that, getting them upon a good basis, and as business improves either to sell or get more in operation. He recognizes this condition just the same as Senators here, and he is just as much against Government ownership and Government operation as any Senator on this floor, but is trying to deal with it as a business man.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I suggest to the Senator that he must be mistaken about Mr. Lasker's position as to the policy with respect to a merchant marine. He was very specific in his testimony before the Appropriations Committee of the Senate. He said—

Mr. McCORMICK. What page?

Mr. GLASS. On page 15 of the Senate committee hearings, Mr. Lasker said:

I personally have been there—

That is, at the Shipping Board—

long enough to know this, that somehow, somewhere, there is a very subtle and powerful propaganda to drive the Government out of the shipping business. I can not put my finger on it, but it certainly is there.

Then, later on, Mr. Lasker said:

I think if the country once knew that we were going to lose the fleet, then it would come to a consciousness that it wants it.

That clearly indicates that Mr. Lasker is in favor of continuing the Government in the shipping business.

Mr. JONES of Washington. If the Senator will read all of the testimony of Mr. Lasker, he will come to just one conclusion; I am satisfied of that. We can pick out a sentence here or there that will give a wrong impression. But we must remember that Mr. Lasker is a business man, and has been a business man all his life. He has not been accustomed to coming before committees, and I imagine that that was the first congressional committee Mr. Lasker ever appeared before, and, naturally, it would be embarrassing.

Let me read from this testimony, too. Here is what the man he has appointed as one of the principal men to operate these ships says as to the policy, on page 115 of the hearings before the House committee, and I could pick out the very language of Mr. Lasker, if I had time to find it. This refers to Mr. Smull:

The CHAIRMAN. And undoubtedly his recommendations will have some weight with the board.

Mr. LASKER. Much weight, overwhelming weight; but I want to live in peace with my board members, and I want to make the record clear out of respect to them and out of respect to the facts.

Mr. SMULL. We intend to modify and change entirely the method of operating boats. Our idea is ultimately to sell them all and get rid of them and get the Shipping Board out of business just as soon as we can.

Mr. GLASS. Let me suggest to the Senator from Washington that the gentleman quoted by him is totally at variance with Mr. Lasker, who is at the head of the board. Further, on the same page 15, Mr. Lasker says:

I think the enemies of this country would like nothing better than for America to stop its ships; and I believe our future will be dark if this present merchant marine is not backed and established, and that America will fall to a lesser position than that she should occupy; and I think the greatest thing for this country would be for us to keep these ships running and to go further into the shipping business.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President—

Mr. GLASS. I do not know how embarrassed Mr. Lasker was by his first appearance before the committee, but he was very explicit in stating the policy he would pursue.

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator yield to me for just a moment?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator has been very kind to yield to everybody, and I do not want to interrupt, except to say that the amendment which the Senator offers, and the arguments, are far afield, of course, because the whole subject of the Shipping Board, and whether we will have a Shipping Board or not, does not rest upon that particular amendment. However, I suppose that all of this debate must take place some time, so I will not object.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. I want to take up another subject, and I will not ask the Senator to yield for so long.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, of course in the management of the Shipping Board there were made a great many mistakes. It was natural that there should be. Millions of dollars were spent needlessly; higher salaries were paid than should have been. There are thousands of instances where criticism could be very properly employed. But that is in the past, and the fact that there was extravagance in its management is greater reason for most rigid economy being exercised at this time. Two wrongs never made a right. The amendment I have proposed is in the interest of economy. Its object is to assist this Congress, which came in upon a promise of economy, to show retrenchment, to really economize.

What is the situation since Mr. Lasker took charge? I would not do him injustice. I understand he is a very pleasing gentleman, a man of much ability; that he has a very large advertising business out in the Middle West; and that he rendered great service to the Republican Party in the last campaign. No doubt the leaders thought so, because he has been rewarded. I know it was very hard for Mr. Lasker to give up his remunerative position as the head of that large advertising concern to accept the "little" position as chairman of the Shipping Board. I grant that he has done it out of the fullness of his heart and the patriotic spirit that always moves men of his kind.

But he has been here two months. Of course, he has not had time to reform the Shipping Board and readjust its inner works according to his business viewpoint. I hope that he will soon more thoroughly familiarize himself with it, and that he will bring about those reforms that are in the interest of economy. But so early in his official career it makes my heart bleed to review his recommendation to the Congress and read his testimony before the Committees on Appropriations of both the House and the Senate.

I can not understand, either, the viewpoint of Senators—I care not whether they are on the other side or this side—who voted to cut down an appropriation for good roads of $100,000,000 to $75,000,000 only a few hours ago, and now stand sponsoring a deficiency bill which appropriates $48,500,000 out of the Treasury—for what? For salaries ranging as high, in some instances, as $35,000 a year. Is that the kind of economy that you are going to thrust on us?

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President—

Mr. HARRISON. Is that the kind of economy you are going to practice? Do you believe that the people of America are going to approve a course of voting down appropriations for good roads from $100,000,000 to $75,000,000, and in the next hour voting salaries of $35,000 a year to men? That is the deficiency we are asked to approve. Now I yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. McCORMICK. I wonder if the Senator will tell us what salaries were paid in the Railroad Administration and the Shipping Board under the last administration?

Mr. HARRISON. I have not looked into the Railroad Administration, but I say to the Senator that during the last administration there was not a salary paid by the Shipping Board, as I understand, of over $12,000 a year.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. CURTIS. There were many salaries more than $12,000. The auditor alone was paid $15,000.

Mr. HARRISON. Were there any over $15,000?

Mr. CURTIS. I have not the list here.

Mr. HARRISON. Does the Senator recall one over $15,000?

Mr. CURTIS. I do not offhand, but I think I can produce the record showing what was paid the various employees. It was filed with the committee.

Mr. HARRISON. I thought the highest was $12,000. Certainly there were not over two and I think only one who received the $15,000 a year. I know that the man Smull, who, if this appropriation passes, will get $35,000 a year, did work during the war, I think, for $6,500, but he certainly never got over $9,000 from the Emergency Fleet Corporation; and I shall show before I have finished that there are many men who have been employed by Mr. Lasker in carrying out his policy of economy and reform who worked for much less in other departments of the Government who have been transferred over to his department at much higher salaries. It reveals a perfect orgy of inexcusable extravagances and high salaries.

The testimony before the committee is that one man by the name of Laws received $2,500 in the Department of Justice.

He graduated in law in 1913. He has been transferred now, under Mr. Lasker's direction, and is given $10,000 a year.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. McCORMICK. Was that salary of $2,500 for his full time or was it a retainer?

Mr. HARRISON. He was getting a salary over in that department of $2,500 a year.

Mr. McCORMICK. Is it not true that at the same time he was earning through his law firm $10,000 or $12,000 a year?

Mr. HARRISON. I never heard of it; it does not appear in the testimony. This is a young man, who, I understand, is a very excellent fellow and a splendid gentleman and a good lawyer, who was assistant district attorney at one time, who got $2,500 a year, and he now receives $10,000 a year.

Mr. WARREN. He had a salary of $10,000 in addition to the salary of $2,500. He received $12,500—payments of $10,000 and $2,500.

Mr. HARRISON. I did not understand that. The Senator is certainly mistaken.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, I can throw light on this particular case. I understand that the $2,500 paid to this gentleman to whom the Senator from Mississippi refers was for employment in a particular case, and I know that he was in receipt of a monthly salary from his law firm, which was the firm in New York with which Mr. Root is connected, of $1,050 a month.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator has not thrown any light upon the case. The facts about the matter are that this young man graduated in 1913; he was employed here in the Department of Justice as one of the assistants to the district attorney. He received $2,500 a year, and last year, I believe it was, some law firm up in New York, Mr. Root's firm, perhaps, paid him, I think, $1,050 a month in one case, and they recommended this gentleman for employment in the Shipping Board.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. I call the attention of the Senator and of the Senate to the testimony on page 17 of the record, as follows:

Senator CURTIS. I have a note here of one lawyer who graduated in 1913 in Washington and who was working for $4,500, who has been taken and put in by you at a salary of $10,000.

Mr. SCHLESINGER. Will you give me his name?

Senator CURTIS. His name is Laws.

Mr. SCHLESINGER. When I became general counsel I went to New York and asked about a dozen of the leading lawyers in New York to recommend men to me. I asked the advice of firms like those of Sullivan & Cromwell, of Mr. Root, and Mr. Guthrie, Alexander & Green, Rushmore, Bisbie & Stern. I asked a dozen of the ablest lawyers in New York to meet me and told them my troubles.

Senator CURTIS. The particular man I have mentioned, Mr. Laws, was graduated in law in 1913 in the city of Washington, and he could not possibly be earning $10,000 a year now. He could not earn $5,000 a year.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. WARREN. The Senator should have read a little further. I do not care to take the time of the Senator from Mississippi, however.

Mr. HARRISON. Go ahead.

Mr. WARREN. Immediately following that Mr. Lasker said:

One of the members of Mr. Elihu Root's firm in New York told me that his firm had had Mr. Laws working on the Bosch Magneto case, and that they had paid him $1,050 a month for a year while he was working on that case.

Mr. KING. That is, in the Bosch case?

Mr. WARREN. Yes; and then they go on and tell what he is worth; that he is worth more money than they paid.

Mr. KING. Mr. President—

Mr. HARRISON. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. If the Senator will permit me I should like to suggest for the consideration of the Senate an evil upon which the Attorney General has put his finger, and I hope he will correct it. Men employed in the Government service at $1,500, $2,000, or $2,500 a year, all they are worth, get secret information relative to claims against the Government or matters in which the Government has a great interest. Corporations in New York, great law firms, some of whom do not observe the high ethics that ought to prevail among lawyers, seek out these young men who have that secret information and get them into their offices and utilize that information against the Government. It is an outrage, and it is no defense for young men who take those positions to come here and claim they are getting $1,200 a month and are therefore worth that amount.

Mr. HARRISON. Reprehensible as that is, that is not the worst story of the controversy. The facts are disclosed here that practically every man who is an attorney in the legal department under Mr. Lasker came in on the recommendation of some big law firm in New York, some of whom have cases against the Shipping Board.

That is a startling statement, but it is a true one. It is difficult to comprehend the idea of the head of the Shipping Board in obtaining as his counsel to defend cases against it, going to the lawyers in many instances who have cases against the Shipping Board.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. HARRISON. Does the Senator rise to deny that statement?

Mr. McCORMICK. I rise to ask the Senator if it could be true that a former Alien Property Custodian had come down here to allege that the findings and the rulings of the Alien Property Custodian while he was in office were wrong, and to demand of the the present administration a reversal of his own rulings, because he had received a fee from those whose property he had sequestered while he was in office and the recovery of which he is now seeking?

Mr. HARRISON. Now, let me come back to the point that I was discussing. Here are the facts. I stated that the chairman of the Shipping Board stated and in some instances Mr. Schlesinger testified—and he was quite frank, the chairman of the committee will agree with me—that the best way to get these attorneys was to go to New York, call in the heads of some of these big firms, and have them to recommend.

Mr. WARREN. But not those who had cases against the Government.

Mr. HARRISON. Here is a case:

Mr. SCHLESINGER. Ninety-five per cent of the admiralty business in New York is handled by six or seven of the big firms. I have been working to get a head for my admiralty section—working for weeks. I have a man in mind to whom I have offered $25,000.

Why, that is the equivalent, at the present price of oats, of 100,000 bushels, and at the present price of corn, of about 90,000 bushels. It would take 300 farmers out there to raise enough corn or oats or hay to pay that one attorney his salary of $25,000 a year. Why, it would require 2,000 small cotton farmers in my State to sell the cotton they raise to pay three of these new employees. One hundred and five thousand dollars for three men, and that in this day of depressed financial condition, when men, women, and children by the thousands are in rags and tatters, without food and place to sleep.

Mr. McCORMICK. How much would it take to pay the claims against the Shipping Board arising out of the last administration?

Mr. HARRISON. I do not know. It may take a good deal if Mr. Lasker follows the policy of letting the attorneys who have claims against the Shipping Board recommend the attorneys to defend those cases for the Shipping Board.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, the Senator from Mississippi speaks of oats and corn in one case, and he spoke of road building a short time since. Those both were cases of expenditures merely, while this is a matter of the employment of attorneys and the question of whether they can by their skill so conduct these cases that we may collect millions—and I might say scores of millions—or, if not that in all cases, secure a cutting down of millions of dollars of claims.

The salaries which the Senator calls extra would probably amount to less than $100,000. There are cases by the hundreds—yes, I might even say by the thousands—where several times that amount can be saved or collected; in fact, many millions depending upon the industry, skill, and excellence of the conduct of the cases. It seems to me that when we have to go to law with those who employ the best legal talent we should employ similar ability. For instance, the Shipping Board is the largest corporation in all the world. Altogether, taking the actual money paid in and the interest on that money, it has cost us more than $4,000,000,000. Now, can the Senator tell me of any organization—taking, for instance, the large concerns like the steel company and others—where the compensation of their legal talent is cut down to the amount which the evidence shows the board is asking authority to pay to its legal assistants? Notwithstanding the much larger size of this concern, and the further fact of the huge sum in accumulated claims this new board has inherited, we are making no such provisions as other concerns make for their counselors.

Mr. HARRISON. I understand the theory upon which the bill was worked out and the appropriation asked for. The Senator from Wyoming agrees with the chairman of the Shipping Board that a salary of $25,000 a year each to a good many men to defend these suits is not too much, or $35,000 for three of the officials in the employ of the Shipping Board is not too much per year. I take it that the chairman of the committee agrees with the chairman of the Shipping Board that it is all right to employ some of these large law firms without fixing the fee that they are to charge for defending a case, because the head of the legal department in the Shipping Board states that it was impossible to fix the fee of many of these firms that he intends to employ to assist in the defense of the cases, and would have to delay the matter and fix it after the cases went to trial and are adjudicated.

Mr. WARREN. I take it for granted the Senator with his usual industry has examined the hearings before the Senate committee?

Mr. HARRISON. That is in the hearings.

Mr. WARREN. He will also acknowledge that in some of those cases the law firms said there would be no charge.

Mr. HARRISON. Oh, yes; but we have not seen any yet. Just wait!

Mr. WARREN. There are other cases where it might be a question only of what the Government is pleased to pay. As to the wisdom or unwisdom of that in a case that is pending, with talent on the other side of men probably getting in their business very many times more than these salaries would all amount to, it is a question whether we can afford to do that or not.

Of course it is a subject open for discussion, and I think we ought to proceed in the discussion, as I think the Senator intends to do, regardless of what the old board may have done or what we would like to have in the way of salaries. He will notice that they are all subject to be passed upon by the Attorney General. Unless the Senator wishes to discredit to some extent the Attorney General—

Mr. HARRISON. Not a bit. These high salaries for lawyers themselves discredit the Department of Justice.

Mr. WARREN. Every one of those salaries goes to him for his sanction. I am one of the guilty who voted to cut down, to the extent of $25,000,000, the appropriation contained in the good roads bill, when my State needs roads probably more than any other State. Over one-third of the area of my State is in the control of the United States, and from it we can get no taxes, and of it we get no use; yet at the present time we can delay that matter on account of the amount of unexpended money that we still have contracted and which would take the entire season to expend. But to defend the United States Government against $300,000,000 worth of claims is quite another matter.

Mr. HARRISON. There will not be much left for road construction after the payment of these salaries of $35,000.

Mr. WARREN. The salaries do not amount to very much the way the matter is handled.

Mr. HARRISON. That is a very bad spirit for the leaders of the Republican Party to show—to express themselves at this time that salaries do not amount to much. I want to say to the Senator that enough of them will clean up the Treasury very quickly. It takes only a few of the range of $35,000 a year to make a big hole in the Treasury. It means a whole lot to the already overtaxed American citizen; and those sturdy farmers throughout the country whose shoulders are now stooped by the heavy loads of Government obligations that they are forced to carry, and whose pockets are empty because of the reduced prices at which they must sell their products, will receive the Senator's assertions with feelings of despair.

Mr. WARREN. In that particular road business there are no employees of any number who should receive any salaries. The money is spent through the administrations of the States and the Government together. As I said, the question is a debatable one; and it has to be based, in my opinion, entirely upon the condition that we are now in, with these 3,500 immense claims over our heads, where—I will not say all, but except those that are employed to defend the Shipping Board—nearly all of the other firms are employed in prosecution of the claims.

As to the three vice presidents, the responsibilities of each one of those are larger than of any other one shipping board official perhaps in the world. Is it too much, when you consider—

Mr. HARRISON. Did not Mr. Smull receive only $6,500 a year during the war working for the Emergency Fleet Corporation?

Mr. WARREN. True; and the chairman of the board of the Union Pacific Railroad worked for $1 a year all through the war. That means simply the patriotism of big men.

Mr. HARRISON. One was working for a dollar a year and was known as a dollar-a-year man. He was moved by patriotism. This man was a salaried man at $6,500 a year—working for a compensation. And, sirs, at that time, when he was receiving that amount, 4,000,000 boys fighting for their country were receiving in most instances $30 a month.

Mr. WARREN. That does not indicate that he might not have six times that amount if he were in business outside of that of the Government.

Mr. HARRISON. I am glad you have Mr. Smull, and that Mr. Lasker was able to employ him, because I read from the testimony of Mr. Lasker where he said:

For 12 days I asked Mr. Smull to come here and for 12 days in New York he said it was unthinkable, and every night of those 12 days in his presence I would return my railroad accommodations and say, "I will see you to-morrow, because only with you can the American merchant marine be saved."

That may answer the question propounded by my colleague as to why it was that the chairman of the Shipping Board did not know more about its operation. He was in New York pleading for 12 days and 12 nights with Mr. Smull to come with the Shipping Board at a salary of $35,000 a year. He would turn in his railroad accommodations when Mr. Smull said he would not come, and then Mr. Lasker would say, "I will see you to-morrow, because only with you can the American merchant marine be saved."

So that we have at the head of the Shipping Board Mr. Lasker, who has said there is only one man in all the world who can save the Shipping Board, and that is Mr. Smull, and his opinion of him was so great that he was willing to pay him $35,000 a year when a few months ago he received $6,500 a year from the Emergency Fleet Corporation, receiving that amount during the war when salaries were high, but now receiving $35,000 a year, when the leaders on the other side have promised the people to retrench and to economize and to save money.

Why, they have discharged employees here in the departments by the thousands. They perhaps should have been discharged. Too many were at work here, but every one of those girls and boys making $1,000, $1,200, or $1,500 a year can go back home with the message that they were giving up their employment and their salaries to make way for Mr. Lasker, the head of the Shipping Board, to pay Mr. Smull and Mr. Love and Mr. Frey $35,000 a year. These men are getting as much as 105 of those girls who were discharged from the departments were receiving. When we hear in the future about the number of employees being discharged, please tell the American people it was only to make room for high-salaried men in the Shipping Board. I care not how many employees you discharge, it will not effect a saving for the people if you divert that saving, as in this case, to employing in their stead fewer but with salaries thirty-five times as great.

But I was diverted a moment ago when I made the statement that Mr. Lasker and Mr. Schlesinger, the head of the legal department, went to New York to get these men and consulted with the big legal firms there and took men out of their employ, who were silent partners or employees in their offices, and brought them down here and gave them jobs.

Here is an instance which furnishes proof which no man can doubt. I was reading the testimony when interrupted by the distinguished Senator from Illinois [Mr. McCormick]. The witness continued:

I have been working to get ahead for my admiralty section—working for weeks.

Mr. McKellar. From what page of the hearings is the Senator from Mississippi quoting?

Mr. HARRISON. I am reading from page 196 of the House hearings.

I have a man in mind to whom I have offered $25,000, and I am sure that he is earning three or four or five times as much as that.

I do not know whether the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] saw that statement; I do not know whether the statement was made before the Senate Appropriations Committee; but I am reading from the House Appropriations Committee hearings. Mr. Schlesinger says:

I am sure that he is earning three or four or five times as much as that. He comes from one of the big firms, Mr. T. K. Jones. He is coming down to see me. There are one or two things that he wants to talk over.

Now, what were those "one or two things"? Mr. Schlesinger states in his testimony what they are. Mr. Jones is offered $25,000 a year, but Mr. Jones is holding off a little while because "there are one or two things," says this witness, which they must settle. What are they?

His firm has 200 cases against the Shipping Board.

That is what they were holding off about. Although the chairman of the Shipping Board was insisting that Mr. Jones was worth $25,000 a year to the Shipping Board, and that he should take the employment, Mr. Jones—I do not know whether or not it was because he thought there was some impropriety in his accepting the position—was holding off. Why? Because, says the witness—

His firm has 200 cases against the Shipping Board.

Mr. KING. Mr. President—

Mr. HARRISON. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. In connection with the matter to which the Senator from Mississippi is just referring, I should like to call his attention to another very significant fact. Mr. Schwab's company has had claims against the Government aggregating approximately $300,000,000. They still have claims against the Government, which are unsettled, aggregating, I believe, approximately $70,000,000; that is, they are unsettled accounts. Mr. Powell was indirectly, if not directly, connected with Mr. Schwab's company. Mr. Powell is now selected, as I am advised, as the head of the claims division to pass upon the claims and settle the controversies which have arisen by reason of the claims of the Schwab or Bethlehem company.

Mr. LODGE. When were those claims created?

Mr. KING. I know what the Senator has in his mind; but I will state that claims were created during and subsequent to the World War, when there was a Democratic President, when Mr. Hurley and also Mr. Schwab himself were connected with the Shipping Board.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me one moment?

Mr. KING. I beg the Senator's pardon, but I am trespassing upon the time of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON].

Mr. HARRISON. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. I merely wish to say that the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] and the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] have taken up this question and have discussed it as I think it ought to be discussed. I think there is nothing to be gained by the attempt to turn this whole question merely to party account. The present administration got control of the Shipping Board only two months ago. Who, I ask, piled up the $3,300,000,000 of indebtedness? It was the Wilson administration. Mr. Wilson appointed every man who was then on the board. They were all his appointees. Who heaped up this vast amount of debt? Who has heaped up these claims? It was the Wilson administration. Now, Democratic Senators come in and undertake to talk as if the Republican administration had created this situation. We are trying to get rid of the huge debt that the Democratic administration has left behind it.

I do not think anything is to be gained by assuming the attitude which Senators have taken. As the Senator from Idaho and the Senator from Virginia have suggested, I think we all ought to get together, and, as American citizens, try to deal with this unfortunate legacy of the World War and not try to make a little party capital at the expense of a man who has been at the head of the Shipping Board for only two months.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, the Senator from Massachusetts certainly misunderstood what I said if he thinks there is any politics in any utterance of mine.

Mr. LODGE. I have heard no word ever uttered by the Senator from Mississippi on this floor that was not political.

Mr. HARRISON. I was merely following the leadership of the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator from Mississippi could not have been doing that, because I have never spoken upon the matter.

Mr. HARRISON. No; the Senator from Massachusetts is never partisan. The Senator says that we ought to get together on this proposition. I do not know how we can get together, because some of us are not going to vote for an appropriation of $35,000 a year to pay three employees in the Shipping Board. We think it is too much. We appreciate the fact that there are 5,750,000 men who are out of employment in the United States to-day, and that number is being augmented every minute.

Mr. LODGE. I am aware of that.

Mr. HARRISON. There are hard times everywhere; prices are not coming down; farmers can not sell their products; and I will say to the Senator that, in my opinion, that condition has arisen because he, more than anyone else in the United States, thrust the dagger into the treaty of Versailles and thereby destroyed our hope for any export trade from this country.

Mr. LODGE. What portion of our trade is export trade?

Mr. HARRISON. Our export trade amounted to somewhere around $8,000,000,000 during the World War. It has dropped now to three or four billion dollars.

Mr. LODGE. What is the percentage of our export trade compared to the entire turnover in the United States?

Mr. HARRISON. Our export trade has now dropped to three or four billion dollars.

Mr. LODGE. But, I ask, what is the percentage of our export trade to our entire turnover?

Mr. HARRISON. Before the World War, in normal times, the balance of trade in our favor was something like four or five billion dollars, but it has gradually diminished until now we can not sell our surplus products; so that the manufacturers in the State of the Senator from Massachusetts can not get rid of their surplus goods.

Mr. LODGE. I am well aware of that.

Mr. HARRISON. That is due to the lack of markets abroad, and until those markets are found depressed conditions will continue here.

Mr. FLETCHER. Before we pass from this question—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. FLETCHER. The Senator from Massachusetts, with some little heat, following the previous practice here and elsewhere, seeks to lay to the Wilson administration the indebtedness incurred by the Shipping Board. The fact ought to be pointed out that the board under the Wilson administration had engaged, to take charge of the chief expenditure of that board, Mr. Charles M. Schwab, who certainly is not a particular friend of the Wilson administration, but is a very prominent Republican, who made some reputation, which seemed to have laid the foundation for aspirations for the Presidency while he was building ships under the Wilson administration. Mr. Charles M. Schwab was director general of construction, and under Mr. Schwab was Mr. Piez, who was vice president of the Emergency Fleet Corporation, stationed in Philadelphia, and for two years had direct control over the details of construction for the Shipping Board. This enormous expenditure was occasioned under the direction of these prominent, "stand-pat," regular Republicans working in carrying out the plans to build ships and who actually carried them out.

Mr. LODGE. Who appointed them?

Mr. FLETCHER. The Shipping Board.

Mr. LODGE. Who appointed the Shipping Board?

Mr. FLETCHER. The President appointed the Shipping Board.

Mr. LODGE. That is all I have ever said.

Mr. FLETCHER. The majority of the members of the board were supposed to be Democrats, but the Senator is charging the Democratic administration, the Wilson administration, with the doings of Mr. Schwab and Mr. Piez.

Mr. LODGE. I do not want to go into charges of that kind or into the question of charges as to who is responsible for the $3,300,000,000 that have been spent by the Shipping Board. I may say, however, that that indebtedness has not been incurred within the last two months.

Mr. FLETCHER. Precisely.

Mr. LODGE. I do not care to go back over that; I want to settle the matter as well as we can.

Mr. FLETCHER. I am perfectly willing to go back over it and place the responsibility where it belongs.

Mr. LODGE. If we go back over it and place the responsibility where it belongs, it will take us some time.

Mr. FLETCHER. The men who had charge and control of the expenditures were not Democrats at all. In addition to that, one of the great losses, as evidenced by the testimony before the committee, was in the operation of ships. Who had charge of the operation of the ships? Mr. J. H. Rossiter, of San Francisco, a prominent contributing Republican. If there is any man acquainted with the shipping business in this country it is Mr. Rossiter, and Mr. Rossiter had charge of the operations; he was the director of operations of ships under the Shipping Board.

As the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] suggests, our friends on the other side, having come into power two years ago, were then in the majority except as to the Presidency. So that all this business has taken place under the direct control and management of prominent contributing Republicans.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I am very sorry the distinguished leader of the majority saw fit to say that I was indulging in any political speech. I am merely trying to point out the dangers to his party if the practice is indulged in by it, as is attempted in this bill. I express profound respect for Mr. Lasker. From what I have heard of him he is charming, and I wish him well. However, I can understand now, as I never could before, the slogan that was adopted by the distinguished Senator from Indiana and others in the last campaign and placed under the photographs of the Republican standard bearers, "Let us be done with wiggle and wobble"; I can understand now what was then in the mind of its author—and it was he who wrote it—because certainly in the employment of counsel and in the proceeding of getting the money out of the Treasury he is not "wiggling" and is not "wobbling"; he is going straight at it. His sails are full set. He has plenty of help on board his ship and watchmen on tower here, but, sirs, if he persists in his present course he will find rocks ahead upon which his shallow bark will go to pieces.

I do not know whether the men that he has employed are Democrats or Republicans; I do not care to which party they belong; I do not care if he "fires" the Democrats there and puts in Republicans. It is a Republican administration; Republicans have that right if they choose to exercise it. I shall never lift my voice against the "firing" of a man of another party, when not protected by civil-service regulations, and putting somebody else in his place where it is desired to have a little work—I will not say crooked work—done; I say, carry out the policies of your administration. That is all right. "Fire" all of those attorneys that were in; probably none of them, in Mr. Lasker's opinion, were any good; evidently they were not from the way they are being displaced; but do not pay such large salaries to the men who are being put in.

It is commendable in Mr. Lasker—and I admire it in the distinguished chairman of the committee if he indorses it—to take care of an old gentleman about whom I am going to read now. It was not my pleasure to serve with him as a Member of the other House, but I look around me and I see men who did serve with the distinguished Joseph H. Gaines, of West Virginia.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, before the Senator goes to that, will he yield to me to ask a question?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I see on page 208 of the House hearings: E. Cateby Jones, chief of admiralty section; offered $25,000 per annum.

Is that the same man who has been actually appointed?

Mr. HARRISON. He has been appointed; he is on the list.

Mr. McKELLAR. I wish to call the Senator's attention to another matter that he has overlooked.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Jones is the man, the Senator will understand, who was holding back because his firm had 200 cases against the Shipping Board; he felt an impropriety in accepting the place; but Mr. Lasker evidently said, "Oh, come in; it does not make any difference."

Mr. McKELLAR. Here is what took place, in addition to what the Senator has already said. I quote from page 197 of the hearings, where Mr. Schlesinger says:

If Mr. Jones accepts the position, you gentlemen will have to decide on two questions. First, do you want to settle some of these 1,700 admiralty cases and how many of them? The claimants instead of waiting 15 or 20 years, and possibly getting the full amount, might settle for 25 per cent of the face of their claims. There are many cases which could be settled very cheaply if we had the money to do it with.

That statement is made after showing that he has been talking with the big firms who have the admiralty cases against the Shipping Board.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; the Senator is correct. What I read from the hearings was after Mr. Schlesinger says that there are one or two things Mr. Jones wants to talk over before he accepts:

His firm has 200 cases against the Shipping Board. That is what is troubling him. If we can arrange that situation, I will be very happy.

Then he says he intends to move the admiralty office to New York to deal with these admiralty cases, if Mr. Jones accepts the employment.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, would it not be pleasing to the Senator if he should be able to settle some of those claims for 25 cents on the dollar or even for less?

Mr. HARRISON. I hope he will be able to settle some of the claims; I do not know on what percentage, because I do not know anything about the claims.

Mr. WARREN. I assume that the Senator would like to have them settled on whatever is the smallest basis on which they can be settled.

Mr. HARRISON. When I diverted I was trying to pay a very just tribute to a man who was in public life some years ago.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. HARRISON. I do.

Mr. NELSON. Just to illuminate this discussion a little, I should like to inform the Senator from Mississippi that during the administration by Mr. Hurley of the Shipping Board a company had a cost-plus contract at Hog Island, and one of the incidents was that Webster & Stone, a big engineering firm of Boston, were interested in that matter, and their chief engineer, who had been getting $12,000 a year under that firm, was put on the pay roll of the Government at $32,000 per year.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; that was done, I presume, at the instance of Mr. Schwab.

Mr. NELSON. No; that was before Mr. Schwab blessed the thing.

Mr. HARRISON. It was? Well, he perhaps continued it when he came on.

Mr. NELSON. It was during Mr. Hurley's administration.

Another incident to which I want to call the attention of the Senator is the case of a young man from the West who never had earned over $4,000 before, and he was put on the pay roll of the Hog Island Shipyard at $15,000 a year.

Then there were a couple of junk dealers. I will not give their names. The Committee on Commerce knows about them. They were each put on the pay roll at $625 a month—the same salary that the Senator from Mississippi receives. That was done under Mr. Hurley's administration, and there were a good many other matters of a similar kind. I only refer to those incidentally.

Mr. HARRISON. I am not defending everything that happened at Hog Island, nor during the administration of the Shipping Board. Much of it, as I said before, should be condemned. I deprecate the high salaries to which the Senator has alluded, and if he does then he will vote for my amendment.

Mr. NELSON. I thought these facts might illuminate the Senator's discussion.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator will recall that during the war the salaries were very high, and that $15,000 at that time was not considered as large a salary as $15,000 is now considered.

I am afraid that some of the Senators, in diverting me, do not want me to tell about a distinguished colleague of some of you over in the House—Joseph H. Gaines, from West Virginia. Now, it is commendable to take care of some of these distinguished fellows. He was a Republican Congressman. I did not serve with him. He went out just as I went in the House. He rendered great service in the last campaign. He spoke for the party in many instances, and I will read this. Mr. Lasker gave him a job at $9,500 a year, a very good salary, and here is what he says Mr. Gaines's duties are:

Then I have Joseph H. Gaines, whom I am paying $9,500 a year. You probably do not realize it, but we have meetings of the Merchant Marine Committees of the House and Senate probably two or three or four times a week. New legislation is coming up every day, and we are called upon to be present at those meetings and to express what we think the legislation ought to be, to draft new bills, to modify bills, and I have gotten Mr. Gaines in charge of that work.

For which he receives $9,500 a year. Now, I ask Senators on the other side of the aisle if there is one of you who approves the employment of Joseph H. Gaines, even though he be a Republican ex-Congressman, merely to do those things that the witness says he is doing, namely, to appear before the Merchant Marine Committees of the House and Senate and to draft bills when he is requested to do it? I pause for an answer. I am wondering if a single Senator here indorses that employment and will defend the appointment of Mr. Gaines to do that kind of work and fleece the Treasury of the United States to the amount of $9,500 a year. I again pause for an answer. Your silence is commendable.

It is enough to arouse the unemployed in this country; it is enough to blight their hope of future prosperity and an economical readjustment of affairs when they can read in the papers where as soon as Mr. Lasker takes hold of the Shipping Board—and I care not, so far as the discussion goes, how mismanaged it has been in the past—he goes to work to employ at $35,000 a year men who have been receiving in some instances only $6,500 a year, and goes to New York and consults large firms there who, in some instances, have cases against the Shipping Board, and has them recommend to the Shipping Board some fellow in their office to come down here and take a job at $25,000 a year to defend suits that those firms of lawyers might afterwards bring against the Shipping Board.

Ah, do you think some of those men would have the same enthusiasm and interest in fighting some firms of lawyers on claims that they would have on others? I do not impute to them dishonesty. No doubt they are men of integrity and learning; but, Senators, you know human nature, and you can not indorse the proposition that the man in charge of the legal force of the Shipping Board should have gone to seek information touching his appointees to firms of lawyers who had cases against the Shipping Board.

So Mr. Gaines is taken care of, probably very properly so, and it may be that he is doing his work in an excellent manner. I do not know Mr. Gaines. I may have met him at some time. I do not know what he had been making before this lucrative job was offered him; but now, it appears from the hearings, he is receiving $9,500 a year to appear before the House Merchant Marine Committee and the Senate Committee on Commerce and draft a bill once in a while for the Shipping Board.

Ah, Senators, you had better "stop, look, and listen" before you go far with that. The people of America will not stand for any such policy. They expect you to run the Government in a businesslike way to some extent, at least, and they are not going to indorse such a practice as that which has been laid down by Mr. Lasker.

Mr. President, this is not the only party. Let me read a list of these attorneys:

E. Cateby Jones, chief of admiralty section; offered $25,000 per annum.

Norman Beecher, admiralty adviser to general counsel—

He is to get $10,000 a year. I do not know where they got him from—

Chauncey Parker, $20,000 per annum; retained for chief of litigation and investigation section.

Mr. Parker was recommended to the head of the legal branch of the Shipping Board by the head of a firm of lawyers called together in New York to recommend him. I have no doubt he is a very excellent fellow and a very splendid lawyer.

Freund will be paid $25,000 per annum as head of opinion and contracts section, if he accepts.

This man Freund worked for the Railroad Administration and received $9,000 a year. Oh, I suppose they could have gotten him, if they wanted to, over at the Shipping Board for as much as he was receiving down at the Railroad Administration. Men are not resigning their positions now when they are fairly well paid, and $9,000 is a fairly good salary.

I know that there are men within the sound of my voice in the Senate who can resign their places and go back into the practice of law and obtain other positions and make many times their salaries here; but men work here from patriotic motives and purposes, in the main. If it be true, as Mr. Lasker says and Mr. Schlesinger says, that they are able to obtain these men only because they want to serve their country, because they want to do something for America, then they will work for $10,000 a year as soon as they will work for $35,000 a year. The same spirit would prompt those men that prompts men in the Senate to stay in this body for the salary that they are paid here, when if they would resign perhaps in many instances they would make considerable more.

So there is nothing in it. I tell you that they are paying too exorbitant salaries, and we ought to stop it and not permit it; and the amendment I have proposed will stop the thing, because it provides that no salary or compensation of any officer or employee shall be in excess of the rate of $12,000 a year.

So this man Freund was working in the Railroad Administration and receiving $9,000 a year, and now he gets, or is to get, $25,000 a year in the Shipping Board.

Let us go down the list.

Here is ex-Senator Sutherland—

Retained at $5,000 per annum to give opinions to general counsel or board whenever desired.

Of course, we all remember ex-Senator Sutherland, a great lawyer, a splendid man, a fine gentleman. We all hold him in the highest esteem and for him have great respect; but he, too—I hope the Senator from Massachusetts will not think I am talking politics when I suggest the thought that there was no one in the last campaign who stayed down at Marion in company with the presidential candidate of the Republican Party more than ex-Senator Sutherland. He was by his side, right there, and it is natural that he should be taken care of.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, after hearing what the Senator has just said it would never occur to anyone that he was talking politics.

Mr. HARRISON. It was natural that the Senator from Massachusetts and the Senator from Wyoming should want to see ex-Senator Sutherland taken care of in some lucrative position, and he is really fortunate not to have been appointed on the Supreme Bench of the United States, because there he would have received, I think, $12,000 a year, or something like that, but here is a much better job. Listen: He is retained, and to get $5,000 a year, merely to give opinions to the general counsel. The general counsel receives $20,000, I believe, or $25,000, and I do not know why he needs advice, but ex-Senator Sutherland needs the $5,000 a year, and so he gets it merely to give advice to the general counsel when the general counsel requests it! That is a good, fat job. I know of none that is better. He is to get a retainer of $5,000 merely to express an opinion to the general counsel of the Shipping Board when the general counsel asks for one.

But they did not stop at ex-Senator Sutherland. There is a former law partner of ex-Senator Sutherland provided for, a gentleman named Allison. They saw that the picking was going to be good and a dissolution of the partnership came about some years ago, or some months ago, I do not know just when. Allison is to receive $15,000, I think, as one of the counsel. I have not read the testimony far enough to ascertain if there are any other members of the old dissolved firm and to ascertain if any more have been taken care of, but I would not be surprised if some other member of that very distinguished law firm was taken care of in the distribution of Republican patronage, either under Mr. Lasker, the new head of the Shipping Board, or some other department.

Let us go down the list a little further. Marshall Bullitt, who is assistant to the general counsel, is to receive $25,000 a year. He was Solicitor General during Taft's administration, a position which is a very big one. Very distinguished lawyers have held the position, and it pays, I think, $12,000 a year. Mr. Bullitt is to receive, as assistant to the general counsel, $25,000 a year. He received favorable consideration, perhaps, because of his part and assistance in wrecking the work of Woodrow Wilson.

The next is Fletcher Dobbins, trial lawyer. I do not know where Mr. Dobbins comes from. I do not know anything about him. He is to get $15,000 a year.

It is suggested that a safe guess is Chicago. If he comes from there, the Senator from Illinois would know about it; no, I do not think he would, either, because not a single one of these attorneys who has been appointed appears as a member of a law firm; they are not prominent enough to be in the law firms. They are only suggested by the members whose names are in the law firms.

Mr. McCORMICK. I think the Senator from Mississippi will learn that Mr. Dobbins's name appears in the name of the firm of which he is a member.

Mr. HARRISON. What is the name of that firm?

Mr. McCORMICK. Dent, Dobbins & Freeman, I think it is.

Mr. HARRISON. The Dobbins whose name is in that firm is the father of this Dobbins, is he not?

Mr. McCORMICK. That I do not know.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator must remember that these attorneys are not engaged for any length of time, only long enough to clean up the business of these claims. There is no expectation of keeping this legal strength permanently with the Shipping Board.

Mr. HARRISON. But they are paid by the year.

Mr. WARREN. Yes.

Mr. HARRISON. Employed at least for one year or more.

Mr. WARREN. No; they are not employed for even one year with any certainty of their remaining; although there may be one or two in that class. They are employed to take hold of these claims and to clean them up. Some of them at least would be discharged in a month, if the claims were cleaned up, though there might be some who would stay as long as a year.

Mr. HARRISON. I think the Senator will find he is mistaken. I will proceed further. The next is Mr. Smythe, special assistant to general counsel, who is to receive $15,000 a year. I do not know where Mr. Smythe comes from, but I understand he is a very splendid gentleman.

The next is Mr. Greaf, opinion and contracts section, who is to receive $10,000 per annum.

The next is B. J. Laws, who is the man who graduated in 1913, and received $2,500 a year in the Department of Justice, who is now to receive $10,000 a year.

The next is Mr. Hallett, opinion and contracts section, $7,500 per annum. I understand he was in the War Risk Bureau, and received $6,000 a year. Now he is to draw $7,500 a year, according to this testimony before the House Ways and Means Committee.

The next is J. Goldsmith. He is in the opinion and contracts section, and is to draw $7,500 a year.

The next is Allison, special assignments, $15,000 per annum. He is the ex-law partner of ex-Senator Sutherland. He is to get $15,000 a year.

The next is Aron. No assignment noted, $10,000 a year.

Then there is Colvin, collection and claims section, $7,500 per annum.

Then there is Joseph H. Gaines, $9,500 per annum.

Then there is another Aron, who is to get $12,000. And so on down the line. This does not finish it at all. It is interesting.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I notice the name Joseph H. Gaines.

Mr. HARRISON. Joseph H. Gaines is an ex-Member of Congress from the State of West Virginia, with whom I think my colleague served in the House.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I thought the name sounded familiar.

Mr. HARRISON. He went out with the Sixty-first Congress.

I want to read just a few excerpts, so as to show what the committee had to influence them in their action.

Mr. Schlesinger, testifying before the Ways and Means Committee, said:

Bear in mind that any human being, general counsel or anybody else, can not go over all these contracts. I am trying to get a man from the firm of Sherman & Sterling, one of the biggest law firms in New York. I have offered him $25,000 a year to accept this position. I do not know whether he will accept it. He has been considering it for several weeks. I have to get competent assistants under him.

That is one whose name does not appear in the list I have read from. He will no doubt accept the $25,000 employment sooner or later.

This head of the legal bureau, further testifying, said:

I have got to give those to special counsel. I called together the bar association leaders in New York and explained my fix to them, and the biggest law firms in New York have agreed that they would help me out and take some of these big cases; and, when they took these big cases, would charge only a reasonable fee. They have shown a fine spirit of cooperation, and I believe that when they present their bills you will not have any complaint in consideration of the character and size of the litigation involved.

He is just trusting; he just turns over the cases to them, and then he believes they are going to present a bill of reasonable size. Oh, where is the vaunted business methods that were to be inaugurated, and about which we heard so much in the last campaign?

In the testimony just above the list from which I have read appears this:

I hand to the clerk a list of attorneys already employed or who have virtually promised to come with me. As nearly as I can now prognosticate it will probably take five or six additional attorneys for the claims department; that is, to handle the less important claims, and a special counsel to handle each of the large important claims. It will take seven or eight additional lawyers in the admiralty department—

In addition to those which have already been named—three or four in the collection or recovery department; three or four in the litigation department; and a number of special counsel in the big cases.

We do not know how many that means.

This plan of organization I believe to be the only practical one to straighten out the tangled legal affairs of the Shipping Board and will, I believe, save tens of millions of dollars.

Mr. WARREN. •Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. HARRISON. Does the Senator desire to have an executive session?

Mr. WARREN. The Senator has not concluded his remarks?

Mr. HARRISON. Not quite, but I have almost finished. I understood it was desired to have an executive session.

Mr. WARREN. Unless the Senator is entirely willing to proceed at once, I shall ask him to continue his address in the morning.

Mr. HARRISON. That will be perfectly satisfactory to me.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President, I want to understand the meaning of this colloquy.

Mr. WARREN. I shall ask that the reading of the bill be proceeded with in the morning. Before we proceed to the consideration of executive business, I want to say that I am very glad the Senator from Mississippi has expressed proper consideration for Mr. Lasker and those who are coming in with him.

Until recently Mr. Lasker was a man whom I had never met, and I confess that I had a great many misgivings when I first heard of his appointment because he was not a shipping man. I took it upon myself to make inquiries as to his business ability, and have found that he is a man of large experience in business and a distinguished organizer, and that the advertising business of which he is the president is only one of the many industries in which he is engaged. His testimony before the House committee, which was given, as the Senator knows, before he was hardly warm in his seat, after he had been there but two or three or four weeks, was more or less immature, naturally, because this man, who is the head of the biggest advertising business in the world, as the Senator has said, could hardly become imbued with very much certainty as to all these figures in two or three weeks. But I believe the man is, in the first place, strictly honest; I believe he is able, and I believe he will pull this Shipping Board business out into some shape if we will give him the opportunity and proper help.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator does not understand me to try to tie his hands in any way? But the Senator seems to offer some excuse for Mr. Lasker appearing before the Appropriations Committee of the House.

Mr. WARREN. No excuse, but the facts.

Mr. HARRISON. He says that Mr. Lasker was quite young in his position at that time.

Mr. WARREN. In that position; yes. He was summoned before them almost before he had gotten into the business office.

Mr. HARRISON. Does the Senator think he deported himself better before the Senate Appropriations Committee?

Mr. WARREN. I think there was more of certainty about it, very much more, and I think the Senator himself will, in reading the entire testimony before the Senate committee, see a great difference as to its completeness over that given in the House, although Mr. Lasker is tolerably new yet in that business.

Mr. McCORMICK. If the Senator from Mississippi has concluded, I want to say a word before adjournment.

Mr. HARRISON. I have not concluded. I was only deferring my remarks until to-morrow, because I understood it was desired to have an executive session. I have a great deal more to say. The tale has not been unfolded yet.

Mr. McCORMICK. I shall be glad patiently to sit here this afternoon until the Senator has concluded.

Mr. HARRISON. I hope when I have finished we may enlist the services of the distinguished Senator from Illinois.

Mr. HEFLIN. If we are going on at some length, there are several of us who can speak this afternoon. But if the Senator from Kansas wants to make a motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business, we will defer our remarks.

Mr. WARREN. As far as the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, who is in charge of this bill, is concerned, he would be glad to go on until 12 o'clock to-night, but many Senators have asked about an executive session, which we missed last evening, and the Senator from Mississippi seems somewhat fatigued, too, and to accommodate the greater number of Senators I suggest that we might give way.

[At this point Mr. HARRISON yielded the floor for the day.]

Saturday, August 20, 1921.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, on yesterday I did not quite finish the few remarks that I desired to make. I was diverted by a good many interruptions, but since the resolution has passed that we are to take a recess or adjourn on next Wednesday, and there are several Senators who wish to speak on the question now before the Senate, I am not going to utilize more of the time of the Senate at this time, and shall yield the floor in order that other Senators may address the Senate. I may say more about the employment of these high-priced employees and attorneys just before the Senate votes on the amendment I have offered.

ADMINISTRATION OF THE CUSTOMS LAWS, ETC. (S. DOC. NO. 69).

The Presiding Officer laid before the Senate a communication from the President of the United States, transmitting an estimate of appropriation in the sum of $100,000, required by the Treasury Department for administrative expenses for the fiscal year 1922, not hitherto anticipated, being for the administration and enforcement of the customs laws and regulations and the consideration of pending legislation, etc., which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. WILLIS presented the petition of Karl C. Griffith and sundry other members of the North Hill Christian Church, of Akron, Ohio, praying for the calling of a world conference on disarmament and a reduction of the Army and Navy appropriations, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. CAPPER presented a resolution adopted by the Cherokee County (Kans.) Bankers' Association, protesting against the proposed tax on bank checks, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. NEWBERRY presented memorials of sundry citizens of Shelby, Coleman, and Berrien Springs, all in the State of Michigan, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation providing for compulsory Sunday observance, etc., which were referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. KNOX presented 30 petitions of sundry citizens of Pittsburgh, Pa., and vicinity, praying for the elimination of the 10 per cent sales tax on manufacturers of carbonated beverages in closed containers, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a memorial of sundry citizens of McDonald, Pa., remonstrating against the enactment of Senate bill 1948, providing for compulsory Sunday observance, etc., which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented the petition of Cupps-Masters Post, No. 743, Veterans of Foreign Wars, of West Bridgewater, Pa., praying for the enactment of legislation providing adequate relief for disabled ex-service men, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a resolution adopted at a meeting of the Fraternal Circle Building and Loan Association, of Philadelphia, Pa., favoring the enactment of legislation exempting domestic building and loan associations from income tax where the income derived by a member from savings in shares does not exceed $500, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the City Council of Wilkes-Barre, Pa., favoring the recognition of the republic of Ireland by the Government of the United States, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE, from the Committee on Manufactures, to which was referred the resolution (S. Res. 127) to investigate the causes of factory, wholesale, and retail price conditions in the principal branches of house-furnishing goods industry and trade, reported it without amendment.

Mr. SHEPPARD, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 2144) for the relief of Melquiades Sanchez, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 265) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 2249) authorizing the Secretary of War to donate certain obsolete ordnance to the University of South Dakota, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 266) thereon.

REFUNDING OF FOREIGN DEBT.

Mr. PENROSE. From the Committee on Finance I report back favorably, with an amendment, the bill (S. 2135) to enable the refunding of obligations of foreign Governments owing to the United States of America, and for other purposes; and I submit a report (No. 264) thereon.

I will state in this connection that the committee authorized the favorable report of this bill with one amendment some time ago; and I have delayed making the actual report until the full report of the committee, setting forth the reasons of the committee, could be prepared. I call the especial attention of the Senate and of the country to the report, which I now file with the bill.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask leave to submit a minority report upon the bill for the refunding of the foreign debts.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The minority report submitted by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] will be printed as part 2, Report No. 264.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I inquire of the Senator from Pennsylvania if it is the intention of the committee to press for consideration before the recess the measure which he has just reported?

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, of course I should like to press for the early passage of the bill; but I, like every other Senator, and this measure, like every other measure, are subject to the limitations imposed by the fact that we hope, at least, to adjourn on Wednesday. We have not, however, perfected the arrangements to adjourn, so that I can not answer a question which is academic until that question is settled.

Mr. KING. The Senator is of the opinion that if we should adjourn Wednesday, pursuant to the concurrent resolution which we adopted, it would not be possible, with the multitude of other measures before us, to take up this one for consideration between now and the time of adjournment?

Mr. PENROSE. All I can say is that I shall make every effort to have the Senate proceed with the consideration of this measure at the earliest practicable date.

Mr. KING. I can assure the Senator that I do not think it will be disposed of quite that quickly.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I think the consideration of it would not be concluded before that date.

Mr. PENROSE. I did not say anything about the conclusion of its consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED.

Bills and joint resolutions were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. SMOOT:

A bill (S. 2431) for the relief of Israel Butts; to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

By Mr. NELSON:

A bill (S. 2432) to amend sections 13, 14, 15, 17, and 18, as amended, of the Judicial Code; and

A bill (S. 2433) to aid in the disposal of the arrears of business in the several trial courts of the United States, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. PENROSE:

A bill (S. 2434) granting a pension to Harriet Naugle (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SHEPPARD:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 109) relating to unexpended balances of certain appropriations; to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. WATSON of Georgia:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 110) providing for a refund by the Federal Government to the States of certain special taxes collected on raw cotton, at close of Civil War; to the Committee on Finance.

RAILWAY ADJUSTMENT, LOANS AND SECURITIES.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President, I submit a resolution, which I ask may be read and lie on the table and be printed.

The resolution (S. Res. 135) was read, ordered to lie on the table, and to be printed, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby requested to furnish to the Senate a full and complete list of all securities acquired by the President of the United States under the provisions of the Federal control act, the transportation act of 1920, the act entitled "An act to provide for the reimbursement of the United States for motive power, cars, etc., approved November, 1919," or by any other act or acts, for the purpose of indemnifying the Government of the United States for loans made to the railroads of the United States or for any other purpose.

And to state the dates at which such securities were acquired and the prices thereof.

URGENT DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8117) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, as the RECORD shows, on yesterday we laid aside until a later time the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi, and I wish that we might now proceed with the consideration of the bill. I also had a request to lay aside the item under "Department of State," which I am willing to have laid aside until later in the consideration of the bill, if there is no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment at the top of page 3, inserting lines 2 to 16, will be passed over for the present.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I simply wish to understand the situation. I understand the item with reference to the Shipping Board and the item with reference to the disarmament conference expenses have been laid aside for the time.

Mr. WARREN. The two propositions have been passed over temporarily.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 3, after line 16, to insert:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE.

CONTINGENT EXPENSES.

For miscellaneous expenditures, including telegraphing, fuel, lights, foreign postage, labor, repairs of buildings, care of grounds, books of reference, periodicals, typewriters and adding machines and exchange of same, street car fares not exceeding $200, and other necessities, directly ordered by the Attorney General, for the fiscal years that follow:

For 1918, 25 cents.

For 1919, $5.91.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 4, to insert:

MISCELLANEOUS OBJECTS, DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE.

Detection and prosecution of crimes: For the detection and prosecution of crimes against the United States, including the same objects specified under this head in the sundry civil appropriation act for the fiscal years that follow:

For 1918, $564:

For 1919, $728.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, after line 8, to insert:

Books for judicial officers: For purchase and rebinding of law books, including the exchange thereof, for United States judges, district attorneys, and other judicial officers, including the nine libraries of the United States circuit courts of appeals, to be expended under the direction of the Attorney General, for the fiscal years that follow:

For 1918, $9;
For 1919, $3.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, after line 16, to insert:

Payment of costs taxed against the United States: For the payment of the costs taxed by the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia against the defendants in the case of the Central Pacific Railway Co. against Franklin K. Lane, Secretary of the Interior, and Clay Tailman, Commissioner of the General Land Office, for the fiscal year 1921, $116.30.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, after line 23, to insert:

UNITED STATES COURTS.

For salaries, fees, and expenses of United States marshals and their deputies, including the same objects specified under this head in the sundry civil appropriation act for the fiscal year 1921, $72,000.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I notice this item is $72,000, the next item $29,000, and the next following $66,000. Then follows another item of $31,000. I should like some explanation from the chairman of the committee with respect to those items. We made very liberal appropriations for the subjects to which they refer, and it seems hardly proper for deficits to have been created.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, the appropriations are necessary to provide for expenditures of the department growing out of the unexpectedly great increase in the business of the courts. There have been increases in all lines of business, but the burden on the Attorney General's office, according to their report, because of prosecutions under the prohibition act, has been much greater than expected. That is also true in the case of other crimes; so that, considering all of their expenditures, the department finds itself with a deficit growing out of the unusual circumstances.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the salaries of the United States district attorneys are fixed by law, and I can not see any reason for increasing their salaries by legislation of this character. Indeed, it would be improper.

Mr. WARREN. The item is not for salaries, but for expenses.

Mr. KING. I notice the second item, "for salaries of the United States district attorneys." That is one item. How much of the $29,000 appropriation is to cover that?

Mr. WARREN. The words "for salaries of United States district attorneys and expenses of United States district attorneys" are only quoted here in order to put the item under that title or heading, but in reality the appropriation provided is to cover expenses.

Mr. KING. Is it to cover the expense of additional attorneys?

Mr. WARREN. If the Senator cares to have it read, I have an explanation of every item which has been prepared and sent to me by the department.

Mr. KING. I should like to have the communication read, at any rate that portion of it relating to the amendment to which I have referred. The remainder may be printed in the Record for our information.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the communication will be printed in the Record.

Mr. KING. I suggest that there be read the portion of it relating to the item in respect to $29,000 and also with respect to the item of $66,000, which seems to be "for salaries of clerks of United States district courts, their deputies, and other assistants." Their fees are fixed by law, and, if there has been an augmentation of the legal fees, I should like to know where warrant is found for it.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I think in the interest of saving time, perhaps, it would be well to have the Secretary read the entire communication of the department.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator desire the whole document read?

Mr. KING. Let it be read. It will explain these items.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
OFFICE OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., August 15, 1921.

HON. FRANCIS E. WARREN,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: In accordance with your verbal request the following explanation is submitted of the deficiency items reported by this department to the Director of the Bureau of the Budget on July 29, 1921, and subsequently transmitted to Congress:

These deficiencies are all very small when compared with the amounts of the general appropriations to which they relate. They were not created or incurred with intent on the part of the department; neither were they caused by negligence in administration, but arose automatically in connection with the operation of the judiciary because of the great increase in the number of cases and other proceedings instituted in the courts of the United States under special legislation, such as that growing out of national prohibition, war contracts, internal revenue tax matters, admiralty and Shipping Board cases. Many of the claims pending on account of war contracts, patent infringements, war-risk insurance frauds, etc., involve millions of dollars.

The statement, which will be found on page 4751 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, shows that the business of the courts of the United States, considered as a whole, has enormously increased. The number of criminal cases, however, as distinguished from civil cases and from bankruptcy and private litigation, has increased with marvelous rapidity in the last few years, and particularly during the fiscal year 1921, during which the pending deficiencies arose. The number of United States criminal cases pending at the close of June 30, 1921, was approximately eight times the number pending at the close of the fiscal year 1912.

The following detailed explanation is respectfully submitted as to each of the particular items of deficiency:

Salaries, fees, and expenses of marshals, United States courts—$72,000

The business of the courts increased abnormally in the last half of the fiscal year, resulting in much additional process to be served, which resulted in increased travel on the part of deputy marshals and increased expenses for subsistence of prisoners pending examination and commitment.

The total amount of the overdrafts and requisitions for money with which to pay bills now in the hands of United States marshals for settlement is approximately $67,000, and it is estimated that at least $5,000 additional will be required to meet outstanding bills for advertising, storage, telegraph and telephone service, etc., which have not been rendered.

Fees of jurors, United States courts—$31,000

The total expenditures under this appropriation are a fairly reliable index of the activity of Federal courts during any given fiscal year. The fees are statutory, and the number of days served by jurors is wholly under the control of the courts. During the fiscal year 1921 the total expense was nearly $1,300,000, while the greatest like expense of any previous year was in 1920, which was only $1,213,191.96.

The total amount of the overdrafts and requisitions for money with which to pay jurors, which have not been honored, is approximately $60,000. There are, however, unexpended balances in the hands of various disbursing officers which will be available in due course of business. It is estimated that $31,000 will be sufficient after all balances have been utilized.

Support of prisoners, United States courts—$138,000

The exceptionally large number of prisoners arrested and committed under the national prohibition act, and other special acts, has caused greatly increased expense under this appropriation. Expenses for the fiscal year 1920 were only $877,151.71, whereas they will be in excess of $1,000,000 for 1921.

The total amount of existing overdrafts and requisitions for funds with which to pay bills already presented and awaiting settlement is approximately $169,000. It is estimated, however, that $138,000 will be sufficient after all repayments have been made and balances thus arising have been utilized.

Miscellaneous expenses, United States courts—$42,000

The deficiency under this appropriation arose largely from increased compensation for technical experts employed in cases of great importance, involving large amounts in claims against the Government; from greater cost of printing and binding, which must now be executed by the Public Printer; from increased cost of fuel; from the unusual expenses incident to the death of the late Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States; and from the unusually great number of masters in chancery employed under orders of court.

The total amount of the overdrafts and requisitions for money with which to pay bills now pending is approximately $41,000. It is estimated that at least $1,000 will be required to meet unknown liabilities covering which bills have not been presented.

Salaries and expenses of district attorneys, United States courts—$29,000

The analysis of payments under this appropriation has not been completed. The small deficiency herein reported, however, is due to the increase in clerical assistants, due to the increased business of the courts, and also increase in travel on the part of district attorneys and their regular assistants, and the advance in the cost of telephone and telegraph service.

The total amount of overdrafts and requisitions for money with which to settle bills which have already been submitted is approximately $21,000. It is estimated that at least $8,000 additional will be required to meet bills which have not been rendered for office expenses, such as telephone and telegraph service.

Salaries and expenses of clerks, United States district courts—$66,000

The deficiency in this fund is an outgrowth of the above-mentioned increase in business of the courts, which necessitated an increase in the force to care for the extra work. The comparatively recent change in the status of clerks of United States district courts from a fee basis to a salary basis has made it somewhat difficult to determine closely, in advance, the money necessary in this fund. This will be accomplished more accurately hereafter.

The total amount of overdrafts and requisitions for funds with which to settle bills now in the hands of United States marshals is approximately $59,000. It is estimated that there will be needed at least $7,000 additional to provide for outstanding commercial bills for office expenses which have not yet been rendered.

Miscellaneous expenses, Supreme Court, District of Columbia—$5,500

The deficiency in this appropriation is due to the increased cost of heating and lighting the courthouse building, which is accomplished through the plant of the Department of the Interior, the unit charge for heat having been greatly advanced; to the extraordinary cost of subsisting prisoner witnesses in the Arnstein case, which was tried twice; and to the unusual expense of printing briefs, records, and court calendars at the Government Printing Office.

The total payments under this appropriation, including overdrafts, were $26,627.90, while the unpaid bills covering authorized items aggregate $2,861.74, making a total of $29,489.64. The total amount heretofore appropriated is only $24,000.

Costs taxed against the United States..... $116.30

This is an exceptional and unusual item. It is submitted to cover costs taxed by the court in a case in which the defendants were officers of the United States acting in their official capacity. The taxation of these costs by the court is substantially a judgment against the United States, which, however, must be specifically submitted to Congress, there being no provision of law for its payment.

In addition to the foregoing there are included as part of this deficiency report several proposed provisions of law intended to adjust several minor matters wherein expenses were duly authorized and paid, but their allowance prohibited under late rulings of the comptroller, and to provide, as evidently contemplated by existing law, that the taxation of the court and the approval of the President when made in accordance with the provisions of section 846, Revised Statutes of the United States, shall be conclusive.

The foregoing explanations apply only to the deficiencies reported for the fiscal year 1921 and prior years. The items requested for the current year for the United States penitentiaries at Leavenworth, Kans., Atlanta, Ga., and McNeil Island, Wash., will be made the subject of a separate communication.

Respectfully,
H. M. DAUGHERTY,
Attorney General.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, there is one item that I desire to call to the attention of the chairman of the committee and ask whether he has any further information respecting it. I notice in the report submitted by the Attorney General that a portion of this aggregate sum is for "masters in chancery," and I do not quite understand why the Government should pay the expenses of masters in chancery. They are appointed in civil suits, as a rule. There may have been some Government cases in which masters in chancery were appointed, yet I have no knowledge of that fact. I am wondering whether there is any information as to whether masters in chancery appointed to pass upon civil litigation are submitting to the Government expense accounts and asking the Government to pay them.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I will have to refer the Senator to the department for information as to particulars of that character. The committee had before them sufficient evidence to show that there was need for a deficiency item to cover the amount carried by the bill for the purpose indicated. I imagine the Senator would hardly expect us to be able to inform him in detail as to the circumstances under which masters in chancery were employed.

Mr. KING. May I ask the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] whether this item came under his cognizance?

Mr. CURTIS. It did not. I have no information whatever on the subject. I am sorry to say that I have been very busy with other matters and did not have the time to devote to this. I should have liked to give the matter consideration, but work on other committees prevented me from doing so.

Mr. KING. I shall pass over this item, then, though I confess that I am not at all satisfied with it. I shall go over the heads of the committee and try to obtain the information for myself before the bill finally passes.

I should like to call the attention of the Senator from Wyoming to one other matter. I observe that the majority of these deficits result from the enforcement of the Volstead Act. We gave to the Department of Justice $7,500,000 for the enforcement of that act, plus other large appropriations, as I now recall. Notwithstanding the appropriations made, we are repeatedly called upon to meet deficits incurred by various agencies or departments charged with the work of enforcing the law. Will the Senator assure us that there will be no more deficits for 1921 growing out of the enforcement of the Volstead Act or other acts? Is this the end of the chapter, or will we have another chapter in the serial story that may run on forever and ever?

Mr. WARREN. The Senator is mistaken, though naturally so, in his quotations from the appropriation bills. The $7,500,000 was not appropriated for the Department of Justice, but for the Treasury Department.

Mr. KING. It was for the enforcement of the prohibition act, and I intended to state that the $7,500,000 was granted the Treasury Department to be expended by the Internal Revenue Bureau.

Mr. WARREN. Under the law and the Constitution the Department of Justice is powerless to do otherwise than to give due attention to the cases that are referred to it in the proper way from the other departments. These cases arise through the Treasury Department. Those connected with it accumulate evidence, and the courts are called upon to adjudicate the cases. The amount that it will take for the prohibition causes no one can tell. I made the remark—perhaps a foolish one, but I did not think so then, and do not now, though some prohibition people thought it was—that in order to enforce the law as it was intended, and to protect our land borders against Canada and Mexico, and our sea borders against all of the outlying countries, it would take $50,000,000 a year to enforce absolute and complete abstinence. I still think so. Since then people very much interested in the antisaloon cause have called on me and have stated that while it was almost impossible to guard the borders absolutely, perhaps with ten or fifteen millions a year they would be able to "scotch" the traffic, as they expressed it, so that we might have respectability on all borders, and very little unlawful importation.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator expect to ask an appropriation of $50,000,000 a year for the enforcement of the Volstead Act?

Mr. WARREN. I expect that when I do the Senator from Utah and his party will second the motion and will join with me in appropriating that sum!

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I will say frankly that I am in favor of appropriating whatever is necessary to enforce in a legal and proper way all laws that are enacted by Congress. If we have laws upon the statute books they should be enforced. The eighteenth amendment is a part of our organic law. We have enacted a law for the purpose of carrying it into effect. That law must be enforced, and I make no complaint about legitimate appropriations for the purpose of enforcing that statute. But I should like the attention of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], the chairman of the Judiciary Committee. I see that he is absent. However, I will make this observation in his absence:

I notice, Mr. President, that the Attorney General, according to the newspapers, has devised a plan to appoint 18 additional Federal judges and make them a sort of mobile force, transferable from Maine to Texas and from the Atlantic to the Pacific Ocean, wherever the Federal business may require their attention. Heretofore I have called the attention of the Senate to the fact that a committee of lawyers, as I am advised, has been considering the question of the power of Congress to create inferior courts to handle misdemeanors, and all petty offenses, and the violation of regulations promulgated by the departments, which entail small fines and small penalties. I suggest that the Judiciary Committee take up this matter and consider the advisability, if it is possible, if there are no constitutional objections, of creating inferior courts as adjuncts to the district courts, that may try without juries—or, if juries are demanded, make available the jurors in attendance at the district court—the misdemeanors and small cases which arise. If that should be done, in my opinion the district courts will not be overburdened as they are now with the petty misdemeanor cases, often to the exclusion of the consideration of important litigation which is pending.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, that concludes the bill, except for the two amendments passed over, does it not?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That completes the reading of the bill, except for action on the amendments passed over.

Mr. KING. Before the amendment just read has been agreed to, I want to make some inquiries, but I will defer them until the Senator from Florida concludes.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I want to discuss, to some extent, the provision for the Shipping Board, beginning on line 9, page 2, the item being:

For expenses of the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation for losses due to the maintenance and operation of ships and for administrative purposes, $48,500,000.

With the proviso that none of that sum "shall be used for the payment of claims other than those resulting from the current maintenance and operation of vessels," and with another proviso that fees allowed attorneys shall be passed upon by the Attorney General, and the proviso at the end which the committee favors striking out—

That not more than three officers or employees of the United States Shipping Board or the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation shall be paid an annual salary or compensation in excess of $12,500.

The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] has proposed an amendment to that provision, by which he seeks to have provided in the bill that no employee or officer shall receive more than $12,000, without any reference to the number, changing the amount from $12,500 to $12,000.

Referring to that situation, Mr. President, I think it fair to review somewhat the history of the legislation creating the Shipping Board and the undertaking to establish an American merchant marine, and the proceedings under and in pursuance of that legislation. I think it important to do that now, because of the broadcast assertions in the public press, in interviews, in reports, and in discussions here, that the whole enterprise has been a colossal failure; to the effect that we now have the most stupendous commercial wreck in all history on our hands; that there have been waste, extravagance, incompetency, and inefficiency, and even worse than that—crookedness, as some express it—and rascality and graft.

The effect of all that is to create the impression in the public mind that the Government ought not further to undertake to establish an American merchant marine, that the Shipping Board should retire entirely from its activities, and that the whole effort we have been putting forth in the past should be abandoned, the ships put up and auctioned off, sold for whatever they might bring, or disposed of in some way so that the Government would be relieved of the cost of operation and of the expenses in connection with their upkeep.

Mr. President, the people who have taken that viewpoint are largely, to begin with, people who never favored the original shipping act of September, 1916, people who believe that this whole field is one for private enterprise, that it is a species of paternalism, and a launching upon untried fields, which will lead inevitably to tremendous cost, increased taxation, and failure, if the Government lends its support and its help in the great work of establishing this merchant marine.

There has been an attempt, too, to fasten the blame for what is alleged to be the colossal failure upon the Democratic administration, upon the Democratic Shipping Board, as it is called, and to assert that all this tremendous wreckage is an inheritance from the incapable and incompetent, and, worse, Democratic administration. That prompts me to review very briefly the history of this legislation.

It will be remembered that in September, 1916, we passed the shipping bill. It will be recalled that the arguments in favor of that were, briefly, that there was need of merchant ships flying our flag and carrying our commerce; that, while it is granted that it is a field for private enterprise ordinarily, private enterprise had utterly failed, and our merchant tonnage had decreased some 4,000,000 tons since 1861. At that time we were carrying only about 9.7 per cent of our commerce overseas in American bottoms. We had a weak and an insignificant position on the high seas. We were in a position of dependence upon our competitors to carry our goods to all foreign markets. So it seemed that the only possible way to relieve that situation was for the Government to step in and lend its help in the establishment of an adequate merchant marine.

The Shipping Board was appointed after some delay. Not long after that there was a resignation by the chairman, Mr. Denman, and by Gen. Goethals, general manager, and there were vacancies on the board from time to time. In the first place, they had to create an organization, composed of the very best people they could find in this country, to discharge these new and important duties.

They had to make selection of men for special work in connection with this great undertaking. It took some time to do that. Very soon afterwards the war which burst upon Europe in 1914 came to us, and it was necessary to proceed with unusual haste. The cry everywhere was "ships and more ships." We had to build docks and yards, to find materials, to enter into contracts, and to construct these ships, having in mind only speed and without regard to economy. That work was proceeded with with unusual energy, and, in my judgment, with most commendable purpose and intention, and it was pressed with all the diligence and power that could be put behind it.

It is true that the Shipping Board was by a majority nominally Democratic, as far as its politics went; but there was no politics in its work and no politics in this undertaking, and that is very clearly shown by the fact that the Shipping Board at the very outset selected men best qualified, as they understood it, to do this work, and that without regard to their political affiliations.

In 1917 Mr. Piez was elected vice president and general manager of the Emergency Fleet Corporation, the proper title being the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation, but for the sake of brevity I shall allude to it as the Fleet Corporation. Headquarters were removed to Philadelphia so as to be close to the center of material supply and labor supply and to be able more energetically and efficiently to prosecute the work of construction. Mr. Piez is not a Democrat. He is an old line, contributing Republican. He continued, faithfully and energetically, until April 30, 1919.

In the early spring of 1918 Mr. Charles M. Schwab was made director general of construction and put in charge of the whole work, over Mr. Piez and all others. Mr. Schwab diligently pressed the work, and it was under his direction and Mr. Piez's direction that these large expenditures were made and these enormous contracts were entered into and prosecuted. Mr. Schwab continued in that relation until late in December, 1918. He, of course, is a prominent Republican. There was some talk at one time, and I believe a dinner was held in New York, boosting Mr. Schwab as a possible candidate and the man who might receive the Republican nomination that was to follow later.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. FLETCHER. Certainly.

Mr. McCORMICK. Was there not some talk about nominating Mr. Hoover on the Democratic or the Republican ticket?

Mr. FLETCHER. I think there was some talk of that sort. Mr. Hoover was a little uncertain whether he was a Democrat or Republican.

Mr. McCORMICK. And were not the Democrats a little uncertain, too?

Mr. FLETCHER. I never heard of any uncertainty regarding Charles M. Schwab's politics. If the Senator will look up the contribution list of the Republican Party, I think he will find that he is a very liberal contributor.

Mr. McCORMICK. Yes; for example, such a liberal contributor as B. M. Baruch to the Democratic campaign fund.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield.

Mr. STANLEY. Is the Senator from Illinois questioning the Republicanism of Charles M. Schwab?

Mr. McCORMICK. Oh, the Senator from Illinois was placing Mr. Schwab in the same category as a presidential candidate as Mr. Hoover and Mr. Baruch.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. Schwab has been accused of a great many things, rightfully or wrongfully, but I have never heard his allegiance to the policies and principles and purposes of stand-pat Republicanism questioned before. I happened as chairman of an investigating committee to have Mr. Schwab before me once for several days and heard him talk, among other things, on the beatitudes of Republicanism and protectionism. If Schwab has fallen, may the Lord save the Republican Party!

Mr. McCORMICK. And if Baruch should fall, may the Lord save the Democracy!

Mr. FLETCHER. I think it will be agreed there never was any proposal to nominate Mr. Schwab on the Democratic ticket.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. Baruch never had any place in the councils of the Democratic Party. He has never been called upon in that way. He may have had some personal attachments, but Mr. Schwab has stood, in season and out of season, as the patron saint, friend, defender, and guardian angel of Republicanism for 20 years. I am not saying anything against Mr. Schwab. I think he is better than his party.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I did not mean to launch into all these details, and I do not mean to imply that either Mr. Schwab or Mr. Piez played politics in connection with their work on the Shipping Board. I am simply reciting the facts.

As far as the operations were concerned, they were under the direction of Mr. Rosseter, vice president of the Pacific Mail Steamship Co., and an experienced and trained shipping man, a Republican—a contributing Republican—who has never been considered anything else. So we have the construction end of the work, where enormous sums were paid out and expended and contracted for, in charge of active, energetic, and well-known Republicans, and we have the operating end of the enterprise, where losses are claimed to have occurred in inexcusable proportion, in charge of a Republican, Mr. J. H. Rosseter, of San Francisco and of the Pacific Mail Steamship Co. Therefore the claim that a Democratic Shipping Board must be held responsible for alleged waste and extravagance and crookedness and graft must be considered in connection with the fact as to who were the men actually doing the work resulting in this alleged extravagance and inefficiency and incompetency and worse.

Mr. President, in addition to that, the Shipping Board is charged with shortcomings and offenses or held responsible for consequences with which they were in no wise properly chargeable and for which they were in no wise responsible. In fact, it has been claimed here that the Shipping Board has been incompetent, inefficient, wasteful, extravagant, and permitted graft and rascality, when, in very truth, there was no Shipping Board. It was a phantom; it was a mere name. It had no real, living existence.

Why do I say that? It will be remembered that the American merchant marine act, known as the Jones Act, upon which the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Commerce spent so many hours of diligent labor and expended without reserve his great ability, finally passed the Congress on June 5, 1920. That act provided for a new Shipping Board, with increased salaries, and it provided that the members should be appointed as soon as practicable.

What happened? The names of the members of that Shipping Board never came to the Senate until December 7, 1920. July, August, September, October, November—six months and no Shipping Board except in name. Those who were undertaking to discharge the duties of that board were living over a veritable volcano, because they did not know, and no one could tell, what moment their acts would be questioned, and legal complications might arise out of anything they undertook to do, serving under a law which provided by its terms that a majority of the members of that board were required to vote in favor of certain action before it would be taken legally by the board. The law itself prescribed that, and there was no majority of that membership.

Does anyone wish to charge the Shipping Board with responsibility for all the things that happened when there was no Shipping Board? It may be said, "Well, we had a Democratic President and he should have sent these names in and filled up the board." Granted there was unusual delay, and it was a pity that the delay took place, but I can see now better than I could see then the difficulties with which President Wilson had to contend. It is no easy matter to select the proper men to discharge the important duties of that great position, even though we have apparently unlimited material in this great country of ours. There are certain restrictions and limitations in the act itself which impose difficulties upon the appointing power. I fully approve of those limitations. They ought to be there, but I must recognize that they are obstacles in the way of the appointing power as far as quick action is concerned.

What happened after the 6th of December, when these names came to the Senate? We had a Republican majority in the Senate. Those names were referred to the Commerce Committee and they were never acted upon. Nothing was done. They were never either rejected or confirmed. They were simply held in the air here. I am saying this as a matter of history and of fact, without meaning to imply but what if I had been in the same position our friends on the other side of the aisle were in at that time I should have pursued the same course they did, because I would have known that my President would have the naming of the Shipping Board in a short time and I would have preferred that he should do it, perhaps, than the President of the opposite party. They knew by defeating the nominations or not acting upon the nominations they would eventually fail and that President Harding would have the appointing of the membership of the Shipping Board under the act passed June 5, 1920.

So, again, we had a paralyzed Shipping Board to carry on this stupendous work, a work that is unequaled by any enterprise on earth, fifteen times greater than any single concern engaged in shipping in the world. At that time it had no head, practically, and there was no authorized, legalized board to carry on and conduct and direct that work. The wonder, Mr. President, the astounding thing is that there was not more graft, more crookedness, and more rascality than has ever been hinted at or dreamed of in connection with all of the ramifications and details of this colossal undertaking.

So the Shipping Board passed along, paralyzed, crippled, as I said, for another six months, and yet you want to blame the Shipping Board for what you call a colossal failure, when there was no Shipping Board.

When I say that I can more readily see the difficulties with which President Wilson contended than I could at that time, I mean to base that statement upon this situation. President Harding knew in November that he would have to name the members of the Shipping Board. He knew that long before he was inaugurated. Of course, he could not appoint them until after the 4th of March, but he could have selected them in the meantime and he could have had them ready to appoint on the 4th of March. But did he do that? Not at all; not until the 8th of June of this year did President Harding send the names of the members of the Shipping Board to the Senate. So President Harding as well as President Wilson took practically six months to name the members of the Shipping Board. That is the fact.

In the meantime we had, under some sort of an Executive order—the legality of which is questioned very greatly, although it is not in the public interest to raise the question, perhaps—Admiral Benson designated by the President to act as a Shipping Board. Of course, that was merely an assumption of authority, and Admiral Benson himself must have lived under terrific strain and stress and doubt and uncertainty throughout that whole period. However, he stood faithfully to his task; he did his level best; he did all that he could do; but under certain provisions of the law itself there were some things he could not do. For instance, he could not sell ships. To do that required a majority vote of the members of the board designated under the act to authorize the sale of ships; but here we were all the time crying, "Why does not the Shipping Board dispose of some of these ships?" While we had but one man acting as a Shipping Board.

So I say, Mr. President, let not the Senate assail the work of a Shipping Board which existed only in name—a phantom, an ideal—but actually was not a living, going thing, largely because the Senate itself refused to act upon nominations which were sent to it. Those nominations were sent here on the 6th of December, 1920, and they were never acted on in this body at all; it was not until June 8, 1921, that we were able to have the names of the members of the Shipping Board before us for final action and then acted. That was the situation. Cassius would say—

The fault, dear Brutus, is not in our stars,
But in ourselves, that we are underlings.

That should be taken home by the Senate. We are partly responsible for these results, disastrous, if Senators wish to call them so; but I contend, Mr. President, that the achievements of the Shipping Board and its organization illustrated the skill and the energy, the genius and the patriotism of America as no other work in which we have engaged illustrates them.

We had less than 2,000,000 tons of American shipping under our flag in 1916, while to-day we have over 11,000,000 tons. We were carrying then, as I have stated, 9.7 per cent of our overseas trade, while to-day we are carrying nearly 50 per cent of that trade in American ships. To-day the world's total shipping is made up of 33,296 vessels of 61,974,653 gross tons. Forty per cent of the sailing ships are owned in the United States. The United Kingdom has only 411,000 tons more than it had in 1914 of the world's shipping. In 1914 Germany had over 5,000,000 tons and now she has only 654,000 gross tons. The percentage of the world's seagoing tonnage of the United Kingdom was 44½ per cent in 1914 and to-day it is only 35½ per cent. The United States in 1914 had a percentage of the world's tonnage of shipping of 4.3 per cent, while to-day it has 22.7 per cent.

Mr. SHEPPARD. May I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SHEPPARD. What is the world's tonnage at the present time which is being transported on the seas?

Mr. FLETCHER. It is 61,974,653 tons.

Mr. SHEPPARD. That is the tonnage of vessels?

Mr. FLETCHER. It is the tonnage of vessels of over 100 tons.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Has the Senator the figures showing what the freight tonnage is which may be carried in those vessels?

Mr. FLETCHER. Of course that changes from time to time. In 1920, in dollars, the foreign commerce of the United States alone amounted to $13,000,000,000. I did have the actual tonnage figures, and think I can find them in a moment.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I wish the Senator from Florida would put the figures in the RECORD if he can.

Mr. FLETCHER. I can furnish the figures, so far as the foreign commerce of the United States is concerned. Expressed in net tons, the figures would show approximately as follows:

Exports.....	63,199,456
Imports.....	37,092,841
Total.....	100,292,297

In 1920 we exported $8,228,759,748 worth of products, and our imports were valued at $5,279,398,211, making a total of $13,508,157,959, but of course that commerce has been falling off. I had occasion to mention that recently in a speech which I delivered in the Senate, and I think I gave the figures at that time.

What I have stated, Mr. President, indicates to some extent what we have accomplished. We have taken our place upon the seas. We no longer are dependent upon foreign ships to carry our commerce. That change in the situation has all been accomplished by this much-defamed organization which is generally designated as the Shipping Board. It has been done largely under the direction and management of such men as I have mentioned. I have not referred to them to imply at all that I question their patriotism or their efficiency or their great ability. I refer to such men as Rossiter, Schwab, and Piez. I am now referring to what they helped to accomplish in carrying out the plans and purposes indicated by Congress and prosecuted by the organization which is known as the Shipping Board and the Emergency Fleet Corporation.

Mr. President, all of these denunciations of waste and extravagance tend to impress the public with a sense that the whole enterprise has been a total failure, colossal in proportions, and that money is being asked for now to be put into a sink hole where millions and millions more must continue to go. Therefore the question is, Is it worth while to have an American merchant marine? The public is given to understand that it will be called upon to put up money time after time to continue this effort to establish and to maintain an adequate merchant marine.

I am very sorry that Mr. Lasker seems to lend what appears to be his support in that direction in the statement which he made as a foundation for the request for this appropriation in the House. He goes on to say, on page 3:

It will be a shock to Congress, as it was to the President, to hear that the net expenditures of this enterprise, paid out of the public funds last year, were $380,000,000. To illustrate the bad condition the books are in, I will say that last year the gross operating disbursements were $410,000,000. That represents the expense of the operation of the boats alone.

Of course, that is wholly wrong. Mr. Lasker afterwards admits that it is wrong; it is nowhere correct; it does not approach the proper figures. According to the testimony before the House committee that loss was claimed to be $200,000,000, to begin with; subsequently it got down to $163,000,000, and finally, before the Senate committee Mr. Lasker himself placed it at $131,000,000. Yet here he makes public this statement, in which he says that the loss was $410,000,000. Then he proceeds further:

I must appear before Congress shortly to tell them it is possible the Shipping Board will require up to $300,000,000 for the present fiscal year. I fear this will throw a lot of sand in the gear box of tax revision. The books of the board are so absolutely incomplete and incompetent that it is impossible to be sure whether that $300,000,000 represents all we may need; we may require more; but it is the most intelligent wild guess we can make.

Why make a guess at all and give it out to the public, creating the impression that the expenditures and the loss have been many times greater than the facts disclose? Why make a guess based upon figures which he says himself were wholly unreliable, and upon books which he says are wholly untrustworthy? The effect of that statement, the effect of the arguments we have heard here, is to cause to arise the question of doubt in the public mind, as illustrated, for instance, in a very responsible publication issued on July 23. I refer to the Traffic World, in which it is said:

Is there anything sacred in the doctrine of an American merchant marine or any lack of patriotism in being opposed to such an institution as an economic extravagance? Can an American merchant marine be maintained without what amounts to subsidy and the taxation of the public? Is John Smith, who knows and cares nothing about the shipping business, willing to be taxed, and ought he to be taxed, in order that Bill Jones's goods may be carried in American rather than foreign bottoms? Does Bill Jones care, or ought he to care, whether his goods are carried in American or foreign bottoms? If he ought to care, why ought he? Should John Smith pay taxes so that Bill's care may be gratified? If an American merchant marine can not be maintained without taxation of the public—in other words, if it can only be maintained and operated at a loss—why not let the foreign ships have the business?

Proceeding further, the article continues:

* * * If they can not support themselves and there are foreign boats that can and will carry our commerce, why try to infuse the breath of life into a dead thing? Will artificial respiration long or healthfully sustain life? Are we not wasting millions and billions of dollars—throwing good money after bad—in an effort to retain and make possible an institution that was constructed out of what seemed to be a war necessity, but whose usefulness has now ended, and which ought to be junked at the least possible loss now that the war demand for it has ended, and its expense charged to profit and loss?

We are asking these questions seriously, not with any intention of being sarcastic or humorous. We want the ideas of our readers; Congress ought to have the benefit of their ideas also. As we see it now, there is little more glory in having a merchant marine operated at a loss than in having any other kind of first-class shipwreck. Operating ships is a business. No business can be successful unless conducted on proper economic principles. To operate a merchant marine by subsidy or methods akin to subsidy is practically Government operation, from which we have been trying to get away as to our rail carriers. Are we ready for it with ocean carriers? It might be necessary with our rail carriers if private ownership should fail to function, for we must have rail transportation; but do we need it in ocean transportation? Even though private ownership may cease to function—or, rather, fail to begin to function—we still have the foreign bottoms.

I read that to indicate the effect of the kind of propaganda that is being disseminated, and the kind of impressions that are being created by what has been going on in connection with the denunciation of this enterprise as a huge wreck and a colossal failure.

Mr. Smull rather expresses, at page 115 of this hearing in the House, sentiment along that line. He says:

We intend to modify and change entirely the method of operating boats. Our idea is ultimately to sell them all and get rid of them and get the Shipping Board out of business just as soon as we can.

Mr. President, is it possible that we must now, at this date, argue to the American people the necessity of an adequate American merchant marine? Have we got to go over that ground again, and impress upon the public the vast importance to them of establishing and maintaining these merchant ships? I thought that question was all settled. I thought that when we expressed the policy of Congress in the Jones Act of June, 1920, we expressed public opinion as it existed in this country. Now, it seems that there has been an undercurrent all the while, something operating beneath the surface here in Washington and elsewhere in the great centers—in New York particularly—to discredit this whole enterprise, to brand it as a gigantic failure, and to impress upon the people of the United States that they are pouring their money into a sink hole, and the sooner they quit it and scrap the whole business the better.

Mr. President, is it possible that we have forgotten what occurred just a few years ago, when freight rates in this country went up from 100 to 1,000 per cent, when our products of mine and farm and factory weighed down the docks and terminals and warehouses on the Pacific and along the Gulf and on the Atlantic and on the Great Lakes, unable to be moved to the waiting markets overseas, because we had no ships? When the German ships were out of commission, when the British ships were commandeered largely for war uses, we were helpless as a nation, so far as overseas trade was concerned. Do we have to tell the farmers of the West of the time when the freight on a bushel of wheat from New York to Liverpool went from 3 cents a bushel to 50 cents a bushel? Do we have to tell the farmers of the South of the time when freight rates on cotton from Galveston to Liverpool went from $2.50 a bale to $50 a bale?

Do we need to argue to them that while these high freight rates may be paid by the purchaser they are reflected in the price which the producer must get for his product? We were helpless. Do we have to remind our people of the time when we were paying $400,000,000 a year to foreign ships to carry our freight across the seas?

Not only that, but just go back a little bit further than that, to a time when conditions were very clearly illustrated by some hearings that took place in the House. Mr. Rossbottom, third vice-president of the Panama Steamship Co., in his testimony before the House Committee on Merchant Marine on June 16 last, showed that when the Panama Steamship Co. came under Government control in 1906 foreign steamship companies which were operating between European ports and the west coast of South America, and which also operated between United States ports and the west coast of South America, were actually charging higher rates from the United States ports than from European ports, notwithstanding the fact that the distance from the United States ports is 2,000 miles shorter.

Here is the testimony, on pages 76 and 77 of the hearings on H. R. 5348. This is Mr. Rossbottom's testimony:

When the Government secured control of the company, Mr. Taft sent for our vice president, Mr. Drake, and myself, and practically laid down this policy: "You must not do anything that will subject the Government to criticism because of operating a railroad and steamship line; it is a departure; we can not help it; if you establish a rate you must be prepared to justify it, you must establish and maintain rates on a reasonable basis, you must not raise them simply because charter or market conditions or something else throughout the world might justify you in raising them, raise them only because your operating expenses require that that be done and endeavor to conduct the operations of the company so as to insure a reasonable return on the investment."

That was when the Government undertook to operate the Panama Steamship Co. in connection with the Panama Railroad, and it has operated it ever since. It has operated it most successfully and most beneficially to the United States.

Mr. BANKHEAD. What figure did he suggest as a reasonable return, if any?

Mr. ROSSBOTTOM. He made no suggestion; he left that to the officers and board of directors.

Acting along those lines, the first situation we encountered was this: The distance from New York to the Canal Zone is approximately 1,970 miles; say, 2,000 miles; and the distance from Europe to the Canal Zone, from the nearest port in Europe to the Canal Zone, is about 2,000 miles greater. The steamship lines from Europe, involving a haul of 2,000 miles more than the haul from the United States, were charging the shippers from Europe less than the same steamship lines were charging shippers from the United States for a haul of 2,000 miles less. That same condition also existed on traffic from the west coast to the United States and to Europe. The carriers on the Pacific coast, with the exception of the Pacific Mail Steamship Line, were all foreign steamship lines. I do not know of any reason—

Mr. BANKHEAD. Pardon me there just a moment. That was in 1894, approximately?

Mr. ROSSBOTTOM. That was in 1906.

Mr. BANKHEAD. What justification was offered for the excess rate charged by the American boats over those from European ports on that freight rate, considering the distance of the haul?

Mr. ROSSBOTTOM. It was just a question that they could get it and they got it.

We were dependent on those foreign carriers, and we had to come to their terms. That was the situation. We had no ships of our own.

There was not any reason given at all; the lines just charged the American shippers much more than some of the same lines charged their European shippers, because some of those foreign lines were also operating from the United States.

Mr. EDMONDS. In other words, they had a conference agreement and the freight coming from the United States was made to pay a higher rate than freight coming from Europe?

Mr. ROSSBOTTOM. Exactly. The same situation existed on traffic from the west coast to the United States and Europe in the rates charged by the Pacific Steam Navigation Co., a foreign line; the Chilean Line, a foreign line, and later on the Peruvian Line. The Peruvian Line was not in existence at that time, but the other two foreign lines I have named charged rates to Europe on the basis—on coffee, for instance, the rate to Europe was 60 shillings. The same commodity to New York, involving a haul of 2,000 miles less, would pay from 80 to 90 shillings. In other words, the carriers got out of the traffic whatever they could. The operating officers took that question up with the board of directors and we were instructed to arrange, as far as we could, to establish rates from the United States and to the United States on at least as low a basis as the rates from and to Europe.

It took us four years to accomplish anything in that direction, but finally we succeeded in doing it. We were able to do it because we controlled the railroad across the Isthmus and we practically controlled the rates to New York by our steamship line. We also had the right to insist with those foreign steamship lines that if they did not fall in with that policy we would not accept their cargo on the through-billing basis, but would charge the local rates across the Isthmus, which were very much higher than our charges on the through-billing basis. So that at the beginning of the war between Great Britain and Germany the rates from the United States to the countries of Central and South America, on the west coast, and the rates from these same countries to the United States, were on a parity with the rates to and from Europe solely by the action of the Panama Railroad Co. and its steamship line.

Now, then, the European war started—
Mr. EDMONDS. If you had not owned the railroad, you could not have done it?

Mr. ROSSBOROUGH. We could not possibly have done it if we had not owned the railroad and the steamship line between the Canal Zone and New York. The mere fact we owned the railroad and the steamship line made it possible to accomplish that purpose.

Mr. DAVIS. Still, the fact you did it resulted in a very great advantage to the American shippers and those receiving the shipments?

Mr. ROSSBOROUGH. There is no question about that. As a matter of fact, the rates from the United States and to the United States should be lower than the rates to and from Europe, because the haul is 2,000 miles less.

There is no guesswork about this. Here is an actual demonstration of what the foreign lines will do to you when they are able to do it; and it was only the institution of the Panama Steamship Co., operating our own boats, that enabled us to get rates to the United States and from the United States even equal to those to and from Europe, 2,000 miles greater haul, to and from these South American ports.

I almost hesitate to venture upon an argument in favor of an American merchant marine. It seems so obvious to me that we must have a merchant marine if we are ever to have any foreign trade at all worth while.

In addition to the commercial reasons, in addition to the economic reasons, I want to refer to the other phase of the matter, and that is the necessity of merchant ships as a part of our national defense, as auxiliaries to the Navy; and I am offering in that connection the testimony of a distinguished author from England. I refer now to Senate Document No. 335, Sixty-fifth Congress, third session, an article which I had printed as a public document entitled "The Problem of British Shipping," by Sydney Brooks. I just want to read what that author has said. This was published in British papers. I thought it was a very valuable discussion of the whole subject of shipping during the war, and especially of the question of the importance of merchant ships. It is based upon experience, not upon mere theory. It is one of the great lessons which the World War taught—a lesson which is not so emphatically applicable to the United States as to Great Britain, because we are not situated precisely as she is, but one that is still applicable to us and to any great nation.

Mr. Brooks says, on page 7:

Over one-half of the world's sea-borne trade was carried in British ships; our shipbuilding resources were unrivaled; all the lands of the earth were laid under tribute that the people of the United Kingdom might have the means to maintain life and the material to manufacture goods; our merchant navy was not only the prop of our existence, not only played the same part in British commerce as coal plays in British industry, not only sustained the whole edifice of our world-wide trading—it was also the greatest of international utilities, the most remarkable of all our contributions to the commerce of the universe, and by far the most imposing monument ever reared by the genius of British enterprise.

At that time they had 44 per cent of the world's tonnage. This continues:

It is a commonplace to remark that without the mercantile marine we could not have waged the war, much less won it. Everyone can now see that tonnage has been the basis of the whole allied effort. But we were almost criminally late in recognizing this simple quintessential fact and in shaping our policy accordingly. The war had been going on certainly for two years—in my own opinion, for two and a half years—before the nation and its rulers had begun to realize that we are not a continental but an insular power, drawing our life from the sea. So little was this foreseen or suspected at the beginning of the war that we took men from the shipyards by thousands and tens of thousands into the army and the munition factories, and practically shut down on the building of merchant vessels. Then gradually and protestingly we awoke to the reality of the U-boat depredations. We found that just at a time when our factories were demanding more and more material from abroad, and our armies were requiring unprecedented quantities of imported foodstuffs, and our allies were asking for the loan of ships and yet more ships, and half of our total tonnage had to be diverted from commercial to military uses, the German submarines were making inroads on our depleted shipping with a success that, if it could be maintained, would eventually end in paralyzing our fighting arm. There were weeks, there were months, in 1917 when the enemy's campaign seemed so likely to triumph that one could almost name the date when Great Britain's part in the war would be over. Sir L. Choliza Money stated in the House of Commons on the 14th of November that had our losses in the month of April, 1917, been maintained we should have been "in deadly danger" in six months and "ruined" in nine months. I wonder how many people realize that in the first nine months of last year we lost almost a sixth of the entire mercantile marine with which we began the war and that our output of vessels for the whole year was about 240,000 tons less than our losses during a single quarter. Our strength at sea was being steadily sapped, even though the fleet remained intact and supreme.

Such a paradoxical conjuncture of affairs would have seemed unimaginable before the war. But then before the war we really did not know the meaning of sea power. We thought it meant dreadnaughts, cruisers, destroyers, submarines, and so on. We did not realize that it also meant liners, trawlers, tankers, tramps, and the ordinary merchant vessel. We did not grasp that while the fleets represented the striking and protecting half of sea power, the carrying and supplying half consisted of the merchant marine, and that both were equally vital to the success of our military effort. We had never, therefore, envisaged a situation in which, while "the command of the seas" was in our hands, our communications, our vital arteries, could be severed one by one through the sinking of mere trading ships. Undoubtedly, as Lord Incheape has observed, when men begin to ponder the lessons of the war there will be a great readjustment in the strategic conceptions of the functions and relative importance of the navy and the merchant marine in time of war. We have learned to rate at something like its proper value the belligerent utility of a service that has transported to five different fronts and kept fully provisioned and equipped all these millions of fighting men, besides supplying Great Britain with her essential foodstuffs and raw materials and placing over 2,000,000 tons of shipping at the disposal of her allies.

Now, ought we to forget that lesson? Is not that a sufficient demonstration of the necessity of having merchant ships in peace times as well as in war times? They are necessary as auxiliaries to any Navy we may establish.

Mr. President, passing from that, I confess to no little disappointment and chagrin, and it almost makes me ill when I read the testimony before the subcommittee of the House Committee on Appropriations. It seemed to me that possibly we had reached the time when the hope of a decent merchant marine was fast vanishing from our vision.

That testimony was significant for its vagueness, its uncertainty, its outrageous proposals, its guessing, and its brazen statements, which are admitted later on in the testimony to be wholly unfounded in fact.

The fact is that Mr. Lasker begins with a statement of some $400,000,000 of losses from operations, finally comes down to $300,000,000; then comes to Congress and places it at $200,000,000; and then finally, under the very adroit, persistent, and very patient inquiries into details by the House committee, gets down to $125,000,000, and after a while we find out that in that estimate of $125,000,000 which he made to the House are $25,000,000 which have already been provided for under a previous bill. That appropriation for $25,000,000 was carried in the bill that was passed June 16, 1921.

Mr. WARREN. It was included in the second deficiency appropriation bill in the last session for the completion of the 19 ships, specifically for that purpose and for no other.

Mr. FLETCHER. Then we go further into this testimony and find the statements rambling, uncertain, unconvincing all through it, of witnesses brought in by Mr. Lasker to sustain his request for this appropriation. They admit they are guessing.

We find that Mr. Lasker begins his work here by inviting three men, two at $35,000 a year each and one at $25,000 a year, three men at $95,000 to begin with, to have charge of operations. Mr. J. H. Rossiter could take all three of them on his knee and teach them their A B C's in marine transportation.

Then he says, "This is a very sick man, this American marine enterprise. He needs some very skillful treatment. He is very ill." He seems to have the idea that the proper way to treat this very sick man is to call in all the doctors he can find in the country—quacks, experts, and what not. So he assembles them.

He calls in Doctor American Steamship Owners' Association to attend the sick patient, and he calls in Doctor United States Ship Operators' Association. They are here to wait on this patient. Then he gets Mr. Schlesinger, and Mr. Schlesinger calls in all the "lame duck" and otherwise lawyers that he can find, and they come to attend this sick patient, 21 lawyers, to draw salaries amounting to $266,000 a year. We are pleading for economy now. You have been spending too much money. You have been wasting the public money. The first proposition made to Congress by the new board is to raise the salaries of men connected with the Shipping Board $300,000 a year!

So we have these doctors all in here to take care of this sick patient. It looks like it is going to be just as it was when the doctors were called in to attend George Washington. They are going to bleed him to death. That is what they did with Washington. That was the old practice in those days, to bleed your patient, and they bled him and killed him. He would have lived 10 or 15 years longer if it had not been for those doctors who were called in and bled him. They are not physically bleeding this sick man here, but they are going to bleed him, according to this program, and Congress is going to say, "We will refuse to supply the blood to infuse into the veins of this sick man, bleeding him as you are," with the result that the prospect is that finally the patient will die, the whole thing will go down, the whole accomplishment will disappear, and we will have no merchant marine. That is the prospect held out under this sort of showing, and the end desired, according to what has been going on.

Mr. President, we seem to have lost all conception of what money is or amounts to.

Mr. WARREN. Just when did we lose that?

Mr. FLETCHER. We have been gradually getting to it.

Mr. WARREN. Gradually getting to it? What have we done during the last three or four years? The Senator speaks of the bleeding operation. The bleeding has been going on pretty thoroughly. When you go through the history of the Shipping Board, and into that of the Fleet Corporation, you find them taking money out of construction funds and paying salaries larger than any that are mentioned in either this bill or the remarks concerning it here on the floor.

Mr. KING. Let us tie the arteries and stop the bleeding.

Mr. FLETCHER. I would like to have the Senator from Wyoming point that out. He will not find any salaries under the Shipping Board or paid by the Emergency Fleet Corporation comparable to the ones paid by the present board.

Mr. WARREN. There was one case which happened to come up here yesterday where the salary was $32,000.

Mr. FLETCHER. Under what?

Mr. WARREN. Connected with the Hog Island proposition.

Mr. FLETCHER. One officer of the shipbuilding company itself. It was not paid by the Emergency Fleet Corporation nor by the Shipping Board.

Mr. WARREN. He was under the pay of the United States.

Mr. FLETCHER. Not at all under the pay of the United States. He was on the pay roll of the organization which built the ships. They paid their own officers and their own men, and they paid some of them high salaries. But that was not a Shipping Board expense.

Mr. WARREN. But it was under a cost-plus contract. It was all at the expense of the Government, every dollar of it.

Mr. FLETCHER. I know about the cost-plus contracts. This was not a cost-plus contract strictly, but a fee contract. They were limited by the contract to a fee of so much on each ship.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. McCORMICK. I rose to ask the same question which was asked by the Senator from Wyoming, if under these cost-plus contracts salaries paid officials of the contracting company, with the knowledge of the Shipping Board and at the expense of the Government, were not tantamount to salaries paid by the Shipping Board?

Mr. FLETCHER. No; not at all. The Government made contracts with concerns to build ships. The only contracts they could get at that time were contracts based upon what sometimes was called "cost plus," but which were not simply cost-plus but fee contracts. The fee was so much for each ship, and if there was a saving beyond a certain cost fixed in the contract, the Government shared in that, and the contractor shared in it, and the contractor paid its president, its secretary, its general manager, its officers and employees out of its own pocket. Of course, that entered into the cost of the ships eventually.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, the Senator states that the contracts had a limit. That is true of some of the later ones, but the larger portion of them had no limit whatever. A certain percentage of what it cost, including the salaries of the employees, and everything relating to it, was paid out of the construction fund. I tell the Senator, and an examination of those old papers will show it, that they paid all kinds of salaries, from $20,000 to $50,000, out of the construction fund.

Mr. FLETCHER. They did make many contracts on a pure cost-plus basis, and many of those contracts were not wise contracts. But the Army did it, the Navy did it, and everybody did it in those days. In many instances they could not have made the contracts in any other way. They had to have ships. It was a question of commanding labor and material and everything; and when the Government was in charge of the railroads and the distribution of supplies the people would not risk their money upon a big undertaking upon any other basis. But I am not justifying that any further than to give the facts, and Senators can draw their own conclusions from them. They were not employees of the Emergency Fleet Corporation or the Shipping Board—that is what I am talking about.

We seem to lose all notion about the value of the dollar.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President—

Mr. FLETCHER. When we think of it, what is a billion dollars? What does it amount to? It is really beyond our comprehension.

I yield to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. WARREN. It seems that the difference the Senator wishes to make is this, that under the salaries as given in this bill they are brought to our attention in an open and above-board manner; but under the other plan, in what I believe was a corrupt way, an indecent way, a deceptive way, from the Treasury of the United States they paid out this money, which was included in the cost of the vessels, and immense salaries were hidden in that way. You can call it salaries of the board or call it what you like, it was all money of the United States expended through the Shipping Board and the Emergency Fleet Corporation, which latter was, of course, an offspring of the parent company.

Mr. FLETCHER. I understand all that. There is a very great difference. The Senator can call it corrupt if he likes, and then he can fasten it on Mr. Piez and Mr. Schwab and Mr. Rossiter. If he wants to call them corrupt, all right, let him go ahead.

With reference to the salary paid Mr. Brush—I believe it was—a distinguished engineer of wide experience, he could earn that money in private life easily enough. But I am not going into that detail. That was a matter between him and his company, and subsequently those accounts were, of course, viséed by Mr. Piez and approved and indorsed on up through the Emergency Fleet Corporation and the Shipping Board, I take it.

I am speaking now with reference to the proposal to scrap these ships, for that is what it comes to, and I am calling attention to the fact that the people of the country are very considerably interested in that proposition. We sold Liberty bonds and the people bought Liberty bonds and paid their money for them, and the proceeds of those Liberty bonds went into these ships.

A billion dollars! We talk about it as if it is a matter of small consequence. Perhaps we will get an idea of what it means if we will stop to consider that if we stood silver dollars on edge, placed them face to face, jammed them together, and laid them from New York to Key West, 1,490 miles, we would have $1,000,000,000. One column of dollars pushed together reaching from New York to Key West gives $1,000,000,000. We put in those ships another column of silver dollars right alongside of that. Then we put still another column of dollars right alongside of that. So we have three columns of silver dollars laid on edge and pressed face to face reaching from New York to Key West put into these ships. It is proposed to roll them into the Atlantic Ocean and bury them like the body of Alaric and the remains of Moses, so they can never be located hereafter. I do not think we ought to do that. I do not think the American people are going to permit that to be done.

There is one inspiring thing in connection with Mr. Lasker's testimony. I do not mean to criticize him. I am simply referring to the hearing before the House committee as showing an utter lack of preparation to give the data or facts that were called for. In the Senate hearings Mr. Lasker was more reserved, more to the point, and evidently had obtained some further information. He said, on page 15 of the Senate hearings:

Mr. LASKER. I think if the country once knew that we were going to lose the fleet, then it would come to the consciousness that it wants it. But I think there is a great deal in what you say. At the same time I feel we must give the country the facts about ourselves as well as regarding the past. I hope to get to the point where we can make monthly statements.

And again, in answer to a question which I shall read, he said:

Senator JONES of New Mexico. While this country may have been losing some money in operation of ships, I may inquire, do you not think that other concerns have been losing money in the operation of ships during the last year?

Mr. LASKER. Yes; emphatically. I think the enemies of this country would like nothing better than for America to stop its ships; and I believe our future will be dark if this present merchant marine is not backed and established, and that America will fall to a lesser position than that she should occupy; and I think the greatest thing for this country would be for us to keep these ships running and to go further into the shipping business.

On page 16 of the same hearing, Mr. Lasker said this:

Senator JONES of Washington. In other words, the condition of the market of the world is such that no one will take a contract on any other basis?

Mr. LASKER. Yes. When the commerce of the world is revived, does anyone think that Great Britain is going to carry our agricultural products to competitive markets in which Australia and Canada will be wanting to sell? What would we do if we were British? We would carry our own products and let England whistle.

Another thing; when that time comes, what rates will they charge? The greatest insurance we have, to my mind—I have not become a propagandist—but the greatest insurance we have for our future overseas trade in the products of our factories and in our farm products is this merchant marine, bad as it is at this moment.

There Mr. Lasker is talking like a courageous, determined man, a patriotic citizen, a splendid official, with a correct conception of fiduciary responsibility. I wish he would put those words on placards so large they could be read a block away and post them up in every office of the Shipping Board in this country and abroad. Live up to that principle and we will have no fault to find with Mr. Lasker. I think I can say to him, at least so far as I can go with my influence, what little it may be, that we will stand behind him and back him to the limit. I believe the people of this country are going to do that, because, in my judgment, he there defined what is the real purpose of Congress and the real policy laid down when we passed the merchant marine act of 1920.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. FLETCHER. Certainly.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I got the impression that the Senator has an idea that Mr. Lasker before the House committee expressed some doubt about our being able to build up a merchant marine and that that possibility did not impress him. I wish to read to the Senator one statement that I have just found in his testimony before the House committee.

Mr. FLETCHER. I shall be very glad to have the Senator do that.

Mr. JONES of Washington. He said:

I believe if Congress and the press will give us half a chance that the patient can be saved.

He was referring to the merchant marine.

There is no doubt about it. If it fails I will always believe that it was because at this time it was not given a chance. I may not be up there—

I think he means he may not be chairman when that is accomplished—

I may not be up there, and it may be some one else that will do it, but it is a doable thing if Congress has the courage and if they look into it deeply enough.

Then on page 28 of the hearings he expressed a confidence which I think it would be well if all of us had, and also calls attention to the benefits, which I believe will come to the country if we do accomplish this great thing, that ought to be taken into account. He said this:

Now, while we are filled with problems and absolutely running at the height of inefficiency, and while it is going to take the most competent people a year to show anything, two years to show any efficiency, and those number of years until world trade gets in good shape to make this thing right, if Congress and the press and the country are patient and helpful, this wreck can be turned into an asset so great that from a money value it will be worth the whole $26,000,000,000 that the war cost us. I do not mean the $3,500,000,000 that the fleet cost us, because it will mean the maintenance of an American merchant marine; and if you do not do that, Mr. Chairman, you are left with what I stated in my premise—the option to pay a greater loss to keep the merchant marine tied up or else to sink it.

Mr. FLETCHER. I am glad the Senator called attention to that.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McNARY in the chair). Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. FLETCHER. Certainly.

Mr. NEW. If the Senator will permit me an opportunity for an observation, he quoted a statement made by Mr. Lasker before the Senate committee from the reading of which it would appear that Mr. Lasker is in favor of the Government continuing in the operation of these ships as a Government enterprise. That is the inference that the Senator undoubtedly draws and the inference that he conveys to the Senate.

I am sure that that was not what Mr. Lasker intended to convey. What he meant, and I have had his assurance to that effect, was that the country—not the Government, but the country—should continue to have a merchant marine.

Now, Mr. President, if the Senator will indulge me a little further, I desire to say that I think it is pretty well understood that there is a rival concern which, without being too specific, is operated in the interest of another Government, and that it is to the interest of that concern and that Government to discourage an American merchant marine, in whatever form or operated under whatever name or agency. I believe that that concern is to-day spreading propaganda all over this country in discouragement of the continuation of any effort to operate American ships. I think what Mr. Lasker had in mind—and, in fact, I make bold to say so—was not that the Government should continue to operate its vessels under the Shipping Board, but that the country should continue to have a merchant marine, and that, in the course of time, these vessels may be disposed of to private American shipping concerns, which will operate them under the American flag, primarily for the benefit of those concerned, but generally, of course, for the benefit of the country.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do not want to interrupt the Senator too much, but I think, in view of the situation which has just come about, it would be well for me to interrupt him now.

Mr. FLETCHER. I shall be very glad to yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Senator has quoted one statement which the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] quoted yesterday, and upon which the Senator from Virginia came to the conclusion that Mr. Lasker is in favor of the Government continuing in the shipping business and owning and running the ships as a Government enterprise. I called up Mr. Lasker on the telephone yesterday, and, directing his attention to the two quotations which had been made from his testimony before the House committee, I told him what the view of the Senator from Virginia was with reference to his ideas, as drawn from that testimony. I have a letter from Mr. Lasker this morning in reference to that matter, which, if it will not interfere with the remarks of the Senator from Florida, I should like to have read, for it bears precisely on the proposition to which the Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW] has referred, and upon the quotation which the Senator from Florida has read.

Mr. FLETCHER. I shall be glad to have the letter which the Senator from Washington has received from Mr. Lasker read, for it may clear up the situation.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I ask that the letter which I send to the desk may be read by the Secretary.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The reading clerk read as follows:

UNITED STATES SHIPPING BOARD,
Washington, August 19, 1921.

HON. WESLEY L. JONES,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR JONES: Referring to the evidence I gave before the Senate Appropriations Committee, on page 15, where I state:

"I personally have been there long enough to know this, that somehow, somewhere, there is a very subtle and powerful propaganda to drive the Government out of the shipping business. I can not put my finger on it, but it is there."

"Yes; emphatically. I think the enemies of this country would like nothing better than for America to stop its ships; and I believe our future will be dark if this present merchant marine is not backed and established, and that America will fall to a lesser position than that she should occupy; and I think the greatest thing for this country would be for us to keep these ships running and to go further into the shipping business."

I meant to convey the thought that I felt this country could not occupy its rightful place in the trade of the world unless the merchant marine was kept successfully in operation.

I did not mean operated by the Government. I have repeatedly stated that I felt we never would have a merchant marine really established until our fleet was privately owned and directed by private enterprise and private initiative.

In the present state of world conditions this is impossible, and the Government must keep its fleet going, under the provisions of the Jones Act, until trade conditions change so that private enterprise will be interested in the purchase of these ships. In the meantime, the Shipping Board, as you know, is working on a new and different plan from that under which the ships are now being operated, to wit, a plan of bare-boat charter.

At the time the request for the appropriation was made I sent with that request to Gen. Dawes, and he in turn transmitted to Congress, a printed statement in which I used the following language:

"The President, the Jones Act, and the Shipping Board are all in accord that the Shipping Board must function so as to turn these boats over, as soon as good business judgment dictates, to private owners. Unless Shipping Board boats are very soon operated along the most correct business lines, we will not have any operators or owners left in America who can buy these boats. The operators and owners unanimously feel that way; and to get Shipping Board operations on an efficient basis is the quickest and shortest step to creating a situation whereby private people can buy these boats and get the Government out of Government ownership."

The new policy which the board hopes to adopt will be with a view to making it possible for private enterprise ultimately to purchase the boats at such time as may be propitious. Personally, I do not believe, under Government ownership or Government operation, we can ever have a successful fleet, but I do feel in the meantime, and in that I am voicing the sentiments of the entire board, that everything possible should be done by the Government with its present fleet to encourage private ownership and private initiative, so that private owners will be able to buy the ships when world conditions change.

Sincerely, yours,

A. D. LASKER, Chairman.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, first, with reference to the interruption by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW] I desire to say that I do not quite fully follow him in the suggestion that the Government is to step out of the business of operating ships, and that Mr. Lasker is in favor of turning the ships over to private enterprise and letting them be run by private enterprise. Does the Senator gather from Mr. Lasker's view that he wants to make a present of these ships to the International Mercantile Co., to the Munson Line, and to the Pacific Mail Steamship Co., and other steamship lines?

Mr. NEW. By no means, Mr. President.

Mr. FLETCHER. Then, the Senator does not propose to sink them?

Mr. NEW. Certainly not.

Mr. FLETCHER. He does not propose to tie them up?

Mr. NEW. No; nor do I propose to do that.

Mr. FLETCHER. Then the Government must operate them until it can dispose of them.

Mr. NEW. The Government must necessarily do just what any concern would do with its assets. It must hold them until it can dispose of them to good advantage. Mr. Lasker evidently thinks, and I certainly concur in that view, that the time will come, if the affairs of the Shipping Board are ever judiciously managed, when its vessels may be transferred to private interests and at fair prices. It can not, however, be done by any policy of scuttle.

Mr. FLETCHER. I gather, Mr. President, that the letter from Mr. Lasker really means to be in conformity with the first paragraph set out in the act of June 5, 1920, as to the policy with regard to these ships. Am I right about that, I will ask the Senator from Washington?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think so. I think, as to Mr. Lasker's attitude, that he thinks along the line of what the Senator from Indiana [Mr. New] has suggested, that we must husband this enterprise along, encourage the development of private operators, and so on, in order that they may ultimately buy these ships.

Mr. FLETCHER. Precisely.

Mr. JONES of Washington. But in the meantime the Government ought to keep the ships going until private operators have been sufficiently assisted and encouraged in order to do that.

Mr. FLETCHER. I inferred that to be the case, and I also am pleased to infer that from his statements before the Senate committee to which I have referred. Perhaps I ought to read the first paragraph of the act under which the Shipping Board is operating, as it is very brief:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled—

I do not know of any authority to lay down a policy other than Congress; I do not understand that it is Mr. Lasker's business to lay down or declare a policy, or that it is the business of the Shipping Board or of anybody else but Congress. This is the latest expression by Congress; it has not been altered or changed in any respect whatever and it is binding on the Shipping Board. It reads:

That it is necessary for the national defense and for the proper growth of its foreign and domestic commerce that the United States shall have a merchant marine of the best equipped and most suitable types of vessels sufficient to carry the greater portion of its commerce and serve as a naval or military auxiliary in time of war or national emergency, ultimately to be owned and operated privately by citizens of the United States; and it is hereby declared to be the policy of the United States to do whatever may be necessary to develop and encourage the maintenance of such a merchant marine, and, in so far as may not be inconsistent with the express provisions of this act, the United States Shipping Board shall, in the disposition of vessels and shipping property as hereinafter provided, in the making of rules and regulations, and in the administration of the shipping laws, keep always in view this purpose and object as the primary end to be attained.

That is the law, and that is the guide for the Shipping Board. What I had reference to in commenting upon Mr. Lasker's testimony before the House subcommittee more particularly was his apparent attitude of pessimism, and his severe, drastic criticism of what has been accomplished and the conditions as he found them, many of which were overstated, as he subsequently admitted, and based upon wrong information. For instance, he talks about this whole enterprise being totally bankrupt, and yet during that investigation it developed that to-day they have $500,000,000 of liquid assets, or semiliquid assets, at any rate, most of them collectible, nearly all of them, practically, good. For instance, there was one item of $400,000 due by the city of Philadelphia. That amount is evidently collectible. I wish more of it were due by the city of Philadelphia. However, they have of assets the amount I have indicated, to say nothing of the ships. There are due from foreign Governments and from other sources mortgages, notes, and so forth, amounting in all to $500,000,000. Then they had in their treasury in cash $36,000,000.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to interrupt him there?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield.

Mr. WARREN. In reference to the Senator's statement about liquid assets—semiliquid, as the Senator stated, would be a better designation—they consist of amounts which the board up to now has been unable to collect. I understand the situation is that they are uncollectible at the present time, but if they could be nursed along all of them might become good, whereas to force liquidation of the mortgages, and so forth, on the ships would simply bring home the ships without securing money.

Now, as to the cash that is in the treasury of the board, there are $25,000,000 which we have given them for a specific purpose that can not be used for the ordinary business of the board.

Mr. FLETCHER. I understand that, and that is not included in the cash items I have mentioned. The testimony before the House committee shows that they have $36,000,000 in cash in their treasury. That testimony is found at page 127.

Mr. JONES of Washington. My recollection is that so far there are $87,000,000 liabilities against that item.

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes; there are liabilities against it; but I quote from page 127 of the hearing:

The CHAIRMAN. How much cash is there in the bank?

Mr. MONTGOMERY—

He is an accountant who, by the way, is getting $60 a day, and who has some 40 men under him, some of whom are receiving $50 a day—

Mr. WARREN. Oh, no; that is denied, and is a matter of record. The expenditures on that account are not so extensive as the Senator intimates.

Mr. FLETCHER. To what extent is it denied?

Mr. WARREN. I think the official referred to has one employee at $50 a day, and the other employees at less sums; and he also has a less number of employees than the Senator has suggested.

Mr. FLETCHER. I am going by the testimony.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President, it might be stated in this connection that the auditor's office of the Shipping Board has been costing $5,000,000 a year, and that no voyages have been audited within 18 months of the current date. With three thousand and more auditors employed to-day, they have not been able to bring the audit of voyages up to date.

Mr. FLETCHER. They need auditors all right, I have not any doubt. Mr. Lasker says that these accounts are away behind, and that there has been inexcusable incompetency or inefficiency there, and then he says that it is all due to the system. Now, what is the fact? Mr. Tweedale is the comptroller. Mr. Tweedale is getting $50 for every working day in the year. Fifteen thousand dollars a year is paid Mr. Tweedale. He has been in that position for two years, and he is now retained by Mr. Lasker. If the system is rotten, why has he not changed it?

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President, does the Senator think he will stay there very long?

Mr. FLETCHER. I have not any idea as to that, but he is there. He is retained there by Mr. Lasker.

Mr. McCORMICK. He will probably stay about as long as the brother-in-law of the late Chief Executive, who was treasurer.

Mr. FLETCHER. Of course, that has nothing to do with this proposition. Perhaps the Senator knows all about what is in the mind of the Shipping Board. I am not a mind reader, but I do know that Mr. Tweedale is retained as comptroller, is there to-day, and he is getting $15,000 a year, and he has been there for two years operating this system. He initiated it and worked under it. If it is bad, if the system is the trouble, why has he not changed it?

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I think the system will be changed if the Senator will be patient, but the first problem is to find out what we have to work on. As to the cash the Senator speaks of, of course he understands that that cash is encumbered and more than encumbered; that no money has been appropriated for general use for a long time, and that there is no money for general use.

Mr. FLETCHER. I am not denying that there are obligations and debts outstanding, and all that sort of thing. I am simply stating the fact that at the time this enterprise was alleged to be wholly bankrupt there were $500,000,000 of semiliquid assets, $36,000,000 in bank, and $25,000,000 already appropriated for construction.

Mr. WARREN. The assets of which the Senator speaks are totally uncollectible to-day.

Mr. FLETCHER. No; not totally uncollectible.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator knows that if he has looked at the items.

Mr. FLETCHER. No; not at all; I do not know that. Mr. Montgomery says that the notes and accounts receivable amount to $285,000,000, and there is a list of them here. I will put that list in the RECORD. They are set out.

Mr. WARREN. They have tried to force the collection of those items for a long time.

Mr. FLETCHER. Foreign Governments owe $31,400,000, and so on. Here is the statement, at page 142 of the House hearings. I ask to have that inserted as part of my remarks, showing what these assets consist of.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Statement of estimated quick assets as of June 30, 1921.

Cash on hand (as per detailed schedule)-----	$36,145,852
Notes and accounts:
Foreign Governments-----	$31,400,000
United States Government departments-----	15,300,000
Relief organizations-----	900,000
Vessel purchasers-----	143,700,000
Individuals, firms, and corporations-----	96,000,000
	287,300,000
Investments and loans-----	87,000,000
Materials, supplies, ship stores, etc-----	90,000,000
Total-----	500,445,852

Mr. FLETCHER. I am simply citing these facts to show that the situation was not as black as Mr. Lasker seemed at first to paint it; and I am saying now that if Congress will authorize the Shipping Board to meet their expenses and to cover their operation losses for the next year out of the sale of ships and out of these liquid assets, they will be able to do it.

Mr. WARREN. One moment. Do I understand the Senator's argument to be to the effect that we ought now to appropriate no money whatever to the Shipping Board?

Mr. FLETCHER. Quite the contrary; I am saying that we ought to make this appropriation, and I am saying that there will be put into the Treasury in that time more money out of these liquid assets than will be taken out.

Mr. WARREN. In time, yes; if we will take care of the present needs at this time.

Mr. FLETCHER. Precisely. That is what I am arguing. I am contending that there are certain large assets here, and if Congress does not want to appropriate the money to pay their expenses and to cover these supposed losses, then let them meet their expenses and their losses out of their assets; but you will not do that, and, I think, very properly. I think that is a bad policy.

Mr. WARREN. We have standing there now $55,000,000 authorized.

Mr. FLETCHER. I understand that to come from sales. Of course there are no sales now.

Mr. WARREN. But it is impossible to cash these assets now.

Mr. FLETCHER. Some of them are in that situation—not the major portion—and we do not authorize them to realize on these assets and out of such a fund meet their expenses.

Mr. WARREN. I think the Senator, then, agrees with me, when you go behind it all, that the thing to do is to give them the little that it takes to carry them along until they can realize on their assets.

Mr. FLETCHER. That is just what I am coming to, and I am arguing that if this appropriation is made not a dollar will come out of the Treasury more than will go into the Treasury from the Shipping Board during this period.

I was referring to these matters as indicative of the apparent attitude of Mr. Lasker at that time, but the sentiments he now expresses before the Senate committee are entirely satisfactory to me, and if he will only live up to them I believe the Congress will back him up, and I am satisfied the country will be behind him. It is absurd to do anything else. We can not afford to give away these ships or to sink them or to tie them up. We can not afford to junk this great enterprise. The man who advocates it does not represent the true sentiment in this country, and if there is any strong sentiment created to that effect I shall be convinced that "B. B." is right when he says that "we have come upon a time when electricity is doing our working, gasoline is doing our playing, and the ouija board is doing our thinking."

Mr. President, regarding these alleged losses, finally everything seems to focus upon the proposition that the Government can not operate these ships without creating a tremendous expense and drain upon the Treasury, and that they have been making terrible, immense drafts upon the public funds to meet operating losses.

I want to see these ships owned by private operating companies, but I do not want to see them scrapped at present and taken off the seas; and I want to warn Mr. Lasker and the Shipping Board now that if he is not very careful when he insists upon the bare-boat charter he will cause these ships to be tied up, and he will find that there are not enough privately owned ships to move our commerce, and foreign ships will again be carrying our trade overseas, because in many places our people are not in position to run all the chances of operating ships, and especially along new routes that are now being developed.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. McCORMICK. To what extent would the Senator have the Shipping Board continue the MO-4 charters? In what sum would he have them incur annual losses?

Mr. FLETCHER. I am going to be able to show that that annual loss, so called, is a dream or a pretense to a large extent. I will show it from the facts. There is no need for losing any money in the operation of these ships. There may have been some losses; there have been, undoubtedly; but there have been tremendous profits made in operating these ships, and there is no need for the Government to lose and continue to lose money in the operation of these ships.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President, granting that that is true, if there are not too many such charters, it is so, is it not, that last year the operating loss was $130,000,000?

Mr. FLETCHER. They estimate that, but I think I can show that that is an error. I shall get to that in a minute. I say to the Senator that I prefer this bare-boat charter contract.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator wants bare-boat charters?

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes. I prefer that, but I say we should not be in too big a hurry to insist upon it and cancel all other contracts, because if we do we will find these boats tied up. There are many portions of the country where the people are not able to invest in bare-boat charters, they have not the capital, and in other instances they are not willing to jeopardize their capital in bare-boat charters, especially along the new routes that are being developed and established. One of our policies has been to establish new routes of trade, to build up trade with countries with whom we have had but small trade in the past, and where there are great possibilities, and I think that is a wise policy. If it were left to me I would run ships to all these islands in the Caribbean and along the Gulf, to every accessible port. I would land at these islands if I did not do anything but put ashore a barrel of cabbage and take on board an old woman with a parrot. The next time you came there you would have cargoes. There would be tons of stuff that they would want to ship by your boats, and tons of stuff they would be willing to take; but it takes a little money to develop that trade. It takes a little time. We are insisting now that because we have only been operating these ships a year, and because they have lost money before the routes could be made profitable, we must quit operating the ships and abandon the routes. That is a mistake. We never expected to earn profits on a good many of these sailings from the start. It takes a little time to build up a profitable trade, to establish new routes, and to develop conditions that would cause the voyages to yield a profit. We must not forget that the ships of other countries and of private American owners have been losing money, except the large passenger liners.

Mr. President, with regard to these so-called enormous losses arising from operation, you do not frighten me very much when you talk about the Government operating ships either. The Panama Steamship Co. has been a very successful enterprise. It has made money from the start, maintained itself, and it could to-day be operating the Leviathan at a big profit and making money, in my judgment. The Panama Steamship Co. is a Government enterprise.

The Panama Railroad Co. is a successful enterprise. Australia is operating ships. Canada is operating ships. They have seen that they had to go into it to protect themselves. Private enterprise failed them. So you do not terrorize me very much when you talk about the danger of Government operation. This Government could operate ships. There is no necessity for their failing to do it profitably and properly. I do not favor unnecessary competition with private enterprise, but I do insist that we should have an adequate American merchant marine, American owned, American operated, for the benefit of American commerce and American industry. We should never again be in the position of a beggar of ships, a fettered and embargoed trafficker on the great highways of commerce throughout the world.

As to these losses, here is the testimony of Mr. Tweedale when last May the request was made for $50,000,000 for the next six months, and of that sum $21,000,000 was to be devoted to operation. Mr. Tweedale then stated, on May 9, 1921, that—

From the beginning of the operation of this fleet to May 1, 1919, we paid all the expenses of the fleet, the operation of the fleet, and in addition to that declared a profit of $48,325,000, and also laid up $33,000,000 for depreciation, making a total of $81,325,000. From that point, May 1, 1919, down to March 1, 1921, the fleet was operated at a profit of $17,000,000.

That is the testimony of Mr. Tweedale, the comptroller of the Shipping Board. What becomes of all this hullabaloo about the great losses in operations—first $400,000,000, then $300,000,000, then $200,000,000, then $166,000,000, finally $131,000,000? We do not know what it is. We have not any reliable books, and do not know what it is.

The testimony of the comptroller, given at page 4951 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, shows a profit from operations of $17,000,000 up to March 1, 1921.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do not know just how those figures were arrived at, but I think it emphasizes the statement which Mr. Lasker has made several times, that it is practically impossible to get at the real truth of the situation from the books. Mr. Tweedale stated before the Appropriations Committee the other day that if we had in hand all of the operating profits we would have plenty of money to run us at least through the next year. That must be more than $17,000,000, so that I think the profits on operation are even much greater than the $17,000,000 that is referred to there.

Mr. FLETCHER. Precisely.

Mr. JONES of Washington. As a matter of fact, from $165,000,000 to $185,000,000 of operating receipts have been put into the construction of ships.

Mr. FLETCHER. That is exactly the situation. They have been putting it into the construction of ships. We have been building ships which perhaps we should not have built; I do not know. But it was advised by Mr. Rossiter, it was advised by the Shipping Board and by people who were acquainted with shipping, that we ought to have a balanced fleet; that is to say, we ought to have some passenger ships, and therefore we have gone and built some of those passenger ships.

The American Legion, one recently launched, is now operating successfully and filling a place that ought to be filled by a Government ship. The Washington is coming on, and those ships cost money. We have taken money out of the revenues derived from operation and put it into more ships.

Mr. President, further in connection with this bogey man, "excessive losses from operations," I would call attention to the statement in the hearings before the House committee on page 160 by Mr. Keen, as follows:

JULY 30, 1921.

Subject: Operating costs.

Complying with your request would advise that the average yearly vessel expense, including wages, subsistence, fuel, miscellaneous expense, and fixed charges (maintenance 50 cents per dead-weight tonnage month; overhead  $\frac{1}{2}$  cent per dead-weight tonnage day; insurance  $3\frac{1}{2}$  per cent per annum on valuation of \$100) omitting port and cargo charges and expenses, as reflected by preliminary reports on voyage results submitted by managing agents is \$348,804.95.

Based on 603 voyages of vessels of various tonnages, distributed costs per dead-weight tonnage year are as follows:

Wages	$8.4029
Subsistence	2.7681
Fuel	13.8104
Miscellaneous expense	4.0908
Fixed charges	11.3322

Total vessel expense average..... 40.3964

C. P. STONE, Staff Assistant.

So that the difference between the cost and revenues derived from operating has only been about 40 cents per dead-weight ton per year, according to this showing. We had an average of some 7,000,000 tons in operation; 40 cents a ton on 7,000,000 tons would be the loss in operating those vessels, according to that statement.

Then it is estimated further in this testimony that the loss from operation could be fairly put at about $49,000,000, instead of $200,000,000. As the Senator from Washington [Mr. Jones] has said, the whole thing is largely a matter of guess. But the record does show that the revenues from operations have amounted to $379,000,000.

I think an accurate statement about the cost of operating and the losses would be about as follows:

Based on results of operation during the 10 months, July 1, 1920, to April 30, 1921, using terminated voyages as a basis, and managing agents' reports, which necessarily must be at least partially estimated to show the results of such voyages, the following figures are produced:

Gross revenue	$379,254,708
Expenses, including repairs, insurance, and overhead	409,091,306

Net loss from operation..... 29,837,597

Mr. KING. What period does that cover?

Mr. FLETCHER. That is from July 1, 1920, to April 30, 1921.

If depreciation on original cost (average, $200 per dead-weight ton) on a 10-year life basis, which we have been using, were added, it would amount to $149,451,725. This, if added to the operation loss, would increase the total loss to $179,289,322.

That is 10 per cent depreciation on these ships, at $200 a ton, which, of course, is an unreasonable charge.

If figures above used to cover insurance, repairs, and depreciation were reduced from January 1, 1921, to a figure more commensurate with present conditions, insurance and repairs would be reduced by $16,798,838 (divided: insurance, $11,199,188, and repairs, $5,599,650). Depreciation would be reduced by $41,996,980.

If the reduced figures mentioned were used, and I think they are considered ample, the results shown above would be changed and appear as follows:

Gross revenue	$379,254,708
Expenses, including repairs, insurance, and overhead	396,053,546
Net loss from operation	16,798,838

I think that is about right.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That is for what period of time?

Mr. FLETCHER. That is from July 1, 1920, to April 30, 1921.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That is during the period when the freight rates have been abnormally low?

Mr. FLETCHER. The freight rates were abnormally low when these losses were incurred. Before that they made tremendous profits. On one voyage one of these Government ships cleared over $600,000, and it has only been since the commerce has fallen off and business has gone down that the losses have been taking place, and private shipowners have suffered in the same way.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Why should such an enormous appropriation as $125,000,000 be necessary under those circumstances?

Mr. FLETCHER. I do not think it is, and that is why I think the House did the wise thing to cut it down to $48,500,000. I think that ought to be sufficient. I will show the Senator in a few minutes just exactly how that was worked out.

It should not be overlooked that during the period in question the first five or six months covered business which was obtained during the period of much higher rates and before the serious reduction in tonnage occurred. If depreciation on the reduced rate, i. e., 5 per cent on $100 per D. W. T. valuation, instead of 10 per cent on $200 per D. W. T., were added, it would increase this loss to $30,797,784.

I think 5 per cent on an estimated value of $100 a ton would be about the proper allowance for depreciation, instead of 10 per cent on $200 a ton.

If the entire fleet had been laid up the cost of such lay up, based on that expended on that portion of the fleet out of service for the period in question, which basis, however, is hardly a fair one on account of the question of proportion entering therein, the loss, including depreciation, would have approximated $74,000,000.

So that we were confronted with this situation—either sink the ships, tie them up, or operate them. There were just three alternatives. A man would be considered insane who insisted upon sinking them. It was found that if they were tied up the upkeep and expense would more than equal the cost of operation. Therefore there was nothing to do but to undertake to operate them, and we are not responsible for consequences growing out of such conditions as existed in New York and in Habana—strikes, congestion, and that sort of thing—which have happened, and the general demoralization of markets and disorganization of trade, all of which have caused this reduction in the freight rates and falling down in the profits of operation.

A very striking way of showing that loss would have been greater had all ships been tied up is found in the fact that for the four months, January to April, 1921, inclusive, the only period for which I have such figures worked up, shows loss per D. W. T. per day from operations:

	Cents.
For vessels in service	3.253
For steel vessels laid up	3.811
For wooden vessels laid up	2.619

Note that the steel boats in which we are particularly interested when laid up cost 3.811 cents, while those in service cost 3.253 cents.

That is as nearly a correct statement of the result of operation, I think, as can be derived from the books and from all the information and all the facts which could be furnished at this time.

Clearly, Mr. President, this estimate of losses from operation has been very greatly exaggerated and overstated. As I said, the request was modified to $125,000,000. It developed in the hearings that $25,000,000 had already been provided for ship construction under the act of June 16, 1921. Therefore that was eliminated. That leaves us $100,000,000 to deal with. What made that up?

There was an item for claims of $24,000,000. The House takes the position that we should not make a blanket appropriation of money to adjust claims and leave it to the Shipping Board entirely to administer and pay out that fund as they may see fit. They felt that the Shipping Board ought to consider the claim, reach a settlement as to the claim, a chimney-corner settlement, or litigate the matter and try it out; determine what claims there are and what is the amount of each, and then submit a report to Congress, get the approval of Congress, and have Congress, if it approves, then make the appropriations to pay the claims.

I am not disposed to quarrel with that view. I think it really is the wisest course. The committee of the House makes a very strong statement in that connection. I think perhaps it is the wisest course not to make an appropriation of millions of dollars to be handled as the Shipping Board may see fit in the adjustment of claims, and yet I can see how in all probability the other plan is going to be a very expensive thing for the Government.

I can see how the Government could save millions of dollars if they would only make this appropriation of $24,000,000 to apply on claims, because I know personally of claims against the Shipping Board, which have been audited and about which there is no dispute, where the parties themselves have got together and submitted their books, and they have been checked up by Mr. Tweedale and his auditors, and the amount agreed upon, and yet they can not get their money. Many of the claims have been pending for 6 or 12 months or even 2 years, and still the Shipping Board does not pay the claims which they themselves have audited and admit are due.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. FLETCHER. Certainly.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Does not the Senator think also that it is very likely there are many claims about which there may be no substantial dispute as to the principles upon which they should be settled, and possibly the amount that would be due under those principles could be compromised at a great saving to the Government if the parties could get a cash settlement?

Mr. FLETCHER. I was just coming to that. I have not any question in the instances I have mentioned that the parties would be perfectly willing to accept a 25 per cent discount to get the cash to-day. The Government would save that much. It would be an almost unconscionable act on the part of the Government, because it ought really to pay those claims in full, and it ought really to pay interest. But outside of the question of interest the parties, because of the long delay, are embarrassed in their business; they are on the verge of bankruptcy and will not insist on full payment, but would be willing to discount 25 per cent in many cases in order to get cash for the balance at once.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I agree with the suggestion which the Senator makes as to the claims where a different amount has been arrived at, or probably could be agreed upon, that it would be unconscionable. Of course if a compromise or reduction in those cases should be agreed upon, and there are cases where there is honest dispute as to the amount actually due just as between individuals, a compromise could be reached that would not be unconscionable and yet possibly would save the Government millions of dollars.

Mr. FLETCHER. Quite true. I think there is no question that there are hundreds of cases like that where the parties would be willing to say, in effect, "There is a little dispute about this, but we will forgive it and not count it, and let it go in order to get a settlement." I believe the Government would save money if we appropriated the $24,000,000 and let the Shipping Board adjust such claims.

At the same time I can not very well quarrel with the principle for which the House seems to stand, that they ought to report to Congress the amounts involved and let Congress pass upon them and make appropriation when they determine whether the settlements meet with the approval of Congress or not. That causes further delay. It not only does that, but it is a cumbersome lot of detail to impose upon the committees of Congress. We ought to be willing to trust the Shipping Board to do this. We trust them with hundreds of millions of dollars in other ways and we ought to be willing to trust them with an appropriation like that, and let them save the Government and satisfy the people and reach an earlier adjustment of many of the pending claims.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, the Senator has been here a great many years, and I wish to ask him if it is not his observation and experience that where amounts are sent down here by representatives of the Government as the amounts due, there is very little investigation made by committees; that, as a matter of fact, the committees are not suited or equipped with the machinery to investigate the claims and pass upon them, and we have to accept very largely the judgment of the officials of the Government or else arbitrarily appropriate a smaller amount and in that way compel the claimant to take less than is honestly due?

Mr. FLETCHER. I think the Senator is entirely correct in that. The committees of Congress have not time to go into an investigation of all the different claims. It simply means that the creditors of the Government, honest people who have done their level best to meet their responsibilities and their obligations, having legitimate claims for damages or for what not, have to wait an indefinite time to let the Shipping Board determine what they believe the amounts should be and then report to Congress and ask for an appropriation.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I beg the Senator's pardon for interrupting again, but it also occurs to me that that simply furnishes additional employment for the lawyers at additional expense to the claimants.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think that is also another strong reason why the appropriation ought to be made now for the Shipping Board to apply on these claims, or, as Mr. Lasker expressed it rather facetiously in his testimony, "to play with." In other words, it is not nearly enough to settle all the claims, but it will enable the Shipping Board to satisfy the most pressing ones and meet the needs of honest contractors and creditors who are on the verge of bankruptcy because they can not get the money that the Government owes them. It is a shameful situation to keep people in.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. FLETCHER. With pleasure.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I wish to say to the Senator that I was advised by the chairman of the Shipping Board a few days ago that he expects to take up and settle these claims at an early date.

Mr. FLETCHER. I do not see how he can do so. He may determine the amount due, but he has not any money to pay the claims. The pending bill expressly excludes anything for the settlement of claims. They asked for $24,000,000 for that purpose, but the House denied it, and the bill now does not carry that item. They can not pay anybody any money on claims. Mr. Lasker can get the people together and determine what is due them, and then he has to make the report to Congress and ask for an appropriation later on, possibly a year from now. It is unfortunate that these people may have to wait that long. I should be very glad to vote for an increase in the amount of $24,000,000 for that purpose, but I presume the committee thrashed that out and thought they had better stand by the bill as it came from the House.

That entered into the $100,000,000 left after the $25,000,000 was taken out as having been already appropriated. The other items are $67,000,000 estimated as operating loss, and administration of the Shipping Board, $9,000,000, and that made up the $100,000,000. They took out the $24,000,000 as applying to claims, so we have left only the other two items, totaling $76,000,000. Then the House committee, and finally the House itself, estimated that they could save during the next year $13,700,000 on repairs, because material and labor and that sort of thing are going down. They estimated that they could save $44,300,000 in wages, fuel, subsistence, and the like. I think these are mere estimates, and there is no very firm support for them by any facts, so far as I can gather.

Then they estimated they could save $5,000,000 on operating contracts by changing those MO-4 contracts to charter contracts, and so forth. This makes a total saving which they thought they could make for the year of $54,300,000. Dividing that by 2, so as to cover the six months' period mentioned in the bill, we have $27,150,000; and therefore we have $67,000,000 operating cost, $9,000,000 administration of the Shipping Board, making $76,000,000, less $27,150,000 that it was thought might be saved, leaving $48,850,000. That is how they arrived at the figure $48,850,000.

Mr. KING. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. FLETCHER. Certainly.

Mr. KING. Unfortunately I was called from the Chamber, so I have not had the advantage of the admirable address which the Senator is making. But as I understand, the Senator is analyzing the statement showing the assets of the corporation and attempting to demonstrate that the corporation can continue to operate without requiring further appropriations from the Government, if a proper use is made of the assets of the Shipping Board amounting to approximately $500,000,000, a portion of which are liquid, and by canceling the present contracts, known as MO-4 contracts, which I regard as vicious if not corrupt, or at least corrupt in their results, and writing new contracts, bare-boat contracts, and the Senator, as I understand, reaches the conclusion that the Shipping Board may continue to operate without entailing further appropriations by the Government, if it collects its liquid assets, cancels outstanding improvident contracts, and ties up its ships until proper operating contracts are written or the ships are sold.

Is that the Senator's position?

Mr. FLETCHER. I question the matter of losses from operation, although I think under present conditions they are suffering loss in some instances. Mr. Smull, for instance, testified in the House hearings that where operators had only a few boats they were losing money, but where they had an ample supply of boats they were making profits now. There are some losses from operation.

Certainly the Shipping Board will need the $9,000,000 to pay their expenses. They will need, I think, for the next six months provision in the sum of $48,000,000 to which I have referred. I think they will need that. But I am positive that they will be able to pay into the Treasury during that period more money than will be carried by the bill, from realizing on their assets and from operations as well.

I do not believe that there is now any great burden on the country in connection with the ships. I believe there is no reason why they should not hold their own beginning in the very near future, and that we ought to make it possible for the Shipping Board to take advantage of every condition in order to put the enterprise upon a safe basis, and that in the future the boats can be operated at a profit even by the Government—perhaps not all of them, but to a considerable extent that can be done.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator pardon me so I may get his views, as I prize them very much and they would have great influence in determining the course which I shall pursue with reference to this matter. I have assumed from what little I have heard of the Senator's remarks that he favors a policy something like that outlined in my suggestions or questions.

As I view the situation with the imperfect knowledge that I have regarding the condition of the Shipping Board affairs, I am inclined to think such a policy should be pursued, and I suggest to the Senator that if he has not already done so he may further elaborate this point:

Require the Shipping Board to collect all of the assets which are collectible; reduce to cash at the earliest possible moment, without undue sacrifice, whatever assets the board possesses; cancel the improvident and vicious MO-4 contracts, under which the operators get a large profit, and in many instances speculate, plunder, and rob, by the subsidiary organizations which they create and under which they furnish to the ship-operating companies the supplies which they need and the repairs which are necessary; cancel those contracts, even if it necessitates temporarily tying up to the docks substantially all the ships; rewrite the contracts which have been made with bona fide contractors for the purchase of ships; reduce the price from $200 per ton, which was the war price, to a legitimate and fair basis of $50 or $60 per ton; give those who have purchased an opportunity to operate the ships along proper routes without competition from the Government; and then make, with respect to the other ships, bare boat contracts under the most favorable terms for the Government. Does not the Senator think that such a policy would relieve the Government of millions of dollars of expenditures which it will be compelled to make if we continue the present policy; if we continue in existence the present MO contracts; and, in the end, would preserve a merchant marine not in the hands of the Government but in the hands of bona fide purchasers owing allegiance to the United States and operating the ships under the American flag?

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, generally speaking, I think the Senator from Utah has outlined a very wise policy and one which is being now pursued. I think there is not very great difference between what the Senator has said and the policy announced in the so-called Jones Act and which is announced now by the Shipping Board. It may take a little time to work it out; it can not be done in a day or a month or, perhaps, in a year.

Mr. JONES of Washington. If the Senator will permit me, I desire simply to reiterate the answer of the Senator from Florida to the Senator from Utah. I desire to say to the Senator from Utah that I think he has, in the statement which he has just made, outlined substantially what the Shipping Board is trying to arrive at just as quickly as possible.

With reference to the cancellation of these contracts, there is, of course, a difference of opinion about that. Those who are directly on the ground and who have the work in hand seem to think that it would be very disastrous to cancel those contracts outright; that the condition of things is such that it can not be done. However, they do propose to get rid of those contracts just as soon as possible. My recollection now is that Mr. Lasker told me that the Shipping Board expected to have a new form of contract and to get rid of the other contracts in about 30 days, and that he has expressed to me substantially the idea that the Senator from Utah has here expressed, that if in order to do that it be necessary to tie up nearly all of these boats for a while, that that would probably be done. So I may say that, on the whole and in a general way, the policy outlined by the Senator from Utah just now is substantially what the Shipping Board is trying to follow and ultimately to reach.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, undoubtedly it would be disastrous to shipping and disastrous to our trade generally at once to order that the MO-4 contracts be canceled and that we now enter upon a bare boat charter basis exclusively. There must be some regard had of the conditions, of the situation as it is, and of the needs of the country.

Mr. President, I shall not detain the Senate longer. I had no idea of speaking at this length. I hope the Senate will adopt the provision of the bill for this appropriation. As I said a moment ago, it does not mean that there is going to be any drain upon the Treasury. The Shipping Board would be much better off if we should allow them to meet their needs out of their assets and out of operating revenues; but we refuse to do that, and, of course, the only thing that we should do and can do is to make the direct appropriation and let what is realized from the assets and revenues go into the Treasury itself, the result being that they will put into the Treasury more money than they will take out under this appropriation.

During the delivery of Mr. FLETCHER's speech,

Mr. PHIPPS. Mr. President—

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. PHIPPS. Under date of July 18 Mr. Lasker made a statement which was sent to the Speaker of the House and it was printed as a public document. I have made inquiry and as far as I can learn it has never been printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. The statement contains much information of importance which may have escaped the notice of Members of the Senate. I think it would be advisable to have it printed in the RECORD, and therefore make that request. It is not a lengthy statement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the statement will be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. PHIPPS. I suggest that the ordinary form of print be used rather than the smaller type.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The statement is as follows:

STATEMENT OF CHAIRMAN LASKER OF THE SHIPPING BOARD.

JULY 18, 1921.

Mr. LASKER. This has been a very difficult thing to ascertain. I have Mr. Tweedale and the other auditors here in order not to do them any injustice. But the books are in deplorable condition. In any commercial institution they would not be called books at all. They were started in the stress of war and continued in the stress of incompetency until Mr. Tweedale and the others are now trying to straighten them out. Any of our great corporations would have been in receivers' hands long ago had its books been kept as those of this organization have been and are kept, and the operations of the fleet necessarily must be just as incompetent as the books are because it is impossible to operate any business if there isn't a figure on which remote reliance can be placed.

In the presence of the men who have had charge of the books for 15 months—and I ask them to challenge me if I am stating anything incorrectly—I want to say it is inconceivable that an institution like this could be in existence and be turned over to men to administer in the shape it is. Had the books been kept with a view to cheating and deceiving Congress and the country they could not have been kept in much different shape than they have been—and I measure the words I am using. It has almost worn me out physically and mentally to get anything from the books that could be regarded as complete.

Last year, nominally out of the Public Treasury, approximately $100,000,000, actually authorized by Congress, was expended on the Shipping Board. This sum represented the total of appropriations. One might deduce from this that only a hundred million was used by the board during last year. When I showed to the President a few minutes ago the figures I am about to reveal to you he was shocked and dismayed that such a condition could exist. As a matter of fact, the Shipping Board used during the last fiscal year approximately $380,000,000. Besides the $100,000,000 appropriated by Congress and $80,000,000 on hand at the beginning of the fiscal year, it sold assets for $200,000,000, all of which money went back into the enterprise. Then, in addition, it received from operation of vessels, and so forth, $300,000,000, which was also spent, thus making a total expenditure by the Shipping Board of $680,000,000. This $300,000,000 received from operations when deducted from the $680,000,000 received from all sources shows a net expenditure of $380,000,000, although the public records show $100,000,000 to be all that had been appropriated by the Congress for the year. This is an astounding case of absolute deception of the country and Congress. I know and want to explain that Admiral Benson and Mr. Tweedale had not the remotest thing to do with such gross misrepresentation. They were acting in accordance with the system under which the books had been kept from the hour the institution started and they were so busy trying to straighten out the mix up in settlements and operations that they never had the time to try to systematize the records. The only reason this situation has become apparent now is because coming in as a new administrator I desired to find out for my own guidance what the loss had been. This necessitated calling in outside auditors before the facts could be ascertained. I do not guarantee the figures now; they are the best we could secure from the books, and we are assured by Mr. Tweedale's assistants, all of whom are here, that they will prove fairly reliable.

It will be a shock to Congress, as it was to the President, to hear that the net expenditures of this enterprise, paid out of the public funds last year, was $380,000,000. To illustrate the bad condition the books are in I will say that last year the gross operating disbursements were $410,000,000. That represents the expense of the operation of the boats alone. Of that amount there is yet no exact accounting for $310,000,000. This item represents money disbursed for the board by the operators of Government-owned boats who have as yet failed to make a full accounting. It is only fair to say that the operators of a boat are always, on the average, a few months behind in reporting the accounts, because if a boat leaves to-day on a four months' voyage money is being paid out for her that can not be accounted for until she shall have finished her trip; but obviously for 75 per cent of the year's operations to be unaccounted for demonstrates a complete breakdown and shows further that the new Shipping Board has inherited a collapse that will take its every effort and tremendous patience to resuscitate.

As I look into the details I find them worse than my worst expectations. Approximately $200,000,000 represents absolute loss in operations of the fleet. There were expended $160,000,000 on construction of ships, divided as follows: One hundred and forty-nine million dollars on steel ships and the rest on miscellaneous ships, including an item of $3,000,000 for wood, composite, and concrete ships. What these newly acquired assets are worth is highly questionable.

The plans for the steamer The American Legion, which starts on her first trip in a few days, were redrawn seven times, and it is easy to see how that would run up the cost. First, The American Legion was designed as an Army transport, then as a Navy transport, then as a hospital boat, then as a cattle boat, and after spending money on all these blue prints it was decided to transform her into a passenger ship—and she is a very beautiful and fine passenger ship—but she cost between six and seven million dollars, and that was before she sailed her first mile. As a matter of fact, her real worth is probably half what she cost. So you can see assets such as that are pretty sick assets. But, after all, there is a fleet. It is the largest fleet many times over that the world has ever known. So, our task is to make what was a liability into an asset, for, of course, the fleet must be operated. And if we can solve the problem of how to successfully operate these ships, it will be worth all the money the war cost to put the American merchant marine back on the map. If it had not been for the war, we would not have this merchant marine, so we must turn our backs on the sad past and look constructively and patiently to the future.

I must appear before Congress shortly to tell them it is possible the Shipping Board will require up to $300,000,000 for the present fiscal year. I fear this will throw a lot of sand in the gear box of tax revision. The books of the board are so absolutely incomplete and incompetent that it is impossible to be sure whether that $300,000,000 represents all we may need; we may require more, but it is the most intelligent wild guess we can make.

The President instructed me that during his administration the public is to have the facts—and all the facts—and that when we show losses on operations of the Shipping Board, they shall be the actual losses. Anything realized from the sale of assets from now on must be covered into the Public Treasury and not expended as in the past. The President wants the country to get not, as in the past, a picture that shows what did not happen, but even though it might show that we ourselves are incompetent, to publish all we really lose. Now, it is necessary to ask the Congress for $300,000,000 to carry us through the coming year, though we will try the first six months to get along on $100,000,000 to $125,000,000. We will not hide our losses. When I say we may need up to $300,000,000 for the coming year, it is with the hope that from that sum we will be able to pay not only the losses of operations but also to settle finally a part of the claims and the lawsuits pending against the Shipping Board. These latter amount to more than $300,000,000 themselves, but we anticipate settling them for fifty cents on the dollar, because many of them are padded.

Congress already has appropriated $25,000,000 to finish the construction of ships. It is estimated operations will lose $150,000,000. The reason the loss from operations will be so great, in spite of the efficiencies and economies we will introduce, is that the first six months of the fiscal year just closed were very good commercially. The last six months were poor. Most people are looking forward during the 12 months we have just entered upon to dull times, so that we may expect hard sledding during that period. Moreover, it will be several months until the change of policies we hope to put into effect begin to reflect or even to become active, and we are compelled to go on in the very incompetent way the boats are being operated while we are moving to introduce business methods and reforms.

The boats are being operated to-day in the following shocking manner: An operating company is allocated a number of boats. They are allowed a commission of 5 per cent flat on gross revenue. The boat can lose all kinds of money—the taxpayers pay the losses, but the operator makes money just the same, because he gets his 5 per cent commission.

I have actually heard of a boat turning back in midsea to take a cargo on which the operator made $400 and the Government lost $8,000; and this boat was halfway across the China Sea when they turned her back to get that cargo at Manila. It is nobody's fault that the present system prevails. These boats were built when American operators had no experience, and a system had to be developed to get them moving. As long as times were fine the system did not work out so badly; but anybody can see that a system whereby the operator has nothing at stake, whereby the Government loses and he wins, is a system that makes for inefficiency. We must grin and bear that system for some months to come, because to establish such a charter system as will be developed by the new vice presidents of the present board is a matter almost as difficult in a minor way as it was to negotiate the peace treaty at Versailles. It is a highly technical matter, which must be approached with the greatest care.

To show the condition of incompetence that exists, the present basis of doing business went into effect in March, 1920, and out of 9,000 voyages made only 3,000 are accounted for to date.

The President has inherited in the Shipping Board the most difficult business problem ever given to a President to work out. Every condition surrounding it was sick. Beginning with world trade conditions, which are the worst ever known, and coming down to the ships themselves, sickness prevails. Such ships as they had ways to build were laid down when the war started. Many of them do not fit into the trade and are expensive to operate. The carrying business of the world is sick, and the morale of the men on the boats, because of all of these conditions, is likewise pretty sick. No matter how quickly and efficiently the new board and its officers function, the flood tide of loss from the policies of the past can not be stopped for months to come, and the deficit for the coming year will reflect the sad history of the past rather than the reorganized effort of policies inaugurated by the new board. However, the new Shipping Board is not disheartened. Startling as these figures I have given are, they prove to us that with patience something can be done, and out of this wreck, Phoenixlike from its ashes, a real American merchant marine can arise that will be worth all the penalty we have suffered, and when prosperity comes to the world our merchant marine will be the greatest insurance that America will get its full share.

[At this point the chairman dictated the tabulated statement attached hereto.]

I will say this as to the wooden ships: I announced in New York that the wooden ships had cost $240,000,000. This is incorrect. I failed to include the cost of uncompleted ships of this type. The total loss on wooden ships, including those uncompleted, is $313,000,000. I was $73,000,000 shy. These vessels are practically worthless. We are making an inventory of the assets as fast as we can, and when that inventory is completed we will know what the wooden fleet is worth and, of course, we will know the value then of all other vessels and properties as well. Besides the liabilities I have spoken of there are unknown liabilities because the books have been kept so badly. For instance, there is shown miscellaneous disbursements of $307,000,000 in operations. That means $307,000,000 advanced to operators. They may come to us and show we owe them much more than that amount. The whole system of operations was basically so improper that it will take a year or more until we can determine the extent of the unknown liabilities. Two hundred auditors to-day are working in the offices of operators. Think of the expense—waste and unnecessary expense on us—200 auditors trying to dig into these books to secure information on the 6,000 uncompleted voyages.

Until this year the Shipping Board was permitted to sell ships and surplus materials and to use the cash received for expense purposes. This procedure is now forbidden. In order to keep the board running, Congress authorized it to use $55,000,000 to be derived from the sale of ships and materials. There is no chance of our getting any such sum from those sources. This is a basically wrong thing to do anyway; therefore I am going to ask Congress to withdraw that permission and require us to cover into the Treasury all moneys derived from sales. I do not want to be at the head of a business that is run in any such fashion. If department heads do not have to account for money they use it is easy enough for them to fool me and fool themselves; it makes for criminal waste and extravagance, just as undoubtedly it has in the past.

After the conclusion of Mr. FLETCHER's speech,

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I had intended to address the Senate for a short while on the shipping situation, but I understand that the Senate is shortly to adjourn or take a recess. There are also other Senators who desire to speak, so I shall not take any further time to-day. I have, however, received a letter from the President giving his views upon the situation and stating what he thinks really would be the wise thing to do. I ask that the letter may be read at the desk, which will include it in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no objection, the letter presented by the Senator from Washington will be read.

The reading clerk read as follows:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, August 20, 1921.

MY DEAR SENATOR JONES: I could not fail to note the dissatisfaction expressed in both House and Senate over the very unsatisfactory condition of the affairs of the Shipping Board, and the reluctance of Congress to make appropriations for the continued activities of the board without putting specific restraints upon the board's activities in employing agents of relief.

From your position you are probably as familiar with the affairs of the board as I am, and I hope you will make it a point to lay the exact but unpleasant truth before your colleagues.

The Shipping Board situation is wholly an inheritance from the previous administration. It would avail nothing to attempt to outline how the intolerable state of affairs came about. Our great problem is curing the situation. The difficulty of this task became very apparent to me and had its reflex in the delay in the final selection of the Shipping Board. It was no easy thing to bring capable men to the solution of this task. Chairman Lasker is making a very heavy sacrifice to give his time and talents to his most difficult work. He has been able to bring many disinterested advisers to his assistance, but it is impossible for the board, in creating its various departments, to establish such organizations by the ordinary methods of Government appointment and compensation. Many of the men called to service have been obliged to completely sacrifice their private interests, and in some cases the sacrifice is made with the knowledge that the period of employment with the Government is only temporary. Under these conditions, and because of the fact that hundreds of millions are involved, it is unavoidable that some compensations in responsible places are much beyond the ordinary run of Government compensation. There are approximately two hundred millions involved in claims against the Shipping Board. No business man would venture upon the settlement of these claims without highly capable, legal representation. The staggering losses in operation can only be cured by a board of operators whose members know something concerning the business. These men could not be secured without giving up private pursuits which are vastly more profitable than the average administrative salary under the Government, and Chairman Lasker has proceeded with my very hearty approval in the acquirement of men equal to this task. If their knowledge of the business will enable us to put an end to operating losses, as we very much hope to do, their acquirement for Government service will be justified a hundredfold. The error heretofore committed seems to have been the employment of incapable men at excessive salaries, while the present program calls for capability, and the compensation is vastly less than in private pursuits. I have been at some pains to assure myself that there is no overpayment in selecting men for specific places, and I believe I can assure you that this overpayment has been avoided in recent appointments.

I do not venture to make promises for the Shipping Board. I would like the Congress to know that we are speedily arranging the discontinuance of many lines of service which are being operated at a loss to the Government, and we are hoping soon to have an end to all of the unfortunate charter contracts under which the charterers are made whole and share in the profits, if any, while the Government bears the brunt of all the losses. This is a very intolerable arrangement and is being ended as speedily as the situation will permit. It must be kept in mind at all times that the administrative agents who are now asking for the confidence and the cooperation of Congress are in no wise responsible for the condition of affairs which has shocked the country and given the Congress such great concern. They have only recently been called to the service of correcting the intolerable state of affairs which we inherited, after which it is very much hoped they may make gratifying progress toward the firm establishment of an American merchant marine. We must not fail in our efforts now. There have been unspeakable losses and unutterable wastes. These things must be charged to the great war emergency and the feverishness of the country to build ships in a period of great anxiety and to then establish a merchant marine on the basis of the abnormal conditions which prevailed during the war emergency. We have time to think soberly now, and the correction of this situation is a matter of firm resolution, and capable hands have undertaken the work. The waste can be halted almost instantly. The losses must be brought to a minimum at a very early day, and I very much hope that the cooperation of the Congress and the administration will lead to gratifying results in the establishment of American carriers by sea which will meet our aspirations in founding a new and ample American merchant marine. We can not allow the discouraging things which have gone before to prevent us facing this situation frankly, and I think it wholly consistent to resolve that the solution of this task is not an impossible thing to American genius and capacity.

Very sincerely,

WARREN G. HARDING.

HON. WESLEY L. JONES,
United States Senate.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President, in this connection I ask unanimous consent to have printed, in context with the letter of the President addressed to the Senator from Washington, a letter from the chairman of the Shipping Board.

Mr. HARRISON. I should like to know if there is any difference between the two letters; I have only heard one read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Illinois?

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

AUGUST 20, 1921.

HON. MEDILL McCORMICK,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Confirming our conversation of to-day, I hold that the American taxpayer must not be indefinitely burdened with uncontrolled losses for the establishment of an American merchant marine. I hold that we must establish as speedily as we may a privately owned merchant marine.

The losses must be cut down. Not merely because Congress demands it but because the American merchant marine can not be established along the lines upon which we have been proceeding. When I said we would need $300,000,000, I am sure I was within the facts. This money will have to be paid out by Congress either within the coming year or in future years. It is needed largely to pay claimants and litigants and to settle debts of the past which have not yet been entered on the books. The present administration of the Shipping Board will not be affected by the refusal of Congress to pay these unliquidated debts inherited from the past administration. These debts were made by the Wilson administration and must at some time be liquidated, now or later; and I do not want Congress to rest under the misapprehension that in seemingly cutting down the Shipping Board estimate of appropriation it has really saved or can save any money.

The appropriation the House voted for the period fixed in the bill it passed is not at variance with our first request and will meet our present needs.

It is the unanimous purpose of the board to change immediately from the present inherited basis of governmental operation through commission managers to one of bareboat charter.

The present inherited basis whereby the operator has nothing at stake makes not only for chicanery but for incompetence, so that the ships are not operated in a manner to build up permanent good will for the American merchant marine. This system, regardless of the waste involved, should be ended, because there can be no building of a future American merchant marine by a system such as the present inherited one, which makes for unsatisfactory service and waste.

The bareboat charter basis will put the Government entirely out of the operation of its ships. We hope within 30 days to work out such a plan in all its details. To get transferred from the present basis to the bareboat charter basis will require many months. We are not hopeful that we will be able to bareboat many ships in the present condition of the world markets and, therefore, we will have to tie up the greater part of the fleet, but we are hopeful of working out a bareboat charter basis so favorable that competent operators will begin leasing our boats faster than they now think possible; we hope that with the first upturn of world trade our fleet will again be operating in great measure without the Government assuming the responsibility and risks of operation. I believe firmly that America's future will be measured by the tonnage it has on the seas of the world. But I believe just as firmly that the only hope of having the seas filled with American tonnage is for the Government to retire from ownership and operation and to use its powers to encourage private ownership and private initiative.

On this program I expect very definitely to cut the operating losses within a few months to a minimum and in the future, for operating purposes, to ask modest appropriations from Congress.

We could not give our program to the House committee, because we had not been here long enough to work it out. We did not want to give out our program until we could give it to the operators of the country in detail and we figured that could be done in 30 days. But it seems to me that the present discussion has made it proper to say that within a year we hope to be out of Government operation entirely, with the operating losses entailed thereby, and that as soon as there is a healthy upward movement in world trade we hope to be out of Government ownership.

Sincerely, yours,

A. D. LASKER, Chairman.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I offer an amendment to the bill now under consideration in order that it may be pending, and I ask that it may be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The READING CLERK. In the proper place in the bill it is proposed to insert the following:

Amendment of Mr. SHEPPARD, H. R. 8117:

"Unexpended balances: That all of the unexpended balances of the appropriations chargeable with the settlement of claims resulting from the suspension or termination of contracts or other procurement obligations of the War Department, consequent upon the suspension of hostilities, and with the adjustment of claims under the act entitled 'An act to provide relief in cases of contracts connected with the prosecution of the war, and for other purposes,' approved March 2, 1919, as provided in the 'second deficiency act, fiscal year 1921,' are hereby made available until June 30, 1922, for the payment of any award made by the Secretary of War under the act entitled 'An act to provide relief in cases of contracts connected with the prosecution of the war, and for other purposes,' approved March 2, 1919, without reference to the purpose of the original appropriations from which the said unexpended balances are taken."

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, this amendment carries no appropriation, and does not require the expenditure of a single additional dollar. It merely applies money already appropriated to the object which Congress intended; but it is made necessary by the construction given to the appropriation act by the general accounting office.

I thought, and I am sure all other Senators thought, when we passed the deficiency act of June 5, 1920, that we were providing, as far as the appropriation would go, for the payment of all claims arising out of contracts terminated or suspended by the War Department on the cessation of hostilities and all contracts adjusted under the Dent Act. The language which Congress employed, it seems to me, makes that intention plain; but the comptroller general has held that in directing that the unexpended balances which we appropriated should remain on the books of the Treasury to the credit of the original appropriation, we limited the use of the money to contracts made or which might have been made under the original appropriations, and to contracts related in purpose to the original appropriations, notwithstanding the fact that in the appropriating clause of our act we indicated no such limitation on the use of the money. In my judgment Congress did not intend to provide for some claims adjusted under the Dent Act and not to provide for others. Obviously, we intended to treat all of those claims alike, and this amendment simply makes that intention effective.

I merely submit this explanation in order that the matter may be considered by the proper committee.

Mr. WARREN. Has the Senator at hand the finding of the comptroller in that matter?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I have not the text of it, but I will try to get it by Monday.

Mr. WARREN. I hope we will have it by Monday.

Mr. KING. The Senator intends to offer that as an amendment to the pending bill, does he?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I do offer it now, and ask that it may be considered as pending.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be printed and lie on the table.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I understand that a number of Senators expect to address themselves to the two remaining items of the appropriation bill; and unless some Senator is ready to proceed to-night I shall move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, before that motion is made, my attention was diverted from the Senator's remarks of a few moments ago. Has the Senator decided whether he will move an adjournment or a recess?

Mr. WARREN. I shall ask that we recess until Monday, and I should prefer that we meet at 11 o'clock in the morning. That will be a new week, and we shall be all fresh, and probably it will be a lovely morning. I shall ask that we may recess until 11 o'clock.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I want to suggest to the Senator that there are many bills on the calendar in which a good many Senators are interested, and the rule provides for taking up those matters on Monday morning. The only way in which we can do it is to have an adjournment and a morning hour. I think the Senate at least once a week ought to take up the calendar for a couple of hours, and I hope the Senator will make a motion to adjourn. I do not object at all to meeting at 11 o'clock.

Mr. WARREN. Will not the Senator ask that the duties of Calendar Monday may be performed on Tuesday?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The truth is that nothing will be gained by doing that. This emergency appropriation bill can be passed just as well if we come in an hour earlier on Monday morning, and I should rather like to insist on the regular order about Calendar Monday. Of course I do not want to call for a quorum now. I know that we would not get a quorum if the suggestion of its absence were brought to the attention of the Chair, but I feel that we ought to adjourn.

Mr. WARREN. I understand the Senator to object to that kind of an arrangement, but that does not affect my request that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

AMENDMENT OF NATIONAL PROHIBITION ACT—CONFERENCE REPORT (S. DOC. NO. 68).

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I present the conference report on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on H. R. 7294 and ask that it may be printed, and printed in the Record and lie on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the report will be received and printed as requested.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, is this a complete agreement?

Mr. STERLING. It is a complete agreement.

The report is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill H. In lieu of the matter proposed in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate insert the following:

"Sec. 6. That any officer, agent, or employee of the United States engaged in the enforcement of this act, or the national prohibition act, or any other law of the United States, who shall search any private dwelling as defined in the national prohibition act, and occupied as such dwelling, without a warrant directing such search, or who while so engaged shall without a search warrant maliciously and without reasonable cause search any other building or property, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined for a first offense not more than $1,000, and for a subsequent offense not more than $1,000, or imprisoned not more than one year, or both such fine and imprisonment.

"Whoever not being an officer, agent, or employee of the United States shall falsely represent himself to be such officer, agent, or employee and in such assumed character shall arrest or detain any person, or shall in any manner search the person, buildings, or other property of any person, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine of not more than $1,000, or imprisoned for not more than one year, or by both such fine and imprisonment. And the House agree to the same.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, August 20, 1921.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Heavenly Father, again Thy light has shone upon the darkened earth, for Thine is the government, and Thine is the power, and Thine shall be the glory forever. Look upon our country. May Thy blessings be diffused throughout our whole land. May we walk and have fellowship with men of humble estate. May Thy truth, which is the divinest of all virtues, be wrought more and more into our laws, our institutions, and our citizenship. If disappointment is our burden, if infidelity is our load, if the unrevealed trouble is our cup, if the bruised reed is our portion—O, if the fading flower of earthly love is our cross—touch the clouds and dispel them and transform them into a promise and blessing. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

CONCERNING MILITARY MATTERS.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a letter that the Secretary of War sent to me, as chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, regarding military matters.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to print in the RECORD a letter sent to him by the Secretary of War regarding military matters. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Following is the letter referred to:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
 Washington.

Hon. JULIUS KAHN,
 Chairman Military Affairs Committee,
 House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. KAHN: Referring to our conversation, I am inclosing herewith, in memorandum form, a conservative statement, I think, of some of the accomplishments of the War Department during this administration.

I think you will see from a perusal of the memorandum that the War Department, under this administration, is not only making every possible effort to economize in the expenditure of funds but is earnestly carrying out the intent of Congress, as expressed in the act of June 4, 1920, and the recent appropriation bill decreasing the Army to 150,000 men.

Sincerely, yours,

JOHN W. WEEKS,
 Secretary of War.

A MEMORANDUM SUMMARIZING THE WORK OF THE WAR DEPARTMENT FROM MARCH 4, 1921, TO AUGUST 18, 1921.

In connection with the general effort of the Government to economize in its expenditures, I would like to invite attention to the progress made by the War Department, under Secretary Weeks, since March 4, in effecting economies by a businesslike administration of that department.

At the beginning of his administration the Secretary was confronted with the twofold problem of eliminating a prospective deficiency estimated at that time at $15,000,000 and at the same time carrying into effect with diminished appropriations the provisions of the national defense act imposing upon him the duty of organizing all those military units necessary for an efficient and immediate mobilization of the manpower of the Nation. The difficulties of the execution of this mission were subsequently increased through the reduction of the strength of the Army from 242,000 to 150,000 men. This reduction alone will cost approximately $6,000,000, due to statutory requirements regarding the payment of bonuses, travel allowances, etc., to these discharged soldiers.

Realizing from the outset the unfavorable financial situation of the Nation and the necessity for reducing Government expenditures for current operation in every possible way, the present administration of the War Department wherever feasible has put into effect all possible measures of economy, even to the extent of restricting activities which would ordinarily be considered necessary, wherever this could be done without a positive injury to the service. It has consistently adhered to the principle that the availability of funds appropriated by Congress for a specific purpose is not an adequate reason for their expenditure, and that such funds are to be withheld from expenditure unless an unavoidable necessity for their disbursement exists.

For the fiscal year 1921 an aggregate of $13,451,440 of the funds appropriated by Congress for the support of the Army, and for construction and other work in connection with it, was withheld by Secretary Baker and not apportioned to the operating services for expenditure. This sum was returned by Secretary Weeks to the Treasury as an unexpended balance. This saving of appropriated funds was accomplished notwithstanding the fact that after the beginning of the present administration an estimate was made based on previous expenditures from this appropriation that a deficiency of $15,000,000 would be created under "General appropriations, Quartermaster Corps." The economy measures taken were such that no deficit under this or any other appropriation resulted, but the War Department was enabled to turn into the Treasury an unexpended balance of over $13,000,000.

Among the more important measures of economy which have been put into force may be mentioned:

(a) Restrictions placed upon the transportation of personnel and supplies, and the use of motor and water transportation, as well as the substitution for civilian employees of qualified enlisted men wherever possible.

(b) A general reduction of the civilian personnel on duty in Washington and in the field service; the former amounting in the period from March 1 to August 1, 1921, to 33.1 per cent, and the latter to 13.7 per cent, a total reduction in five months of 14,156 employees on the War Department civilian pay roll. During the same period a complete survey was made of the rate of pay of all civilian employees to adjust this rate to correspond with the rate paid in the vicinity for like or similar work.

To avoid, if possible, the necessity of creating a deficit a careful and detailed survey of all appropriations available to the War Department for the fiscal year 1922 has been made in cooperation with the Director of the Budget. As a result of this survey there have been reported to the Director of the Budget sums aggregating $27,000,000 which were set aside and withdrawn from availability for expenditure, subject only to their release by the Director of the Budget by authority of the President in case such action should become unavoidable.

In addition, the Secretary has withheld the sum of $13,955,255 from apportionment to the several operating services for obligation or expenditure, with the intention of retaining as much as may be possible of these amounts as ultimate savings.

These withdrawals of more than forty million have been made to avoid, if possible, the necessity of creating a deficit and of making a request to Congress to relieve the embarrassment which was referred to by the President in his message to Congress, returning with his approval the bill for the support of the Army for the fiscal year 1922.

In an effort to finance the War Department on the appropriations made without the creation of a deficit orders have been issued for the abandonment of many Army cantonments, the movement of troops by marching, where practicable, the declaration of much material as surplus, and reforms in business administration. Among the most important articles declared surplus, both from the point of view of the sale value and of the cost of operation if retained in service, was a large number of ships of all classes, including Army transports.

A considerable saving has been effected since March 4, 1921, by the relinquishment of real estate in excess of Army needs. Through an exhaustive survey of all Government real property under control of the War Department 97 parcels were disclosed which are regarded as surplus. Some of these parcels are now being disposed of in accordance with existing law. In view of the fact that there is no authority of law for the disposal of the greater part of this surplus real estate held by the War Department, a bill has been prepared in the War Department which will authorize the Secretary of War to dispose of any real estate no longer required for military purposes. It would be possible to declare other properties surplus if funds were available to transport supplies therefrom to storage facilities which the Government must retain. Certain port properties acquired during the World War have been transferred to the Shipping Board under the provisions of the merchant marine act of June 5, 1920, and any rentals derived from leasing them to outside agencies passes to the credit of the Shipping Board, although their original cost was charged to the Military Establishment.

A new system of peace-time storage of war reserves and of current supplies has been projected and has been put into effect to the extent that general appropriations will permit of the movement of supplies from temporary or rented storage facilities. Under this system a general reserve or general intermediate depot has been organized in important localities where there are supplies pertaining to two or more supply branches of the Army, and a line officer has been assigned as depot commander for the purpose of coordinating the activities of the branches represented in the depot and to effect the fullest possible measures of economy with respect to maintenance and operation. While the resulting economies can not be accurately stated at this time, the saving effected at the New York general intermediate depot alone from the reduction in personnel total $312,164.12 for the quarter ending June 30, 1921. The report so far completed by the commanding officer, Washington general intermediate depot, indicates that its savings, growing out of economies effected by the consolidation of activities and the release of rented properties, will amount to $103,466 per annum.

Despite the fact that most of the surplus property in general demand by the public had already been disposed of, the department has since March 4 been able to materially increase declaration of surplus, and sales thereof, as shown by the following figures:

Cost value of surplus declared since Mar. 4-----	$103,989,187.25
Cost value of amount sold-----	121,615,851.35
Transferred to other departments-----	32,069,675.98
Amount received from sales-----	23,394,693.18

With a view to economy in expenditures in connection with the transfer of personnel to and from foreign garrisons the tour of duty for officers and enlisted men in Panama and Hawaii has been extended from two to three years. It is estimated that a saving to the Government of $305,561 will thereby be effected during the current fiscal year.

A big saving has been effected in the overhead expenses of the Army and the upkeep of camps which in the ensuing fiscal year would run into several million dollars by the discontinuance of the following cantonments:

Camp Devens, Mass.
Camp Sherman, Ohio.
Camp Pike, Ark.
Camp Grant, Ill.
Camp Jackson, S. C.
Camp Bragg, N. C.
Camp Meade, Md. (except Franklin cantonment).

About 10,000 public animals have been disposed of with a view to effecting a saving on the cost of forage.

In order to keep transportation expenditures at a minimum, instructions have been issued prohibiting unnecessary changes of station of officers and directing that no officer of any grade who has had a change of station within two years will, for the present, be moved without the specific approval of the War Department.

On March 15 instructions were issued to corps area commanders suspending until after June 30, except in emergency cases, all travel of officers and enlisted men connected with the Army in order to avoid an impending deficit in the appropriation "Transportation of the Army and its supplies" for the fiscal year ending June 30.

A revision of basic allowance to officers and enlisted men, which will carry out a substantial reduction in the issue of transportation and equipment has been completed. This revision will result in a material saving in the cost of operation of the Army due to this item. Most of the articles of equipment issued without cost to officers in the World War are now required to be purchased by the officers, thus returning to the procedure in vogue before the war. The system of establishing money clothing allowances for enlisted men in force before the war in lieu of issue in kind has been restored. Our prewar experience has shown this system to be not only more economical but also conducive to contentment and improved morale on the part of the enlisted men.

A definite policy has been followed in the full and complete use of all the equipment procured during the war by not authorizing the issue of new types as long as there is a stock of equivalent articles available for the use of the Army.

In response to the desire of the Congressional Joint Committee on Printing to be able to do business with but a single agency of the War Department on the matter of Army printing, over which this committee exercises supervision, and in order to make for greater efficiency and economy to be expected from the operation of all Army printing plants by a single supply service, the War Department has developed a plan whereby the Quartermaster Corps takes over the operation of all Army printing plants as a utility common to the entire Army.

The appropriations for the fiscal year 1921 were $3,500,000 for vocational training and for the pay of expert civilian instructors. Similar appropriations for the current fiscal year carried only $1,200,000. It was necessary to provide some other means whereby instructors and instruction material for vocational work in post schools could be developed and whereby experts required in all trades of the various branches of the Army could receive more advanced instruction than that supplied by post schools. Measures of economy not only made this necessary, but also the great desirability to devise standardized courses of instruction, and a corps of instructors taken from the personnel of the Army itself rather than civilians, which could be drawn upon to handle the training of these various classes of skilled workmen and technicians for the various arms of the service, who would be needed in the event of any war expansion of the Army.

In matters connected with patents, a considerable economy has been effected through the organization of a patent section in the office of the Judge Advocate General. This section has, since March 4, charge of the prosecution in the Patent Office of more than 1,400 applications for patents, many of which are of great military value, others of important commercial value, under all of which the United States will be permitted to manufacture, use, and sell the patented article without any expense to the Government for royalties. This section has also prepared the defense, for the Department of Justice, of 51 cases now pending in the Court of Claims, involving more than $82,000,000, and is now preparing the defense in cases involving over $150,000,000.

On March 4, 1921, there were awaiting settlement before the War Department Claims Board 439 claims. Since that date new claims coming in have swelled this total to 746. On July 31, 1921, this number had been reduced to 164. During the period March 4, 1921, to July 31, 1921, 582 claims have been disposed of. Relief was denied on 203 of these, while a favorable settlement between the board and the contractor was reached on 379 by payments in award of $13,101,880.79, thereby retiring contracts which, if they had been fully performed, would have required an expenditure of $204,210,103.92. A net saving of $191,108,223.14 has, therefore, been effected. In the outstanding cases on July 31, 1921, the total contractual obligation amounts to about $125,000,000, on which the contractors claim about $34,000,000. The total administrative expense of the War Department Claims Board for all purposes during this period is a minor fraction of 1 per cent of the total contractual obligations retired, or about $160,000.

It might be pointed out that in spite of all the necessary economies which had to be effected some very large projects have been carried out, including the return of some 19,000 bodies of American soldiers from overseas. In this respect the Secretary of War has prescribed a more liberal policy with reference to detailing suitable military escorts at distributing points and in providing the firing squads at funerals of deceased overseas soldiers by directing that these details be provided even at the expense of training and other activities.

One of the most important problems to be solved by the Secretary of War was in connection with the reduction of the enlisted strength of the Regular Army to 150,000 men, exclusive of Philippine Scouts, pursuant to the provisions of the Army appropriation act for the current fiscal year.

In general, two methods of effecting the required reduction presented themselves, namely, to retain all of the existing units, reducing the enlisted strength of each, or to reduce the number of existing units, retaining each unreduced in enlisted strength.

Application of the first method would have resulted in retaining a large number of units, each with its necessary overhead, each requiring separate quarters and maintenance, and each skeletonized below effective peace strength.

Application of the second method would have been productive of effective units and of the maximum economy in the way of overhead and maintenance, but would have reduced the number of units below that necessary for meeting the various missions of the Army.

A compromise between the two methods was finally adopted. Where necessary and possible, units have been reduced somewhat in strength; in all other cases the number of units has been reduced.

For example: Infantry regiments have been reduced in strength from 1,490 to 1,312 and in number from 65 to 45. Cavalry regiments have been reduced in strength from 818 to 641 and in number from 17 to 14. Field Artillery regiments have not been reduced in strength, but have been reduced in number from 33 to 16. Engineer regiments have not been reduced in strength, but have been reduced in number from 13 to 7. Coast Artillery railway and tractor regiments have been reduced in strength from 1,066 to approximately 829 and 729, respectively, and in number from 7 to 2. The auxiliary branches have been reduced in similar proportions.

Reduction in the number of units will necessitate corresponding changes in distribution. For example, the foreign garrisons will be reduced as follows: Philippines Islands, one regiment of Infantry; Hawaii, one regiment of Infantry and one of Cavalry; Panama, one regiment of Infantry.

The Coast Artillery personnel in each will be reduced by 10 per cent.

The number of combat units available for station in the United States, including those temporarily stationed in Germany, will be reduced as follows:

Infantry regiments, from 39 to 22.
Cavalry regiments, from 15 to 13.
Field Artillery regiments, from 26 to 9.
Coast artillery regiments, from 7 to 2.
Engineer regiments, from 10 to 4.
Auxiliary branches in similar proportions.

The number of garrisons in the coast defenses of the United States will be reduced to that essential to the security of vital localities. Approximately seven coast defense commands will be placed in the hands of caretakers.

The following tabulation shows the resulting distribution of strength to the various branches of the Army:

Infantry -----	58,800
Cavalry -----	11,184
Field Artillery -----	19,174
Coast Artillery -----	18,110
Air Service -----	10,300
Engineers -----	6,519
Signal Corps -----	3,000
Quartermaster Corps -----	11,200
Finance Department -----	709
Ordnance Department -----	2,976
Chemical Warfare Service -----	776
Detached enlisted men -----	6,543
Medical Department -----	8,591

Total (including Philippine Scouts) ----- 157,882

The plan of reorganization, as outlined above, has been completed, and is at the present moment being put in operation as rapidly as possible. Orders have already been issued for placing the surplus units on inactive status, and instructions are being issued for the reorganization of those units retained on active status.

In general, it is believed that this plan of reorganization will provide for meeting the various missions of the Army in the best possible manner consistent with the strength authorized. This plan admits of stationing a large number of the remaining units in permanent posts throughout the country, thus releasing a number of the temporary cantonments with a consequent and considerable economy in the cost of maintenance of the Army. Under the plan only these divisional cantonments are to be retained: Camp Dix, N. J.; Camp Travis, Tex.; and Camp Lewis, Wash.

Further economy has been effected by requiring the changes of station, in the majority of cases, to be made by marching in lieu of transportation by rail.

The foregoing recital briefly summarizes the various measures taken by the War Department in response to the urgent demands of economy. But there remains the positive side of the problem, how within the limits of the appropriation to realize the mission of providing for the military defense of the country as established by the national defense act of June 4, 1920.

The fundamental principles embodied in the national defense act are as set forth by the Secretary of War in the following extract from General Orders, of July 18, 1921:

"An examination of the statute shows that the new law is based on the idea that in the future, as in the past, great wars are to be fought in the main by armies composed of citizen soldiers temporarily drawn into active military service. We still have the conception of a small Regular Army in time of peace, reinforced upon the outbreak of war by such additional citizen forces as the particular emergency may require. This is our traditional mode of military expansion, and this method is clearly contemplated in the act of Congress.

"But whereas in the past the necessary citizen forces have been completely extemporized or materially reorganized upon the occurrence of an emergency, the new law provides that they shall be allocated territorially, that their officers and men shall be assigned to local units, and that as funds become available provision shall be made for the training of these officers and men. In other words, the war force required for immediate mobilization in the event of emergency is to be constituted in time of peace and filled as far as practicable through the enrollment or enlistment of qualified volunteers. Under such a system it is reasonable to expect that the units of the National Guard will be maintained at sufficient strength to be effective as a first reinforcement for the Regular Army, and that the units of the Organized Reserves will at least include a corps of officers, noncommissioned officers, and specialists, organized and trained to receive and train the recruits required in an emergency demanding large forces.

"It is with the requirements of this larger war establishment in view that the peace organization of the Regular Army must be determined. The law provides a limited number of regular enlisted men and a number of regular officers in excess of the number required for service with the Regular Army proper. This provision shows clearly the intent of Congress that a portion of the officers authorized are to be employed in the organization, administration, and development of the National Guard, the Organized Reserves, the Reserve Officers' Training Corps, and the citizens' training camps. It is the President's desire that the Regular Army shall be so organized as to carry out this intent of Congress to the fullest extent. The Regular Army should, therefore, be formed in a limited number of organizations, each at effective military strength, with the view of releasing the maximum number of selected officers and enlisted men for service with these other branches of the Army of the United States."

While the basic plan for the development of the citizen components of the Army had been formulated by the appropriate committees of the General Staff, composed in part of National Guard and reserve officers as provided for in the organic law, a vast amount of constructive work remained to be done. This work has been carried on with the greatest energy and with the result that considerable progress has been made in the development of these forces.

The basis upon which plans for the organization of both the National Guard and the Organized Reserve have been drafted is the reconstruction of the great combat divisions which won such high distinction during the World War. With the reconstitution of these units, with their numbers, their flags, and their history, it is believed that there will be a revival and continuation of the spirit and the traditions that led them to victory in the great conflict.

The basic plan for the reorganization of the National Guard provides for the organization of this component into 18 divisions and a small proportion of corps and Army troops, so that when combined with the Regular Army, both together will be able to furnish on mobilization the essential combat elements of three field armies, one from the Regular Army and two from the National Guard. The basic idea underlying the plan was to provide for all of the necessary units required under the law for an immediate mobilization in an emergency declared by Congress, with a view to avoiding the necessity for reorganization on mobilization which was such an unhappy feature of the mobilization of 1917. All of the National Guard divisions, or their subordinate units which participated in the World War, have been reconstituted, and three additional divisions have been organized. The following table shows the progress in percentages of units organized on March 1, 1921, and on July 31, 1921:

The total strength of all units of the National Guard that have been authorized and recognized by the War Department during the period January 1, 1921, to date are as follows:

	Author- ized.	Recog- nized.
January 1.....	208,153	74,884

It is believed that the development of the National Guard is assured along sound tactical lines. An important feature of this development is the harmonious mutual support and cooperation existing between the States and the War Department.

With reference to the training and instruction of this component, instruction camps have been held or are being held in States having recognized units. The character of the instruction has been restricted to basic training in view of the fact that on an average 80 per cent of the enlisted personnel of the new National Guard have had no previous training. These camps have been conducted under the supervision of corps area commanders, who have freely rendered all aid in instructors and matériel. As a general rule, all of these camps have been successful in accomplishing the object in view. It is estimated that a total of 454 Regular Army officers will be required for duty with the National Guard.

In order to forestall confusion in an emergency, a definite policy has been determined and announced providing for bringing the National Guard officers into Federal service in the event of that force being drafted.

In time of peace the procurement of National Guard officers is largely in the hands of the States. On March 4, 1921, there were 3,562 federally recognized National Guard officers. There are now 6,123 such officers, a most substantial and satisfactory increase for so short a period.

The development of the National Guard having been assured, the initiation of the organization of the Organized Reserves was taken up about April 1, 1921. The Organized Reserves are a purely Federal force and are raised, trained, supported, and employed by the United States under the powers granted to Congress by the Constitution, and in a war of any magnitude will constitute the major component of the Army of the United States. Its members have a war obligation only, subject to a maximum training period of 15 days each year. Under the basic plan this component will provide for 3 field armies, or 27 Infantry divisions, and the required corps, army, and general headquarters reserve troops, and in addition for any deficiencies in the first three armies comprising the National Guard and the Regular Army. In order that the organization of this component might be effected in an orderly manner a large amount of time and labor has been expended in the preparation of basic regulations. Special regulations published about June 1, 1921, is the basic regulations, and sets forth in a comprehensive manner the plan for the organization, training, administration, and mobilization of units. Supplementary to these and of equal importance are Special Regulations for the Enlisted Reserve Corps and for the Officers' Reserve Corps. These regulations cover all matters relating to the enlisted and commissioned personnel of the reserve.

As soon as the basic regulations were available tables of allotments showing the units of the Organized Reserves were prepared and published. Based upon these tables, studies have been made in each corps area covering the plans for organization and localization of units. These studies have been approved by the War Department, and corps area commanders and their assistants are now actively engaged in making the plans effective. In this connection groups of selected officers of the Regular Army and a small number of enlisted men have been recently placed at the disposal of corps area commanders to assist in the organization of these units. The initial quota consists of 168 officers and 262 enlisted men, and will be augmented later. The total number of officers of the Regular Army that will be required for duty with the reserves is estimated at 1,500. During the present season assemblies of reserve officers are being held to discuss plans for the organization of units and for such instruction as may be given.

It is expected that by the end of the year 1921 all of the National Guard and National Army divisions or their subordinate units which served in the World War will have been reconstituted, with their names, numbers, and other designations, and their war records will be preserved as well as a measure of the military strength developed at such great cost during the war.

By the end of the present calendar year the assignment of reserve officers will have been completed and the organizations will be ready to begin the enlistments.

In order to insure uniformity in the selection of general officers of the reserve forces, provision has been made for a board composed of general officers of the Regular Army, Officers' Reserve Corps and National Guard to make recommendation to the Secretary of War relative to all candidates for appointment or Federal recognition as general officers.

A policy has been developed and put into operation that each reserve officer be given an assignment in time of peace to an office he is to fill upon mobilization. Decentralization in making these assignments is essential. With the exception of a few officers reserved for War Department activities, the assignments are delegated to corps area and department commanders. The data bearing on suitability for assignment has been furnished the corps area commanders for about three-fourths of the present reserve officers, and the actual assignments are now being rapidly made as the units of the Organized Reserves are organized.

In connection with the World War organizations, only a part of the historical work done has been published, on account of lack of funds. The following publications have been printed for distribution to the National Guard, Reserve Officers' Training Corps units, the service schools, and the Army in general, to public libraries, to civilian historical organizations, and to the public through the press:

Monograph No. 7: Organization of the Service of Supply, American Expeditionary Forces.

Monograph No. 9: Blanc Mont (Meuse-Argonne, Champagne).

Monograph No. 10: Operations of the Second American Corps in the Somme Offensive.

Records of the World War, field orders, Second Army Corps.

Records of the World War, field orders, Fifth Division.

In addition to the above a pamphlet has been prepared and supplied to regimental and similar units of the Regular Establishment tracing the history of the existing regiments. Another work has been the preparation of a complete set of outlines of divisional histories of all the divisions which were in existence at the time of the armistice. Copies of the latter, the first official publication of this class, have received wide distribution.

I shall now briefly describe the measures taken by the War Department to carry into effect the provisions of the national defense act relative to the training, particularly those relating to the Reserve Officers' Training Corps, citizens' military-training camps, the Organized Reserves, and the service schools.

The Reserve Officers' Training Corps has completed the most successful year of its operation and has established beyond all doubt that its graduates constitute the main source of officer replacement for the Officers' Reserve Corps. The practice was established at the close of the school year in June of presenting the commissions in the reserves to the graduates during commencement exercises in the same manner that the diplomas are presented. Reserve Officers' Training Corps graduates of less than 21 years of age were given certificates of qualification effective for five years at their discretion. Approximately eleven hundred college graduates received commissions or certificates in June and July. It is the expectation that the development of the Organized Reserves with the actual assignment of officers to organizations will appeal to the young men graduating from the colleges each year, and that they will generally avail themselves of the privileges of their certificates. The completion of the college year finds the Reserve Officers' Training Corps more firmly established and more generally appreciated and esteemed than ever before.

The summer camps conducted in the various sections of our country during June and July were highly satisfactory to the War Department, and fulfilled their purpose most effectively. The students enrolled at the various colleges for the different branches of the reserves were segregated in camps according to branches, where they received the specialized training pertaining thereto.

The variety of units has been extended so that young men are now specially instructed and trained as Infantry, Artillery, Cavalry, Engineer, Signal, Quartermaster, Ordnance, Air, Medical, Dental, and Veterinary officers and directly commissioned as such.

Approximately 90,000 students completed the year's training in units located in every State and Territory, including Hawaii and Porto Rico.

The detail of officers on reserve officers' training camp duty at the schools and colleges has not only supported that feature of the national policy of preparedness, but it has brought the Army in close contact with the leading educational institutions of the country.

Under the authority contained in the national defense act, citizens' military training camps were established throughout the United States, with one or two camps in each corps area. Preliminary reports and the personal inspections indicate that the conduct of these camps and the success attending the efforts of the Government to provide military training for civilians have been characterized generally by excellence of results.

Although the age limits established for the course are 16 to 35 years, only a very small percentage of men of mature age have attended the camps this year. In view of the fact that young men of high-school age have constituted the great majority in attendance, the War Department has exercised especial care to provide for correct conduct, wholesome recreation, profitable training, and the most productive use of time.

The number of candidates attending the citizens' military training camps this year was limited by the appropriation made by Congress for the purpose. The number authorized to attend was 11,085, while the number of applicants was 40,589. It is seen, therefore, that only 27 per cent of the total number of applicants could be given the opportunity to attend the camps this year. This oversubscription could not have been foreseen, however, and while it was necessary to deny attendance to approximately two-thirds of the applicants, it was made clear that those rejected this year would be placed upon the preferred list for next year. This number, together with the number of new applicants as the result of the representations of enthusiastic candidates attending camps this year, serve to indicate that a sound popularity attaches to the project of citizens' military training camps so wisely provided for by Congress.

The training of reserve officers has been greatly facilitated by the spirit of cooperation and helpfulness which they have manifested, and especially their disposition in time of peace to volunteer for training and instruction without expense to the Government.

In order that the limited appropriations for the training of Organized Reserves may be supplemented, the War Department has provided for the formulation and conduct of correspondence courses in each corps area. These courses will have for their purpose the theoretical training of officers and noncommissioned officers during periods when field service can not be provided for or is not desirable. It is believed that this provision for correspondence courses will serve to meet the demand of economy in many cases where active service is not absolutely necessary.

Provisions have been made for opening in all territorial commands correspondence schools for officers of the National Guard and Organized Reserves.

Work of the general service schools and special service schools has been carefully coordinated to the end that all overlapping of instruction has been eliminated.

Courses at the special service schools under instructions from the War Department have been arranged to provide that officers will receive such special instruction as will qualify them for duty with the Organized Reserves, National Guard, reserve officers' training camp units, and citizens' military training camps.

Courses at the special service schools have been arranged to supply instructors, both commissioned and enlisted, to carry on the work of educational and vocational training in post schools.

Special service schools have been directed to prepare instructional matter for educational and vocational training.

The foregoing summary outlines in a general way the measures that have been taken to carry out the provisions of the national defense act relative to the mobilization of the man power of the Nation. But the act also contains important provisions relative to the mobilization of supply.

Under the provisions of the act the Assistant Secretary of War is charged with the supervision of the procurement of all military supplies and the assurance of adequate provision for the mobilization of matériel and industrial organizations essential to war-time needs. This provision of the act has been made effective, and an exhaustive study is now being made in the office of the Assistant Secretary of the records of the War Industries Board and the Council of National Defense in connection with the problems of industrial mobilization. This will form the basis of the plans for industrial mobilization to be worked out in detail by the supply branches of the War Department.

The problem in industrial mobilization has been divided into its elements—commodities, labor, power, and transportation—and a large number of officers in the various supply branches have been assigned the duty of preparing special reports in detail. In this work the services of reserve officers will also be utilized to a great extent. Reserve officers engaged in industrial pursuits will be assigned to the study of their own specialties. Many reserve officers have volunteered their services in this connection, and their hearty response to the War Department's proposals indicates an appreciation of the importance of the industrial-mobilization plans.

In March last an orderly, systematic method of determining the requirements of the War Department in all articles of supply was prepared and put into effect. The working out of this plan will show just how much of every article will be required for a war reserve. When this plan is completed we shall have for the first time in American history a definite mobilization policy for war, and in so far as appropriations will permit we shall have the reserve munitions necessary to sustain that mobilization until production can be relied upon.

When sufficient progress has been made on these computations a definite statement will be presented to Congress showing just what reserves are deemed necessary in order that Congress may determine what degree of preparation for defense of the country it will provide.

Meanwhile these computations of requirements, made on a definite basis, are disclosing daily new quantities of surplus, which are being promptly declared and disposed of. Within the past 60 days over $5,000,000 worth of surplus property has been disclosed directly by these computations, and it can now be seen that a still greater surplus will result therefrom.

As soon as the eventual mobilization policy is arrived at in the manner above described the requirements in reserves thereunder and the further disclosure of surplus that results therefrom will be quickly calculated, and within a very few months the declaration and disposal of all surplus supplies of the War Department will be completed.

An important departure has been made in a recent reorganization of the General Staff. Up to the present time the organization of the War Department General Staff has been unscientific and dependent to a large extent upon the personalities of individual members. The faults of this organization were magnified tremendously on the entrance of the United States in the World War, and the organization of the General Staff built up within the War Department to meet the problems presented, though unavoidable and necessary to meet the demands of the moment, was nevertheless unwieldy and productive of many faults, particularly the assumption of administrative and operative duties that should have been performed by existing operating agencies.

Hitherto the War Department General Staff has been constituted a single indivisible unit, and the principle of General Staff organization has never been recognized that in the event of war one portion of the central control must take the field prepared to assist the commanding general in the conduct of military operations while another portion must remain in the War Department prepared to conduct the equally important operations connected with the mobilization of men and matériel.

In the past and prior to the World War the War Department General Staff was so absorbed in routine, peace-time administration that its military head had had no time for deliberate preparation for military operations. Our history has been, therefore, that at the outbreak of hostilities there has been a sudden rupture of the peace-time organization resulting in an extemporized and unprepared field headquarters on the one hand, and on the other hand a mobilization machinery depleted and disorganized just at the moment when full activity was demanded.

An analysis of section 5(b) of the national defense act, as amended, shows the duties of the War Department General Staff to be divided into two categories: First, the duty of mobilizing the manhood and the resources of the Nation and their preparation, training, concentration, and delivery to the field forces, and, second, the use of the military forces for national defense, i. e., actual employment of the armed forces against the enemy.

It is a fundamental principle that, if efficient execution of plans is to be expected, those engaged in their formulation and preparation should also be charged with their execution. The application of this principle is the basis for the new organization.

This new organization divides the General Staff into five divisions, the first four divisions to be known as G-1, G-2, G-3, G-4, dealing with such questions of personnel, intelligence, operations and training, and supply as affect the mobilization of men and matériel for war, and with those duties of a routine and continuing nature necessary in peace and war, and a fifth division to be known as the war plans division, which will be charged with the formulation of plans for the actual employment of the armed forces in the national defense, this division constituting the nucleus of the general headquarters of the field forces.

The reorganization, therefore, contemplates that the Chief of Staff will be charged with the larger problems connected with the organization and training of the Army of the United States, including the National Guard and Organized Reserves, as well as the Regular Army, and that portion of his staff will be charged with the preparation of plans for actual field operation in the national defense, and upon the outbreak of war will expand and take the field as the General Staff at general headquarters.

It further contemplates that another portion of the War Department General Staff, under the Deputy Chief of Staff, now known as the executive assistant, will be charged with the preparation of plans for mobilization of men and matériel in time of war, and with the routine business of the War Department in peace and war. It therefore permits the Chief of Staff, upon the outbreak of hostilities, to take the field with a headquarters consisting of a trained personnel which has prepared the plans of campaign, while his principal assistant (the Deputy Chief of Staff in time of peace) will become the Chief of the War Department General Staff, retaining that portion of the personnel which has worked out the plan of mobilization of men and matériel. Expansion of the staff will thus be simplified and safeguards against breakdown assured.

The order promulgating the new organization provides for a clear-cut definition of duties between the personnel bureau of The Adjutant General's Department, provided for in the national defense act, the War Department General Staff, and the chiefs of branches and bureaus of the War Department. In respect to those matters concerning the personnel of the Army with which the personnel bureau is charged by law, the order places that bureau on an operating basis with full authority to act in accordance with the policies and plans established by the General Staff.

In so short a space I have only been able to outline in a general way the measures which the War Department has taken in the interests of economy, cooperation with Congress, and organization for national defense. Most of these projects are only in their initial stages and will require many years for their full development. In my opinion, one of the greatest accomplishments to be placed to the credit of the present administration of the War Department is the selection of Gen. Pershing and Gen. Harbord as chief of staff and Deputy Chief of Staff, respectively, two officers who distinguished themselves in war capacities which so eminently fit them for their present positions. By this action we are assured that the lessons of the Great War will not be lost, but that they will be crystallized in War Department policy which will be transmitted to the oncoming generation of younger officers.

THE REVENUE.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule, the House resolves itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the revenue bill, with Mr. WALSH in the chair.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 8245, with Mr. WALSH in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the revenue bill, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 8245) to reduce and equalize taxation, to amend and simplify the revenue act of 1918, and for other purposes.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer a committee amendment, No. 65, on list No. 3.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut offers a committee amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 15, line 15, after the word "Acts" insert a comma and the following: "or as pensions from the United States for service of the beneficiary or another in the military or naval forces of the United States in time of war."

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, a message from the Senate by Mr. Craven, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 2420. An act authorizing and directing the Postmaster General to permit the use of a special canceling stamp at the post office of Birmingham, Ala., bearing the words, "Birmingham semicentennial."

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bill of the following title:

H. R. 7255. An act authorizing bestowal upon the unknown unidentified American to be buried in the Memorial Amphitheater of the National Cemetery at Arlington, Va., the congressional medal of honor and the distinguished service cross.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendment to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1072) to amend the act entitled "An act to provide that the United States shall aid the State in the construction of rural post roads, and for other purposes," had requested a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon and had appointed Mr. TOWNSEND, Mr. STERLING, Mr. PHIPPS, Mr. MCKELLAR, and Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

THE REVENUE.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, subsection 9 of section 211 provides that the amount received as compensation, family allotments, and allowances under the provisions of the war risk insurance and vocational rehabilitation acts shall be exempted from the operation of the income tax. This amendment proposes to add to this exemption sums received as pension from the United States for service of the beneficiary or another in the military or naval service of the United States in time of war.

It is the judgment of the committee that so far as possible the veterans of all our wars should be placed upon a plane of equality. We are in this bill exempting amounts received as compensation, and so forth, by the soldiers of the World War; therefore we think that we should also exempt sums received as pensions by the veterans of former wars. This is the entire purpose of this amendment.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. TILSON. Certainly; I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. BURTON. I am asking for information. Has there been a similar exemption in prior revenue bills? Is this the first time that the amounts received by pensioners of the Civil War have been exempted from taxation?

Mr. TILSON. So far as I am able to inform the gentleman, this is the first legislation on the subject.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TILSON. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. As I understand the effect of the proposed amendment offered by the gentleman from Connecticut, it will be to exempt all funds derived by way of pensions—

Mr. TILSON. For service in time of war—

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. For service in time of war from the income tax. Of course, under the exemptions that exist under the general income tax law there are none now who are really receiving pensions on account of their financial condition that are having to pay anything. That is true, is it not?

Mr. TILSON. There are pensioners who are receiving more than the amount of the present exemption. There are pensioners who are receiving more than $1,000, which is the lower limit of the exemption.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. It would apply to pensioners receiving above $1,000? Those would be the ones that would be particularly affected?

Mr. TILSON. Correct.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, let it be understood also that there are many men also drawing pensions in this country who have an income of $100,000 or $500,000. They, of course, are being exempted as well as the man whose income is only a few dollars above $1,000. Of course, the gentleman would not want to make those people pay any more than he could help.

Mr. TILSON. Does the gentleman wish to discriminate between veterans of the different wars? Does he desire that some shall be exempted and that others shall not be exempted?

Mr. GARNER. I will say this to the gentleman from Connecticut that it might have been well for the committee to have looked into the matter and tried to ascertain the situation. Instead of doing that they merely sought the thing, without finding out who would be exempted, and to what extent, and what the loss to the Treasury might be.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Suffice it simply to state that we are perfectly satisfied to have this understood to be a Republican amendment. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer another amendment, which is No. 66 on the printed list No. 3.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut offers a further committee amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 38, line 6, strike out the word "on" and insert in lieu thereof the word "under."

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, this is only a verbal amendment. It is believed that the language proposed to be substituted is better and clearer than the language in the bill.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word in order to get some information. I have tried to keep up with this bill, and I admit it is somewhat difficult to do so. I have before me list No. 1 and list No. 2 of amendments to be proposed by the Republican members of the Ways and Means Committee. I understand there are some other amendments. Has a list of them been printed?

Mr. TILSON. Yes; there is a third printed list; No. 3 containing amendments passed upon by the full committee this morning.

Mr. SEARS. Can the minority Members and the other Members of the House secure that list?

Mr. TILSON. The minority members of the Ways and Means Committee already have copies and other Members of the House can secure them.

Mr. SEARS. I will state to the gentleman that I tried to secure them but could not. I simply want to get the information.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TILSON. I yield to the gentleman from Texas if I have the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida [Mr. SEARS] has the floor unless he yields it.

Mr. SEARS. Upon the statement of the gentleman that I can get the list I will make another effort to get it, and I yield the floor.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to ask the gentleman from Connecticut a question. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] stated into the Record a moment ago that a certain particular amendment was a Republican amendment. The gentleman from Connecticut knows that it would not be possible on this bill for any Democrat to get an amendment adopted or even to offer an amendment.

Mr. TILSON. Some of the Democrats on the Ways and Means Committee have been quite influential and helpful in the preparation of some of these amendments.

Mr. BLANTON. But the gentleman's party has fixed it so that no Democrat can even offer one. They are all Republican amendments.

Mr. TILSON. The rule does not so provide; but I am willing to accept the credit for them.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I offer a committee amendment, which is No. 67 of list No. 3.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers a committee amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 39, strike out lines 9 to 18, inclusive, and insert in lieu thereof the following, each paragraph to begin with quotation marks and the last paragraph to end with quotation marks: "Sec. 233 (a). That in the case of a corporation subject to the tax imposed by section 230 the term 'gross income' means the gross income as defined in sections 213 and 217, except that:

"(1) In the case of life insurance companies there shall not be included in gross income such portion of any actual premium received from any individual policyholder as is paid back or credited to or treated as an abatement of premium of such policyholder within the taxable year.

"(2) Mutual marine insurance companies shall include in gross income the gross premiums collected and received by them less amounts paid for reinsurance.

"(b) In the case of a foreign corporation or a foreign trade corporation, gross income means only gross income from sources within the United States, as determined under the provisions of section 217."

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, this amendment and the amendments following, to and including No. 81 on the printed list, constitute a very important change in the bill, to which I wish to call the attention of the Members of the House. The committee finally decided, after considerable discussion, to put all of the insurance companies on the same basis for taxation. The basis of the taxation of all of the insurance companies is to be their net return from invested income—net income. That is to be taxed the same as that of other corporations, at the rate of 12½ per cent. This, however, is subject to one exception. Gentlemen will remember that under the provisions of the law as it now stands the fraternal companies are not taxed. I think there has been some question whether the fraternal companies were obliged to make a return. At all events they were not taxed, and under this bill as now amended they will not be obliged to make any returns. And I might also state that most of the mutual companies—that is, the Farmers' Mutual and companies of that class—will pay very little, if any, tax, because these provisions include the repeal of the premium tax so far as it applies to insurance companies and the repeal of the taxation on the issues of stock so far as it applies to insurance companies and makes them pay only this one tax on their invested income. The small mutual companies have, as a rule, no income from investments.

Mr. CONNELL. Does that include both fire and life insurance companies?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Both fire and life.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. Does this have any application to the taxes provided in section 503 of the act of 1918, and in particular does it affect the tax on casualty insurance? As I understand the act of 1918, section 230 levies a tax on corporations, and then it refers to section 1000—

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. If my friend will pardon me, I have not the old law before me, and while I am tolerably familiar with it, I can not remember it by sections.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. Section 503 imposes on casualty insurance companies a tax of 1 cent on each dollar or fractional part thereof of the premium charged under each policy. Does the amendment in any way affect the premium tax?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. This particular amendment will not, but it will be affected by amendments offered further on. What section does the gentleman refer to?

Mr. WHITE of Maine. Section 503, on page 52 of the compilation.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The casualty companies will be treated in the same manner under these amendments.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. Then this section 503 will be repealed?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. It will be repealed or so modified that it will not affect casualty companies. Amendment No. 71, which will soon be offered, will fix the status of the casualty companies.

Mr. McKENZIE. I desire to ask the gentleman from Iowa whether under the proposed amendment the small township mutual farmers' insurance companies will be required to make any returns? At present they are not subject to any tax, but they have to make a return, and they are complaining about that.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I am inclined to think that they will still have to make a return, but under the provisions as we now have them the return will be very simple. They will only have to show that they have no invested capital and get no interest from invested capital.

Mr. TREADWAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I will.

Mr. TREADWAY. In connection with the inquiry of the gentleman from Illinois, is not the reference he makes to the form of return, and does not that have to do with the administrative features of the bill rather than the law itself, and is not there a decided effort to simplify the return?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman from Massachusetts is quite correct that these provisions with reference to returns are not carried in the law. If the law made it necessary, the return would have to be made. I am inclined to think that the way the law is written the companies will not have to make a return, but will have to show that they are receiving no money from invested income.

Mr. CHALMERS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. CHALMERS. Did I understand the gentleman to say that fraternal insurance companies would not be taxed and would not be required to make returns?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. They will not pay any tax, and under the construction of the Treasury experts they will not be required to make a return.

Mr. CHALMERS. What about the tax?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. They are not taxed.

Mr. KETCHAM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I will.

Mr. KETCHAM. I would like to inquire if the exemptions granted insurance companies are broad enough to include the kind of companies that we have in Michigan designated as "windstorm" insurance. Are the exemptions broad enough to include companies of that sort?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. They will not have to pay any tax unless they have a fund that is put out at interest from which they get returns.

Mr. KETCHAM. Neither a premium tax nor an application tax?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. No; nor any of these various forms to which insurance companies have been subjected. This tax has been one of the most annoying to the public generally, and to the insurance companies, that they have ever been subjected to. The policyholder has been the goat and has been compelled to pay it. The insurance companies have complained about the annoyance of being required to do so much book-keeping, and so the insurance companies have complained about it. It has also been one of the most exasperating taxes to the general public. The committee hesitated about placing insurance companies on the same basis for fear that we would lose a large amount of revenue. While the Treasury estimates have not been made up, I have had insurance actuaries go over it, and their estimate is that the Government will not lose any great amount of revenue.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The gentleman stated that the mutual life insurance companies would pay very little, if any, tax at all. Can the gentleman state the difference between the stock companies and the mutual life companies?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I will say to the gentleman that there are some big mutual insurance companies that make very large investments—life insurance companies that have invested many millions of dollars in income-producing securities. These companies will have to pay under this provision, and I think it is right that they should pay on their net income. But small farmers' insurance cooperative companies and small cooperative companies that have no sum invested will not have to pay anything. That is the only distinction.

Mr. HUSTED. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. HUSTED. Do all kinds of insurance companies come within the provisions of this amendment?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes; every kind of an insurance company.

Mr. BRAND. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. BRAND. It includes fire insurance companies?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has again expired.

Mr. BRAND. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BRAND. Is there any provision in the revenue bill that levies a tax on the premium of policyholders in insurance companies?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. That is the present law and we repeal that.

Mr. BRAND. Is there anything in this law that provides for it?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Not if these amendments are adopted, and I believe they will be when understood; they will commend themselves to gentlemen on both sides of the House. Now, in reference to this particular amendment this does not involve the repealing clause at all. The repealing clause only takes effect January 1, 1922, and up to that time it is necessary that some of the present laws should be kept in force, and that is the only intention of this amendment.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, so far as I know these amendments from 67 to 81 are good amendments. If I correctly understood the statement made by those responsible for them this morning, they have for their purpose the relieving of insurance companies from all kinds of excise tax levied by the Federal Government and substitute the 12½ per cent tax on the net returns from their investment. I believe that is a correct statement of what was reported to the committee this morning. There is at least one thing in that that the committee has not looked into, and that is this: Take the New York Life Insurance Co., for instance. It will charge its entire overhead expense to its investments and not one dollar to its receipts from premiums and other sources. There ought to have been some protection against that procedure. I do not know whether the committee investigated that or not, but if you take the net income from investment each company will charge up all of its overhead expense and all other expenses to the income from its investment, which will materially reduce the net receipts from that particular source. But I think the amendment probably ought to be adopted, even without any restrictions or any clauses protecting the Treasury from unfair dealing by insurance companies. That ought to be worked out, and perhaps will be worked out in the Senate.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARNER. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The matter has been worked out by the Treasury experts. They told us that the life insurance companies would pay a little less under this plan than they were paying now. We originally had the corporation tax fixed at 15 per cent, as the gentleman will remember, and the Treasury experts then estimated that they would pay more than they are paying now, but that on account of the simplification they would rather pay more.

Mr. GARNER. I understand that. They will pay a little less than they do now; especially will this be true of a company like the New York Life Insurance Co. But I want to pass from that for a moment and call the attention of the Republican membership especially to the result of the amendments to this bill, and as I see the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] sitting in front of me I want to call his attention to it especially.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Texas will yield, I think his apprehension in regard to the charging up of the expense of overhead to the invested funds is not well founded.

Mr. GARNER. I hope it is not.

Mr. BURTON. Every insurance company of any magnitude has its different branches, and it would be a bald fraud to attempt to charge the expense of agencies and the soliciting of life insurance, the securing of life insurance, to invested funds. There is a mortgage department and other departments connected with investments, and those properly are chargeable against the income on investment, but nothing else.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman is correct. What I intended to call the gentleman's attention to is this: The Ways and Means Committee when it reported this bill said they had cut the taxes to the bone, that we could not run the Government with one cent less than they were proposing to take from the people. Gentlemen will remember that statement. Gentlemen will remember the conflict between the Treasury Departments and the Committee on Ways and Means. Gentlemen will remember that the Secretary of the Treasury told the Ways and Means Committee that he needed $4,625,000,000. The Ways and Means Committee told him that he would have to get along with less money, and they were right. The matter was taken up with the President, and after all these conferences the Treasury said that it could get along with what was actually provided for in the bill—a certain sum. They drew the bill, and they brought it here and said that this was the least possible money that they could get along with. And what has happened? This House has cut out of this bill $150,000,000. How are you going to get it? No one has offered a single species of taxes to replace the $150,000,000. What is going to happen? The Secretary of the Treasury is going to have to issue certificates of indebtedness for the purpose of running the Government. In other words, you are going to run on credit for the next two years.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARNER. Yes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The gentleman evidently overlooks the fact that these figures were estimated upon the proposition that the excess-profits taxes and the high surtaxes would be repealed as of January 1 last. The fact that the present bill provides that they shall not be repealed until January 1 next makes a difference of some $550,000,000 in the amount necessary.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Ohio is correct, he ought to repeal some more taxes, because the House has taken off the bill only $150,000,000, and he says that they have $400,000,000 more than they need. The two ends of that dilemma are much the same. If that is true, why are you collecting so much? I want to tell you Republicans what you are going to vote on when we reach the motion to recommit, so that you can turn it over in your minds and see whether or not you want to go on record for or against it. If I have the opportunity under the rules of the House, I shall make a motion to recommit this bill; I am going to offer a motion to recommit, striking out the surtaxes alone. You are going to have an opportunity to vote in this House as to whether you would like this bill better with the surtaxes stricken out or with them left in, as in the present law.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARNER. Yes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I have just had the privilege of reading the minority views. In those views it is stated not only that the surtaxes but the excess-profits taxes should be stricken out. Does the gentleman go back on that report?

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Ohio would be very glad to have an opportunity for his side to give some other excuse for cutting down the surtaxes, and he would like to have me put that in, but the gentleman from Ohio, shrewd as he is, capable as a politician and statesman, as we all know, will never set his trap shrewdly enough to catch the Democrats in a position of putting up to the Republicans an easy dodging proposition. We know that not 10 per cent of you can go back to your constituencies and defend your votes cutting down the surtaxes as you propose to cut them in this bill.

We are going to put you on record on that one question. The gentleman does not care, but there are some others over there who care whether they have to go back to their constituency and tell them that they voted to take the taxes off the incomes of the rich, who have annual incomes above $66,000, and place them on somebody less able to pay.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARNER. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The gentleman did not sign this report.

Mr. GARNER. The gentleman from Ohio wants to talk about some report—

Mr. LONGWORTH. Is this the minority report or what is it?

Mr. GARNER. Oh, the gentleman would like to stir up friction among the Democrats, but he will have a devil of a hard time doing it. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.] Mr. Chairman, if I thought there was one-tenth of the friction on this side of the House and the discontent and the disagreement with the party organization that there is on that side of the House I would despair of ever seeing the Democratic Party in power again. You know, as the country knows, that your Ways and Means Committee can not submit this bill with information as to its contents, purposes, and effects to your conference and get their support for the bill. But we know there never has been any time when a Democratic Ways and Means Committee did not submit its bill with full explanation to its party caucus and obtain from the entire caucus approval of its action. You seem to be afraid of your bill or of your caucus. One of these causes prevented you from taking your membership into your confidence, in so far as you know its contents. Indeed, those who wrote the bill do not appear to have taken you very much into their confidence.

Mr. FREAR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARNER. I will.

Mr. FREAR. Believing as I do this is an economic and not a political proposition, I ask the gentleman why he has not in his motion to recommit included the excess-profits tax?

Mr. GARNER. I just told the gentleman.

Mr. FREAR. I did not hear.

Mr. GARNER. There are some gentlemen on this side of the House—

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FREAR. I ask that the gentleman have five additional minutes.

Mr. GARNER. I ask that I may have three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes additional. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GARNER. I said, Mr. FREAR, if they were all like you, I would put it in, but I have 300 heathen over here. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. SEARS. And although the gentleman from Wisconsin spoke against it he said he would vote for it, so he, too, would not count.

Mr. FREAR. I said it would be easy to defend it—

Mr. GARNER. No doubt if they were all like you, but when I have 300 heathen to deal with, in the name of God, I am going to do the best I can. I want somebody to go back to Missouri, to Nebraska, to Iowa, and throughout the farming sections of this country and meet some man on the stump, and when he reads this motion to recommit and asks him why he did not vote to retain these high surtaxes against this lot of excessively rich people, I want him to face that proposition where he can not get away from it by saying that something else was in the motion. [Applause on the Democratic side.] You are going to have to meet it squarely. You are going to have to give your reason why, and you are not going to be able to assign any other cause because I am not going to let you.

Mr. CHALMERS. May I ask the gentleman a question in order to relieve the gentleman's anxiety? It took only one session for our side to get behind our committee, and I understood it took the gentleman's party about four times on that side.

Mr. GARNER. Oh, we had no trouble at all, my dear sir, we had such a love feast that we just continued it. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.] That is the only reason. Mr. Chairman, I just took the floor for two points. First, I wanted to call attention to the fact that you are cutting down $150,000,000 by this bill when your report says you had cut it to the bone.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARNER. You have got to issue certificates of indebtedness; you are going to run the Government on credit for a year or two. I probably ought not to say that because there is not a man here, Democrat or Republican, who does not know that this bill is a mere enacting clause to be perfected in another body.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield for another question?

Mr. GARNER. Yes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. What was the vote in your Democratic love feast on this proposition?

Mr. GARNER. I do not know what proposition the gentleman is talking about.

Mr. LONGWORTH. On the motion to recommit the gentleman has just outlined.

Mr. GARNER. The gentleman from Texas was requested to make the motion that I am going to make.

Mr. LONGWORTH. What was the vote?

Mr. GARNER. None of your business. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I move not to strike out the last word, and I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I hold in my hand perhaps the most remarkable document that has ever been submitted to a Congress of the United States. It purports to be the views of the minority on this revenue bill. It is signed by but one member of the Committee on Ways and Means. The gentleman from Texas, when this bill was first reported, asked and received unanimous consent to present the views of the minority by 12 o'clock midnight on Friday. Why, together with his able colleagues, was it impossible to draft the minority report before 12 o'clock on Friday? Answer: Because they could not receive a telegram from Scotland Neck, N. C., before that time.

This report says:

While we oppose many provisions of the bill, we will have time to discuss only the two principal provisions of the Republican tax program.

Who is "we"?

Against both of these two principal propositions, the repeal of the excess profits and the reduction of the surtax, "we enter our protest." Who is "we"?

We must confess embarrassment—

Mark the engaging ingenuousness of this sentiment—

We must confess embarrassment and disadvantage in the fact that no Democratic member of the committee has been permitted by the Republican members to be present at any discussion of the proposed measure and no Democratic eye has been given the privilege of seeing even one word in the measure reported until the day of reporting.

Whose "Democratic eye"? Who is "we"? In addition to the honorable gentleman from Scotland Neck there are among the minority members of the Ways and Means Committee the Hon. JOHN M. GARNER, of Texas; the Hon. COLLIER, of Mississippi; the Hon. OLDFIELD, of Arkansas; the Hon. CAREW, of New York; the Hon. MARTIN, of Louisiana, and perhaps another one or two. But it does not make any difference. They are ciphers. They do not even sign a report. Just "we."

Mr. COLLIER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I will.

Mr. COLLIER. Do the gentleman and his colleagues on the committee approve and indorse the majority report of the Ways and Means Committee as presented to this House?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Did the gentleman sign the minority report?

Mr. COLLIER. Do you approve and indorse the majority report?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I want to find out the gentleman's qualifications before he addresses me the question.

Mr. COLLIER. If you do, why did you not sign it? Did the gentleman sign that majority report?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Did the gentleman sign this report?

Mr. COLLIER. He is a member of the Ways and Means Committee. And did the chairman of the committee who presented the majority report sign it?

Mr. LONGWORTH. The gentleman from Mississippi is unmindful of the rules of the House. The majority report is not signed by members. Is not the gentleman aware of that fact? Did he ever see a majority report signed by members of the committee?

Mr. COLLIER. A great many of them.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Never.

Mr. COLLIER. Do you indorse this majority report?

Mr. LONGWORTH. The gentleman is entirely ignorant of the rules of the House. On the contrary, the minority report is signed.

Mr. COLLIER. Say yes or no; do you indorse it?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I do indorse it.

Mr. COLLIER. Why did you not sign it?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Because under the rules of the House—

Mr. MANN. A majority report is the report of the committee, and the minority report contains the views of those who sign it.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The gentleman from Mississippi is disqualified from asking me that question. Get a reputation and some knowledge of the rules of the House before you ask a question which shows such fundamental and abysmal ignorance of the rules of the House. [Applause and laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. COLLIER. Possibly one reason I do not wish to acquire reputation is that I may acquire one like the gentleman from Ohio has.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The truth is, you were not asked to sign it. You have taken your orders, but you have disobeyed them to the extent of the motion to recommit. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] has let the cat out of the bag. He talks about a love feast of the Democratic Party. As a matter of fact, it was a dog fight. They had four different caucuses. They fought like tigers in the caucuses. The sick man at Scotland Neck—and nobody is sicker for him than I am—is well enough to control every one of the well men. They can not speak, they can not even bark, until he gives them permission. [Laughter.] They are going to depart from the program to this extent only, that the gentleman from Texas succeeded, after four days of the most intense and bitter fighting that ever took place in the Democratic caucus, in limiting the motion to recommit to one proposition. He thinks that by limiting to one proposition out of what they describe as a vicious, monstrous program, they may be able to induce some of the brethren on the Republican side to vote to sustain the Democratic report.

Think of these six honorable gentlemen—and they are all honorable men—they are not even accorded the courtesy of an opportunity to sign the report. Of all the pusillanimous, cowardly, silly propositions that has ever come to view in my service in Congress this report comes first.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I will.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. On page 4 of this report the pronoun changes from "we" to "I." [Laughter.]

Mr. LONGWORTH. I am greatly obliged to the gentleman for his illuminating suggestion.

Mr. OLDFIELD. Will the gentleman yield for one question?

Mr. LONGWORTH. May I call the attention of the gentleman from West Virginia to the fact that not only is the pronoun changed from "we" to "I," but it is emphasized in italics.

Mr. OLDFIELD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Is the gentleman a member of the Ways and Means Committee?

Mr. OLDFIELD. The gentleman knows whether I am or not. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Certainly, to a colleague, if he claims that right.

Mr. OLDFIELD. I heard the gentleman when he said to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLLIER] only a moment ago that a majority report was not signed by the majority members of the Ways and Means Committee. I hold in my hand a report, Tariff Reports, Miscellaneous, 1911-12, on this excise tax bill, reported March 14, 1912, signed by OSCAR UNDERWOOD and all the majority members of the Ways and Means Committee.

That is the report. You stated a moment ago that we never did it.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Is there a minority report?

Mr. OLDFIELD. I think there is a minority report.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Is that signed by the Republican members?

Mr. OLDFIELD. I think it is.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Certainly; we signed.

Mr. OLDFIELD. You made a statement a moment ago that we did not sign it. It was an error.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, may I have five minutes more?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Who signed this minority report? Mr. KITCHIN. Not another man. You were not even consulted. We have the courage of our convictions when we disagree with the majority. We are not ashamed to sign our names. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. OLDFIELD. Did you sign this majority report in this bill?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I did not, because it was not necessary, but I approve the bill. Does the gentleman approve of the minority report?

Mr. OLDFIELD. Absolutely, word for word.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Then why does not the gentleman offer a motion to recommit in accordance with the report?

Mr. OLDFIELD. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] explained why we decided that way, and that it was wise.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Oh, you thought "it was wise."

Mr. OLDFIELD. I think this report will show it.

Mr. LONGWORTH. There never has been submitted, so far as I know, to the House of Representatives in its history a minority report that was not signed by the minority members of the committee.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Yes.

Mr. MANN. There is no difficulty about the parliamentary law. The report of the committee is not usually signed at all. It is presented by a member of the committee. Sometimes it is signed. Minority views are not a report of the committee. They are only the views of the gentlemen who sign. Under the rules those minority views can be dropped into the basket and printed as a supplement to the report, so that the minority views only represent the views of those who sign. But in this case they represent, I suppose, the views of Mr. KITCHIN, who did not even sign the report.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Yes; but he put the "I" in italic. That is the Democratic "I." [Laughter.]

Mr. Chairman, that is all I have to say on this subject. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I take it that the country is not now and will not be so much interested in what a small minority without power to carry out its suggestions may suggest as it is and will be in what the tremendous majority is about to do. [Applause on the Democratic side.] The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] has just demonstrated that he knew about as much about what happened in the Democratic caucus as the minority members of the Committee on Ways and Means know of what happened in the Committee on Ways and Means after the majority had withdrawn themselves to make up this bill. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Oh, it is true that we upon this side of the Chamber have been embarrassed by the absence of that gallant leader, the Hon. CLAUDE KITCHIN [applause on the Democratic side], but we have not been as much embarrassed by his absence as you gentlemen would have been by his presence. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. This whole bill from beginning to end, upon the initiative of the majority of the Committee on Ways and Means, has been made a purely partisan proposition.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman join me in a proposition to take the tax off telegraph messages?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Is the gentleman prepared to make a motion to recommit the bill to do that?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I ask the gentleman to join me.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The gentleman will have to qualify on what he is going to propose before I am willing to join him. [Laughter.]

Why, Mr. Chairman, there was no occasion for this bill to have had the party lines drawn upon it by the majority. There was no reason why the minority members might not have been invited from the beginning to sit with the majority, dealing with this question of internal revenue taxes. It is true it has been the custom in the past in making up tariff bills for the party in power to make up its bill independent of the minority members. It has not been true in making up independent revenue bills. The majority chose to adopt this course for the first time.

The gentleman from Ohio talks of orders from a man in North Carolina to a small minority, of which he is the chosen leader. What orders did the majority receive from the White House? [Applause on the Democratic side.] Conference after conference was held, if current newspaper rumor is correct, and you are the responsible party charged under the Constitution with the duty of initiating this revenue legislation. We have not been permitted to have the slightest part or parcel in the making of this measure. We have not been permitted to offer a single amendment; we will not be permitted to offer a single amendment. This talk in the consideration of committee amendments will continue until up to the very minute that the hour of 3 arrives. No individual Member on either side of this House will have the opportunity to present a single suggestion in legislative form as to what ought to be done on this great bill, designed to raise from $3,500,000,000 to $4,000,000,000 and affecting, as no other character of legislation affects, every man, woman, and child in the Republic. What necessity was there for the rule? Yet your rule was even more drastic than the rule under which you forced the consideration of the tariff measure itself. Oh, the gentleman from Ohio will not succeed—

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I ask to proceed for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent for two additional minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The gentleman from Ohio and his colleagues will not be able to succeed, by making criticisms of a sick man in North Carolina, in diverting attention from the methods that they have pursued and the acts they have performed in making up this bill. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Nor will they be able to dictate to us the battle line that we shall form in our motion to recommit. That one poor privilege is left us, and that is all that is left us, and we shall at least choose that battle line in our own way and according to our own wishes. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. FREAR rose.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in 15 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan moves that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in 15 minutes. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I am one of those who believe in party discipline and believe in party regularity wherever it is possible to bring any political significance into the case. I will not allow myself to be dragged into a false position on a matter that is purely economic and not political. I supported the tariff bill because I thought we made it better than the Underwood law that was then in existence, which had been drawn by the opposite party. I shall support this bill and vote for it, because I believe it is better than existing law. But I want to say a word further. I fear that some of the criticisms aimed at this bill, which same criticisms have been presented in committee, are true. I fear that we are skating on thin ice and that we have a very small margin of revenues on which to go. In the next session we are going to be confronted with new appropriations by gentlemen who are going to urge them upon us, and we have no margin in this bill on which to go. Now, what is the situation between the two elements of the House here who are complaining politically one of the other? I have no voice to criticize either. The proposition as I now understand it is what is going to be submitted in the motion to recommit? It is to be limited, I understand, to the question of surtax, and in that $90,000,000 additional is involved. I am going to vote for the bill. I could not move to recommit if I so desired; but the important part of this bill, to my mind, is that $450,000,000 is involved in the excess-profits tax, and that tax stricken from existing law by the committee bill, in my judgment, ought to have been included in this motion to recommit. Then we would have some margin of revenue on which to go. As it is to-day, gentlemen, this $90,000,000 is almost negligible in the total amount of $4,000,000,000 to be raised that is involved in this bill. We ought to have had the whole $540,000,000 involved in the excess-profits tax and surtax repeal included in any motion to recommit. From this amount the bill now provides a substitute of only $111,000,000, which is involved in the 2½ per cent corporation increase tax, which makes a loss from these two sources of $425,000,000. I am not discussing the merits of these two taxes, which I considered at length during general debate.

Now, Mr. Chairman, all I care to say is this: The proposition before us is an economic proposition, and I sincerely think that our party is going to be placed on the defensive hereafter, and if we fail to come up to the proper measure because of the failure to provide sufficient revenues, if we endeavor to continue ordinary expenses of Government by means of certificates of indebtedness which we ought to meet by taxation, then we are going to place ourselves in a much worse position than we would be by retaining the excess-profits tax and the high surtaxes. I expect to vote for the bill. It has many praiseworthy features. I desire to vote for any motion to recommit that will help strengthen the bill by placing a larger amount of money in the Treasury with which to meet the incoming appropriations during the next fiscal year. That is my position.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, there is not time for an extended argument, but I wish to make a few suggestions. In my judgment one very fundamental fact in regard to taxation has been overlooked in this discussion. That is the general tendency to diffusion of all taxation upon consumers, whatever the rates or objects, and upon whomsoever levied. Every home in the United States, however humble, bears to-day an important part of the burden of this excess-profits tax and of this surtax. There is a delusion which has gripped a great many people that taxes can be imposed upon the rich which must be paid by them alone, and that is the worst excuse for extravagance that ever could be devised. In the old times the economists very generally agreed that wherever you placed taxes the one who first paid passed the tax on to the next. That is not true as a universal principle. It does not apply to inheritance taxes nor to gifts, though so eminent a financial writer as Prof. Bastable maintained that in its ultimate effect upon society an inheritance tax was passed on to the consumer. It does not apply to imposts upon certain classes of luxuries, such as diamonds. The rule of diffusion is affected by the elasticity of prices, and by prices that are fixed by custom. There are obvious illustrations of the shifting or incidence of taxes. An increase in the taxes on land and houses increases rentals on renewals; so does a tax to be paid by the holder of mortgages or notes increase rates of interest; transportation taxes increase freight rates and the cost of commodities. On the other hand, a tax imposed upon the lessor by the owner of land leased for 99 years can not be shifted to the lessee, nor, indeed, can the tax on an outstanding note or mortgage be shifted but the lender immediately takes into account the increased burden of taxation, and in any future transaction increases the rate. An exception exists where there is a monopoly in the control of any article and the price is fixed irrespective of the actual cost to the producer; also when an increase in price commensurate with the tax diminishes the demand and threatens a diminished market. Thus while the rule is not of universal application, the imposing of all taxes tends to raise prices, to increase the cost of all facilities, and the whole mass of population must bear the burden. So I say to my friend from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR] that in repealing the excess-profits tax and in repealing the surtax we are not standing on thin ice, but we are standing on fundamental grounds based on the very best principles of taxation. [Applause.]

The justification for these taxes was the enormous expenditures of the war. They were entirely appropriate in a time of expansion and exceptional profits, but they are especially burdensome when levied for a series of years in which depression succeeds activity and many of the gains which were thought to have been realized have been wiped out by subsequent losses.

The excess-profits tax throws the door wide open for evasion and dishonesty. A dishonest taxpayer can manipulate inventories and reports of income. Everyone who has examined the subject knows that salaries have been swollen to unusual proportions, that exorbitant amounts are expended for advertising, and the whole tendency of the tax is to destroy careful, prudent management and proper conduct of the business. All these things occur because so large a share of the excess profits must be paid to the Government.

Again, the tax—indeed, more than the tax—is passed on to the consumer. It enables producers to claim an exaggerated share of the expenses of operation as part of the cost, and can readily be utilized as a camouflage for profiteering.

Surtaxes upon incomes are of comparatively recent origin. They were first adopted by Italy in 1864, later by Austria in 1898. The former method in English-speaking countries was to establish a uniform or flat rate. The first income-tax law enacted in the United States imposed uniform rates upon all incomes; a later act in 1864 provided a rate of 3 per cent on incomes below $10,000 and 5 per cent above that sum.

With the development of great fortunes, however, progressive taxation is just and equitable. As regards surtaxes, the transfer of the cost to the general body of the public is not quite so obvious as in the case of the excess-profits tax, but in the first place the rate imposed by the present law of 65 per cent in addition to the normal tax is unprecedented. In England at the time when the war was at its very height the maximum rate of income taxes was substantially less than under the existing law in the United States. It was universally understood that these heavy surtaxes were to be temporary. Then, too, from the standpoint of yield or effectiveness, it is possible for the men of largest wealth to take advantage of investments such as the issues of tax-free Liberty and Victory bonds, also State, county, and municipal bonds, and thereby avoid taxation entirely. Even if these securities were not tax free, these heavy surtaxes would impose a serious restraint upon business, in that they discourage investment in industrial enterprises.

The country is now feeling the effect of both the excess-profits tax and these heavy surtaxes in that new undertakings are halted and opportunities for activities which otherwise would exist are abandoned.

I can not quite understand why such an outcry has been raised by the opposition that this bill results in grinding the faces of the poor and that it is contrary to the principles of democracy to repeal the surtaxes and diminish excess-profits taxes.

It was my impression that the act of 1913 as it was first reported in a Democratic House and passed and then reported by the Democratic majority of the Senate Finance Committee made no distinction between incomes, but the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] informs me that I am in error in this regard. The House bill of 1913 did include a moderate surtax, but at any rate many of the Democratic Senators vigorously opposed the larger and more comprehensive surtaxes imposed by the bill as it finally became a law. A prominent Democratic leader, having this part of the bill in charge, in opposing an amendment brought forward by Republican Senators for higher surtaxes, said:

The motive behind this amendment offered is not revenue. It is a punitive, vindictive motive. It is to punish and take from those who have large incomes, not because the Government needs the money but because the Government has the power to do it.

The hope of the country rests with this House of Representatives. The people expect us to reform the system of taxation. One of the main factors in the success of the Republican Party last autumn was the expectation that taxes would be diminished. The Republican platform promised at least by plain intimation that the surtaxes and excess-profits taxes should be done away with, and the Democratic platform was even more pronounced in this regard. The attention of the House has already been called to the opinions of Democratic Secretaries of the Treasury and to the message of President Wilson. The platform of the Democratic Party says:

We condemn the failure of the present Congress to respond to the oft-repeated demand of the President and the Secretaries of the Treasury to revise the existing tax laws. The continuance in force in peace times of taxes devised under pressure of imperative necessity to produce a revenue for war purposes is indefensible and can only result in lasting injury to the people. The Republican Congress persistently failed, through sheer political cowardice, to make a single move toward a readjustment of tax laws which it denounced before the last election, and was afraid to revise before the next election. We advocate tax reform and a searching revision of the war revenue acts to fit peace conditions so that the wealth of the Nation may not be withdrawn from productive enterprise and diverted to wasteful or nonproductive expenditure. We demand prompt action by the next Congress for a complete survey of existing taxes and their modification and simplification with a view to secure greater equity and justice in tax burden and improvement in administration.

There can be one meaning, and only one meaning, in this declaration; a demand that the recommendations of a Democratic President and Democratic officials for the repeal of the excess-profits taxes and the decrease of the surtaxes should be observed.

The minority has asserted that inheritance taxes should have been higher than proposed in this bill or in the existing law. Now I wish to express my belief in these taxes as among the fairest methods of raising revenue, most readily administered, and creating the least injury to the orderly course of events. But the States must have revenue. Gov. Cox, Democratic candidate for the Presidency last November, advocated leaving inheritance taxes to the States. However much I may differ from him in other questions, in this I believe he was right. A natural division would be the imposition of income taxes by the Federal Government and of inheritance taxes by the State governments.

I am not fearful of the issuance of Treasury certificates in case there is a deficiency of revenue. Our hope is that revenues will be sufficient. We must economize, and the spur of possible deficiency in income will be helpful rather than otherwise.

The country is suffering from the high cost of living; just as long as taxes are high the expense of each consumer will be high; especial attention rests upon appropriations made at Washington. This House must do its duty in relieving the burdens of the people and in promoting a revival of industry and commerce. New policies must be adopted suitable to a condition of peace and in the hope that peace will become the settled condition in the future. The hope of the world is in the disarmament conference to be held next November. [Applause.]

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, when this discussion was diverted into a political and partisan line, and when later we were favored by a discourse on certain very fundamental principles by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON]—before these two circumstances arose we were discussing a very important amendment, and as the time for debate has now been limited by the House I think it is quite advisable that we get back for the remaining few minutes to the discussion of the subject that is before us.

The amendment, as explained by my colleague [Mr. GREEN of Iowa], simply places all kinds of insurance companies upon the same plane, so far as items of taxation are concerned. Included in that is the premium paid both by life-insurance companies and fire-insurance companies. There has been a distinction in the law previously as to these premium payments. Now they are to be placed on a general parity—all treated alike. The former tax on premiums on fire insurance has been collected from the purchaser of the policy and not from the company. This has been a particularly onerous tax on those who have become holders of policies in mutual fire-insurance companies, which are made up of policyholders themselves and not for profit. And as there are very many such insurance companies in New England, particularly mutual fire-insurance companies, in which a great many people of moderate means hold policies, it will readily be seen that we are again acting in behalf of the masses, and, if I may be allowed to repeat myself in behalf of Mr. Average Man, contrary to the viewpoint that has been taken by our Democratic friends throughout this discussion.

Mr. JEFFERIS of Nebraska. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes.

Mr. JEFFERIS of Nebraska. Does this include fraternal accident insurance companies?

Mr. TREADWAY. It does not include fraternal insurance companies; whether it would include one with the word "accident," I am not certain. Fraternal insurance companies of all kinds are exempt, and the provisions of the law do not apply to them.

Mr. Chairman, I call for a vote on the amendment. The Committee on Ways and Means will later offer an amendment repealing the whole of section 503, which will undoubtedly be agreeable to the gentleman from Nebraska.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 41, line 14, after the word "is," strike out the remainder of the line and all of lines 15 to 22, inclusive, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "repealed, to take effect January 1, 1922."

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, the section that is repealed is a section with reference to deductions allowed insurance companies under the law that will be repealed January 1, 1922.

Now, I want to say one word to my friend from Texas and to the Democratic side generally. The gentleman from Texas says that he is going to offer an amendment in the form of a motion to recommit, which he frankly admits is not based on any principle, is not based on any theory, but one which is simply and solely a political trick with which he expects to catch Republican flies. The amendment is a fraud, and I can show it.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. Does the gentleman think there is no principle of government or economic principle involved in cutting down the surtaxes from 73 to 40 per cent?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. No political principle involved when you come in with a report saying that both the excess-profits tax and the provisions with reference to surtax ought to be repealed, and then come in and say we think we can get a few more Republican votes if we only retain the higher surtaxes.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Not until I get through; and let us see how much principle you have. You will have no principle in that particular, because the gentleman from Texas knows if anybody knows, and there is no economist among the Democrats, not one, who would claim any knowledge of political economy who will say that the proposition he is going to make would get more money from the rich people.

Mr. Chairman, I have certain well-defined ideas with reference to these surtaxes in the upper brackets. I have been opposed to reducing the surtaxes to the point fixed in the bill, which is 32 per cent, making with the normal tax a total of 40 per cent. Forty per cent of a man's income is a tidy sum, yet I doubt if it is high enough at present. It is perfectly evident that his proposal, which will be offered through a motion to recommit, would, instead of collecting more money from the rich than would be collected under this bill, collect less, and nobody knows it better than the gentleman from Texas. Every year the receipts from these taxes have been diminishing rapidly, until it is perfectly evident that soon we will get nothing from them and the parties who have been taxed will have their investments in tax-exempt securities, from which the Government will never get a dollar of revenue. If the gentleman will present a motion to reduce the surtaxes and normal tax to 50 per cent and put a tax of 10 per cent on gifts above $5,000, so that they can not divide up their property, I will support it. This would make the multimillionaires pay more taxes. The proposition of the gentleman from Texas is a fraud, for it will do just the opposite of what he claims for it.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment, and I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. Sisson. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I had not intended to say anything on this bill until my friend from Iowa stated that there was no principle involved in the question that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] phrased when he stated that he was going to make a motion to recommit the bill and strike out the provision you have in relation to the surtax.

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, there is a great principle involved in this matter. In my judgment, unless you tax the income of the very rich in the future this Republic will drift rapidly into socialism. If you will make an investigation of the amount of property controlled by princes, by dukes, by earls, by lords of the past who were inveighed against when we established this Republic, you will find that there are individuals now who by virtue of certain special privilege laws are levying greater tribute upon the masses of the people, upon those who labor and toil, than were ever levied in past history by kings and princes and potentates for their own use and benefit. Now, you had just as well make up your minds that you are going to call a halt. I have heard a great deal about shifting the burden, but I never have heard of a man inveighing against a tax when he knew he could shift it to the other fellow.

You will not find gathered around the Ways and Means Committee room those men who know that when you put the taxes on them they will be able to shift the tax onto the other fellow. Why, they know that they will get a profit on the tax itself. The people who come to these committees and inveigh against taxes are the people who pay them. We all know that is true. They are practical business men. It is not what they do not pay that hurts them; it is what they are paying now and can not shift to the backs of the poor that causes the howl. There never was a juster, a fairer, principle announced in taxation than that you should tax the man who has the great property, who has the great income, because when men have incomes that run up into the thousands and millions, you may take from them many dollars and you do not deprive a single member of their family of a school book or a pair of shoes. You may call this demagoguery if you please, but every time a man makes an announcement of that kind or character some gentleman is ready to rise up and say he is a demagogue. This is not demagoguery, it is pure democracy. When the people of America would establish a government of their own, if you will read the debates in Parliament, if you will read the statements of men of wealth who were generally Tories in the legislatures of the various Colonies, you will find that all were classed as demagogues who spoke for the people. Every step that the human family has made at one time or the other was led by some one who was called a demagogue. Abraham Lincoln was called an arrant demagogue; Thomas Jefferson was called a demagogue; Pym and Hampden in England were called demagogues. All of the people who inveigh against the privileged classes, who inveigh against those who are intrenched behind special privilege laws, must undergo the severe criticism of being called a demagogue.

Gentlemen of the House, make up your minds that you are to be confronted in the near future not simply by questions between Democracy and Republicanism but by something far more serious. What I fear is that there is another party being born in America—a party that is appealing not to those people who are willing to stand by individual efforts and what they may produce.

I believe in individual effort and in protecting individual effort without any assistance by law, but there is a great movement not only in America but in the world, and it is finding lodgment here, to the effect that by a community interest of certain great property rights the masses of the people will be better protected than by private ownership of these institutions, and this thing which does not appear now greater than a man's hand is finding lodgment in the hearts and minds of people. Men may smile and laugh as they please, but your property, your millions, your stocks and bonds, your factories will be as nothing if this movement once gains foothold. What became of the great leather industry of Russia? It was wiped out in one day. The reason I select that industry is because it was the greatest industry in all Russia. Take the leather and shoe industry of that Empire, and it excelled the world. They might not tan a hide as quickly as we do, but they used the old, natural process of tanning, and they made the best leather, the best harness, the best saddles in the world. Their factories were prosperous, and yet those industries were wiped out in one day by soviet law. Do not imagine that your private property, when you see your smoking factories, when you see your railroads that bind together the oceans, over which with incredible speed is being borne the commerce of the world—do not imagine that that property is safe and secure as an investment, except as in the minds and hearts of the people they are willing to back it up. In other words, you Republicans can not much longer fool the masses of the people. Like a mighty Niagara, when the ground swell comes, when the masses have lost confidence in both of these old political parties, you will be able no longer to control them.

You know, every one of you, that the charge made in reference to these income taxes is true, that when you get above $66,000 the average rate decreases, so that proportionately the richer the man is the less tax he pays. You can not answer that charge before the masses of the people. You may go before those people who contribute heavily in campaign funds, you may go to those people who enjoy these special privileges, who control the press, and you may get some indorsement there, but get among the masses of the people, the people who produce the wealth, those people to whom you appealed when you asked them to send you here, and you will find no encouragement at all. They will get their eyes open.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. Sisson. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to make any reply to what the gentleman is saying, but I rise simply to congratulate him on the evidence that he is now giving of a return to good health and a recovery from the severe accident which he has suffered, and in that I know all the Members on this side of the House will join as well as those upon his own. [Applause.]

Mr. Sisson. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The loss of his services would have been a great loss to the country. He has always fought graft wherever found. The gentleman from Mississippi has been one of the most valuable Members of this House in the interest of economy in Government, and I know that he will continue his efforts to reduce Government expenses, and support any proper proposal to that end, no matter from whom it comes.

Mr. Sisson. I am going to do the best I can to help you cut down expenses, right to the bone, and these men with whom I have served on the Committee on Appropriations will all tell you that I am willing to go down the line with them, and I play no politics in that committee. I hope that in what I am saying now I am not playing politics, but I have an interest in the future of my Government. I have children who will live after me I hope, and I want them to live in a Government where equal opportunity, not in mere words, but in fact, shall exist.

I want a Government where you tax not nakedness and hunger, but where you tax property and great incomes. If you do that, you will have behind that Government the muscle, the brain, the blood, the heart of the masses of the people, and they will defend it against all enemies and for all time. [Applause.] It takes that to make a great Government, and in saying this I want my Democratic colleagues and my Republican colleagues also to remember that there is a principle involved in this great question, a great principle of where you shall place the tax to run the Government—whether you shall place it on those who are best able to bear it or on those who are not able to bear it. I would rather put a little too much on the man who has hundreds of thousands and millions left after paying the tax than to take just a little bit too much from the poor fellow, because I would not deprive a child of a schoolbook or one single piece of necessary wearing apparel. When a man has an income of $66,000 it does not matter how much you tax him above that sum.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. Sisson. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one minute more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. Sisson. If a man has an income of a million dollars a year, so far as that man is concerned, so far as his family is concerned, you may take 100 per cent of what he makes above that and no member of his family will ever want for anything during the entire year. In Australia when a man makes an income of over $500,000 they tax the amount above that 100 per cent.

Take all of it, in other words. If in America a man makes more than a million dollars I shed no tears if you take all the balance of it. [Applause.]

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto do now close.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

The question was taken, and the committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I offer a further committee amendment, No. 69.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 41, strike out lines 23 and 24 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"Sec. 242. Paragraphs (11), (12), and (13) of subdivision (a) of section 234 of the revenue act of 1918 are repealed, to take effect January 1, 1922."

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. This is simply part of the insurance amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I offer a further committee amendment, No. 70 of the printed list.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 46, line 6, strike out the word "life."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I offer a further committee amendment, No. 71.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 46, strike out lines 14 to 26, inclusive, and lines 1, 2, and 3 on page 47 and insert in lieu thereof the following, each paragraph to begin with quotation marks:

"Sec. 243. That in lieu of the taxes imposed by sections 230 and 1000 there shall be levied, collected, and paid for the calendar year 1922 and for each taxable year thereafter upon the net income of every insurance company a tax as follows:

"(1) In the case of a domestic insurance company, 12½ per cent of its net income;

"(2) In the case of a foreign insurance company 12½ per cent of its net income from sources within the United States."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that committee amendments 72 to 78, inclusive, being committee amendments, be read by the Clerk and voted upon en bloc.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that amendments Nos. 72 to 78, inclusive, be reported, considered, and voted upon en bloc. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 47, line 4, strike out the words "a life" and insert in lieu thereof the word "an."

Page 47, line 14, after the word "membership," strike out the word "of" and insert in lieu thereof the word "or."

Page 47, line 17, strike out the words "a life" and insert in lieu thereof the word "an."

Page 48, line 11, strike out the word "An" and insert in lieu thereof the words "In the case of life insurance companies, an."

Page 49, line 14, strike out the words "a life" and insert in lieu thereof the word "an."

Page 50, line 8, strike out the words "life insurance company" and insert in lieu thereof the words "insurance company not exempt under the provisions of section 231."

The question was taken and the amendments were agreed to.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I offer a further committee amendment. I will offer committee amendments Nos. 80 and 81, and ask that they be reported and voted upon en bloc. I pass over amendment No. 79 temporarily.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the two amendments referred to may be considered and voted upon en bloc. Is there objection?

Mr. SEARS. Reserving the right to object, what becomes of amendment No. 79?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. That is passed over temporarily.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 61, line 22, after the word "transportation," insert the words "and insurance."

Page 61, line 24, after the figures "501," insert a comma and the following: "and sections 503 and 504."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment. Page 63, line 8, strike out the figure "6" and insert in lieu thereof the figure "4."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 63, line 8, strike out the figure "6" and insert in lieu thereof the figure "4."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I offer a further committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 69, strike out lines 8 to 10, inclusive, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"Sec. 802. Subdivision (5) of section 900 of the revenue act of 1918 is amended to read as follows:

"(5) Tennis rackets, nets, racket covers and presses, canoe paddles and cushions, polo mallets, golf bags and clubs, lacrosse sticks, balls of all kinds, including tennis, golf, lacrosse, billiard, and pool balls, fishing rods and reels, billiard and pool tables, chess and checker boards and pieces, dice, games and parts of games (except playing cards and children's toys and games), and all similar articles commonly or commercially known as sporting goods, except skates, snowshoes, skis, toboggans, baseball bats, gloves, masks, protectors, shoes, and uniforms, football helmets, harness uniforms and goals, basket-ball goals and uniforms, baseballs, basket balls, and footballs, 5 per cent;"

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, this amendment applies to the section on so-called sporting goods. It reduces the taxes generally on all sporting goods from 10 per cent to 5 per cent, and exempts from taxation altogether those particular articles which are of real athletic necessity. Those exempted from taxation are skates, snowshoes, skis, toboggans, baseball bats, gloves, masks, protectors, shoes and uniforms, football helmets, harness, uniforms and goals, basket-ball goals and uniforms, baseballs, basket balls, and footballs.

There never was any excuse, Mr. Chairman, for putting twice the tax on sporting goods that was put on automobiles and jewelry. That was done for some reason that I have not been able to fathom in the present revenue bill. I made as vigorous objection to it as I could at that time. I could not see any sense in imposing a tax on a small boy that wanted a baseball bat twice as high as on a man or woman who purchased a diamond ring or an automobile or an electric piano. We have an opportunity now to take off some of these tax burdens that the Democratic Party imposed on the consuming public. We are taking it altogether off of baseballs and baseball bats, such as my friend from Massachusetts used when young, and who was one of the most competent players that ever played on the Harvard baseball team.

Mr. TREADWAY. In view of the fact that the gentleman from Ohio did not designate what member of the Harvard team he was referring to in his remarks, let me state that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GALLIVAN], to whom he evidently refers, has two other colleagues on the Massachusetts delegation who were very able ball players at Harvard, namely, Messrs. WINSLOW and FROTHINGHAM. [Applause.]

Mr. LONGWORTH. And, as I understand, each one of those gentlemen played on Harvard nines that smeared Amherst.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

Mr. TAGUE. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have the amendment again read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is informed that the amendment has been sent temporarily away from the desk. Is the gentleman from Massachusetts willing to allow the debate to proceed and have the amendment reported when it is returned to the House before the vote is taken?

Mr. TAGUE. That will be all right.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment will be again reported before the vote is taken.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] just stated that now for the first time they had an opportunity to take off this tax on goods used by athletes—sporting goods. I am in hearty accord with removing that tax, but I would like to remind the gentleman from Ohio that, though his memory is generally correct and very accurate, for the moment he has forgotten, for he knows that for the past two years, if he had desired to do so, he could have taken this tax off of these goods, as the Republicans were in control of both the House and the Senate. And it is hardly fair for the gentleman to now say that he is glad that this is the first opportunity that he has had to take this tax off of these goods.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will again report the committee amendment.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. APPLEBY rose.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from New Jersey rise?

Mr. APPLEBY. I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment is withdrawn, and the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. APPLEBY] is recognized.

Mr. APPLEBY. As I understand it, this amendment exempts from taxation baseballs and baseball bats, and paraphernalia connected with baseball games, as well as footballs and football paraphernalia, basket-ball material of all kinds, and skates. I think it is a splendid idea, and I am glad the committee decided to report the amendment. It is an assurance to the dad who has to pay the bill for all of these things now required by the rising generation that Congress is legislating for all classes, including the boys' fathers. And inasmuch as I have had the privilege of appearing before the Ways and Means Committee, I take this opportunity of seconding the proposition of getting before the House such an important and what I am sure will be a popular amendment. Some weeks ago I introduced a bill, H. R. 7885, which included in its provisions the striking out of this entire paragraph. This morning, through the courtesy of the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, I had the pleasure of appearing before that committee and urging that a committee amendment be presented this afternoon removing the tax from these articles so necessary to the proper physical development of the boys and girls of this country. I said to the committee, and from the reporting of this amendment I now know that they agreed with me, that while it was true that this material was used in professional sports, yet it was so essentially a part of the educational and recreational life of our youth that it was a grave mistake to penalize them for the sake of the small amount of revenue derived from the tax on these goods. Like many of my colleagues, I had the pleasure of playing baseball and football in my youthful days, and know what it means to every boy. Let me assure you, gentlemen, that if you pass this amendment the boys of this land will rise up and call you blessed, and in addition to this you will have the genuine and sincere thanks of the fathers and mothers, the educators, and the medical profession for your wisdom in adopting the same. [Applause.]

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, I wish the gentleman who offered the amendment would say just what is exempted from taxes under this amendment.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Taxes generally are reduced on the entire paragraph and taxes relieved entirely on the following articles: Skates, snowshoes, skis, toboggans, baseball bats, gloves, masks, protectors, shoes and uniforms, football helmets, harness uniforms and goals, basket-ball goals and uniforms, baseballs, basket balls, and footballs.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman let me have that?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Does the gentleman desire to include golf balls?

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, I want to say to the gentleman from Ohio that I congratulate him in repealing the tax on these various articles. I want to especially congratulate him and his colleagues for taking off the tax on skates and toboggans. You are going to need a lot of them next year, and you want to buy them cheap. [Laughter.] I understand you are preparing for November, 1922, and you want to be relieved from this tax. And I congratulate you on it.

But, Mr. Chairman, this only illustrates what I said in the beginning, that if the Democratic Party were in power in this House it would repeal all the taxes except those I enumerated in my opening argument. You are only coming gradually to the position that the Democratic Party took in the beginning. You have repealed by committee amendment, forced upon you by argument of the Democratic minority and forced upon you by mutineering Members of your own side of the House, and by a storm of protest from the country, a large proportion of the taxes originally set out in the program in your conference.

The country is to be congratulated that at least the debate on this bill has brought about the repeal of certain taxes existing in the bill that was framed by the Republican conference. You had already been driven to abandoning the stamp tax on checks, the flat tax of $10 on all automobiles, whether they be $250 Fords owned by poorer people, or $10,000 machines owned by the very rich. Your administration wanted that kind of a bill out and out, but you had to reform it where the people caught its vicious parts and camouflage it more. The Republican conference, in the first place, did a good job over what the Ways and Means Committee did. Now, the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union has done a much better job than the Republican conference did. So, if we had time and opportunity for the Democrats to join with you over there, a good portion of whom believe in the reduction of these taxes, we would finally make this a fairly good bill.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Do I understand the gentleman is lamenting the fact that we have not taken the tax off of jewelry?

Mr. GARNER. The gentleman from Ohio has so much jewelry. I thought we might as well leave that part of it to him, and especially the golf ball part. He speaks of golf balls. I have no doubt if the gentleman had his own way he would take it off of all kinds of balls. I do not blame him for what he did. I believe all of them ought to be repealed. No tax ought to be placed on them at all, including baseballs, or on any other kind of balls.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The question was taken and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. Mr. Chairman, I offer a committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Colorado offers a committee amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment offered by Mr. TIMBERLAKE: Page 67, line 18, after the word "same" insert a comma and the following: "or admissions to any exhibit, entertainment, or other pay feature, conducted by such association as a part of any such fair, if the proceeds therefrom are used exclusively for the maintenance and the operation of such agricultural fairs."

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. Mr. Chairman, the object of this amendment is to broaden the scope of paragraph (b) in section 703, which provides that no tax shall be levied under this bill for any admission to agricultural fairs where none of the profits are distributed to the stockholders or members of the association conducting the same; and this amendment simply enlarges that a little, so that any pay features within the fair are treated in the same way where all these profits are expended in promoting the fair by the association.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Colorado has the floor. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. I yield.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida is recognized.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Chairman, I think I ought to make a brief statement in fairness to myself. Several of my Republican colleagues have come to me this morning, as have several of my Democratic colleagues, and stated they understood that I would demand the reading of the engrossed copy of this bill. I can not understand how this report got out. I have never dreamed of making any such demand. I have never intimated to anyone that I would make any such demand. I shall not make it, and I trust no Member on this side of the House will make a demand for the reading of the engrossed copy of the bill. [Applause.]

I feel I should make this statement, because evidently many of my friends have heard that I would make it; I do not know how many. I trust the Members of the House know me well enough to know I am sincere when I say that I hope no Member of the House will demand the reading of the engrossed bill.

Mr. FULMER rose.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I move that the debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan moves that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in five minutes. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. FULMER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina moves to strike out the last three words.

Mr. FULMER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, I am indeed glad to have the opportunity to discuss and to vote upon this amendment to amend the revenue bill so as to exempt agricultural fairs from paying a war tax on all pay features conducted by them. On account of the one-sided plan employed for the consideration of this measure, so intensely vital to all the people, only a very few Members of this House have a chance to offer amendments or to present their views in behalf of the American people.

My interest in this matter was recently enlisted by my friend, D. Frank Efrid, secretary of the South Carolina State Agricultural and Mechanical Association. Yesterday I ascertained from the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HAWLEY] that his committee had considered an amendment of this nature, but without effect, and that it seemed as if the tax would have to stand as it is.

Feeling that it was unjust to tax these necessary features of the agricultural gatherings of this Nation, which are conducted not for profit but for the inspiration and education of the great masses of the people, and that these handmaidens of our greatest industry were being overlooked, like red-headed stepchildren, I consulted Mr. Wallace, our Secretary of Agriculture, and found him heartily in favor of the removal of this tax on the very thing he is trying so hard to upbuild, but, naturally, by reason of the separation of the departments of Government, unable to take the initiative.

In a few minutes the committee was to assemble for its final meeting, and the outlook for reconsideration of the matter, so as to get it presented to this House in the only permissible way, was discouraging, but at the eleventh hour I found a strong friend on the committee in the gentleman from Colorado [Mr.

TIMBERLAKE], who agreed to request Secretary Wallace's views and present them to the committee.

And so, gentlemen, Mr. TIMBERLAKE has presented this amendment with his committee's indorsement. We are spending millions of dollars on the Department of Agriculture in county and State demonstration work, both in the home and on the farm, and I can not see how a single Member of this House could vote to preserve this tax, as its retention in the bill would make for the stifling of the very thing that our appropriations are intended to foster.

I find Secretary Wallace a splendid man, using his fertile brain and his practical experience to expand his department and help the agricultural interests of the country. This is the basic industry of the Nation, and we should stand for every movement to advance it.

I am also glad to have had the privilege of voting to remove from this bill the $10 tax on retailers of soft drinks and the tax on patent medicines, and if I had a chance—as I ought to have as a Member of Congress, but debarred by gag rule especially designed to put this bill over, regardless of what I or others may think of it—I would offer an amendment to remove all the nuisance taxes and substitute some better source for deriving our national upkeep.

As a new Member I want to say a few words concerning some of the arguments I have heard here on the floor of the House to-day and almost every day during the last five months. I feel very much like a minister in my section of the great State of South Carolina whose piety, brotherly love, and religion kept him from fighting, but who, when chased around his home by an angry citizen, finally became tired and got his dander up and stopped running and faced his pursuer and said:

Brother, I have stood this as long as I can and now I am going to throw off my coat and my religion until I give you hell.

[Laughter.]

Gentlemen, I feel like throwing aside my modesty and laying down my partyism and proceeding to give you my mind and the minds of the American people on the procedure of the present Congress.

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, the American people are suffering to-day as never before in the history of our great country, and I believe and they believe that it is because the Congress fails to function in the way of building constructive legislation in a businesslike and common-sense manner. In my campaign last summer I charged that, on account of the unbusinesslike procedure on the part of the Sixty-sixth Congress, in wasting its time, "shooting hot air" and playing politics, and on account of the unbusinesslike management of the Federal Reserve Board, composed of seven men whose policy redounds to the interest of big business and to the great harm of little business, unless this policy was reversed bankruptcy would be rampant.

You know sometimes our Negroes get hold of this Tinkham doctrine that is disseminated on the floor of this House and before they get straightened out somebody "stretches" a few of them. And so, on a certain occasion the neighborhood turned out the next morning to view the body of a Negro swinging from a limb of a big oak tree, and attached to his body they found a card bearing these words, "In statu quo." No one seemed to be able to explain this foreign language, so they sent over the way for a country-school teacher. When the professor arrived he adjusted his glasses, looked the words and the remains over, and remarked:

My friends, it has been quite a while since I read any Latin, but if my memory serves me right these words mean that this here negro is in a hell of a fix.

[Laughter.]

I am going to predict to this Congress that unless you cut out this legislating and speech making for political purposes, shooting hot air and wasting the taxpayers' hard-earned money, and proceed to use your time in building constructive legislation, tending to reduce red tape and waste, in less than 12 months you are going to have this country in that kind of statu quo that the professor called "a hell of a fix." [Applause.]

Much has been said about business men refusing to put their money into new enterprises, and the usual reason given is that they are seeking ways to evade the burden of taxation. As a business man, I can tell you why they are tired of taxation as handed out by the Congress. It is because business has ceased to be the light by which you are guided; because the interests of the few are prevailing over the interests of the many; because you allow the United States Chamber of Commerce and scores of other outside organizations, which are organized for the protection of the few to write the important legislation that comes before this body.

This House has had but little to do with the writing of this bill, and the Members know but very little about it; and what "gets" me, as a new Member, is that you bring it in here under a special rule that absolutely denies the Congress, which should truly represent the American people, a chance even to offer an amendment. Not only does the Committee on Ways and Means acknowledge that it did not write this revenue bill now under so-called "consideration," but it is acknowledged that the tax money of the American people has been paid out of the Treasury of the United States to "experts" for their services in preparing it when you yourselves are already paid to do it.

The revenue act of 1918 must have been written by, and I understand it was written by, expert auditors and accountants, and the business man is kicking because it is so complicated and tied up with red tape that not one man out of a thousand men can make out his tax returns, and this has resulted in the opening up of thousands of offices by accountants and the employment of thousands of experts in the revenue department, thereby costing the taxpayers, I am told, over $30,000,000 to run this division, loaded with expert parasites who are sapping the lifeblood out of the producer and consumer.

And then, too, practically all business concerns have to call in one or more of these so-called experts or some attorneys to untangle the maze for them, thereby costing them millions of dollars for the unjust necessity of hiring outside assistance for making out their returns. And even then they have no assurance that they will not be called upon during the following five years for alleged additional taxes due.

I have in mind the case of a South Carolina merchant who has just been notified that he has been assessed additional taxes of $9,000 for the years 1917, 1918, and 1919, when the man had submitted as correct returns as he and paid assistants could make under the complicated schedules, which are differently interpreted by different experts. And this merchant, a patriotic citizen, honest and intelligent, was allowed, during one of the hardest periods to raise cash that this country has ever known, just 30 days in which to pay. The collector did not persecute him. It was the law.

Ah, gentlemen, you are long on creating commissions and new departments and paying off your political debts by placing in high-salaried positions those to whom you are obligated, regardless of the test of fitness!

I understood that the Federal reserve system was not created for the purpose of making money, but that it was to take care of just such a situation as is confronting the American people to-day. To my mind it is one of the finest systems that could be devised, but in some strange way it seems that seven men can make or break any section of our country. When one reads the combined statement of the 12 Federal reserve banks, made at the close of business May 25, he is struck with the indignant feeling that they have violated right and reason by charging unreasonable rates of discount to member banks. That statement shows that, after paying 6 per cent dividends to the stockholders on a paid-in capital of $102,173,000, they actually have a surplus of $202,036,000, besides $35,271,000 reserved for Government franchise tax.

I have a bill now pending before the Banking and Currency Committee to restrict the rediscount rates to an amount not exceeding 5 per cent. But it is wasted time on my part, because the majority of the committee will not report the bill. I have also introduced a concurrent resolution urging the Federal Reserve Board to give earnest consideration to the prompt lowering of the rediscount interest rate on Liberty bonds to 4 per cent and on agricultural paper to 5 per cent. But instead of a businesslike disposition of the matter this, too, is allowed to slumber peacefully.

We find also from the reports of the Comptroller of the Currency and of the Federal Reserve Board, covering the business of the regional reserve banks of the Nation during the last 12 months, that there is a decrease in the per capita circulation of nearly $400,000,000; a restriction in credits of $1,029,826,000, and a shrinkage in deposits of $2,303,562,000, making a grand total reduction of $3,733,388,000 in the financial strength of the people.

At the same time the gold reserve shows an increase of $502,472,000 within the same period—now standing at $2,620,638,000—and according to the report of the Comptroller of the Currency there could now be issued by the Federal reserve banks safely and legally $2,692,000,000 additional reserve notes or there could be granted $3,076,869 additional deposit credits.

Now, gentlemen, if these statements are true why is it that the Federal reserve banks are allowed to continue to hold rediscount rates at 6 and 7 per cent, when everybody knows that they can be reduced to from 4 to 5 per cent on commercial and agricultural paper, and thereby do more to restore confidence and relieve the situation than any one thing that could be done?

It is all clear to my mind. Over a year ago operations of the Federal land banks were held up under an injunction. Between then and the time when a decision was rendered in the bank's favor—probably a year—the money sharks of Wall Street were having a velvet time loaning millions on farm lands at high rates of interest, with several per cent commissions going to middlemen operating between the borrowers and the lending companies.

Not only that, but some weeks ago you had a chance to vote a loan of $100,000,000 to this same land bank, instituted to help the farmer, to take care of thousands of applications for loans that are coming to it from the agricultural districts of America, so that they could use this money to save crops and prevent bankruptcies. But you cut this needed amount down to $25,000,000, knowing at the time that this bank could not sell its bonds, bearing 5 per cent, to the business world, because there was the chance to demand better rates based on the high rediscount rates of the Federal reserve banks, and it seems to me that these rates remain at this high level to allow these war-time profiteers to place their money in high-rate interest-bearing bonds and mortgages.

I do not believe there is a man on the floor of this House who can state the running expenses of this Federal reserve system that is penalizing and overcharging the country by high rediscount rates, with penalties for short reserve balances, and spending thousands of dollars for high salaries, for which there is apparently no restriction of law.

I charge you with creating departments and placing at their head your political creditors, with good salaries and with plenty of appointees under them at salaries even larger than Congress stipulates for Cabinet heads.

There is the head of the Shipping Board, the advertising man who was so efficient in publicity matters that he was called on last year to herald to the world the virtues of the Republican Party. He comes in for this $12,000 position, and apparently he is not to be interrupted from carrying on his special line of work, as he has a technical assistant at $20,000, several attorneys drawing from $25,000 to $35,000—more than twice as much as is paid to justices of the Supreme Court of the United States—three or four at $15,000, and a whole flock with salaries ranging from that down to $7,500, a total of 21 lawyers at an annual expense of some $266,000. And Mr. Lasker says that the half has not yet been told, and it is even stated that before he gets through with his attorney personnel these salaries will amount to between $500,000 and $1,000,000 a year. God save the country!

Abraham Lincoln said you could fool all the people a part of the time, but that you could not fool all the people all the time. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of this House, I want to say to you that our people are reading and thinking more than ever, and they are fast realizing that Congress is a joke, and that instead of bringing relief to the country you are pursuing a policy that is creating bread lines, insanity, suicide, and bankruptcy, which, if not checked by wholesome measures, lead to bolshevism and revolution. [Applause.]

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, all time has expired on this amendment.

Mr. SWING. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to ask the gentleman from Colorado one question.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that debate was closed by vote of the committee. The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HADLEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer a committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington offers a committee amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 61, line 21, after the word "due," insert the following: "While the title to such gross estate remains in the heirs, devisees, or distributees thereof; but no part of such gross estate shall be subject to such lien, or to any claim or demand for any such tax if the title thereto has passed to a bona fide purchaser for value."

Mr. HADLEY. Mr. Chairman, the bill contains a provision on page 61 introducing new matter into the law, and it is designed to operate to expedite the closing of estates in the hands of executors so that there may not be unnecessary delay. It provides, in effect, that the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, on written application for an early receipt to the executor, on the payment of the amount of inheritance tax due, shall as soon as possible ascertain the amount due and notify the executor, and in any event within one year. At the end of that section, however, is a proviso to the effect that, while the executor may be relieved from personal liability upon the payment of the amount due, the discharge shall not operate to discharge the gross estate from the lien of any additional tax that may thereafter be found due. Upon further consideration, the committee were clearly of the opinion that that would perpetuate an uncertain and contingent lien for an indefinite period of time unless it was qualified. The effect of the amendment now offered is to qualify that proviso and the section so as to operate to cut off any lien on the property of the estate for any additional tax whatever after the discharge of the executor, and from any subsequent tax that may be ascertained when the estate has passed into the hands of a bona fide purchaser; but it would still remain upon the gross estate while it remains in the hands of the heirs, devisees, or distributees, on the theory that there might be, possibly on account of fraud, mistake, or newly discovered property, an equitable claim which when ascertained ought to be paid by them.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HADLEY. I yield to the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. As I understand, under the practical operation of the present law it is pretty nearly impossible for an executor to settle an estate and be sure that he has absolved himself from personal liability or that he has closed the estate in such a way that third persons taking from heirs or devisees are free from liability.

Mr. HADLEY. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. As I understand it, then, this amendment which you now propose aims to cure that evil, and permits the executor to file a petition or application with the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to free himself from individual liability and the estate in the hands of third persons from any lien from taxes?

Mr. HADLEY. It not only does that but it operates to expedite the settlement of the estate in the hands of the executor and protects it from any additional lien in the hands of bona fide purchasers.

I ask for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I offer a committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers a committee amendment, which the clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 70, strike out lines 11 to 24, inclusive, and page 71, strike out lines 1 to 22, inclusive, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

Section 808 and subdivisions (20) and (21) of section 900 of the revenue act of 1918 and the paragraph immediately following said subdivisions are amended to read as follows:

"(19) Yachts and motor boats not designed for trade, fishing, or national defense; and pleasure boats and pleasure canoes, if sold for more than $15, 5 per cent."

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, this amendment does three things. It strikes out the taxes on perfumes, extracts, toilet waters, and so forth, also the tax on proprietary medicines, and reduces to 5 per cent the tax on yachts. The committee believe that the Government will get more money from a 5 per cent tax than it now gets from the 10 per cent tax.

I ask for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I offer a committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers a further committee amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 71, line 23, and page 72, lines 1, 2, 5, 7, 9, 11, and 12, strike out the subdivision numbers "(23)," "(24)," "(25)," "(26)," "(27)," "(29)," and "(30)," respectively, and insert in lieu thereof "(20)," "(21)," "(22)," "(23)," "(24)," "(25)," "(26)," and "(27)," respectively.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, this amendment merely makes the necessary clerical changes to correspond to the preceding amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following committee amendment:

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan offers the following committee amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 75, after line 3, insert a new section to read as follows:

SEC. 902. Section 1003 of the revenue act of 1918 is amended by adding at the end thereof a new paragraph to read as follows:

"On and after January 1, 1922, the tax imposed by this section shall apply only in the case of yachts or boats over 5 net tons and over 32 feet in length."

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, the effect of this amendment is to relieve motor boats less than 32 feet in length and less than 5 tons capacity.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was considered and agreed to.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 74, line 7, after the word "special," insert the words "and stamp."

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, that is to accord with the previous amendments that have been adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 75, after line 3, insert a new section to read as follows:

"Sec. 903. Subdivision (2) of Schedule A of title 11 of the revenue act of 1918 is amended to take effect January 1, 1922, to read as follows:

"2. Bonds, indemnity and surety: On all bonds executed for indemnifying any person who shall have become bound or engaged as surety, and on all bonds executed for the due execution or performance of any contract, obligation, or requirement, or the duties of any office or position, and to account for money received by virtue thereof, and on all policies of guaranty and fidelity insurance, including policies guaranteeing titles to real estate and mortgage guarantee policies, and on all other bonds of any description, made, issued, or executed, not otherwise provided for in this schedule, except such as may be required in legal proceedings, 50 cents: Provided, That policies of reinsurance shall be exempt from the tax imposed by this subdivision."

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is practically the same as amendment 87 in the printed list, with some clerical changes.

Mr. BLANTON. What is this 50 cents for?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. That applies to the bond. The 50 cents is just the same as in the present law.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word to ask the gentleman a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa has control of the time.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BLANTON. The 50 cents provided for in this amendment is what, 50 cents on a thousand?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. No; that is a document tax.

Mr. BLANTON. It is not 50 cents on each thousand contained in the bond?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Oh, no.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. This is not a tax on bail bonds?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. No.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. For instance, if a man was convicted of a crime or charged with a crime and he gives bond, you do not put a tax on that bond?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. No.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 74, after line 6, insert a new section to read as follows:

"Sec. 814 (a) If (1) any person has, prior to August 15, 1921, made a bona fide contract with a dealer for the sale or lease, after the tax takes effect, of any article in respect to which a tax is imposed by section 900 of the revenue act of 1918 (as amended by this act) or by this subdivision, and in respect to which no corresponding tax was imposed by such section 900 as in force prior to its amendment by this act, and (2) such contract does not permit the adding, to the amount to be paid thereunder, of the whole of the tax imposed by such section 900 as amended by this act, then the vendee or lessee shall, in lieu of the vendor or lessor, pay so much of the tax imposed by such section 900 as amended by this act as is not so permitted to be added to the contract price.

"(b) If (1) any person has, prior to August 15, 1921, made a bona fide contract with any other person for the sale or lease, after the tax takes effect, of any article in respect to which a tax is imposed by section 900 of the revenue act of 1918 (as amended by this act) or by this subdivision, and in respect to which a corresponding but greater tax was imposed by such section 900 as in force prior to its amendment by this act, and (2) such contract does not permit the deduction, from the amount to be paid thereunder, of the whole of the difference between the corresponding tax imposed by such section 900 prior to its amendment by this act and the tax imposed by such section as amended by this act, then the vendor or lessor shall refund to the vendee or lessee so much of the amount of such difference as is not so permitted to be deducted from the contract price.

"(c) If (1) any person has, prior to August 15, 1921, made a bona fide contract with any other person for the sale or lease, after the tax takes effect, of any article in respect to which a tax was imposed by section 900 of the revenue act of 1918 as in force prior to its amendment by this act and in respect to which no corresponding tax is imposed by such section as amended by this act, and (2) such contract does not permit deduction from the amount to be paid thereunder of the tax imposed by such section 900 prior to its amendment by this act, then the vendor or lessor shall refund to the vendee or lessee so much of the amount of such tax as is not so permitted to be deducted from the contract price.

"(d) The taxes payable by the vendee or lessee under subdivision (a) shall be paid to the vendor or lessor at the time the sale or lease is consummated, and collected, returned, and paid to the United States by such vendor or lessor in the same manner and subject to the same penalties and interest as provided by section 502 of the revenue act of 1918.

"(e) Any refund by the vendor or lessor under subdivision (b) or (c) shall be made at the time the sale or lease is consummated. Upon the failure of the vendor or lessor so to refund, he shall be liable to the vendee or lessee for damages in the amount of three times the amount of such refund, and the court shall include in any judgment in favor of the vendee or lessee in any suit for the recovery of such damages, costs of the suit and a reasonable attorney's fee to be fixed by the court.

"(f) As used in this section, the term 'dealer' includes a vendee who purchases any article with intent to use it in the manufacture or production of another article intended for sale."

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. KINCHELOE. I want to ask the gentleman a question not pertaining exactly to this amendment. In studying this report of the majority members of the Ways and Means Committee I figure it that you are going to have $193,640,000 less revenue than you figure you will have by your own report.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I have not the report at hand and can not turn to it now, but I know there is a mistake in that addition.

Mr. KINCHELOE. On page 4 is it not true that there is a mistake?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Is it not a fact that you will have $193,640,000 less revenue than you say you will have in the report?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. All of us know about that, but since the report was made we increased the revenue provided for by the bill by more than $300,000,000.

Mr. KINCHELOE. I do not know, but would like to get some information.

Mr. FORDNEY. When these amendments are out of the way we shall be very glad to explain that.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Very well.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is intended to prevent an injustice being created by our change in taxes in an instance like this. Where a tax is now placed on a retail dealer with respect to certain goods in a few instances we have changed the tax and put it on the manufacturer. Let us say that the manufacturer has contracted to deliver those goods at a certain price some time in 1922. He will be subject to the tax, unless he made some provision about it in the contract, without getting any repayment for it. This amendment provides that he can make the vendee pay the tax, and also provides for cases where the tax has been reduced for making a corresponding reduction.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 56, amend the new section previously inserted by the Committee of the Whole as a substitute for lines 4, 5, and 6 by inserting before the figures "242" the figures "241" and a comma, and by striking out before the figures "250" the word "and," and by inserting after the figures "250" a comma and the word "and," and the figures "903."

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that this amendment be voted upon, owing to the parliamentary situation. Yesterday we agreed to this section which it is now proposed to amend. It was correct at that time. By reason of changes made by the Committee of the Whole this morning it is necessary to insert two more section numbers. The amendment which I have sent to the desk adds these two numbers to the list already in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the gentleman a question. This morning I asked him about this list No. 3 of amendments. I was not able to get a copy of it at that time, although I made efforts to do so. I now have it, and I find on page 3 that amendments numbered 83, 84, and 85 are stricken out. Evidently those amendments were agreed on by the committee or they would not have been printed. Has the committee since decided not to offer those amendments?

Mr. TILSON. No; these were amendments which were tentatively agreed to by certain members of the committee. They were printed for submission to the full committee, but before the full committee met, and in some cases after the full committee met, certain changes were made in the amendments.

Therefore it was necessary to rewrite them, and these particular amendments on list No. 3 were then stricken out.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The new amendments are broader than the original amendments.

Mr. TILSON. The new amendments, the entire committee, Democrats and all, think will serve the purpose better than those printed in the list.

Mr. SEARS. Did the Democratic members meet also?

Mr. TILSON. They did each morning, and participated in passing upon all of these amendments.

Mr. SEARS. Will amendment No. 84 be offered?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. That will not be necessary now.

Mr. SEARS. Why?

Mr. TILSON. It related to the striking out of certain articles in section 21, as I remember it. That entire section has been stricken out. Therefore the amendment is now unnecessary.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following committee amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 77, after line 5, insert a new section, to read as follows, and renumber the subsequent sections in accordance therewith:

"Sec. 1005. (a) There is hereby established a commission to be known as the 'tax investigative commission' (hereinafter in this section referred to as the 'commission'), and to be composed of nine members, as follows:

"(1) Three members who shall be Members of the Senate, to be appointed by the President of the Senate;

"(2) Three members who shall be Members of the House of Representatives, to be appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives; and

"(3) Three members who shall represent the public, to be appointed by the President.

"(b) Any vacancy in the commission shall be filled in the same manner as the original appointment. The members representing the public shall serve without compensation except reimbursement for travel, subsistence, and other necessary expenses incurred in the performance of the duties vested in the commission by this section. The members who are Members of the Senate and House of Representatives shall serve without compensation in addition to that received for their services as Members of the Congress.

"(c) The Secretary of the Treasury shall furnish the commission with such clerical assistance, quarters, stationery, furniture, office equipment, and other supplies as may be necessary for the performance of the duties vested in the commission by this section.

"(d) It shall be the duty of the commission—

"(1) To investigate the effect upon the Federal revenues of tax-exempt State and municipal securities, and possible methods of Federal taxation of such securities;

"(2) To investigate the effect of the existing differences in law between the Federal taxation of individuals and partnerships and of corporations;

"(3) To investigate the taxation of expenditures and the reduction of the tax rates upon savings as means for raising revenues, stimulating thrift, and redistributing the burdens of taxation;

"(4) To investigate the effect of income and profits taxes upon the accumulation and investment of liquid capital; and

"(5) To make from time to time such recommendations as it deems advisable pursuant to such investigations, and to report on or before the first Monday in December of each year to the President and to the Congress as to its activities.

"(e) The expenditures of the commission shall be allowed and paid upon the presentation of itemized vouchers therefor, approved by the commission and signed by the chairman thereof. Reimbursement under the provisions of subdivision (b) of the members representing the public shall be made out of moneys in the Treasury of the United States. All other expenditures of the commission shall be paid one-third out of the contingent fund of the Senate, one-third out of the contingent fund of the House of Representatives, and one-third out of moneys in the Treasury of the United States. For the expenditures of the commission which are to be paid out of moneys in the Treasury of the United States there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $5,000.

"(f) The commission shall cease to exist on December 31, 1922."

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the amendment.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, this section provides for the appointment of a special commission, the life of which will extend until December, 1922, a little over a year from the time this bill goes into effect. The purpose of the appointment of the commission is to give sufficient time to a complete study of the taxation problem with which we are confronted to-day, in so far as the opportunity is afforded now for investment in a kind of security which is tax exempt. Members of the House are, of course, familiar with the decisions of the Supreme Court and are familiar with the constitutional provision because of which it is claimed the Federal Government can not tax municipal securities.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I presume the gentleman has in mind the sixteenth amendment to the Constitution, which gives the United States the right to impose and levy a tax upon the income of every individual, it makes no difference from what source it comes.

Mr. TREADWAY. I am glad the gentleman from Michigan has referred to that point. I am not a lawyer, but I realize there are able lawyers who hold that we can tax municipal securities. There are lawyer Members of this body who are of that opinion. I hope that opinion is correct. I wish it were possible to-day to write into the statute a law taxing municipal securities, but if the committee had reported such a provision there is such diversity of view among leading jurists themselves, that, of course, such a law as we might have written would have been taken to the Supreme Court, and it would naturally have held up the application of the law for an indefinite period of time.

Therefore it seemed wise to the Committee on Ways and Means in dealing with this subject not directly to legislate at this time, but leave the matter open for the time being and have it placed in the hands of an expert commission, three experts on taxation selected by the President from the public and three Members from each branch of the Congress selected by the respective presiding officers. If the commission should bring in a favorable report of suggested legislation it would not in the opinion of the committee delay the legislation on this very important point. We are, I think, all anxious to see some way of avoiding this tremendous opportunity of escaping taxation on the part of the investment public. So, Mr. Chairman, it was thought by the committee that in all likelihood time would be saved by bringing in this form of legislation for the appointment of a board to study the problems and report as soon as opportunity might offer.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Massachusetts may be extended for two minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. TREADWAY. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, this amendment provides for the expenditures of a commission which are to be paid out of moneys in the Treasury. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated the sum of $5,000, which is one-third of the total expense. Does the Committee on Ways and Means in offering this amendment understand that that limits the right to make an appropriation hereafter to $5,000?

Mr. TREADWAY. In view of the fact that three Members are not to be paid and the other six are to be Members of the Congress drawing a salary now, it was thought that $15,000 would be ample to cover the costs to be incurred for expenses only.

Mr. MANN. Well, of course, the purpose of this provision inserted in the bill is to authorize an item in an appropriation bill which is not subject to a point of order. Does the committee understand by this an item proposing to appropriate any more than $5,000 would be subject to a point of order?

Mr. TREADWAY. Well, I do not think that point has been brought up, but as far as the committee are concerned we are perfectly willing that the total expenses of the commission should be limited to $15,000.

Mr. MANN. I am talking about what the committee understands to be the effect of this provision. Is it the purpose—

Mr. TREADWAY. No; I will say to the gentleman that the point that he raises was not brought up in the committee.

Mr. MANN. Is it the purpose to provide beyond the appropriation of $5,000, unless it is limited to that?

Mr. TREADWAY. No; it is not. We did not desire directly to bring in an item of appropriation, because we knew it would be subject to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee make the point of order?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I am willing to reserve the point of order still further, but I shall make it.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may speak for 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that he may speak for 10 minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment which has just been offered may be adopted. It is important that we shall have an investigation and a settlement of many questions of tax laws and taxation policies.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I will.

Mr. GARNER. I do not see how the gentleman can be in earnest about that when he asked unanimous consent to speak for 10 minutes, which will bring the conclusion of his remarks to 5 minutes to 3 o'clock, and under the rule at that time the committee will be compelled to rise, and it is not possible to discuss or vote on this by tellers before 3 o'clock after the gentleman gets through.

Mr. MONDELL. If the gentleman wants to demand tellers that might be true, but if no such demand is made we shall adopt the amendment.

With the passage of the tax bill on which we are about to vote, the House will have performed its part in providing for the reduction of war taxes promised and pledged by the platform of both parties and anxiously awaited by all of the American people.

There has been some impatience voiced because it has not been possible, in carrying out an orderly program of legislation, to reach the problem of tax reduction at an earlier date. We who are familiar with the history of legislation in this session realize that there has not been an hour of unnecessary delay. We know that from the time the Congress met in April until now there has been a definite program continuously and faithfully adhered to, which has brought this revision of the tax laws to fruition, so far as the House is concerned, at the earliest moment possible.

The difficulties encountered have been almost insuperable; they have only been overcome by the most careful study by the Treasury of the innumerable questions involved and through the adoption of a policy of the most rigid economy in public expenditures on the part of the Congress and the executive departments.

The almost unbelievable profligacy of expenditure under the Democratic administration during the war, the reckless and criminal extravagance, the wicked waste of the people's money not only left us with a legacy of almost $30,000,000,000 of war debt, but bequeathed to us heavy obligations of expenditure which, in spite of every effort at economy, projects the vexatious and exasperating shadow of the overhang of the war's cost into this period nearly three years subsequent to the signing of the armistice.

In a situation and condition of business stagnation, of financial and industrial depression following the war, in the presence of an appalling overhang of war costs, we have been called upon to revise the tax laws. While there may be some little criticism because we have not acted sooner, there can be no well-founded, intelligent criticism of the solution reached in the lifting of the war burdens of taxation in a sum in excess of $600,000,000 per annum.

In view of the continued enormous demands upon the Treasury in payment of expenditures inherited from the war period and war conditions it has been impossible to reduce the Federal tax levies to the point to which they should be reduced when normal conditions have been reached. But the effort has been to first remove those burdens that are clearly recognized as those of war and emergency; to afford relief from those levies most annoying, vexatious, and troublesome; to repeal those classes of taxes which most seriously derange and interfere with the normal flow of business, which hamper, restrict, and discourage productive enterprise, which are in many cases not only inequitable but absolutely confiscatory.

There is, of course, ground for difference of opinion as to some of the details of the legislation. But this can be said without the possibility of successful contradiction—that in any forum where decisions are reached through appeals to reason, truth, and justice the principles of the bill, as a measure scaling war taxes toward the normal, will have full support and approval.

The features of the bill which have been most discussed, as well as those many admirable features which have not figured largely in the debate, are not only approved and commended from the viewpoint of justice and equity in tax reductions and adjustments, they carry out with remarkable fidelity the pledges of the Republican platform, the declarations of the party candidates, and the implied and expressed promises made from every rostrum during the campaign.

Not only are the provisions of the bill before us in harmony with sound principles of revision of war-time levies and with Republican platform and campaign promises and pledges, they are, curiously enough, in harmony with the recommendations made in the Democratic platform and by practically every Democratic leader whose views on questions of finance and taxation are entitled to consideration. The major and most discussed provisions of the measure have been repeatedly and specifically recommended by a Democratic President, by three successive Democratic Secretaries of the Treasury, and by the Democratic presidential candidate in the last campaign. All these advocated the repeal of the excess-profits and higher surtaxes.

It is true that the Democrats on this floor have practically all turned their backs on the recommendations made by President Wilson, by Secretaries McAdoo, Houston, and Glass, and by their late candidate for the Presidency, Mr. Cox. And having repudiated all of these leaderships they have hung, expectant, hesitating, and uncertain but always submissive, upon the successive and contradictory telegraphic mandates from Mr. KITCHIN, at Scotland Neck, N. C.

Just recently it is true they have departed from the views and the mandates of the gentleman in his obscure village in North Carolina, and in their motion to recommit, I understand they propose to follow not his view but that of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER].

That is about what we might expect. The party having abandoned all of its heretofore acknowledged leaders, having turned its back upon the pledges and promises and recommendations of its President and its presidential candidate, and its Secretaries of the Treasury and all others whose opinions are entitled to any consideration anywhere in matters of finance and taxation, it is not remarkable that they shift from Texas to North Carolina and from North Carolina back to Texas.

As I said, relative to the discussion of the Fordney tariff bill, so one may truthfully say relative to the consideration of this measure, that the minority has failed utterly in its duty and responsibility. At no time either in committee hearings or in the debate on the floor has there come to my ears any word of reasonable constructive criticism. There has been a persistent and continuous flood of exaggeration, inaccuracy, misstatement, bold, bald, and ill-considered assertions.

Nothing much has been heard from the Democratic side except the declarations of gentlemen on the other side that the passage of this bill is certain to defeat our party. If I were anxious for the defeat of the Republican Party and I felt that the bill was as bad as they claim to think it is, I would not go around with the funereal air that has held them in its thrall all through this discussion. They would be joyful above all things if they really thought the bill would not be approved by the American people. [Applause on the Republican side.] The gentlemen, while proclaiming that the passage of this bill means defeat of our party, and in that case, of course, the return of theirs to power, have proceeded in all their speeches as if they were marching to their own funerals to the strains of the Dead March from Saul. [Applause on the Republican side.]

I have listened in vain for calm, reasonable, or reasoning argument. Everything done, everything proposed, has been condemned in general and in detail, without rhyme or reason, without argument to support the reckless assertions made, without attempt to suggest or offer substitutes or alternatives.

While the attitude of the opposition has lacked every element of reasonableness, of statesmanship, and of logic, it has, we recognize, been the necessary, the unescapable, the inevitable result of a complete abandonment of the leadership of all those they have heretofore looked to for council and advice in matters of this kind. President, presidential candidates, Secretaries of the Treasury, experts on finance and taxation—all these have been repudiated on behalf of the advice conceived of a mistaken view of political expediency and wired from North Carolina.

Mr. Speaker, it shall remain for a later Congress to fully revise the tax schedules in order to reduce tax levies and burdens to the position that shall be warranted when we shall have passed beyond the shadow of the war overhang and enter upon the normal flow of national life and business. In this measure we have relieved the burden where it is most clearly of a war and emergency character and relieved it and lightened it for the benefit of every class and condition in the Nation. While there will necessarily be some dissent as to detail, the measure will, in the main, be enthusiastically received as material and most welcome relief from the more vexatious portion of the war burden.

We have lifted rather than shifted the most oppressive and annoying of the war taxes. We have kept faith, and while some will rail against the measure for purely partisan purposes, it will receive the applause and commendation of the great body of the American people.

The bill is sound, the bill is sane, the bill is sensible. The bill will appeal to the sound judgment of the American people, and those who vote against it will vote to retain upon the statute books the present utterly indefensible war taxes. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan is recognized. [Loud applause on the Republican side, the Members rising.]

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY]. Will the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] further reserve his point of order?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I will further reserve the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] is recognized.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I will not have sufficient time to explain to the committee the various amendments to existing law, but I will print in the Record a brief statement summarizing the changes in the law that this bill provides. But this is what the bill will do in the way of relieving the people from taxation. The changes made up to the time of the introduction of the bill and the report from the Committee on Ways and Means, reduced taxation $790,330,000. Since that time the committee has met and made additional changes in reductions of taxes amounting to $28,000,000, or a total of $818,000,000 reduction of taxes provided for by this bill as compared with existing law.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. I will.

Mr. KINCHELOE. In interrogating the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] a few moments ago, I said your report shows on page 4 that this bill will produce $193,640,000 less in internal-revenue tax than you say it will. I understood the gentleman then to say that he could easily explain that and would do so.

Mr. FORDNEY. I do not understand the gentleman.

Mr. KINCHELOE. If the gentleman will turn to his report on page 4 where he starts with the estimated losses in internal-revenue tax for 1922 by reason of the passage of this bill he will see that the total is $193,640,000. Then, if he will notice in the total amount of internal-revenue tax for 1922 estimated that this bill will produce he will see that this amount of $193,640,000 is also included in that.

Mr. FORDNEY. As I understand the gentleman's question, it is this: The estimates given in the report show for the calendar year of 1922. I have so far spoken on the calendar year of 1922, but the figures he refers to are upon the principle, as the bill was introduced in the first place, which applied to one-half of the present fiscal year in the calendar year of 1921.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Will the gentleman yield for another question?

Mr. FORDNEY. I will.

Mr. KINCHELOE. But if the gentleman will turn to his report, where he starts with the losses, this bill over 1918 shows a total of $193,640,000. And then you say you added that $193,640,000 to your revenue.

Mr. GARNER. I will help the gentleman from Michigan out. The report was made on the bill as reported by the Ways and Means Committee, but was not made on the Republican conference's position. That is the difference exactly. The report as written does not amount to anything.

Mr. FORDNEY. Let me see if the gentleman is all wise. The bill as it was introduced provided for a repeal of certain taxes to take effect January 1, 1921. As the bill will finally be voted on to-day these taxes take effect on January 1, 1922. That makes the difference, I think, that the gentleman refers to.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Another question.

Mr. FORDNEY. I have only three or four minutes.

Mr. KINCHELOE. I will say to the gentleman this report shows your bill will yield—

[Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. FORDNEY. And then in some of those reports some of the figures were based upon the fiscal year and others upon the calendar year, and in the bill as reported in the first place by the Ways and Means Committee, as I have said, some of the repeals that were to take effect last January are now changed to next January.

Mr. Chairman, I ask for a vote on the amendment.

Mr. TREADWAY. I ask for a ruling, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas is recognized.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] a few minutes ago announced to this House that in passing this bill the Republicans are keeping their platform pledges. I want to ask the gentleman from Wyoming where in the Republican platform is the pledge that 10,437 payers of the tax on large incomes in excess of $66,000 shall be relieved, whereas the income-tax payers of small income shall not be similarly relieved?

Mr. MONDELL. Does the gentleman want an answer?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. In a moment. I have got some more questions before I yield; then you can answer them all at once.

Mr. MONDELL. The answer is, the bill does not do anything of the sort. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Oh, "the bill does not do anything of the sort" does not answer the question. I want to ask the gentleman from Wyoming where in his platform is the pledge that corporations doing a foreign business like the Standard Oil Co. shall be free from the payment of domestic income taxes on foreign business?

Mr. LONGWORTH. There is no such provision in the bill.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I want him to point out in his platform the pledge that promised to raise the normal tax on little corporations from 10 per cent to 12½ per cent? Where is the promise in his platform to raise the tax on small corporations? Where in his platform is the pledge that he will pass a tax bill that will create a deficit of $300,000,000 and force the issuance of bonds in time of peace?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, the answer is again what it was before, that it is not so. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. O, Mr. Chairman, loud voices and much noise do not answer arguments. [Laughter and applause.] I want to ask the gentleman where in his platform is the pledge that the Republican Party will not increase the tax on the great inheritances in this land but promises to add to the tax of the small taxpayer and promises an increase of his burden? [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired. The hour of 3 o'clock having arrived, in accordance with the rule the committee will rise and report the bill and the amendments to the House.

Accordingly the committee rose, and the Speaker resumed the chair.

Mr. COCKRAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of the highest privilege.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman can not do it until the bill is reported.

Mr. COCKRAN. I rise to a question of the highest privilege, that takes precedence of everything.

Mr. MANN. The House can do nothing but hear the report of the Chairman of the committee.

Mr. BLANTON. Let the gentleman wait until the report of the Chairman is made.

Mr. COCKRAN. I could interrupt even the reading of the Journal.

Mr. WALSH. This is a different question from the reading of the Journal.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the report of the Chairman of the committee ought first to be received. It will take only a few minutes.

Mr. COCKRAN. I withdraw my motion.

Thereupon Mr. WALSH, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having under consideration the bill (H. R. 8245) to reduce and equalize taxation, to amend and simplify the revenue act of 1918, and for other purposes, had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reports that that committee, having under consideration the bill (H. R. 8245) to amend and simplify the revenue act of 1918, and for other purposes, had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass. The gentleman from New York [Mr. COCKRAN] is recognized.

Mr. COCKRAN. Mr. Speaker, I now rise to the question of privilege embodied in the resolution which I sent to the Speaker's desk.

The SPEAKER. It refers to the privileges of the House.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the gentleman from New York can not present the resolution and have it considered by the House. The rule under which we are operating provides that the committee shall rise and receive the report of the committee.

The proceedings of the House could not be interrupted by any question of privilege or anything else of a sort which involves a motion, and nothing can come before the House that does not involve the right of a motion. Hence the gentleman has no right to interrupt the proceedings under a rule which expressly cuts out all intervening motions of any kind except a motion to recommit.

Mr. COCKRAN. Mr. Speaker, it has been held here by an authority quite as eminent as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], though not as bold, that a question of privilege takes precedence of everything, sets aside the procedure under a special rule, can be met by nothing but a motion to adjourn, can be offered while the Journal is being read—

Mr. MANN. Everybody who knows anything about the rules of the House knows that; but here is a special rule of the House which is governing the matter now before the House.

Mr. COCKRAN. It has been held, Mr. Speaker, that a question of privilege may interrupt the reading of the Journal. I do not know whether the gentleman from Illinois will consider as respectable authority the "Constitution, Manual and Digest," published under direct authority of this House.

Mr. MANN. I think the manual is a respectable authority. I think the gentleman from New York is respectable, but no authority on the question. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. COCKRAN. The gentleman from New York does not pretend to be authority. He is only anxious to submit to it and to induce the gentleman from Illinois to follow that example. [Applause.] Mr. Speaker, with due submission to the authority of the Chair, and asking the indulgence of the gentleman from Illinois, may I now read?—

A question of privilege may interrupt the reading of the Journal or the consideration of a bill under a special order, or a proposition to suspend the rules, or the consideration of a matter on which the previous question has been ordered.

The first thing the House is concerned about is the protection of its dignity, of its importance, of its functions, of its power, of its very life. When that is in question everything else is suspended until the major matter is decided. I now ask to have this resolution, which I send to the Clerk's desk, raising a question of the highest privilege, reported to the House.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, a question of privilege may interrupt the reading of the Journal, may interrupt a bill which is being considered under a special order of the House, may come in after the previous question is ordered, but here is a rule providing that no intervening motion shall be submitted until the final passage of the bill with the exception of the motion to recommit; and the learned gentleman from New York, so familiar with the rules of the House, can find no precedent, because there is no precedent, which holds that you can interrupt the proceeding by a question of privilege where the rule provides that there shall be no intervening motion. That provision in the rules goes back to the days when there were efforts at filibustering, and the purpose of putting a provision in the special rule that there should be no intervening motion was to bring a vote upon the main proposition without a chance to delay it by filibuster. If you permitted every Member of the House to raise a question of privilege, either personal or a privileged question, you would utterly ruin the provision of the rule, and the original purpose of that provision in the rule is still to be subserved by proceeding to a vote to the final passage upon the bill without injecting a foreign proposition. [Applause.]

Mr. COCKRAN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Illinois possesses one quality which is almost invulnerable in debate, and that is the capacity to add to rules or laws whatever may be necessary to make his position logical. Thus he inserts into these rules the word "may." It is not to be found in the book. I will read again, although it seems to me I was sufficiently clear before.

A question of privilege may interrupt the consideration of a bill under a special order or a proposition to suspend the rules.

Then in Hinds' Precedents there are many cases, one case after another, where this very question came up—where the House was operating under a special rule—and the question of privilege took precedence of everything, because it was necessarily a question affecting the very life of the House itself.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I raise the question of consideration of the gentleman's question of privilege.

Mr. MANN. When the House is considering a bill under a special rule—and we consider many bills under a special rule—that only brings the bill before the House for consideration.

That does not limit the right to offer intervening motions, as this rule does.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, surely it will not be held that this is not a special order. If I understand the correct meaning of a special order, it is the same thing, a special rule that is brought in. It is something which modifies a general rule of the House. It is another name for a special rule or special resolution.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will permit—

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. It would be quite in order to bring in—which has been frequently done—a rule for the immediate consideration of a bill in the House. That is under a special order. That is the kind of a case referred to in the precedents.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. No; but it says that it may interrupt the consideration of a bill under a special order.

Mr. MANN. "The consideration of a bill under a special order"; why, certainly.

Mr. COCKRAN. Mr. Speaker, may I have that resolution read? I think I have the right to have the resolution read. The House does not know at this moment just what it is that we are talking about.

The SPEAKER. This is a question for the Chair to decide; but without regard to a consideration of the wishes of the House at such a moment as this, of course the Chair must consider it simply in the light of parliamentary law and not in the light of its reasonableness. Now, it has been held constantly that a question of privilege may be presented at any time, and the Chair finds in the precedents one case which it seems to the Chair can not be distinguished from this, where in the House a certain time was set apart by a rule for the business of the House, but a question of privilege was brought in, and it was allowed, on the theory that the rights and privileges of the House and its Members take precedence of everything else. If the House wishes to consider, any person who thinks it is a proper time to bring it up has the right, and the Chair feels constrained to rule that if it is a question of privilege of the House the gentleman brings up, he has the right to present it.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I raise the question of consideration.

Mr. COCKRAN. But I have the floor.

Mr. WALSH. I have the floor to raise the question of consideration.

Mr. COCKRAN. I can not be taken off the floor in that way.

The SPEAKER. The question of consideration can always be raised. The gentleman has no right to debate.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, can the question of consideration be raised before the resolution is reported?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thought the gentleman from New York was claiming the right to debate.

Mr. COCKRAN. I am claiming the right to have the resolution reported.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman claims that it is a question of the privileges of the House and the Chair thinks it should be laid before the House. The Clerk will report it. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas on the 12th day of July, in the present year of our Lord 1921, the Hon. Warren G. Harding, President of the United States, appeared before the Senate, having then before it for consideration an unfinished business Senate bill 506, "to provide adequate compensation for veterans of the World War," and, "standing at the Vice President's desk," then and there addressed to it verbally, without notice to this House and in its absence, a communication, which appears in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of that day as part of the regular proceedings of the Senate; and

Whereas the Constitution of the United States, which empowers the President to address recommendations respecting legislation to Congress, does not authorize him to address such communications to either House of Congress to the exclusion of the other: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That such exclusion of this House from the right conferred upon it by the Constitution to share in all communications which the President may address to Congress respecting legislation is an unconstitutional violation of its rights, an illegal invasion of its privileges, and an unwarrantable injury to its dignity.

Mr. COCKRAN. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move to lay the resolution on the table.

Mr. COCKRAN. I respectfully claim that having presented the resolution I have the floor.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules that point; it is always in order to move to lay a matter on the table.

Mr. COCKRAN. Provided he has the floor.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman.

Mr. COCKRAN. It occurs to me that having offered the resolution, under any ruling that I have been able to discover I am entitled to the floor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York is mistaken, because it would then be in the power of any Member by offering a resolution to get the floor for an hour's debate. That was the reason for the motion to lay on the table.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the question of consideration.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Wyoming to lay the resolution on the table.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 288, nays 106, answered "present" 4, not voting 32, as follows:

Mr. MONTAÑA (for) with Mr. HUDSPETH (against).

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Speaker, did the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RODENBURG] vote?

The SPEAKER. He did not.

Mr. RUCKER. I voted "no." I am paired with the gentleman from Illinois. I desire to withdraw my vote of "no" and answer "present."

The name of Mr. RUCKER was called and he answered present. The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule the previous question is ordered on the bill and all amendments to final passage, without intervening motion, except one motion to recommit.

The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following motion to recommit, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McFADDEN] desires to call up the unfinished business, Senate bill 1915, to amend the War Finance Corporation act, and we hope to pass that bill without recess or adjournment. I do not know how long a time will be required to give the bill such further consideration as it should have, but I hope the Members will all stay, that we may be able to dispose of the bill this afternoon or this evening at a reasonably early hour.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I will.

Mr. BLANTON. How soon may we expect this antibeer bill to be called up from conference?

Mr. MONDELL. Quite soon, I hope.

Mr. BLANTON. It could be called up now by unanimous consent.

A MEMBER. It might not. [Laughter.]

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the regular order.

REPORT OF BOMBING TESTS.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for one minute.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to address the House for one minute. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The chair hears none.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Speaker, last month there were held off the Virginia Capes some bombing experiments by aircraft. The reports on those tests have now been made public by the joint Army and Navy board, and as they contain a great deal of information that is of interest and of value, I ask unanimous consent to insert them in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD the report which he has indicated. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

WAR FINANCE CORPORATION ACT, APRIL 5, 1918.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill S. 1915.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (S. 1915) to amend the War Finance Corporation act, approved April 5, 1918, as amended, to provide relief for producers of and dealers in agricultural products, and for other purposes, with Mr. STAFFORD in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. When the committee last considered this bill there was pending an amendment to subsection 22, which, without objection, the Clerk will again report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. WINGO: Page 2, line 24, after the word "be" strike out the words "exported or" and insert after the word "export" the words "or domestic trade."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. That motion has been made and it is not in order. The gentleman has spoken on this amendment. Will the gentleman ask unanimous consent to proceed?

Mr. WINGO. I want to expedite matters, and I trust the Chair will aid the gentleman and myself if he can. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the gentleman from Arkansas is recognized.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph close in 10 minutes, and that I be given the right to use five minutes of that time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves that all debate on the pending amendment close in 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have the attention of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McFADDEN]. I understand it is the gentleman's intention to oppose the amendment that has been offered?

Mr. McFADDEN. It is.

Mr. WINGO. Does not the gentleman think we should be frank with the House and state what the agreement is with reference to section 24, so that the House may understand? I am willing to go into that.

Mr. McFADDEN. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. I think it will expedite the consideration of the measure and save time. I suggest to the House that we ought to try to expedite the consideration of the bill. I had intended to offer another amendment of the same tenor to the subparagraph (a), but I shall not do it. I am willing to test it out on this. I understand it is contended that an amendment to section 24—

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman wait until I have finished this sentence? The amendment to section 24 is to insert after the words "United States," in line 13, on page 5, the following language, "or any cooperative association of producers in the United States." That is the amendment that we have agreed to and which the gentleman intends to offer, is it?

Mr. McFADDEN. That is the amendment I shall offer.

Mr. WINGO. I understand some gentlemen representing these different cooperative organizations in the West contend that the War Finance Corporation state they will interpret section 24 with the proposed amendment as authorizing advances to carry products until they can be sold in domestic trade in an orderly manner, and that Mr. Meyer has so advised them. Can the gentleman assure the House that that will be the interpretation?

Mr. McFADDEN. I can say I can not assure the House of what the War Finance Corporation will do in an administrative way. I am told by the people advocating this idea that these people are satisfied with this amendment now, and that they have had a conference with the War Finance Corporation, and that they are satisfied.

Mr. WINGO. Is it the understanding of the gentleman that the amendment that we have agreed upon to section 24 will meet the same end as the pending amendment, which specifically provides for advances to producers to carry farm products until they can be sold in domestic trade in an orderly manner?

Mr. McFADDEN. I have been told by the War Finance Corporation that that will have that effect.

Mr. WINGO. Is it the gentleman's opinion?

Mr. McFADDEN. It is the opinion of the managing director of the War Finance Corporation, with whom I have spoken heretofore about the effect. It is his opinion that it will satisfy the demands of these people.

Mr. WINGO. Other Members have received a letter similar to those that I have received, and the gentleman no doubt has been told what I have been told. I want to be candid. I think these gentlemen have been misled. I do not think the amendment to section 24 will authorize advances to carry farm products until they can be sold in domestic trade in an orderly manner. Understand me; I do not question the sincerity of Mr. Meyer. My own idea is that we ought to say by express language what they say they think they can do by administrative interpretation of it. When the representative of one of these cooperative associations of producers first came to me he insisted that section 24 should be amended, and I took the matter up with the chairman of the committee and the attorney of the War Finance Corporation and worked out the amendment to section 24 I have referred to. Monday several Members from the West came to me and insisted that the amendment was not sufficient and that the attorney for some of these associations had said it was insufficient. I first insisted that the gentlemen see the chairman of the committee and the Republican leaders. Finally when the attorney for these associations came to me and insisted that the amendment to section 24 we had agreed to was insufficient, and insisted that section 22 must be amended as I have offered in the pending amendment, I agreed with his view and sought to get his view accepted. I agreed if no western Republican was willing to make the fight I would, and as none of them would agree to do so, I offered the amendment. Since then Mr. Meyer has convinced them he can and will do under section 24 what I seek to provide for under my amendment to section 22; that is, authorize advances to producers to carry farm products until they can be sold in domestic trade in an orderly manner. I doubt it, and think we should do by clear, specific language what he proposes to do by interpretation. But the Republicans from the West have deserted the amendment, so I suppose it will be voted down, but the responsibility will be theirs, not mine.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Chairman, in my time I want to ask my friend from Arkansas [Mr. Wingo] a question or two. I understand that he is willing to withdraw his amendment to subdivision (a), on page 2, providing we accept this amendment on page 5, which we have discussed, as to cooperative associations composed of persons engaged in producing such products?

Mr. WINGO. No. The gentleman misunderstood me in the confusion. I said that the language on page 5 amending section 24 would not be sufficient, but that instead of the belief that these gentlemen have been led to entertain, that my pending amendment is necessary; but it seems the gentlemen who want to take care of these organizations are ready to take Mr. Meyer's assurance that he can and will take care of them under section 24. I am not willing to have them come up in the future and say, "You have given us a gold brick." I believe Mr. Meyer is sincere. He believes that in the amendment we have agreed to, on page 5, section 24, he can do what we provide specifically here in my amendment, on page 2; but I do not think so, and I do not want to take the responsibility of telling these producers' organizations that it will do that.

Mr. McFADDEN. I have been interested in the success of these gentlemen who have been discussing this agreement, and I am willing to accept their opinion as to what the effect of the arrangement will be. I hope the committee, in voting on this amendment, will vote down this amendment, because I believe the matter is amply protected in my other amendment, and I believe it will take care of the interest of those who are claiming that they must be taken care of by the amendment which has now been offered.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFADDEN. Yes.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Will the gentleman please indicate to us what provision in this bill will take care of the commodities which are not to be sold in export?

Mr. McFADDEN. I will call the attention of the gentleman to the amendment we put in the bill, on page 2, which says "or lack of a market for the sale of same," and also, on page 3, beginning line 6—or to any association composed of persons engaged in producing such products for the purpose of assisting such person or association to carry such products until they can be exported or sold for export in an orderly manner.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. That is the point. You take a ranchman with a herd who has been pressed for credit, and the local bank can not extend more credit. How will he be protected in that herd?

Mr. McFADDEN. The gentleman will see, on page 5, that it provides for—advances for agricultural purposes, including the breeding, raising, fattening, and marketing of live stock.

That fully protects the matter that the gentleman refers to.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFADDEN. I will.

Mr. MONDELL. As I understand it, the intent of the committee was and is to furnish full facilities for export and for the reasonable holding of agricultural products, including live stock. But they do not desire to have a provision inserted in the bill which would be a plain invitation to long-time hoarding for higher prices.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield there for just a moment again?

Mr. McFADDEN. I will.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. It is in testimony before the commission that many of these ranchmen living in the West are unable to get relief through their local banks, first, because they are extended, and second, because the local banks by reason of their low capitalization can not give them the money which they require; and the great difficulty in extending relief to people of that sort is that the local banks through which the money is to be advanced are so congested and extended that they can not act as the medium through which the relief can go to the man suffering for lack of credit.

Mr. McFADDEN. This bill provides that these cattlemen can form themselves into associations and go direct to the War Finance Corporation for relief.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. What is that provision?

Mr. McFADDEN. On page 3—

To any person engaged in the United States in dealing in or marketing any such products, or to any association composed of persons engaged in producing such products.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. Wingo].

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. Wingo) there were—ayes 35, noes 70.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. JONES of Texas: Page 3, line 6, after the word "to," insert the words "any person or."

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment to provide a method whereby individuals may borrow directly in sections of the country where it is impracticable to form associations and where, when a man wants to borrow money in considerable amount, he leaves the country in which he is located and goes to one of the larger centers. It would not be necessary to establish these agencies. In fact, it might be necessary to arrange this method for only a few sections of the country. Some people have argued that there should be agencies established all over the country. I do not contend that that is practicable at the present time, although the big insurance companies and the big cattle loan companies maintain their local agencies, finding that they are cheaper and that the money can be furnished at a lower rate than through the local institutions which take care of all the people in the communities. That proposition would not be wise at the present time because of the expense of such an organization, but there are many people in the cattle-growing sections who borrow money in tremendous amounts at times. They do not want to give to any bank the 2 per cent interest and the commission in addition thereto in order to secure the benefits of this law. There are men in the district I represent who own thousands of cattle. Why should they or men with a lesser number be required to go to a bank and pay 2 per cent interest besides the commission which this bill permits in order to have the privilege of borrowing under this bill? Having property in the requisite amount and securities of the necessary kind, if the local bank can not provide the money, why not make provision whereby such a man may go direct to the War Finance Corporation, if it is important enough for him to secure the relief desired in that manner? The local banks perform a legitimate function. But I see no reason why the measure should require all loans to pass through the local institutions. It might be a burden on such institutions. Some of them have already made loans to the limit and can not afford to indorse any more paper or rediscount any more securities.

Mr. LUCE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES of Texas. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. LUCE. As the measure now stands the War Finance Corporation is to be allowed to lend the money to any individual on the face of the globe outside of the United States. Has the gentleman yet been able to see why that provision should apply only to the foreign borrowers?

Mr. JONES of Texas. I can not see any good reason why it should. Moreover, if this bill is intended to relieve the situation that its proponents claim it will relieve, why not so draft it as to give broad enough power to those who will have it in charge to grant the relief where the relief will be most needed? As I understand it there are men in all the cattle-raising sections—I know it is true in the section that I have the honor to represent—who can not secure the essential credit from the local banks because of the fact that the local banks are loaded down. Many of those men, when they come to finance their propositions, do not deal with the local agencies, but they go direct to Kansas City or Chicago or the other places where money is available and thus obtain it. There are many smaller cattlemen, ranchmen, and farmers who can not afford to go to those centers of financial supply, and who are compelled, therefore, to depend upon the local agencies in the main to grant them relief. You have prepared a bill which provides that they must pay the local banking institutions—upon which in many instances they do not rely—before they can secure the relief of this bill. By putting in this amendment you do not require them to loan directly. You simply give the power to those who have the carrying out of this measure in charge to make these loans directly if they find it advisable to do so. Can anyone object to the granting of these powers if you believe in the intrinsic merits of the bill? You want the bill to grant the relief that is planned. You fashion the bill for a certain purpose. Why not provide that if a man has the security, and the loan is of sufficient importance enough to deal directly, he may go right around the local institution without paying the 2 per cent and paying the commission?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I ask for three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks for three minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JONES of Texas. You provide here that the local bank may charge 2 per cent interest for acting as the intermediary and in addition to that may charge a commission. I contend that 2 per cent might be enough to make the loan prohibitive. Otherwise a man might have security sufficient and want a loan that would justify direct communication with the center.

Mr. WINGO. I understand the gentleman's amendment is to add the words "any person" after the word "to," in line 6, page 3?

Mr. JONES of Texas. "Any person or."

Mr. WINGO. Does it not say in the beginning—

To any person engaged in the United States in dealing in or marketing any such products?

Mr. JONES of Texas. Dealing in or marketing. That does not necessarily mean producing. In fact, does not include producing at all.

Mr. WINGO. Oh, yes.

I understand the gentleman now; does the gentleman know of anybody engaged in producing for export exclusively? They produce to sell to domestic customers as well, do they not?

Mr. JONES of Texas. There are some men engaged in producing to a limited extent and in exporting sales of produce. This is not the only place to offer an amendment to cure the defect.

Mr. WINGO. Section 24 is intended to cover the gentleman's point.

Mr. JONES of Texas. It does not. Does the gentleman mean to say that under section 24 the War Finance Corporation can lend directly to a cattleman in my district?

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Meyer says they can, and all these important gentlemen on the other side are satisfied that they can.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Meyer may think so, but I do not. Does the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. Wingo] think so? I do not think he does.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves that all debate on this amendment and amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, as a man coming from the South, I want to thank the committee for this bill. It goes a long way toward taking care of the cotton situation, because so large a part of cotton is exported.

But with regard to the live-stock interests and the grain interests, but more particularly with regard to live stock, I think the bill could be materially improved. It must be understood that the greatest difficulty at present in relieving the agricultural situation—and I speak advisedly—arises out of the fact that the banks in the agricultural districts are extended and are declining to indorse additional paper or incur additional liability. The second difficulty in regard to the banks, especially in the cattle country, is that they are banks of small capitalization and are not able to loan the amount of money necessary to relieve the cattlemen.

Mr. McFADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I will.

Mr. McFADDEN. The gentleman realizes that this bill provides for the relief of all banks with frozen credits, and that they will have additional money for the aid of the cattlemen.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I appreciate the fact that you put into the bill a feature that is not incorporated in the Federal reserve bank system, but the average bank is in a situation where it does not want to incur additional liability, either directly or indirectly. It wants net liquidation. The ranchman ought in this emergency not to have his fortune and the preservation of his herds left dependent upon the judgment or the whim of an independent intermediary agency, if it can possibly be avoided.

Mr. MADDEN. Could not they hypothecate the securities with the War Finance Corporation?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Let me complete my statement. As the result of that situation they are putting their she stock and calves on the market. It was in testimony before the commission the other day that in one State of the Northwest there was a 240,000 ranch cattle shortage. The grass is there but this deflation craze has driven them from the ranches to slaughter.

Mr. McFADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes; certainly.

Mr. McFADDEN. While the bill was under consideration in the committee representatives of the cattlemen from the gentleman's own State were in the city and invited to appear before the committee. They informed the chairman through their representative that they did not care to be heard, that they were satisfied that the bill took care of their needs.

Mr. PARRISH. Will the gentleman from Texas yield for me to answer the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. PARRISH. I will say that the cattlemen from our State who appeared before the War Finance Corporation were told very frankly and firmly by the War Finance Corporation that they would not consent to the amendment and that was the reason the men went home. They went home with the understanding that they would let the bill have a test, but they did not believe it would prevent the sacrifice of the she cattle and calves.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. From the standpoint of the ranchmen the difficulty is in getting relief which may be provided through the local banks. There is a fundamental objection to much of the relief program. Unless the local banks will function in distributing the funds, the individual in distress, with good security, is left helpless. I want as far as possible a route around these extended banks, which may be used when they refuse to function. This whole bill is written primarily to deal with commodities ready for exports. Provision for export is important. But we have something else which is important, orderly marketing and the preservation of our herds.

The notion of deflation has gone to seed. We are deflating the farming country of its ability to produce. We are purchasing a reduced total of bank discounts with the calves, she stuff, and immature animals sent to slaughter. That is absurd. We must stop it. If the bank will facilitate the loan, all right. If it will not, I want some way to get to the ranchman and save his herd. Market is important, of course, but only an orderly market of commodity ready for market. This procession of immature stuff going to market is a thing we need to stop, not encourage; then you ought to do everything possible to strengthen the position of the man who does not want to sell what is not ready for sale. I hope I am understood. I realize the importance of a foreign market, but we want also to protect and preserve the very foundation upon which the economic future of the ranch country depends—the ability of the men to hold their she stuff and immature animals, their stock, working capital, the machinery of their plant—nothing should be left undone that we can do to strengthen the position of the farmer and ranchman who is being pressed by his bank and by the merchant, and the only thing he can do is to move out from his ranch or farm to the market the live-stock equipment of his place. The interest of the country is that it should be kept off the market.

Having said this much, I do not propose to offer any amendments. I am not unappreciative of the good features of this bill. I have not spoken in criticism of the bill as a whole. I have tried to emphasize the importance of strengthening the bill at the point indicated. It is a good bill, however, as it is, and I am earnestly supporting it; and I hope, gentlemen of the committee, you will carefully consider, before the bill is finally voted on, the points raised and see if you can not agree to the proper amendment.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to discuss this amendment except to state that I think it is unnecessary. I hope the amendment will be voted down. I am assured by the War Finance Corporation, which is to administer this bill, that the bill as written will take care of these situations, and I hope, therefore, that the amendment of the gentleman from Texas will be voted down.

Mr. PARRISH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFADDEN. Yes.

Mr. PARRISH. Of course, we appreciate the attitude of the House in passing this bill, but we fear that unless an amendment like this be adopted you are not going to furnish the relief to the individual with a small herd, say, two or three hundred. The records from Fort Worth, one market, show that they have marketed there since the 1st of January 286,000 cattle, less than the same period last year, but they have sold and slaughtered 37,000 calves among those. In other words, the tendency is to deplete the herds of the country. Unless some relief is afforded as suggested I do not think you are going to relieve the situation. You may help it, but you will not relieve it, because you do not provide for the individual loan.

Mr. A. P. NELSON. Permit me to suggest to the gentleman that this is strictly an emergency measure. It is to end July, 1922, practically only a year from now, and it is absolutely impossible to build up an organization of officers and clerks within the War Finance Corporation which can deal with every individual in the country who is engaged in agriculture or in the production of live stock. The amendment of the chairman, which he is to offer at the suggestion of the committee in its proper place, will take care of the matter. Under the section that we are now discussing an association of producers can get relief direct from the War Finance Corporation.

Mr. PARRISH. But there are no associations of cattlemen to whom you can make these loans, and that is where the bill falls down. There are associations of producers of other products, but there is no association of cattlemen, and the loan can not be made unless it be made to the individual.

Mr. A. P. NELSON. May I still further say to the gentleman that if he looks at the first portion of the bill he will find that in this act the term "person" includes partnerships, corporations, and associations as well as individuals.

Mr. JONES of Texas. But by the expression in section (a) you exclude any person engaged in producing, except he be a member of an association.

Mr. MADDEN. If we adopt the suggestion made in the amendment of the gentleman from Texas, we will have a million men on the pay roll.

Mr. JONES of Texas. This does not require that.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? I want the gentleman to inform the committee, if it will take a million men on the pay roll to loan to individuals in this country, how many more will be required to loan to every individual on the face of the globe?

Mr. MADDEN. Oh, we do not intend to do that.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired. All time has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 23. Notwithstanding the limitation of section 1, the advances provided for by section 21 and section 22 of this act may be made until July 1, 1922. The corporation may from time to time extend the time of payment of any such advance or advances through renewals, substitution of new obligations, or otherwise.

Mr. LUCE (interrupting the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the committee may return to the paragraph just under consideration, and I do this because the chairman of the committee had given me to understand that there were committee amendments to be presented and I withheld certain amendments which I desire to present, feeling that the committee amendments ought first to be acted upon.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to return to the consideration of subsection 22 for the reasons stated. Is there objection?

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, what amendment does the gentleman propose to offer?

Mr. LUCE. The first amendment that I desire to offer is to substitute for the words "staple agricultural," in line 20, page 2, the word "domestic" in order to conform with section 21, which we are amending.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, is that the only amendment the gentleman desires to offer?

Mr. LUCE. I have other amendments, but on the assurance of the chairman of the committee that he had committee amendments to offer, I delayed offering mine.

Mr. A. P. NELSON. Mr. Chairman, may we have the amendment read, so that we may all know what it is?

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, on the statement of the gentleman from Massachusetts that he acted on the assurance of the chairman of the committee, I think the committee ought to permit the gentleman to return to the section.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to return to section 22 for the purpose of offering certain amendments. Is there objection?

Mr. BRAND. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, does the gentleman propose to offer an amendment to strike out anything in the act or are they to add to or insert?

Mr. LUCE. I have certain amendments that I trust will improve the act. They have been drawn with some care, and I desire to present reasons why they should be considered.

Mr. BRAND. Does the gentleman object to saying whether he has any amendment to lines 21 and 22 of section 22?

Mr. LUCE. A change of wording which I think will more conform to the spirit of the bill.

Mr. BRAND. Does the gentleman object to saying what it is?

Mr. LUCE. In place of "a market for the sale of" I would prefer, in order to bring out what is meant, the words "foreign buyers able to pay for the."

Mr. WINGO. That amendment would not be in order, as the Committee of the Whole has acted on that provision.

Mr. LUCE. Then, I should be unable to present it.

Mr. WINGO. Let me offer this suggestion to the chairman of the committee. How many amendments has the gentleman from Massachusetts to offer to this particular section?

Mr. LUCE. Five.

Mr. WINGO. The one that was suggested would not be in order. That would leave four. Could not an agreement be reached to limit the time for the consideration of these amendments? The chairman wants to get through and so do other gentlemen.

Mr. LUCE. I do not desire to delay consideration of the bill, but I do desire to present argument in favor of certain changes of the bill from which I have been precluded—

Mr. WINGO. I was just suggesting that we reach an agreement with the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. McFADDEN. When the gentleman spoke about offering an amendment I did not understand that he wanted to return to the section we were on, section 22. We had finished reading that section and were considering the next section. Other amendments had been adopted, and I intended to convey the information to the gentleman that we had committee amendments on other sections.

Mr. LUCE. I understood they were for the section under consideration.

Mr. McFADDEN. I am not going to object to it if the House wants to do it.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is heard, and the Clerk will continue the reading.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 23. Notwithstanding the limitation of section 1, the advances provided for by section 21 and section 22 of this act may be made until July 1, 1922. The corporation may from time to time extend the time of payment of any such advance or advances through renewals, substitution of new obligations, or otherwise, but the time for the payment of any advance made under authority of section 21 shall not be extended beyond five years from the date upon which such advance was originally made, and the time for the payment of any advance made under authority of section 22 shall not be extended beyond two years from the date upon which such advance was originally made.

All advances made under section 21 or under section 22 of this act shall be made against the promissory note or notes, or other instrument or instruments in writing imposing on the borrower a primary and unconditional obligation to repay the advance at maturity, with interest as stipulated therein, with full and adequate security in each instance by indorsement, guaranty, pledge, or otherwise. The corporation shall retain the power to require additional security at any time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the committee amendments.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I suggest to the chairman that he ask unanimous consent for a certain amount of time on this section—

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the committee amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendments: On page 4, line 18, after the figures "21," insert the words "and section 22."

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. LUCE. I desire to oppose the amendment.

Mr. McFADDEN. I would like to arrive at a time for discussion of this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. I do not.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order I had been recognized, and the Chair asked me to wait until the committee amendments were read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not recognize the gentleman from Arkansas, because it is always in order under the procedure of the House first to report the committee amendments before recognizing a gentleman.

Mr. WINGO. But it is also in order to recognize a Member for the purpose of discussing a committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas did not ask for recognition after the committee amendment had been reported. The Chair was putting the question on the committee amendment when the gentleman from Massachusetts asked for recognition. The gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, this adds to the law an extension of time in the matter of section 22. I object to putting into the statute any restriction because of the palpable situation of Europe at the present moment. We propose as the bill now stands to lend money to the inhabitants of Poland, Rumania, Czechoslovakia—

Mr. McFADDEN. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. LUCE. I decline to yield. We propose to lend it to the citizens of Germany, of Greece, of Turkey, of Montenegro, together with two or three score of other nationalities in various parts of the globe—to their individual citizens. The latest news from Russia is that about 10,000,000 starving men are saying to each other, "There is food to the west; why not go and get it?" If the hordes of Russia do go and get it, as they did again and again and again through the Middle Ages, they will sweep over Poland, Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Rumania, Bulgaria, and Greece. Then it would be preposterous to try to collect debts due from the inhabitants of Poland or any of these other nations in three years. If the amendment had said 30 years, it would have been more reasonable. The uncertainties in Germany are such that any day a cable may bring us the news of another revolution. We are told that in Hungary at any moment there may be a change to monarchy. From every corner of Europe comes news suggesting the danger of investing money there. Now, inasmuch as we have decided to loan your money and my money and that of the taxpayers to the Germans and to the Poles and to the Hungarians and Czechoslovakians, why stultify ourselves by putting in any such limit as three years for payment? Nobody expects that the $10,000,000,000 owed us by Europe will be repaid in three years. Most people do not expect it will ever be repaid. The interest on that is running at the rate of more than a million dollars a day. The debt already owed to us by Europe, by its nations and its individuals, is approaching $18,000,000,000. I want to call attention to the fact that the public debts of the world have increased in the period since the opening of the war from $35,000,000,000 to $293,000,000,000.

The staggering possibilities that these figures suggest may indicate to the House how unwise it will be for us to try to secure that any foreign debtor of the United States shall be pressed for payment. Would it not be a real hardship, after we had lent money to the cotton manufacturer of Chemnitz or of Frankfurt, to ask him to repay this money in so short a time as three years? If we are going to dispense our charity in this way, if we are going to lend money that in many instances may never be repaid, why not give it to them outright? Why not incorporate an amendment here saying that the War Finance Corporation shall month by month contribute to the Red Cross $100,000,000 of our money? Why not make it clear that we propose to contribute to the cotton manufacturer of Chemnitz in order that the cotton grower of Texas may sell his goods? Why not make it clear that we propose to lend credit to the boot and shoe manufacturers of Lancaster, England, in order that the growers of cattle in some American Lancaster may find a market? Let us clarify the situation and let the country know what we are proposing to do with a thousand million dollars of American money.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word in support of the amendment.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this amendment and on section 23 and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I always enjoy listening to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE]. Those of you who are not members of the Committee on Banking and Currency have discovered from his speech that he was not present in the committee when it considered this bill, because he said he was opposed to this amendment, when the pending amendment was to make section 22 subject to the 3-year limitation of the bill instead of the 5-year one of existing law. If he had been in the Committee on Banking and Currency, of which he is a very influential member, he would have known the object of the committee amendment there was to take the operations of the War Finance Corporation out of the realms of indefiniteness and long time; and this amendment reduces the time on loans from five years to three years. If the gentleman were as familiar with the present existing law as I naturally, knowing him by reputation to be a man of studious habits, would be led to believe, he would know we are trying to avoid the very dangers to which he refers. And this being a nonpartisan bill, I feel it my duty to come to the support of the administration against the undeserved onslaught of the gentleman. I sincerely regret he believes, and wants his colleagues to believe, that the Republican administration, under the lead of conservative Senators, wants us to scatter gold to the ends of the earth and feed the cold of Poland and clothe the naked of Czechoslovakia. Let no such fears disturb his soul. You can not by law in a parliamentary way on this bill prevent the War Finance Corporation financing the export of Texas cotton, to which the gentleman refers, except to limit the time. That is all. So the gentleman can not do anything unless he does this, namely, instead of opposing this limitation, move to cut out three and substitute one. Then he might do something, because the limitation not only goes to section 22 but to section 21, the present existing law, about which, if the gentleman read his mail this morning he received a notice from the War Finance Corporation telling him of a particular arrangement made yesterday under existing law by which it is financing the export of cotton from Georgia. Vote this bill up or down, cotton will still be financed under existing law. Your administration claims it is trying by this bill to provide advances to cover holding of farm products for sale in domestic trade in an orderly manner and to meet the needs of the western cattlemen.

And it pains me to see the gentleman from Massachusetts undertaking by his unwise and reckless utterances to reflect upon the present administration and lead the country to believe it is going to go out recklessly and scatter the funds of this Government agency over the face of the earth. In all my suspicion of the present administration I have never for one moment thought it would do that, and I regret that the gentleman would try to create that suspicion among his colleagues on the Republican side.

Mr. LUCE. I am sure I can express the gratitude of the President and the whole Republican Party for the aid brought to it by the sterling qualities and evident capacity of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO].

Mr. WINGO. I comprehend. [Laughter.]

Mr. LUCE. Now, will the gentleman tell me whether the Committee on Banking and Currency of the House recommended to this body that we should lend the money to individuals in other parts of the globe?

Mr. WINGO. The Committee on Banking and Currency recommended to cut out subsection (b). We voted down the recommendation of the committee and went between the tellers to do so, yet the gentleman was absent on the coast of Massachusetts enjoying its cool breezes while we were here sweltering on last Saturday, trying to put through the bill. I have no doubt if the gentleman had been here then and thrown the weight of his great intellect against those of us who were working for practical aid for the farmers the tide would have been turned the other way. His colleagues missed him then, and no doubt suffered from the lack of his masterful leadership. [Applause.]

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Chairman, when we voted on this amendment I strenuously fought against the adoption of the amendment permitting loans to foreign corporations. The committee, however, felt otherwise, and voted it in the bill. I will say to the gentleman here now, for the benefit of the Members of the House, that I will propose an amendment which I think will remedy the situation which he mentions here. For the gentleman's benefit I will read it now. This is the amendment:

Amendment offered by Mr. McFADDEN: On page 5, line 7, at the end of the paragraph, insert the following: "All notes or other instruments evidencing advances to persons outside of the United States shall be in terms payable in the United States in the currency of the United States and shall be secured by adequate guaranties or indorsements of banks, bankers, or trust companies in the United States or by chattel mortgages, warehouse receipts, or other instruments in writing conveying or securing marketable title to agricultural products in the United States."

If the committee sees fit to safeguard the amendment which was put in the other night by the adoption of my amendment, I am sure it will cover the situation which the gentleman has raised, and we can safely vote for the bill with that amendment in.

Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, have we disposed of these committee amendments?

The CHAIRMAN. No. The question is on agreeing to the first committee amendment. Is the amendment which the gentleman from Pennsylvania sends to the Clerk's desk an amendment to the committee amendment that is pending?

Mr. McFADDEN. No. It comes after that.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 4, line 19, strike out the word "five," and insert in lieu thereof of the word "three."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 4, line 20, after the word "may" strike out the comma and the language "and the time for the payment of any advance made under authority of section 22 shall not be extended beyond two years from the date upon which such advance was originally made."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. McFADDEN: On page 5, line 7, at the end of the paragraph insert the following: "All notes or other instruments evidencing advances to persons outside of the United States shall be in terms payable in the United States in the currency of the United States and shall be secured by adequate guaranties or indorsements of banks, bankers, or trust companies in the United States and by chattel mortgages, warehouse receipts, or other instruments in writing conveying or securing marketable title to agricultural products in the United States."

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the amendment unless the gentleman from Pennsylvania wants time in which to advocate it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas is recognized. Mr. BLACK. If the gentleman is going to argue his amendment, probably it will be better for him to do that before I oppose it.

Mr. McFADDEN. I will do that. The other day—

Mr. STEVENSON. Before the gentleman begins his argument, will he yield to me to call attention to one feature of his amendment?

Mr. McFADDEN. I will.

Mr. STEVENSON. You say that they must have these indorsements and chattel mortgages on goods in this country. Does the gentleman mean to require them, notwithstanding they have got the indorsement of the National City Bank, that they must also have a chattel mortgage, too? Does not the gentleman think he had better use the word "or" there?

Mr. McFADDEN. Yes. I accept the gentleman's suggestion.

Mr. STEVENSON. You will find that that would destroy the whole business.

Mr. McFADDEN. When we voted on the amendment the other day I believe there was a misunderstanding in the House as to that section. I believe that those who at that time were advocating that amendment permitting the loans to be made to foreigners have changed their minds on that subject. There is no question but that the people of this country want to confine their advances for foreign trade to people who are able to pay.

Now the War Finance Corporation is besieged from time to time by people in foreign countries who want to borrow money so that they can purchase goods in this country, and they have no security whatever to offer. What the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE] has said regarding loans to people in Serbia and Poland and Hungary and Czechoslovakia is true. The War Finance Corporation has been able to stem the tide as to that class of people, because they had no security, and the law did not permit them, as they interpreted it, to make loans to those people. Now, if the Congress of the United States gives that authority by this amendment, it is going to be extremely embarrassing to the War Finance Corporation.

And, furthermore, I want to point out this other fact: If they do make these loans, they are depending upon repayment of these loans to be made to farmers from funds to be derived from the sale of their own securities. You know that in this country the market is strained to-day. You must have gilt-edge security to get money. It is going to impede the operation of the War Finance Corporation greatly in the sale of their securities if the investing public understands that the securities back of those loans are the unsecured obligations of those people back in those foreign countries. I hope the War Finance Corporation will not be given authority to make loans in that manner.

The other day, in discussing this question, I suggested that the method of marketing our goods abroad had entirely changed; that these people abroad are not now anticipating their wants, but are buying from hand to mouth and paying as they go. In that connection I have a letter here from the Director of the War Finance Corporation in which he quotes a banker who has recently returned from the other side, who confirms that statement, and I want to quote here also from a letter which has just been received from a Georgia cotton exporter, who says this—

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, is the gentleman going to put that letter in the RECORD? I want to see it. I am interested in it.

Mr. McFADDEN. I am going to put certain sections of it in. I quote from this letter of the Georgia exporter. He says:

[Extract from letter dated Aug. 17 from a Georgia exporter who has just returned from Europe.]

I feel sure that the cotton merchants in Europe are in position to finance their requirements through their connections in America. * * * From my observations I feel sure that the consumption of American cotton during the next 12 months will be not less than 12,000,000 bales. With the small crop which we are producing, this will leave a very small carry-over into the crop beginning 1922. It will be a calamity under present conditions if the American farmer is not provided with sufficient credit by which he can market his cotton over a period of 12 months, which is absolutely necessary in order to avoid sacrificing of the present stock on hand and the small stock which we are now producing.

I feel that the consumption of American cotton in Germany during the next 12 months will equal the consumption of American cotton in England. Unemployment among the textile mills of Germany is very small and the mills are running on full time. On account of the depreciation of the mark the German spinner and the German merchant will buy from month to month, which will make it absolutely necessary that sufficient financial arrangements be made in this country for the crop to be marketed over a period covering the entire year.

I want to call your attention particularly to the fact that this Georgia cotton dealer says that the cotton merchants of Europe are in a position to finance their requirements through their connections in America now.

Mr. BRAND. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFADDEN. Yes.

Mr. BRAND. I would like to know who that gentleman is. Where is the letter from?

Mr. McFADDEN. I will give you that information later.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFADDEN. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. I understand that the gentleman is willing to have the word "and" changed to "or"?

Mr. McFADDEN. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. I am willing to accept the amendment with that change.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to modify the amendment by striking out the word "and" and inserting the word "or."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the modified amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the word "and," after the word "States," and insert in lieu thereof the word "or," so that as modified the amendment will read: At the end of the paragraph (page 5, line 7) insert the following: "All notes or other instruments evidencing advances to persons outside of the United States shall be in terms payable in the United States in the currency of the United States and shall be secured by adequate guaranties or indorsements of banks, bankers, or trust companies in the United States or by chattel mortgages, warehouse receipts, or other instruments in writing for securing marketable title to agricultural products in the United States."

Mr. STEVENSON. No. The "or" is in the wrong place. It should be "indorsements of banks, bankers, or trust companies in the United States or by chattel mortgages," and so forth.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania will please indicate where the change should be made.

Mr. McFADDEN. The gentleman from South Carolina is correct in his statement.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the modification.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the word "and," after the words "United States," in the sixth line of the amendment and insert in lieu thereof the word "or," so that as modified the amendment will read: "All notes or other instruments evidencing advances to persons outside of the United States shall be in terms payable in the United States in currency of the United States and shall be secured by adequate guaranties or indorsements of banks, bankers, or trust companies in the United States, or by chattel mortgages," etc.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, I rise nominally to oppose the amendment, but really to ask the chairman of the committee a question in order that we may have no misunderstanding. I will ask him whether in his judgment this nullifies subsection (b) on page 3, providing for loans to foreign concerns?

Mr. McFADDEN. I think it safeguards it.

Mr. STEVENSON. That is what it does.

Mr. McFADDEN. It does not nullify it, but safeguards it.

Mr. LUCE. May we have a little more clarity in this matter? Under this amendment will it still be possible for the War Finance Corporation to loan money to Johann Schmidt, a textile manufacturer of Chemnitz, and refuse to loan money to John Smith, a textile manufacturer of Philadelphia?

Mr. McFADDEN. I do not believe it will permit that. The Pennsylvania man will get his relief under this bill as it is now drawn.

Mr. LUCE. Where?

Mr. McFADDEN. If Johann Schmidt, in Poland or wherever he is, wants to get a loan and has the proper security and can convince the War Finance Corporation that he is good, and can put up the surety and the guaranty that this amendment provides, he will be accommodated.

Mr. LUCE. He will, but will John Smith, of Philadelphia, also be accommodated?

Mr. McFADDEN. Providing there are sufficient funds.

Mr. LUCE. Will the gentleman show me where there is authority to loan money to John Smith, a textile manufacturer of Philadelphia?

Mr. McFADDEN. Not as an individual, perhaps, unless he is an exporter.

Mr. LUCE. Then, will the gentleman explain to me why we should put on the statute books of the United States permission to Johann Schmidt, of Chemnitz, to borrow our money, and refuse to allow John Smith, of Philadelphia, to do the same thing?

Mr. McFADDEN. The gentleman knows very well that I am not very hot for this proposition.

Mr. LUCE. That is precisely what I want to bring out.

Mr. McFADDEN. What I am trying to do is to correct it so that the War Finance Corporation will not take any chances.

Mr. LUCE. It is forbidden to this War Finance Corporation to encourage and help an American manufacturer of American cotton manufacturing for home consumption, but it can encourage and help the German manufacturer of American cotton no matter for whose consumption. Let us have that clear on the record.

Mr. WINGO. I challenge that assertion.

Mr. LUCE. Let us have it clear on the record that this bill encourages the German manufacturer while not providing aid to the American manufacturer unless he is an exporter.

Mr. WINGO. No man in his right senses—to use the gentleman's own language—would ever make the charge that subsection (b) would authorize a loan to John Smith, of Hamburg, and not authorize a loan to John Smith, of Philadelphia, for the same purpose. The trouble with the gentleman is that he did not hear the hearings and he has not read them. He was not in the committee when this was being considered, and he comes in here and charges his administration with bringing in something that will authorize German loans when it does not do it. Every member of the committee, with the exception of two, are opposed to making loans to foreign Governments by the War Finance Corporation, and I am not going to sit silent and have the gentleman, after he has stayed away for weeks, come in here and criticize the committee and question its intelligence in this way, when, if he will simply read the bill, if he knows the present existing law, he will know that the Banking and Currency Committee have tried to bring some order out of the chaos, first, of existing law, and, second, the hotchpotch that the Senate has sent to us. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is not "hot" for this, as he says, because he is a very conservative man. He would like to close up the War Finance Corporation business now, but pressure has been brought to bear on him by his administration to meet a distressing situation in the West, and he said:

I will agree to it, provided you will bring the business to a close July 1, 1922. I will agree to it if instead of permitting them to make one-year loans and five-year extensions you will cut it down to three years. I will agree to it if you will put in this last section, which will provide for automatic retirement of the capital stock of the War Finance Corporation at a certain time.

I deny that the gentleman from Pennsylvania and his committee have brought in a wild-eyed thing here that will authorize loans to anybody in Hamburg, Germany, for any purpose. Here is what it does: If a man comes over here and applies to the War Finance Corporation and gives adequate security to purchase American commodities and spend that money with the holders of those commodities in the United States to break the jam in farm products, then if in the judgment of the War Finance Corporation it is a safe loan and the security is good they can allow that money to be spent in this country and thereby help liquidate some frozen loans and break the jam in credits as well as commodities.

Mr. ANDERSON and Mr. McFADDEN rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON] is recognized.

Mr. ANDERSON. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania desires to close the debate on this, I will not ask recognition.

Mr. McFADDEN. I ask for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 24. Whenever in the opinion of the board of directors of the corporation the public interest may require it, the corporation shall be authorized and empowered to make advances upon such terms not inconsistent with this act as it may determine to any bank, banker, or trust company in the United States which may have made advances for agricultural purposes, including the breeding, raising, fattening, and marketing of live stock. Such advance or advances may be made upon the promissory note or notes, or other instrument or instruments, in such form as to impose on the borrowing bank, banker, or trust company a primary and unconditional obligation to repay the advance at maturity with interest as stipulated therein, and shall be fully and adequately secured in each instance by indorsement, guaranty, pledge, or otherwise. Such advances may be made for a period not exceeding one year, and the corporation may from time to time extend the time of payment of any such advance through renewals, substitution of new obligations or otherwise, but the time for the payment of any such advance shall not be extended beyond two years from the date upon which such advance was originally made. The aggregate of advances made to any bank, banker, or trust company shall not exceed the amount remaining unpaid of the advances made by such bank, banker, or trust company for purposes herein described.

"The corporation may, in exceptional cases, upon such terms not inconsistent with this act as it may determine, purchase from domestic banks, bankers, or trust companies, notes, drafts, bills of exchange, or other instruments of indebtedness secured by chattel mortgages, warehouse receipts, bills of lading, or other instruments in writing conveying or securing marketable title to staple agricultural products, including live stock. The corporation may from time to time, upon like security, extend the time of payment of any note, draft, bill of exchange, or other instrument acquired under this section, but the time for the payment of any such note, draft, bill of exchange, or other instrument shall not be extended beyond three years from the date upon which such note, draft, bill of exchange, or other instrument was acquired by the corporation. The corporation is further authorized, upon such terms as it may prescribe, to purchase, sell, or otherwise deal in debentures, promissory notes, or other obligations, adequately secured, issued by banking corporations organized under section 25 (a) of the Federal Reserve Act: Provided, That no purchase of debentures, promissory notes, or other obligations of the said banking corporations shall be made nor any loan or advance be made to said banking corporations except for the purpose of assisting the said banking corporations in financing the exportation of agricultural and manufactured products from the United States to foreign countries. No such promissory notes, debentures, or other obligations shall be purchased which have a maturity at the time of such purchase of more than three years.

"Advances or purchases may be made under this section at any time prior to July 1, 1922."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the first committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 5, line 16, after the word "upon," strike out the word "the."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, that same amendment should be made to page 4, line 25, after the word "against," strike out the word "the."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to returning to page 4, line 25?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 4, line 25, after the word "against," strike out the word "the."

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 6, line 2, after the word "beyond," strike out the word "two" and insert in lieu thereof the word "three."

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, the War Finance Corporation act was originally passed April 5, 1918, and its purpose, as declared in the act itself, was to assist the various industries of the United States, including agriculture and live stock, to meet the production needs for a successful prosecution of the war. At the time the law was originally passed, the problem was not one of marketing but of production. There was no trouble then about a profitable market. The act provided that the corporation capital stock should be $500,000,000, and all of it should be subscribed by the United States Government. The directors provided for were the Secretary of the Treasury and four other directors to be appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate.

Mr. Eugene Meyer, jr., was appointed managing director, which position he also now holds. The total amount of loans and advances made by the corporation up to the date of its last annual report, November 30, 1920, was $353,061,000, more than two-thirds of which have already been paid back with reasonable interest. When prices went so high in the early part of 1920 and trade was apparently booming, Secretary Houston decided that the activities of the corporation were no longer necessary, and so the most of its active operations closed, and its capital stock not then invested in loans was turned back into the Treasury, where it was credited on the books to the War Finance Corporation.

After the tremendous decline in the price of farm products last fall and the general slowing down of export trade, Congress, by special enactment, revived the activities of the corporation, and Mr. Eugene Meyer, jr., was again appointed managing director, and since the revival of its activities the corporation has already made considerable amounts of advances in aid of export trade. The purpose of the present bill is to broaden powers of the corporation with the purpose in view of enabling it to give more effective relief and assistance to our marketing problems. The provisions of the bill recognize that the problem is now no longer one of production, as was the case in 1918 when the corporation was organized, but is now largely one of marketing. Therefore the bill provides that advances may be made for periods not exceeding one year to any person dealing in or marketing any farm products or to any association composed of persons engaged in producing such products for the purpose of assisting such person or association to carry such products until they can be exported or sold for export in an orderly manner.

The bill does not provide for loans to be made to individual producers, but contemplates that advances shall be made to organizations of producers, such, for example, as the American Farm Bureau's cotton pool in Texas and other similar organizations in other States. Also loans and advances may be made to banks and bankers under terms which will insure the use of the money advanced, as contemplated by the law. Under the bill the banks will not be permitted to charge more than 2 per cent in excess of the interest rate which they pay the War Finance Corporation. This should insure a maximum rate of 8 per cent for any money advanced by the War Finance Corporation.

Section 24, which provides for loans and advances to banks and associations of producers, also provides that in exceptional cases the War Finance Corporation may purchase outright notes, drafts, and so forth, secured by chattel mortgages or other legal security on agricultural products, including live stock. It is under this provision of the bill that Mr. Eugene Meyer, managing director of the War Finance Corporation, stated before the Banking and Currency Committee that the corporation expected to render relief in proper cases to cattle growers to prevent them from having to sacrifice their breeding herds.

It is a very similar provision to the language in the original act, which reads:

The corporation shall be empowered and authorized in exceptional cases to make advances directly to any person, firm, corporation, or association conducting a going and established business in the United States, whose operations are necessary for the prosecution of the war,

And so forth.

It was under this provision of the original law that the corporation made cattle loans aggregating $7,527,000, and nearly all of which have been paid back. The principal difference in the original law and the language of the present bill is that in the former loans could be made in exceptional cases, direct to the individual cattle grower, whereas in this bill it must be loaned to him either through a bank or association of producers or must be advanced to him by purchase of his note secured by chattel mortgage or other adequate security from the cattle growers' bank or his association of producers.

Mr. Chairman, I am not expecting the bill to work any miracles. Profitable markets for agricultural products and manufactured goods are not and can not be made by merely passing a law, and I have never tried to fool the public by endeavoring to make them think so.

But this bill should and will help. It should go a long way to prevent the dumping of farm products on the market faster than the trade will be able to absorb them. It should do much to assist in clearing away the snags which lie in the path of our export trade. If it does these two things it will prove a very great help and fully justify the enactment of this law.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the amendment. Mr. Chairman, this is the section to which my friend from Arkansas referred and I have a great deal of confidence in him and in his judgment. He referred to Mr. Meyer, whom I have no doubt is a very brilliant man, who says that under this section he claims he will have the right to pay out money directly to the producer. The language of the act says "any bank, banker, or trust company." I never heard of a bank or trust company being classed as a producer of agricultural products.

Mr. WINGO. If the gentleman from Texas will permit, I suggest that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McFADDEN] has not yet offered the amendment that will take care of those associations of producers.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I hope he puts that in, though still that will not entirely reach the thing I was driving at. He said that under the bill as drafted, under section 24, the corporation could loan direct to the producer, according to Mr. Meyer, and that would raise the question of when a banker is not a banker, and I suppose the answer would be, when he is a producer. On the next page it authorizes the buying of paper, but it must be bought through the bank. That is what I object to. It is not the question so much of having a system of lending direct to the producer, as it is a sort of musket behind the door. You have the musket behind the door to shoot the burglar, if he comes, but you do not expect to shoot anybody. The fact that you are prepared will in many instances deter him.

It is a club by virtue of which you can keep them in line. If the local institution would not do business, would not do its duty, you would have the privilege of making the loan direct to the producer. That would not require you to establish agencies all over the country. Some one suggested that would take a great deal of money. It would not. The farm loan bank uses the same system, the insurance companies all over this country use the same system, and you would not have to use it simply because you had the privilege of using it. I simply want to have the musket behind the door. I would not advocate the establishment of all these agencies, but there are instances where the local bank is loaded up with its loans, where it lends in small sums—and it does a valuable service, because it takes care of the smaller man—and it can not handle the situation adequately. Under the terms of the bill—and I favor it because I think it will give some relief—if a cattleman wants to borrow $50,000 or $100,000 or $25,000 or $10,000, he must go through the local institution and pay that institution its 2 per cent and a commission, if they see fit to change it. If you had the privilege whereby you could borrow directly, you might be able to better hold these institutions to the care of the regular service and use the pending measure for the emergency. It simply would furnish you a route around the institutions to hold them in line. It might never be necessary to use it, just as it may never be necessary to use the musket behind the door. I would like to see the law so worded that if there were a local institution which refused to take care of the local notes without charging the 2 per cent and a high commission, those in charge of the War Finance Corporation could say, "We will send out one of these local agents of the Farm Loan Board or we will call upon the local agent of some insurance company or some cattle loan company to investigate these securities and pass on them, if necessary, if you do not do this thing on a reasonable basis." As I intimated a while ago, there are some men in the cattle business who borrow in amounts where they find it advisable to pass by the local institutions. Sometimes they want to borrow more than the local institution is capitalized for. That is often true with cattlemen. I have known of loans four or five times more than the capital and surplus of the local banks. Why force that individual to go through a local institution and pay 2 per cent and pay a commission? And why force the local institution to put its name on this paper and thus add to its responsibilities.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 6, line 20, strike out the word "two" and insert in lieu thereof the word "three."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 7, line 10, strike out the word "five" and insert in lieu thereof the word "three."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 24.

Page 5, line 13, after the word "States," insert a comma and the words "or to any cooperative association of producers in the United States."

Page 5, line 18, after the word "banker," strike out "or," and in the same line after the word "company," insert a comma and the words "or cooperative association."

Page 6, line 4, strike out the word "or."

Page 6, line 5, after the word "company," insert a comma and the words "or cooperative association."

Page 6, line 6, strike out "or."

Page 6, line 7, strike out the word "company" and insert a comma and the words "or cooperative association."

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I do not think there is any need to go into a lengthy discussion of this amendment. It has been discussed all through the debate. This is the agreement with the people who were claiming they were not properly taken care of—these associations. I ask for a vote.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I want to say just a few words. I do not want this amendment to go without saying for the record that I do not think it does what representatives of the farm associations have been assured it will do. I am going to read from a letter from one of these gentlemen who took the matter up with Mr. Meyer, the chairman, and Mr. Henderson, his counsel:

They gave assurances of their intention to interpret the term "advances" in section 24 as inclusive of advanced payments or partial payments. This interpretation will make the amendment offered by Mr. McFADDEN to section 24 satisfactory.

It was stated by several very important men in this House that our people had suggested the terms of the amendment to section 24 under the impression that it would sufficiently extend the powers of the War Finance Corporation to include financing for domestic trade, and that they had indicated their satisfaction with Mr. McFADDEN's amendment on that account.

Now, gentlemen, what is proposed? You voted down an amendment which I offered which would provide for carrying farm products until they could be sold in the domestic trade in an orderly manner because we have been assured by the writer of this letter—many of you received it—you have been assured by the representatives of these farm organizations, you have been assured by representatives of the producers' associations, that the interpretation of section 24 under the amendment now submitted would authorize the same thing that was covered by my amendment. Gentlemen, as a lawyer I am going to say it will not do it, and I am not going to lead the farmers to believe it will do it.

If Mr. Meyer wants to stretch his authority and interpret that way, I shall not challenge it. That is what the administration proposes to do, and I think they ought to have said so in square, explicit language, because I am opposed to anything being left to vague interpretation in our statutes. I think the limitation ought to be clear and the authorization specific in its terms, and you do not do it. This amendment ought to be adopted to satisfy some other objections, but it will not take care of the question of carrying farm products until they can be sold in an orderly manner in domestic trade, as you have promised. I intend to cover the matter in a motion to recommit by providing for an amendment to paragraph (a), section 22, so that the language will read:

To carry such products until they can be sold for export or in domestic trade in an orderly manner.

That will give you a chance to clearly and specifically provide for doing what you insist you intend to do.

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, a point of order—is it an amendment to the pending amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can not tell until it is reported. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. KING—

Mr. KING. I will withhold that until there is a vote taken on the other amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman withdraws his amendment. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 6, lines 24 and 25, after the word "in" in line 24, strike out the following: "debenture, promissory notes, or other obligations," and insert in lieu thereof the word "acceptances."

Mr. KING. Now, I will not take up the time of the committee—

Mr. McFADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KING. I will.

Mr. McFADDEN. I will say to the gentleman that will be satisfactory to the committee, and I accept it.

Mr. KING. I was going to state that both the chairman and the gentleman from Arkansas and other members of the committee—

Mr. WINGO. It is acceptable to this side.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, I have three perfecting amendments which I send to the Clerk's desk, and I ask to have them read and acted upon in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 7, lines 2 and 3, after the word "of" in line 2, strike out the following: "debentures, promissory notes, or other obligations," and insert the word "acceptances."

Page 7, lines 4 and 5, after the word "made" in line 4, strike out the following: "or any loan or advance to be made to said banking corporation."

Page 7, lines 8 and 9, after the word "such" in line 8, strike out the following: "promissory notes, debentures, or other obligations," and insert the word "acceptances."

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I will say they are acceptable to the committee.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, under the regulations and rulings of the Federal Reserve Board an Edge corporation may not have outstanding at the same time both acceptances and debentures except with the approval of said board. It seems that when requested by one of the Edge law companies for a ruling, the board held that a bank having outstanding acceptances could not issue debentures. This means that there are two kinds of Edge corporations; one kind is an acceptance bank which issues longer term commercial import and export credits to exporters and importers; the other kind does a debenture business, which, generally speaking, means making long-time loans to foreign countries. They do not deal with the individual importer and exporter, but make large capital loans abroad. Although the Edge law has been on the books for more than 18 months, but two concerns are now in operation under it, to wit, the First Federal Foreign Banking Association, New York, and the Federal International Banking Co., New Orleans. The third one, a $100,000,000 corporation, now in the process of organization, called the Foreign Trade Financing Corporation, of New York, is a purely debenture concern, and it is to this character of Edge corporation that this amendment is confined.

As I have said, these regulations of the Federal Reserve Board split the Edge banks into two classes—first, the nondebenture-issuing class, and, second, the debenture-issuing class. Without the consent of the Federal Reserve Board, which rule is subject at any time to revocation, an Edge bank can not have outstanding both acceptances and debentures. Of the former, independently of the fact that they function with less liability than is placed upon domestic and other branch banks doing a foreign business, their operation deals directly with exporters and importers. They grant them lines of credits, take their foreign drafts for discount or collection, and do a general international banking business. Reducing a single transaction of an exporter through one of these of the nondebenture-issuing type to such language as a layman, such as I, may understand, it runs something like this: An exporter, having his cargo loaded on ship, draws a draft upon his foreign customer on terms as agreed and attaches negotiable bills of lading, invoices, insurance certificates, and other necessary documents. This documentary draft is to be sent abroad by the bank for collection.

The exporter then draws a second clean draft on the bank for the face amount due him. Upon handing the clean draft into the bank, the bank honors it by stamping across the face the word "accepted," and that it will be paid at a named place. It then becomes an "acceptance." This is signed by duly authorized officers of the bank. The bank, after taking out the interest in advance or discounting the draft or acceptance, then immediately gives the exporter a check for the amount. When the proceeds of the foreign collection are received, the advance made to the exporter is paid off. Such a banker's "acceptance" is therefore said to be self-liquidating. At maturity, if not paid in this self-liquidating manner, the banker must pay it. If the bank should fail, the exporter would have to pay. The term should be long enough to cover the period from the shipment of the goods to the return of the funds. Edge law banks, however, have been given the special privilege of issuing acceptances up to a year in tenure. The purpose of creating the second or clean draft which the bank accepts, in the words of a financier, is to allow the bank "to refund itself," which, in plain English, means that the Edge bank can sell these "acceptances" to a member bank of the Federal reserve system, which can in turn rediscount them at a Federal reserve bank and which, through the joint operation of the Federal reserve agents at such reserve banks, the United States Treasury, the Federal Reserve Board, and the Bureau of Engraving and Printing are transmuted from mere "acceptances" into Federal reserve notes, which to-day constitute the principal paper money found in the pockets of the people. The form and quality of the paper and the engraving has by this operation improved, but, after all, the draft or acceptance is merely put in another form and guaranteed by the taxpayers of the United States, because these "acceptances" when honored by Edge banks are, in banking terms, known as "eligible for rediscount."

It is not by these amendments intended to hamper or disturb Edge banks doing simply an acceptance business, and it will not interfere with Edge banks of the debenture-issuing type. They can continue their proposed gigantic sale of debentures to the people of the country if they find the people sufficiently gullible, and for which these bankers have been laying plans for two years. These plans involved the audacious assumption that the American citizen was as "docile" as Lord Northcliffe has said he was, and that he would loan enough of his savings to penniless Europeans to rehabilitate the whole of Europe so that the poor debtor of Europe would have enough money put into his pockets in this manner to pay at least his international banker what he owes him.

But the American people did not "bite," and if this bill passed without these amendments being adopted your Uncle Sam will take scraps of paper in return for his gold. Private enterprise repudiated this scheme. The very men who advocate it would not finance it and why should our Government, already owed more than ten billions of dollars by foreign Governments, continue to act as the European angel to the tune of many billions more?

As the bill now has been amended and corrected as I suggested, I shall give the bill my vote. [Applause.]

Mr. LANKFORD. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment which I wish to offer.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LANKFORD: On page 5, line 15, strike out the period after the word "stock" and insert a comma and the following: "or may have discounted or rediscounted notes, drafts, bills of exchange, or other negotiable instruments issued for such purposes."

Mr. McFADDEN. Will the gentleman yield? I have not any objection to that amendment I will say.

Mr. WINGO. I have no objection.

Mr. LANKFORD. I thank the gentlemen.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LANKFORD. Mr. Chairman, I am glad that I made several speeches on this amendment before I offered it. I have been very anxious about this amendment for 10 days or more and have discussed the amendment with the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McFADDEN], the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency, and also with the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO], the ranking Democrat on this great committee. I have also discussed the necessity of this amendment with many Members of the House, both Democratic and Republican, and have received assurances that I was right and that the amendment should be adopted.

I appreciate very much the approval given this amendment by the chairman of the committee and by the ranking Democrat on the committee, and I am sure that the entire country, and especially the farmers, who are now so sorely in need of help, will appreciate very much the adoption of this amendment which has just been voted by the House.

The amendment enables the War Finance Corporation to buy from the banks of the country notes, drafts, bills of exchange, or other negotiable instruments issued for agricultural purposes and discounted or rediscounted by the banks. This amendment will help every farmer in the country who is indebted for supplies whether mules, guano, or other farm supplies as well as every farmer who wishes this fall and winter to buy on a credit a mule or guano or other farm supplies. It will help every man who is helping to carry the burden of the farmer. Thus, Mr. Chairman, the amendment will help the whole Nation, for when we help the farmer and those who are helping the farmer we help all.

I am anxious for this bill to be passed, and that speedily, and then I want the banks of the country to take advantage of the law and extend every courtesy possible under the provisions of this act to the farmers and those who are carrying the obligations of the farmers. I want the banks to obtain money from the War Finance Corporation for the purpose of enabling them to make advances under this act to the farmers. In this way the present deplorable situation can be greatly relieved.

I am very hopeful, Mr. Chairman, that this bill as amended will do much good. Many valuable amendments have been adopted. Some of these have made unnecessary some amendments I intended to offer. In my speech on this bill I recently pointed out several defects in it. I also pointed out these same defects in a recent speech by me on a bill which I introduced the first of the month to authorize the War Finance Corporation to buy from the banks of the country $500,000,000 worth of farmers' notes and other securities of farmers held by the banks.

This bill now goes a long way along the line pleaded for by me. I am glad the Congress is putting this bill in pretty good shape, and I hope that much good will come of it.

I have during the last week looked up many rulings of the officials of the regional banking system and of the directors of the War Finance Corporation, and have discussed this bill with those interested in its passage and who will have charge of the administration of the bill, and I am convinced that the bill will be liberally construed so as to give a much-needed relief to the farmers of the country.

The bill does not do all that I would gladly do for the farmers. As an emergency measure I would give more relief than is here authorized. I am one of those, though, who will take a half loaf of bread if I can not get a whole loaf, and I will take all that I can get for my people and for the farmers of the Nation if I can not get all I desire for them. While this bill does not authorize direct loans to farmers, it authorizes advances on the notes and other negotiable instruments of farmers through the banks. It saves red tape and delay and expenses of direct loans.

Let me say just here that I firmly believe that this measure will do infinitely more good for the farmer by the authorization of the purchase of farmers' notes held by banks than would be accomplished by a provision for the loaning of money to the farmers directly. In order for the farmer to borrow money directly from the War Finance Corporation he would be forced to pay for an abstract and for drawing of papers and for an appraisal. Then there would be great delay as well as the great expense just mentioned.

This is an emergency measure, authorized by the serious conditions of farming sections, which were brought about by the war and the conditions following the war. Speedy relief is necessary. Let us provide the means for the relief. As soon as this bill is passed the banks all over the farming sections can renew the notes of farmers and make new loans to farmers and sell these notes by indorsement to the War Finance Corporation. The banks will get relieved from their present great burden and will help the farmer and at the same time get in position to help other farmers and other people.

Thus a great financial refreshing should come to the now paralyzed farming sections. There is a much mistaken idea that if there is much money in the big banking centers and that if big business prospers then the entire country and all the people thereof are prosperous. It is not so. The ocean has been full of water since the beginning of time and yet there are desert lands near the seas on every continent. Through the ages the Nile River has flowed full of water by the parched deserts of Egypt and Nubia and yet they were not watered. The waters of the Great Salt Lake and of the mighty Shoshone and of the wonderful Colorado Rivers of the West through the aeons of past time never gave a refreshing to the sagebrush deserts which touched their very shores.

A country is never watered naturally by the water in the big stream, the lakes, and the ocean. But oh, my, what a refreshing there is everywhere when a good rain falls everywhere "on the just and the unjust." Every tree, every plant, every flower, and every twig of grass is watered. All animal life, even to the humblest worm of the dust, gets its share. Every brook, every creek, every rivulet, and the mighty rivers of the earth are filled. The waters, after doing their God-given mission, go hurrying back to the great ocean.

What a mighty refreshing there has been. So it is in prosperity. Ofttimes by the side of great wealth is squalor and want. Not far from Wall Street are the rags of poverty and the cries of hunger and nakedness. We may legislate here to make the rich richer and the mighty mightier, and the great common people will still be in want, and the Nation will be growing weaker. But let our legislation be for the masses and for common people and let the blessings of good legislation fall like the rain to help and to bless the farmer, the laborer, and the common folks and their children.

And, Mr. Chairman, the benediction which falls on them will flow to others and no one will be left out. Our beloved land will blossom like a rose, under the influence of the new life-giving help. The prosperity of the farmer, the laborer, and the common people will flow into the small streams of industry, commerce, and finance. These will flow into the great rivers of wealth of the country and all will flow back into the great ocean of the Nation's everlasting existence. And what a blessing all will have received. [Applause.]

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment to offer.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LUCE: Amend section 3, in line 15, on page 5 by striking out the period and inserting in lieu thereof a comma and the words, "and the preservation of agricultural products," so as to read: "including the breeding, raising, fattening, and marketing of live stock and the preservation of agricultural products."

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will precede the amendment just adopted—

Mr. WINGO. I object. I think that will destroy the meaning of the amendment just adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. Then is it to follow the amendment just adopted or should it be inserted between the text and the amendment just adopted?

The Chair is directing an inquiry to the gentleman from Massachusetts. The committee has just adopted an amendment following the word "stock," in line 15. The Chair wishes to inquire of the gentleman whether he desires to have his amendment to follow the amendment just adopted or to precede it?

Mr. LUCE. It should precede it.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts to have his amendment inserted at the place indicated? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Chairman, may we have it reported as it will read should it be adopted?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be reported as it would read if amended as indicated. [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LUCE: Amend section 3, in line 15, on page 5, by striking out the period and inserting in place thereof a comma and the words "and the preservation of agricultural products," so as to read: "Including the breeding, raising, fattening, and marketing of live stock and the preservation of agricultural products."

The following amendment was also read:

Amendment by Mr. LANKFORD: "or may have discounted or rediscounted notes, drafts, bills of exchange, or other negotiable instruments issued for such purpose."

Mr. LUCE. The purpose of this amendment is to call attention to the very singular situation now presented by this bill. It says to a canner in New York State, "You must rely on your own resources and those which are furnished by the national banking system to assist your operations. But if you will ship your berries or fruit across the lake into Canada we will lend our money to the Canadian canner, who thereupon will be able to send back the canned goods to us if the tariff does not prevent." I can not too much emphasize the strangeness of this situation. The argument proceeds on the assumption that the way to save the American farmer is to send his raw material out of the country to be manufactured. I want to get into the Record just a word in behalf of the American manufacturer. I want to put in the Record the fact that in the first six months of this year 2,013 manufacturing establishments in this country went into bankruptcy, with liabilities rising $100,000,000. The farmer is not the only American citizen who needs relief. If we are to dispense here the credit of the country, if we are to put at the command of any one class or group the resources of the public Treasury, why stop at the boundary of that class or group?

Where, sir, does an agricultural product end? When the bean—and I speak of the bean as the vegetable most familiar to a Bostonian—when the bean has been ensconced within its tin case, is it an agricultural product or not? Who will tell me? The purpose of my amendment is to allow the bean to get inside its tin cylinder with the help of the resources of the United States Treasury. You are going to help the man who grew the bean; why not help the man who cans the bean? Then, to be sure, we shall have laid a proper foundation for the masses of the people to come up here and say, "Give us some help for the man who eats the bean." Why draw the line in the dispensing of class and group favoritism?

It is solely, sir, for the purpose of pointing out to the House what is being achieved in the way of embedding class legislation in the statute books of the country that I offer the amendment, and with no confidence whatever that even my good friend, Dr. LAYTON, from a State where they can everything most deliciously, could persuade this House that the help of the United States Treasury ought to be brought to the relief of the man who puts the fruit inside the tin.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. I want to say to the committee, and especially to the gentleman from Massachusetts, that I think it is a very dangerous thing to accept an amendment, even of importance, to a measure like this without any more consideration than we are able to give it here in the committee. I will say to him also that the committee has given very close attention to the preparation of this bill during the time we have had it under consideration. I regret the fact that the gentleman was not present in the committee to have the benefit of the discussion there.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, I had not meant to advert upon the remarks of the gentleman from the other side in this matter, but, inasmuch as my own chairman has brought this up, as a matter of personal justice I will ask him if it is not a fact that by telegram I asked to be informed when this matter would be considered by the committee and considered in the House?

Mr. McFADDEN. I will say to the gentleman, in answer to that, that the clerk of the committee was instructed to notify all the members—and we notified all the members—in regard to it.

Mr. LUCE. The gentleman has not quite met my question. Did I not by telegram ask to be informed when this matter would come before the committee?

Mr. McFADDEN. Not to my knowledge.

Mr. LUCE. I received a communication purporting to give me the information that I would be informed.

Mr. McFADDEN. The clerk of the committee may have done so, but I do not recollect sending you such a telegram. On the contrary, we were told by the gentleman when he left on his vacation that under no circumstances was he to be recalled within a period of six weeks.

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, I want to say in behalf of the gentleman from Massachusetts that I think he was entitled to the short vacation. There is not a more hard working member on the committee than the gentleman, and while I was surprised he was not here at that time, I think he was justified in being away. He gives most careful and conscientious consideration to every piece of banking legislation that comes before the committee, and it does seem to me that the gentleman should not be criticized for being absent once from a committee meeting out of four or five hundred meetings which we have held.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of the committee to the seriousness of accepting the amendment in this manner, and I hope it will be voted down.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, I submit an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts submits an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LUCE: Amend section 3 in line 15, page 5, by striking out the period at the end of the sentence and inserting in place thereof a comma and the words "and for their conversion into articles of consumption," so as to read, "including the breeding, fattening, and marketing of live stock and for their conversion into articles of consumption."

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the amendment has been adopted in that place and it is not in order to offer a further amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. LUCE. This amendment is submitted in order that I may further present to the committee my contention that the program here is to aid one group in the community while distinctly disregarding the needs of another group, the manufacturing group. And I want to call attention to the fact particularly that the result of this measure will accrue more to the benefit of Germany than to any other foreign country.

I hold in my hand a statement printed within a few days in a Boston paper by Col. Haskell, of the Great Northern Paper Co., in which he points out that by reason of the rates of exchange now prevailing the German manufacturer has the advantage of very low labor costs, and that on account of the low prices of material he has a decided advantage over his competitors elsewhere in Europe and in the United States. This week the newspapers have reported the great speculation on the German bourse, compelling its closing temporarily, due to the manipulation probably started by the German Government in order still further to depreciate the value of the mark in Germany. This juggling with finance is to-day enabling the German manufacturers to secure from the German workers an amount of product which, measured in cost, is probably nowhere to be matched. The result is that the whole business world dreads the competition of Germany at this moment. It is the most dangerous element in the business situation.

Three-quarters of the cotton used in Germany comes from America. The textile industry is the oldest German industry. The practical effect of this measure is to supply credit to the German manufacturer and therefore to release by so much his own credit for the other purposes of business. This bill will aid the textile manufacturer in Chemnitz, in Frankfort, in Wittenberg, and the other great German textile centers—will aid him to compete with the textile manufacturer in Fall River, in Lowell, in Philadelphia.

Possibly gentlemen have jumped at the conclusion that for some factious or personal purpose I am taking the time of the House. I want to be relieved of any such suspicion. It is my duty to the manufacturers and wage earners of Massachusetts to remonstrate against a measure which so palpably gives an advantage to our competitors in the land of the Hun.

We have but ceased from a great war. How can I go before the boys of the American Legion and explain to them why no sooner do they come back and resume their wonted activities at loom or bench than we pass a bill to give aid to the German in his new warfare on the battle fields of commerce, a bill to give him the advantage in competing with us in the markets of South America, Africa, and the Orient? I do not greatly begrudge giving help to the cotton grower of the South or the wheat grower of the West. If this bill simply contented itself with furnishing to the southern cotton planter or the western wheat grower money to carry his product yet longer until he might get through this disastrous period without ruin, I would not be on my feet so frequently this afternoon. I would not strongly object to and denounce that proposal by itself. But I do denounce the idea of permitting a governmental agency to lend our credit to our competitors while refusing it to our own manufacturers.

If you adopt this amendment and allow the credit of the War Finance Corporation to be lent to the manufacturers in our textile centers, then I shall have little ground to complain. Turning to the question of hides, I will vote with my heartiest good will to help the stock raisers in any reasonable way. But when I see that the purpose of the bill is to encourage the making of the hides into shoes, not in an American Lancaster, but in Lancaster, England, then I must protest. [Applause.]

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I want to say a word regarding the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE]. The gentleman's eloquence is always dangerous when he comes to pleading for the New England manufacturer. I want the House to know what his amendment is. He offers as an amendment to the provision providing for longer credit to the cattle growers, to save their breeding stock, an amendment to take care of the manufactured products. There is not a single packer that came before our committee and asked for the relief which the gentleman from Massachusetts wants to give them. There is not a single packer who says he can not now get through the ordinary banking channels all the credit he needs. Then, why does the gentleman wish to help the packers with a provision that the War Finance Corporation can make the same advances to them—because they are the manufacturers of the cattle—whom we are now trying to take care of? The gentleman overlooks the purpose of the bill entirely. Under our present banking system there is no safe way, it is contended by the Federal Reserve Board, to make long-time loans to the cattle breeders, because a banking corporation that has demand deposits can not afford to make one-year, two-year, and three-year loans. So in order to tide them over the present situation it is intended by this provision to let the War Finance Corporation take care of these cattle breeders with a three-year loan. That is the object of it. Why give a three-year loan to a packer simply because you give these cattle breeders out West an opportunity to save their breeding cattle?

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE].

The question being taken, the amendment was rejected.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, I submit an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts submits an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LUCE: Amend section 3 by striking out in line 8, on page 6, the comma and the words "in exceptional cases," so as to read "the corporation may upon such terms not inconsistent with," etc.

Mr. LUCE. The committee having—perhaps with excellent judgment and not wholly to my surprise—got in the habit of rejecting my amendments, I shall not be disappointed if this one does not prevail. Nevertheless, I present it in order that the committee may consider the expediency of incorporating in the statute law a provision like this, "in exceptional cases," with no court of adjudication and no indication as to what the provision means. The motion may also serve to let me carry a little further the line of argument, Mr. Chairman, which your hammer so rudely, yet necessarily, interrupted at the end of my last five minutes. The motion lets me call attention to the fact that a recent number of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD reporting the proceedings in the Senate conveyed to the country the information secured by the Secretary of Labor to the effect that at this very moment there are fewer persons employed than at the high peak of employment by more than 5,700,000. There are in this country nearly 6,000,000 at this moment unable to secure employment, and you present here a bill intended to help those who have roofs over their heads, those with food in their kitchens; yet you refuse every proposal that I make tending to aid in some slight degree such of nearly 6,000,000 citizens of the United States as would work gladly if they could get the chance, but to whom the gloomy industrial conditions bring an outlook for the coming winter that may well rouse dread in every imagination. One more reason, therefore, you may find why with caution, why with timidity and apprehension, you should approach all proposals in this crisis to aid one part of the country at the expense of the rest of the country. Well may you think twice before you say to the producer of raw materials, "We will give an advantage to the foreign manufacturer of these materials and so make it all the harder for the stream of wheat and oats and cotton and wool and hides to pass through the processes that result in the utilities sent out to the world by the manufacturers of the northern part of our own land."

At this time one man out of every five in the shoe-manufacturing industry is out of work; and this applies not alone to New England, but to Cincinnati, St. Louis, and many other shoe-manufacturing centers. I ask you if it is fair to those men to say that the hide raiser shall have at command the credit and support of the National Treasury, but that the shoe manufacturer shall not? Is it fair that you shall aid the ranchman of the West, but that you shall not aid the shoe worker of Lynn and Brockton and Haverhill and Philadelphia and Cincinnati and St. Louis?

As a matter of fact I am not seriously asking favors for my section. I am standing here for that time-honored maxim, "God helps those who help themselves." New England does not come here and make request for the bounty of the Nation. New York, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Delaware do not come here asking for relief. We will fight our own battles. Though with millions out of work we will somehow get through the winter. We will muddle through. We will do it on our own resources, on our own capacity for thrift and self-reliance. We do not begrudge you help, but we say it is not fair that a hundred men in these two Houses should stand together to get undue, selfish, excessive favors from the Public Treasury at the expense of the rest of the country. It was by agrarian movements in the years so long ago that the foundations of Rome were undermined. The agrarian movement in Russia has played its part in the downfall of that nation. Time and again in the history of the world we have seen what comes when the farmers, when the agrarians, demand special privilege. Then it is that agrarian movements retard the progress of the world through their selfishness. Against their menace I warn.

So I urge once more that we return to the true principle of a republic, where every man should stand on his own legs and remember that God helps those who help themselves.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE] having wandered from the New England of to-day to Rome of ancient days, it has occurred to me that it might not be a bad idea to come back to the present hour and present conditions. I do not understand that it is the purpose of this bill to grant anyone special privileges. I do not understand that it is the purpose of this bill to open the doors of the Treasury to the relief of any particular class or classes. If I understand the purpose of the bill, it is to use an organization having governmental sanction, under governmental control, for the purpose of enabling the capital of the country—a very considerable portion of which is to be found in the country from which the gentleman from Massachusetts comes—to enable the capital of the country to be safely invested on the firm basis and foundation of stable and valuable products, to the end that these products may be carried for the reasonable period required to find a market, and may be marketed to the best possible advantage, and that the capital thus employed shall obtain a secure and a fair return. If this is not a fair and reasonable and a highly laudable plan and purpose, then I can think of no plan or purpose to enhance the prosperity of the country that would be approved by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. LAYTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. LAYTON. I would like a little information. Do I understand that the advantages of this bill are as open to the Delaware canner, or any other Delaware enterprise, as it is to the cotton grower of the South?

Mr. MONDELL. I want to be entirely frank and entirely fair, and it is my opinion that it would be beyond a question. Gentlemen may conjure up fanciful or possible situations in which in their view and opinion there would be less benefit secured than in some other situation. If I read the bill to any purpose I think its provisions are such that it will be beneficial to the Delaware canner as I hope it will be to the cotton grower, to the woolgrower, and to the cattle raiser.

Mr. LUCE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. LUCE. The bill refers to stable agricultural products; would the gentleman say that flour manufactured in Minneapolis is a "stable agricultural product"?

Mr. MONDELL. I know of nothing much more stable than flour properly warehoused.

Mr. LUCE. The gentleman has not answered my question. Is flour an agricultural product?

Mr. MONDELL. Is it a mineral product?

Mr. LUCE. It is a manufactured product.

Mr. MONDELL. It is a product obtained by manufacture or improvement of an original product, so is wool, after it has been clipped from the sheep's back, sorted, and carefully pressed into a bag. After cotton has been picked and pressed into a bale to a certain extent it is a manufactured product; it has gone through a certain process beyond the material in its original state. Flour is a product of agriculture. I do not know how you could otherwise class it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment close in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment close in five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LAYTON. Mr. Chairman, I would like to address a question to the chairman of the committee and gentlemen on the other side who are members of the committee, and who doubtless have studied this question. I want to renew my question that I put to the gentleman from Wyoming. Under the provisions of this bill, is the capital of the United States just as available for the Delaware canner, the Delaware manufacturer of powder, and the Delaware manufacturer of anything we have got, as it is to the cattle growers and cotton growers of the South?

Mr. BLACK. Under section 21—

Mr. LAYTON. Yes or no.

Mr. BLACK. Yes.

Mr. LAYTON. Is that the opinion of the chairman?

Mr. McFADDEN. Section 21 of the War Finance act as it now stands permits loans to manufacturers for the purpose of the exportation of their goods and loans for that purpose are being made now. There is nothing in this act to prohibit it.

Mr. LAYTON. I will accept that as coming from authority. But I want to say that as far as I am personally concerned I am opposed to all of this sort of legislation. I do not believe that the Government of the United States ought to use the people's money for any such purpose as this. It is socialistic, and in the long run you will find it so.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 25. (a) The corporation shall have power and is authorized and empowered, upon request therefor by the Federal Farm Loan Board, created by the Federal farm loan act approved July 17, 1916, as amended, to make advances to Federal land banks, at a rate of interest not exceeding the rate of interest charged by Federal land banks for loans under the provisions of such Federal farm loan act, as amended, and to accept as security therefor farm loan bonds issued by such Federal land banks maturing within five years of the date of issue, or to purchase such bonds from the capital, earnings, reserve fund, or other assets of such corporation to the amount of $100,000,000 during the calendar year ending December 31, 1921, and $100,000,000 during the calendar year ending December 31, 1922.

(b) Every Federal land bank shall have power, subject to the provisions, limitations, and requirements of the Federal farm loan act approved July 17, 1916, as amended, and of this section, to receive and pay interest upon such advances, to issue farm loan bonds as security therefor, to issue and sell farm loan bonds, to buy the same for its own account at any time, and to retire any or all of such bonds at or before maturity.

With the following committee amendment:

Beginning on line 14, page 7, strike out all of the remainder of page 7 and all of lines 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 9, and 10 on page 8.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be recognized in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. Yes.

Mr. McFADDEN. I would like, if possible, to reach an agreement for time for debate on this amendment.

Mr. STEAGALL. I ask the gentleman to withhold that until I have talked for a few minutes.

Mr. McFADDEN. The gentleman, of course, is entitled to five minutes. I was going to suggest that he confine the debate to 15 minutes.

Mr. BRAND. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have two minutes.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate upon this section and all amendments thereto be limited to 17 minutes, 10 minutes to be controlled by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STEAGALL], 5 minutes by myself, and 2 minutes by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BRAND].

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this bill is to grant relief to the agricultural sections of the country where financial accommodations can not be had to transact business in an orderly way. We are trying to find legitimate, safe agencies through which the War Finance Corporation may supply ample credit to the farmers of the country, to enable them to market their products in an orderly fashion and to protect them against forced and abnormal marketing. What are we undertaking to do? I am not going to enumerate all of the various agencies to whom credit is extended by the provisions of this bill. We have gone the limit, with one exception. Of course, we do not provide for direct loans to the farmer. But we provide for loans to banks of all kinds, exporters, dealers, any well-recognized financial institutions, associations, trust companies—we cover the whole range. No one has been able to suggest an amendment to the bill without being answered with the statement that such a provision is unnecessary, that its purpose is accomplished by the present language of the bill, except when it is proposed to recognize the Federal land banks. Every institution assisting farmers in matters of credit seems to be covered by the provisions of this bill, except the farm loan system. We authorize the War Finance Corporation to buy the securities of the Edge corporations, which are export corporations authorized to do all sorts of business in foreign countries, and the securities of which are based on risks which no regular banking institution would for a moment consider. Who will say that such securities are as desirable as bonds of the Federal land banks? Certainly these international banks are not in touch with the farmers as are the Federal land banks. We propose in a few days, if plans now under way are carried out, to authorize the War Finance Corporation to purchase $500,000,000 of bonds of the railroads of the country. Who would contend that these bonds are as safe as Federal land bank bonds?

I submit there is not a provision in the bill for the extension of credit upon any other security that is as safe and sound as the bonds of the land banks, with all of the safeguards thrown around the securities floated by the Federal land banks of the country. Then what more legitimate agency could be found through which to extend financial accommodations to relieve the situation that exists in the agricultural sections of the country than to provide some plan that will enable the land banks to do business? Under the provisions of the bill by which accommodations can be extended to the farmer you put a middleman between him and the money to be obtained. You have a provision in here which authorizes interest charges, and further charges for special services and fees, and all that sort of thing, authorized to be charged the farmer before he gets a dollar of money made available by this measure. But if you let the War Finance Corporation assist the Federal land banks to do business you give the farmer the benefit of the provision of the Federal farm loan act which limits the amount of interest that can be charged to 6 per cent. Under the provisions of this bill the farmer when he goes to obtain his loan is up against the same proposition that he is up against when he goes to market his products. He has a bunch of middlemen between him and what he is after. I know it is insisted that it is not practical in this legislation to make direct loans to farmers. I know what a personnel it would necessitate in the War Finance Corporation, and I know how difficult it would be to inaugurate such a system, especially for mere emergency purposes. I recognize the objections to it, and that is the idea upon which the bill was founded—that a banking institution with headquarters in Washington could not engage in making direct loans to the farmers of the country. Therefore we have selected banks and various other agencies and have authorized the War Finance Corporation to extend credits to them in order that they may take care of the farmer.

Why not put the land banks to doing business? We had a bill before us a few days ago by which we increased their facilities by the amount of $25,000,000. But everybody knows such a sum was not sufficient. I know the argument submitted against the proposal to extend $100,000,000 annually for two years. Take Mr. Lobdell's letter. I have great respect for him. He points out defects in the section which can and will be cured if we retain it. But all he says is that the banks can continue to run under the supply of capital or turnover which they now have. That is as far as he goes, but he says that they can not at all take care of the demands for loans. That is in the statement of Mr. Lobdell. The fact that the banks can run does not mean an adequate operation with regard to the necessities they were created to supply. Take our ordinary commercial banks, and in my State all of them are running and will continue to run. But many of them are like the Federal land banks. They have their doors open and their office force and all necessary formalities but not sufficient funds to meet the demands upon them for credit. That is what Mr. Lobdell says in his statement with reference to the condition of the Federal land banks. They loaned $9,000,000 in June and $12,000,000 in July, but they have applications on hand for over $150,000,000 upon the best security that can be found in this country. This is a permanent system to which the Government is forever committed to and which it is going to stand by.

The system has its organization already in touch with the farmers of the country, and its branches, with complete personnel in every section, with everything required except funds, and more than $150,000,000 applications on hand.

But not half the applications for loans have been made that would have been made if it had not been recognized everywhere that the land banks were not in a condition to take care of the demands upon them. How can we justify this stinting, starving policy toward the land banks, the safest institution we have, through which accommodations may be extended to farmers, and then attempt to extend aid through all these other institutions which act as middlemen, all of them standing between the farmer and the supply of money and taking out interest and other charges before the farmer can get his loan? [Applause.]

We have the opportunity by retaining this provision for assistance to give a large measure of real relief. The section can be perfected and every valid objection removed and real results accomplished. The psychological effect alone would enable the Federal land banks to sell their bonds and do business, even if the War Finance Corporation did not buy a dollar's worth of bonds or make a loan of a single dollar. [Applause.]

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of the committee to the fact that when the Farm Loan Board was last before our committee we granted them the authority, and the House acquiesced, to have $25,000,000 additional capital. Now the Federal farm loan system functions. Those were all the funds which the farm loan system said they needed. Now they are on record as opposed to this authority, and I want, for the benefit of those Members who were not here the other day and have not read the RECORD, to quote from Mr. Lobdell's letter the following:

If it be the policy of Congress to place the Government in the farm loan business and provide funds for that enterprise from the Public Treasury, that is entirely a question for Congress, but if such be the congressional desire, it should be clearly expressed and the farm loan system should be remodeled accordingly that those intrusted with its administration may proceed in harmony with such desire.

I said the other day it was impossible with the limited capacity of the present farm loan system to handle this $200,000,000 within the period of time which would give the necessary relief that is asked for on the part of the gentlemen who are supporting this amendment. I want to quote further from his letter:

The second provision is for the purchase of farm loan bonds without mention of rate, such bonds to mature within five years. The same objection suggested above would apply to the issue of a five-year bond. Manifestly such a bond could not be paid from the proceeds of a 20 or 30 year loan, and the banks would find themselves under the necessity of refunding at the end of that period, and the fact that these banks had out $200,000,000 of paper which they must pay in five years, without a corresponding accrual, would, in the judgment of the board, detract from their credit in the general market and interfere with their stable and orderly operation much beyond the value of any immediate impetus.

I want to call the attention of the committee to just how embarrassing that might be if the Federal farm loan system should be called upon at an unexpected time to go into the market and borrow $200,000,000 to take up the demands when it came to the liquidating period of the War Finance Corporation.

Mr. STEAGALL. Will the gentleman yield for an interruption?

Mr. McFADDEN. I am sorry—

Mr. STEAGALL. Just a question. Will the gentleman agree to an amendment not limiting the bonds to five years so that objection will be eliminated?

Mr. McFADDEN. I do not think it would eliminate all of these objections, because, my friends, the farm loan system might be called upon at the end of this period just the same to repay this $200,000,000, and it would create uncertainty in the minds of the investing public as to the security of the bonds.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFADDEN. I will.

Mr. MONDELL. Is it not true that no one connected with the farm loan system and, so far as you know, no one who is seeking loans from the farm loan banks, has asked for this provision?

Mr. McFADDEN. The Secretary of the Treasury is opposed to it, the Treasury Department is opposed to it, and further than that I want to quote what Mr. Lobdell says further in regard to this:

In conclusion, permit me to urgently suggest that in this time of stress patience, sound judgment, and courage are essential on the part of all of the friends of the farm loan system lest in our anxiety for greater accomplishments we "kill the goose that lays the golden egg."

The gentleman from Alabama has just pointed out the fact that the Federal farm loan system have loaned $9,000,000, and he has failed now to call attention to the fact that on or about the 1st of May it sold $40,000,000 worth of bonds, and under the authority we are giving them now in the last amendment to the farm loan act the system is calling upon the Treasury for from nine to eighteen million dollars a month that is to be loaned to the farmers, and on or about the 1st of October they are going to get out another issue of about fifteen to eighteen million, and it will function in an orderly manner and gradually take care of the demand, and not call upon the Public Treasury or a semipublic institution. Therefore I contend it is most necessary that this be stricken out of the bill, and I hope that the amendment will prevail and this provision will go out of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Georgia wish to use his two minutes?

Mr. BRAND. No; the reason why I do not is that I understand the ranking member of the minority is going to make a motion to recommit.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a vote on this amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 26. The aggregate amount of all advances made under sections 21, 22, and 24, and of all notes, drafts, bills of exchange, or other securities purchased under section 24 remaining unpaid, shall not at any one time exceed $1,000,000,000.

The committee amendment was read, as follows:

Page 8, line 11, strike out the figures "26" and insert in lieu thereof "25."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I move an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 8, line 15, strike out "$1,000,000,000" and insert "$500,000,000."

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, if this bill is to pass, in order to finance the carrying of crops it ought to provide enough money, but it ought not to provide too much. We want no more Shipping Board extravagance, and this board should not have too much money to loan in any direction, because it is not, like a bank, under the Comptroller of the Treasury.

Now, I want to ask fairly of gentlemen who are in favor of this bill, the ranking member of the minority especially, that they suggest how much is necessary. Of course, exports only use part of a revolving fund for a short time. The real call for a large loan will be for the carrying of crops, and I suppose all will agree with me that the Government would not expect to advance the whole value of the crop that is intended for export, but to help the banks by giving them half as much as they will have to lend to carry the whole amount.

A bale of cotton is worth about $60, and half of its value is $30, and 6,000,000 bales, which is a large amount to be carrying, would be only $180,000,000. Perhaps we export about 300,000,000 bushels of wheat in a year. Half its value, at 60 cents a bushel, is about $180,000,000, making $360,000,000 for cotton and wheat. I do not know so much about cattle, but if we had to carry 2,000,000 steers, at $50 apiece for half their value, it would amount only to $100,000,000 more, making less than $500,000,000 in all. I see no reason why such a sum as a billion dollars should be provided in order that the War Finance Corporation should be tempted to make loans which may not be carefully guarded. Therefore I move that the total amount be reduced to $500,000,000, because that will carry through the year—without reference to the fact that most of the money is brought back from export in a few months—by loans of half the value 6,000,000 bales of cotton, 300,000,000 bushels of wheat, and 2,000,000 steers. That is enough money to advance in that way.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I want to take a minute to call the attention of the gentleman to what is evidently his misinterpretation of this provision. This limitation is not simply on the agricultural end of it, but the manufacturing end, too.

Section 21 is the present existing law. This new part we are putting in here is covered by sections 22, 23, and 24, and if the gentleman were to have his amendment adopted he would not affect cotton. Cotton would be taken care of, because I am convinced that the exporters of it would be able to demonstrate that they should continue to do what they are doing now, and the contracts are already made, I think, to take care of most of the exports of cotton that would be made to the associations that are incorporated. If the gentleman wants to cut down and shut out the railroads, I will go with him.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. The railroads are not in this bill.

Mr. WINGO. No. Under present existing law the corporation can issue bonds in an amount equal to six times the capital stock. That would be $3,000,000,000. The committee is trying to limit it here. Under present existing law it could use every bit of it for the purposes of sections 21, 22, 23, and 24. We have cut it down to $1,000,000,000. I think the gentleman has overlooked that fact.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 27. The corporation is empowered and authorized to investigate upon its own initiative or in cooperation with other governmental agencies foreign market conditions and to advise where disposition may be advantageously made of such agricultural products.

Also, the following committee amendment was read:

Strike out all of section 27.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Also, the following committee amendment was read:

Page 8, line 21, strike out the figures "28" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "26."

The amendment was agreed to.

Also, the following committee amendment was read:

Page 8, line 24, after the word "institution," insert: "incorporated under the laws of any State or of the United States."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 29. In order to enable the corporation to carry out the purposes of this act, the Comptroller of the Currency is hereby authorized to furnish to the corporation for its confidential use such reports, records, or other information as he may have available relating to financial condition of national banks to which the corporation has made or contemplates making advances, and to make, through his examiners, for the confidential use of the corporation, examinations of banks, bankers, or trust companies, other than national banks, to which the corporation has made or contemplates making advances: Provided, That no such examination shall be made without the consent of such bank, banker, or trust company.

Also, the following committee amendment was read:

Line 3, page 9, strike out the figures "29" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "27."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 30. No person, bank, banker, or trust company receiving money under the provisions of this act shall loan such money at a rate of interest greater than 2 per cent per annum in excess of the rate of interest charged or received by the corporation upon such money.

Also the following committee amendment was read:

Page 9, line 16, strike out all of section 30.

The amendment was agreed to.

Also the following committee amendment was read:

Page 9, after the section stricken out, insert a new section as follows:

"SEC. 28. No bank, banker, or trust company, or other firm, corporation, or association receiving an advance under the provisions of this act shall loan such money at a rate of interest greater than 2 per cent per annum in excess of the rate of interest charged or received by the corporation upon such advance, nor shall any such bank, banker, or trust company charge any commission in connection with any such loan, except as reasonable compensation for any special services or risks undertaken by such bank, banker, or trust company, or other firm, corporation, or association. The limitation contained in this section shall not apply where the loan is made by the bank, banker, or trust company, or other firm, corporation, or association without recourse against any domestic borrower."

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment to the committee amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. McFADDEN: Amend the committee amendment known as section 28 as follows: On page 10, line 1, after the word "advance," strike out down to and including the word "association" in line 5 of the same page.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Chairman, there has been some controversy among members of the committee and others as to this committee amendment. I would suggest to those Members that if they are still in opposition to this as the committee proposes, my amendment corrects, I believe, what the controversy was over.

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman's amendment is to cut out the features that some Members object to, which would permit commissions, and the bill then would still leave the limitation of 2 per cent except in case where the bank bought the paper without recourse on the indorser? Of course, a larger rate sometimes prevails there.

Mr. McFADDEN. The gentleman is correct about that.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the committee amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is now on the committee amendment as amended.

The committee amendment as amended was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. Section 21 of the War Finance Corporation act is hereby amended by striking out paragraphs (b) and (c) thereof, and by striking out at the beginning of the first paragraph the letter (a).

With a committee amendment as follows:

On page 10, line 10, after the figures "21," insert the words "of Title I."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. The first paragraph of section 12 of the War Finance Corporation act is hereby amended and reenacted to read as follows:

"SEC. 12. That the corporation shall be empowered and authorized to issue and have outstanding at any one time its notes or bonds in an amount aggregating not more than four times its paid-in capital, such notes or bonds to mature not less than six months nor more than five years from the respective dates of issue, and may be redeemable before maturity at the option of the corporation, as may be stipulated in such notes or bonds, and to bear such rate or rates of interest as may be determined by the board of directors, but such rate or rates of interest shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury. Such notes or bonds shall have a first and paramount floating charge of all the assets of the corporation, and the corporation shall not at any time mortgage or pledge any of its assets. Such notes or bonds may be issued at not less than par in payment of any advances authorized by this title, or may be offered for sale publicly or to any individual, firm, corporation, or association at such price or prices as the board of directors, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may determine.

"The power of the corporation to issue notes or bonds may be exercised at any time prior to January 1, 1927, but no notes or bonds shall mature later than July 1, 1927."

With a committee amendment, as follows:

Page 10, line 14, after the figure "5," strike out "the first paragraph of section" and insert "section" before the figures "12" and after the figures "12" insert "Title I."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 10, line 19, strike out the word "four" and insert in lieu thereof the word "three."

Committee amendment: Page 11, line 9, after the word "prices," insert "at not less than par."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend, on page 11, lines 13 and 14, by striking out the figures "1927" in each line and inserting "1925" in each line in lieu thereof. It is necessary because of the previous amendments that have been made, but it was overlooked by the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. McFADDEN: Page 11, lines 13 and 14, amend by striking out the figures "1927" in each line and inserting "1925" in lieu thereof.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend page 12, line 4, after the word "Corporation," by inserting the word "act."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 15. That all moneys of the corporation not otherwise employed may be kept on deposit, subject to check, with the Treasurer of the United States or in any of the Federal reserve banks, or may, upon the direction of the board of directors of the corporation, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, be invested in bonds or other obligations of the United States issued or converted after September 24, 1917, or upon like direction and approval may be used from time to time in the purchase or redemption of any bonds issued by the corporation.

The Federal reserve banks are hereby authorized to act as depositories for and as fiscal agents of the corporation in the general performance of the powers conferred by this title.

Beginning July 1, 1922, the directors of the corporation shall proceed to liquidate its assets and wind up its affairs, except as specifically provided in this title, but the directors of the corporation, in their discretion, may from time to time prior to such liquidation sell and dispose of any securities or other property acquired by the corporation.

After July 1, 1922, the corporation may, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, deposit with the Treasurer of the United States as a special deposit, out of money belonging to the corporation, or from time to time received by it in the course of liquidation or otherwise, an amount equal to the aggregate amount of all outstanding bonds or notes of the corporation, including principal and interest to maturity. Moneys so deposited shall constitute a special fund for the payment of principal and interest of such bonds or notes, or for the purchase or redemption of such bonds or notes at not more than par and accrued interest, and may be drawn upon or paid out for no other purpose.

Whenever there shall have been deposited in such special fund an amount equal to the aggregate amount of all bonds or notes of the corporation then outstanding, including principal and interest to maturity, the corporation may, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, pay into the Treasury of the United States as miscellaneous receipts any moneys belonging to the corporation or received from time to time in the course of liquidation or otherwise in excess of a reasonable reserve to meet all liabilities and expenses during liquidation. Whenever any such payment is made an amount of capital stock of the corporation equal in par value to the amount so paid in shall be canceled and retired.

All net earnings of the corporation not required for its operations shall be accumulated as a reserve fund until such time as the corporation liquidates under the terms of this title.

Any balance remaining after the payment of all the corporation's debts and after the retirement of all its capital stock as herein provided shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States as miscellaneous receipts, and thereupon the corporation shall be dissolved.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, on page 13, line 17, the letters "Secretary" ought to be made to read "Secretary." It is a misprint.

The CHAIRMAN. There is a misspelling of the word "Secretary." The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Chairman, may we have the amendment reported? I did not catch it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman from New Jersey.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 13, line 17, by striking out the letters "Secretary" and inserting the word "Secretary."

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, have all the committee amendments been read?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes. All but the last committee amendment.

Mr. WINGO. Before you vote—and I promise not to delay the proceedings of the committee—some of the Members may not understand what this amendment is, and therefore I will explain it. It is to bring to a close the operations of the War Finance Corporation at a definite time and provide for its automatic liquidation. Under the present law no one can say when this War Finance Corporation will cease to function. Under the present law it can go ahead for 12 months after the proclamation of the President is issued declaring peace, and the Lord only knows when that proclamation is coming. I hold in my hand the leading evening Republican paper of this city, and in its first column, first page, I read—

CONGRESS' SCHEME OF MAKING PEACE FOUND INEFFECTIVE—PRESIDENT HARDING AND MR. HUGHES MUST CARRY BURDEN OF GERMAN PACT—TEUTONS ARE UNWILLING TO JUMP THROUGH HOOP—DEMAND VOICE IN TERMS, SOMETHING THEY DID NOT GET AT VERSAILLES—COURSE OF UNITED STATES IN DOUBT.

The strategy behind the United States Government's negotiations with Germany over the making of a new peace treaty is just coming to light. It is one of the most interesting inside stories which official Washington has developed since the war.

The truth is President Harding and Secretary Hughes have been loath to announce to the world that the plan whereby Congress was to make peace by resolution is, after all, ineffective. The executive branch of the Government is finding out that it alone carries the burdens of making peace with Germany, and that the Germans are not jumping through the hoop at the mere nod of Washington, but are actually asking for a voice in making the treaty—a procedure in contrast to the moments at Versailles when the Allies framed a treaty and called the German delegates into the room and commanded them to sign on the dotted line.

UNITED STATES WANTED LEVERAGE.

When Congress passed the joint resolution declaring peace it was believed that peace had been accomplished and that a formal proclamation of peace would follow in the natural course of events. The Department of State opposed such a course, putting up the argument that if America announced by proclamation that she is at peace with Germany the United States would be playing its last card, so to speak, and would have no leverage upon Germany in the negotiations of a peace treaty.

Every man who comprehended the Constitution knew the so-called peace resolution was dangerous political "bunk." So that the object of this proposition is to provide a definite date, without regard to date of peace proclamation, for the winding up and liquidation of the affairs of this corporation. I thought that explanation ought to go into the Record.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER].

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Fess, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill (S. 1915) to provide relief for producers and dealers in agricultural products, and for other purposes, had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE] speaks of that as an amendment. It is not an amendment. It was a committee amendment proposed and defeated, and therefore it is not a part of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Of course, then, the request of the gentleman will not be granted. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not the Chair will put the amendment in gross.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. BLANTON. Reserving the right to object, may I ask the gentleman whether the conference report on the beer bill is going to be taken up on Monday?

Mr. MONDELL. I do not know. The first business on Monday will be the unfinished business now pending. The conference report on the beer bill will be taken up as soon as we can get to it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wyoming?

There was no objection.

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted—
